

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. THE object of this Work, which is entirely new, is to comprise, within a single volume, a chronological series of our classical Poets, from Ben Jonson to Beattie, without mutilation or abridgement, with Biographical and Critical notices of their Authors. The contents of this volume are so comprehensive, that few poems, it is believed, are omitted, except such as are of secondary merit, or unsuited to the perusal of youth. The Work, within these bounds, may be termed a “Library of Classical English Poetry,” and may safely be recommended to the heads of Schools in general, and to the libraries of Young Persons.

TO WILLIAM CAMDEN.

CAMDEN, most reverend head, to whom I owe
All that I am in arts, all that I know.
(How nothing 's that!) to whom my country owes
The great renown, and name wherewith she goes.
Than thee the age sees not that thing more grave,
More high, more holy, that she more would crave.
What name, what skill, what faith hast thou in things!

What sight in searching the most antique springs!
What weight, and what authority in thy speech!
Man scarce can make that doubt, but thou canst teach.

Pardon free truth, and let thy modesty,
Which conquers all, be once o'er-come by thee.
Many of thine this better could, than I,
But for their powers, accept my piety.

FROM CYNTHIA'S REVELS.

QUEEN and huntress, chaste and fair,
Now the Sun is laid to sleep;
Seated in thy silver chair,
State in wonted manner keep:
Hesperus intreats thy light,
Goddess excellently bright.

Earth, let not thy envious shade
Dare itself to interpose;
Cynthia's shining orb was made
Heaven to clear, when day did close;
Bless us then with wished sight,
Goddess excellently bright.

Lay thy bow of pearl apart,
And thy crystal-shining quiver;
Give unto the flying heart
Space to breathe, how short soever:
Thou that mak'st a day of night,
Goddess excellently bright.

FROM THE SILENT WOMAN.

STILL to be neat, still to be drest,
As you were going to a feast;
Still to be powdered, still perfum'd:
Lady, it is to be presum'd,
Though art's hid causes are not found,
All is not sweet, all is not sound.
Give me a look, give me a face,
That makes simplicity a grace;
Robes loosely flowing, hair as free:
Such sweet neglect more taketh me,
Than all th' adulteries of art;
They strike mine eyes, but not my heart.

HAGS.

1. I HAVE been, all day, looking after
A raven, feeding upon a quarter;
And, soon as she turn'd her beak to the south,
I snatch'd this morsel out of her mouth.

2. I have been gathering wolves' hairs,
The mad-dogs' foam, and the adders' ears;
The spurgings of a dead-man's eyes,
And all since the evening-star did rise.

3. I, last night, lay all alone
O' the ground, to hear the mandrake groan;
And pluck'd him up, though he grew full low;
And, as I had done, the cock did crow.

4. And I ha' been choosing out this skull,
From charnel-houses, that were full;
From private grotts, and public pits,
And frighted a sexton out of his wits.

5. Under a cradle I did creep,
By day; and, when the child was asleep,
At night, I suck'd the breath; and rose,
And pluck'd the nodding nurse by the nose.

7. A murderer, yonder, was hung in chains,
The sun and the wind had shrunk his veins;
I bit off a sinew, I clipp'd his hair,
I brought off his rags, that danc'd i' the air.

8. The screech-owls' eggs, and the feathers black,
The blood of the frog, and the bone in his back,
I have been getting; and made of his skin
A purset, to keep sir Cranion in.

9. And I ha' been plucking (plants among)
Hemlock, henbane, adder's tongue,
Night-shade, moon-wort, libbard's bane;
And twice by the dogs, was like to be ta'en.

10. I, from the jaws of a gardener's bitch,
Did snatch these bones, and then leap'd the ditch;
Yet went I back to the house again,
Kill'd the black cat, and here 's the brain.

11. I went to the toad breeds under the wall,
I charm'd him out, and he came at my call;
I scratch'd out the eyes of the owl before,
I tore the bat's wing: what would you have more?

DAME.

Yes, I have brought (to help our vows)
Horned poppy, cypress boughs,
The fig-tree wild, that grows on tombs,
And juice, that from the larch-tree comes,
The basilisk's blood, and the viper's skin:
And, now, our orgies let 's begin.

EPITAPH

ON THE COUNTESS OF PEMBROKE, SISTER TO SIR PHILIP SIDNEY.

UNDERNEATH this marble herse
Lies the subject of all verse,
Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother;
Death, ere thou hast slain another,
Learn'd, and fair, and good as she,
Time shall throw his dart at thee.

ON LUCY COUNTESS OF BEDFORD.

This morning, timely rapt with holy fire,
 I thought to form unto my zealous Muse,
 What kind of creature I could most desire,
 To honour, serve, and love; as poets use.
 I meant to make her fair, and free, and wise,
 Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great;
 I meant the day-star should not brighter rise,
 Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat.
 I meant she should be courteous, facile, sweet,
 Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride;
 I meant each softest virtue there should meet,
 Fit in that softer bosom to reside.
 Only a learned, and a manly soul
 I purpos'd her; that should, with even pow'rs,
 The rock, the spindle, and the sheers controul
 Of Destiny, and spin her own free hours.
 Such when I meant to feign, and wish'd to see,
 My Muse bade, Bedford write, and that was she.

SONG.

TO CELIA.

Kiss me, sweet: the wary lover
 Can your favours keep, and cover,
 When the common courting jay
 All your bounties will betray.
 Kiss again: no creature comes.
 Kiss, and score up wealthy sums
 On my lips, thus hardly sund'red,
 While you breathe. First give a hundred,
 Then a thousand, then another
 Hundred, then unto the tother
 Add a thousand, and so more:
 Till you equal with the store,
 All the grass that Romney yields,
 Or the sands in Chelsea fields,
 Or the drops in silver Thames,
 Or the stars, that gild his streams,
 In the silent summer nights,
 When youths ply their stol'n delights.
 That the curious may not know
 How to tell 'em as they flow,
 And the envious, when they find
 What their number is, be pin'd.

TO THE SAME.

DURK to me only with thine eyes,
 And I will pledge with mine;
 Or leave a kiss but in the cup,
 And I'll not look for wine.
 The thirst, that from the soul doth rise,
 Doth ask a drink divine:
 But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
 I would not change for thine.

I sent thee, late, a rosy wreath,
 Not so much honouring thee,
 As giving it a hope, that there
 It could not withered be.
 But thou thereon did'st only breathe,
 And sent'st it back to me:
 Since when, it grows, and smells, I swear,
 Not of itself, but thee.

FROM THE SHEPHERD'S HOLIDAY.

NYMPH I.

Thus, thus, begin the yearly rites
 Are due to Pan on these bright nights;
 His morn now riseth, and invites
 To sports, to dances, and delights:
 All envious, and prophane away,
 This is the shepherd's holiday.

NYMPH II.

Strew, strew, the glad and smiling ground,
 With every flower, yet not confound
 The primrose drop, the spring's own spouse,
 Bright daisies, and the lips of cows,
 The garden-star, the queen of May,
 The rose, to crown the holiday.

NYMPH III.

Drop, drop you violets, change your hues,
 Now red, now pale, as lovers use,
 And in your death go out as well
 As when you lived unto the smell:
 That from your odour all may say,
 This is the shepherd's holiday.

LOVE, A LITTLE BOY.

FROM THE

MASQUE ON LORD HADDINGTON'S MARRIAGE.

FIRST GRACE.

BEAUTIES, have ye seen this toy,
 Called Love, a little boy,
 Almost naked, wanton, blind,
 Cruel now; and then as kind?
 If he be amongst ye, say;
 He is Venus' run-away.

SECOND GRACE.

She, that will but now discover
 Where the winged wag doth hover,
 Shall, to-night, receive a kiss,
 How, or where herself would wish:
 But, who brings him to his mother,
 Shall have that kiss, and another.

THIRD GRACE.

He hath of marks about him plenty:
 You shall know him among twenty.
 All his body is a fire,
 And his breath a flame entire,
 That being shot, like lightning, in,
 Wounds the heart, but not the skin.

FIRST GRACE.

At his sight, the Sun hath turned,
 Neptune in the waters, burned;
 Hell hath felt a greater heat:
 Jove himself forsook his seat:
 From the centre, to the sky,
 Are his trophies reared high.

SECOND GRACE.

Wings he hath, which though ye clip,
 He will leap from lip to lip,

Over liver, lights, and heart,
But not stay in any part ;
And, if chance his arrow misses,
He will shoot himself, in kisses.

THIRD GRACE.

He doth bear a golden bow,
And a quiver, hanging low,
Full of arrows, that out-brave
Dian's shafts : where, if he have Any head more sharp than other,
With that first he strikes his mother

FIRST GRACE.

Still the fairest are his fuel.
When his days are to be cruel,
Lovers' hearts are all his food ;
And his baths their warmest blood :
Nought but wounds his hand doth season ;
And he hates none like to Reason.

SECOND GRACE.

Trust him not : his words, though sweet,
Seldom with his heart do meet.
All his practice is deceit ;
Every gift it is a bait ;
Not a kiss, but poison bears ;
And most treason in his tears.

THIRD GRACE.

Idle minutes are his reign ;
Then, the straggler makes his gain,
By presenting maids with toys,
And would have ye think them joys :
'Tis the ambition of the elf,
To have all childish, as himself.

FIRST GRACE.

If by these ye please to know him,
Beauties, be not nice, but show him.

SECOND GRACE.

Though ye had a will to hide him,
Now, we hope, you'll not abide him.

THIRD GRACE.

Since ye hear his falser play ;
And that he is Venus' run-away.

EPITAPH

ON ELIZABETH L. H.

UNDERNEATH this stone doth lie
As much beauty as could die :
Which in life did harbour give
To more virtue than doth live.

ABRAHAM COWLEY.

ABRAHAM COWLEY, a poet of considerable distinction, was born at London, in 1618. His father, who was a grocer by trade, died before his birth; but his mother, through the interest of her friends, procured his admission into Westminster school, as a king's scholar. He has represented himself as so deficient in memory, as to have been unable to retain the common rules of grammar: it is, however, certain that, by some process, he became an elegant and correct classical scholar. He early imbibed a taste for poetry; and so soon did it germinate in his youthful mind, that, while yet at school, in his fifteenth or sixteenth year, he published a collection of verses, under the appropriate title of Poetical Blossoms.

In 1636 he was elected a scholar of Trinity college, Cambridge. In this favourable situation he obtained much praise for his academical exercises; and he again appeared as an author, in a pastoral comedy, called Love's Riddle, and a Latin comedy, entitled, Naufragium Jocularis; the last of which was acted before the university, by the members of Trinity college. He continued to reside at Cambridge till 1643, and was a Master of Arts when he was ejected from the university by the puritanical visitors. He thence removed to Oxford, and fixed himself in St. John's college. It was here that he engaged actively in the royal cause, and was present in several of the king's journeys and expeditions, but in what quality, does not appear. He ingratiated himself, however, with the principal persons about the court, and was particularly honoured with the friendship of Lord Falkland.

When the events of the war obliged the queen-mother to quit the kingdom, Cowley accompanied her to France, and obtained a settlement at Paris, in the family of the Earl of St. Alban's. During an absence of nearly ten years from his native country, he took various journeys into Jersey, Scotland, Holland, and Flanders; and it was principally through his instrumentality that a correspondence was maintained between the king and his court. The business of cyphering and decyphering their letters was entrusted to his care, and often occupied his nights, as well as his days. It is no wonder that, after the Restoration, he long complained of the neglect with which he was treated. In 1656, having no longer any affairs to transact abroad, he returned to England; still, it is supposed, engaged in the service of his party, as a medium of secret intelligence. Soon after his arrival, he published an edition of his poems, containing most of those which now appear in his works. In search for another person, he was apprehended by the messengers of the ruling powers, and committed to custody; from which he was liberated, by that generous and learned physician, Dr. Scarborough, who bailed him in the sum of a thousand pounds. This, however, was possibly the sum at which he was rated as a physician, a character he assumed by virtue of a degree which he obtained, by mandamus, from Oxford, in December, 1657.

After the death of Cromwell, Cowley returned to France, and resumed his station as an agent in the royal cause, the hopes of which now began to revive. The Restoration reinstated him, with other royalists, in his own country; and he naturally expected a reward for his long services. He had been promised, both by Charles I. and Charles II., the Mastership of the Savoy, but was unsuccessful in both his applications. He had also the misfortune of displeasing his party, by his revived comedy of "The Cutter of Coleman-street," which was construed as a satire on the cavaliers. At length, through the interest of the Duke of Buckingham and the Earl of St. Alban's, he obtained a lease of a farm at Chertsey, held under the queen, by which his income was raised to about 300l. per annum. From early youth a country retirement had been a real or imaginary object of his wishes; and, though a late eminent critic and moralist, who had himself no sensibility to rural pleasures, treats this taste with severity and ridicule, there seems little reason to decry a propensity, nourished by the favourite strains of poets, and natural to a mind long tossed by the anxieties of business, and the vicissitudes of an unsettled condition.

Cowley took up his abode first at Barn-elms, on the banks of the Thames; but this place not agreeing with his health, he removed to Chertsey. Here his life was soon brought to a close. According to his biographer, Dr. Sprat, the fatal disease was an affection of the lungs, the consequence of staying too late in the fields among his labourers. Dr. Warton, however, from the authority of Mr. Spence, gives a different account of the matter. He says, that Cowley, with his friend Sprat, paid a visit on foot to a gentleman in the neighbourhood of Chertsey, which they prolonged, in free conviviality, till midnight; and that missing their way on their return, they were obliged to pass the night under a hedge, which gave to the poet a severe cold and fever, which terminated in his death. He died on July 28. 1667, and was interred, with a most honourable attendance of persons of distinction, in Westminster-abbey, near the remains of Chaucer and Spenser. King Charles II. pronounced his eulogy, by declaring, "that Mr. Cowley had not left a better man behind him in England."

At the time of his death, Cowley certainly ranked as the first poet in England; for Milton lay under a cloud, nor was the age qualified to taste him. And although a large portion of Cowley's celebrity has since vanished, there still remains enough to raise him to a considerable rank among the British poets. It may be proper here to add, that as a prose-writer, particularly in the department of essays, there are few who can compare with him in elegant simplicity.

THE MOTTO.

TENTANDA VIA EST, &amp;c.

WHAT shall I do to be for ever known,
 And make the age to come my own?
 I shall, like beasts or common people, die,
 Unless you write my elegy;
 Whilst others great, by being born, are grown;
 Their mothers' labour, not their own.
 In this scale gold, in th' other fame does lie,
 The weight of that mounts this so high.
 These men are Fortune's jewels, moulded bright;
 Brought forth with their own fire and light:
 If I, her vulgar stone, for either look,
 Out of myself it must be strook.
 Yet I must on. What sound is't strikes mine ear?
 Sure I Fame's trumpet hear:
 It sounds like the last trumpet; for it can Raise up the buried man.
 Unpast Alps stop me; but I'll cut them all,
 And march, the Muses' Hannibal.
 Hence, all the flattering vanities that lay
 Nets of roses in the way!
 Hence, the desire of honours or estate,
 And all that is not above Fate!
 Hence, Love himself, that tyrant of my days!
 Which intercepts my coming praise.
 Come, my best friends, my books! and lead me on;
 'Tis time that I were gone.
 Welcome, great Stagyrte! and teach me now
 All I was born to know:
 Thy scholar's victories thou dost far out-do;
 He conquer'd th' earth, the whole world you.
 Welcome, learn'd Cicero! whose blest tongue and wit
 Preserves Rome's greatness yet:
 Thou art the first of orators; only he
 Who best can praise thee, next must be.
 Welcome the Mantuan swan, Virgil the wise!
 Whose verse walks highest, but not flies;
 Who brought green Poesy to her perfect age,
 And made that art which was a rage.
 Tell me, ye mighty Three! what shall I do
 To be like one of you?
 But you have climb'd the mountain's top, there sit
 On the calm flourishing head of it,
 And, whilst with wearied steps we upwards go,
 See us, and clouds, below.

HONOUR.

SHE loves, and she confesses too;
 There's then, at last, no more to do;
 The happy work's entirely done;
 Enter the town which thou hast won;
 The fruits of conquest now begin;
 Io, triumphe! enter in.

What's this, ye gods! what can it be?
 Remains there still an enemy?
 Bold Honour stands up in the gate,
 And would yet capitulate;
 Have I o'ercome all real foes,
 And shall this phantom me oppose?

Noisy nothing! stalking shade!
 By what witchcraft wert thou made?
 Empty cause of solid harms!
 But I shall find out counter-charms
 Thy airy devilship to remove
 From this circle here of love.

Sure I shall rid myself of thee
 By the night's obscurity,
 And obscurer secrecy!
 Unlike to every other sprite,
 Thou attempt'st not men to fright,
 Nor appear'st but in the light.

OF MYSELF.

THIS only grant me, that my means may lie
 Too low for envy, for contempt too high.
 Some honour I would have,
 Not from great deeds, but good alone;
 Th' unknown are better than ill known:
 Rumour can ope the grave.
 Acquaintance I would have, but when't depends
 Not on the number, but the choice, of friends.

Books should, not business, entertain the light,
 And sleep, as undisturb'd as death, the night.
 My house a cottage more
 Than palace; and should fitting be
 For all my use, no luxury.
 My garden painted o'er
 With Nature's hand, not Art's; and pleasures yield,
 Horace might envy in his Sabin field.

Thus would I double my life's fading space;
 For he, that runs it well, twice runs his race.
 And in this true delight,
 These unbought sports, this happy state,
 I would not fear, nor wish, my fate;
 But boldly say each night,
 To-morrow let my sun his beams display,
 Or in clouds hide them; I have liv'd to-day.

THE CHRONICLE.

A BALLAD.

MARGARITA first possest,
 If I remember well, my breast,
 Margarita first of all;
 But when awhile the wanton maid
 With my restless heart had play'd,
 Martha took the flying ball.

Martha soon did it resign
 To the beauteous Catharine.
 Beauteous Catharine gave place
 (Though loth and angry she to part
 With the possession of my heart)
 To Eliza's conquering face.

Eliza till this hour might reign,
 Had she not evil counsels ta'en.
 Fundamental laws she broke,

And still new favourites she chose,
Till up in arms my passions rose,
And cast away her yoke.

Mary, then, and gentle Anne,
Both to reign at once began ;
Alternately they sway'd,
And sometimes Mary was the fair,
And sometimes Anne the crown did wear,
And sometimes both I obey'd.

Another Mary then arose,
And did rigorous laws impose ;
A mighty tyrant she !
Long, alas ! should I have been Under that iron-scepter'd queen,
Had not Rebecca set me free.

When fair Rebecca set me free,
'Twas then a golden time with me :
But soon those pleasures fled ;
For the gracious princess dy'd,
In her youth and beauty's pride,
And Judith reigned in her stead.

One month, three days, and half an hour,
Judith held the sovereign power :
Wondrous beautiful her face !
But so weak and small her wit,
That she to govern was unfit,
And so Susanna took her place.

But when Isabella came,
Arm'd with a resistless flame,
And th' artillery of her eye ;
Whilst she proudly march'd about,
Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Susan by the by.

But in her place I then obey'd
Black-ey'd Bess, her viceroy-maid ;
To whom ensued a vacancy :
Thousand worse passions then possess
The interregnum of my breast ;
Bless me from such an anarchy !

Gentle Henrietta then,
And a third Mary, next began ;
Then Joan, and Jane, and Audria ;
And then a pretty Thomasine,
And then another Catharine,
And then a long et cætera.

But should I now to you relate
The strength and riches of their state ;
The powder, patches, and the pins,
The ribbons, jewels, and the rings,
The lace, the paint, and warlike things,
That make up all their magazines ;

If I should tell the politic arts
To take and keep men's hearts ;
The letters, embassies, and spies,
The frowns, and smiles, and flatteries
The quarrels, tears, and perjuries,
(Numberless, nameless, mysteries !)

And all the little lime-twigs laid,
By Machiavel the waiting maid ;
I more voluminous should grow

(Chiefly if I like them should tell
All change of weathers that befell.)
Than Holinshed or Stow.

But I will briefer with them be,
Since few of them were long with me.
An higher and a nobler strain
My present emperess does claim,
Heleonora, first o' th' name ;
Whom God grant long to reign !

ANACREONTICS

OR,

SOME COPIES OF VERSES,

TRANSLATED PARAPHRASESTICALLY OUT OF ANACREON.

I. LOVE.

I'LL sing of heroes and of kings,
In mighty numbers, mighty things.
Begin, my Muse ! but lo ! the strings
To my great song rebellious prove ;
The strings will sound of nought but love.
I broke them all, and put on new ;
'Tis this or nothing sure will do.
These, sure, (said I) will me obey ;
These, sure, heroic notes will play.
Straight I began with thundering Jove,
And all th' immortal powers ; but Love,
Love smil'd, and from m' enfeebled lyre
Came gentle airs, such as inspire
Melting love and soft desire.
Farewell, then, heroes ! farewell, kings
And mighty numbers, mighty things !
Love tunes my heart just to my strings.

II. DRINKING.

THE thirsty earth soaks up the rain,
And drinks, and gapes for drink again,
The plants suck-in the earth, and are
With constant drinking fresh and fair ;
The sea itself (which one would think
Should have but little need of drink)
Drinks twice ten thousand rivers up,
So fill'd that they o'erflow the cup.
The busy Sun (and one would guess
By's drunken fiery face no less)
Drinks up the sea, and, when he 'as done,
The Moon and Stars drink up the Sun :
They drink and dance by their own light ;
They drink and revel all the night.
Nothing in nature 's sober found,
But an eternal health goes round.
Fill up the bowl, then, fill it high,
Fill all the glasses there ; for why
Should every creature drink but I ;
Why, man of morals, tell me why ?

III. BEAUTY.

LIBERAL. Nature did dispense
To all things arms for their defence ;
And some she arms with sinewy force,
And some with swiftness in the course ;
Some with hard hoofs or forked claws,
And some with horns or tusked jaws :

And some with scales, and some with wings,
 And some with teeth, and some with stings.
 Wisdom to man she did afford,
 Wisdom for shield, and wit for sword.
 What to beauteous womankind,
 What arms, what armour, has sh' assign'd?
 Beauty is both; for with the fair
 What arms, what armour, can compare?
 What steel, what gold, or diamond,
 More impassible is found?
 And yet what flame, what lightning, e'er
 So great an active force did bear?
 They are all weapon, and they dart
 Like porcupines from every part.
 Who can, alas! their strength express,
 Arm'd, when they themselves undress,
 Cap-a-pie with nakedness?

V. AGE.

Oft am I by the women told,
 Poor Anacreon! thou grow'st old:
 Look how thy hairs are falling all;
 Poor Anacreon, how they fall!
 Whether I grow old or no,
 By th' effects, I do not know;
 This, I know, without being told,
 'Tis time to live, if I grow old;
 'Tis time short pleasures now to take,
 Of little life the best to make,
 And manage wisely the last stake.

VII. GOLD.

A MIGHTY pain to love it is,
 And 'tis a pain that pain to miss;
 But, of all pains, the greatest pain
 It is to love, but love in vain.
 Virtue now, nor noble blood,
 Nor wit by love is understood;
 Gold alone does passion move,
 Gold monopolizes love.
 A curse on her, and on the man
 Who this traffic first began!
 A curse on him who found the ore!
 A curse on him who digg'd the store!
 A curse on him who did refine it!
 A curse on him who first did coin it!
 A curse, all curses else above,
 On him who us'd it first in love!
 Gold begets in brethren hate;
 Gold in families debate;
 Gold does friendships separate;
 Gold does civil wars create.
 These the smallest harms of it!
 Gold, alas! does love beget.

VIII. THE EPICURE.

FILL the bowl with rosy wine!
 Around our temples roses twine!
 And let us cheerfully awhile,
 Like the wine and roses, smile.
 Crown'd with roses, we contemn
 Gyges' wealthy diadem.
 To day is ours, what do we fear?
 To day is ours; we have it here:
 Let's treat it kindly, that it may
 Wish at least, with us to stay.
 Let's banish business, banish sorrow;
 To the gods belongs to-morrow.

IX. ANOTHER.

UNDERNEATH this myrtle shade,
 On flowery beds supinely laid,
 With odorous oils my head o'er-flowing,
 And around it roses growing,
 What should I do but drink away
 The heat and troubles of the day?
 In this more than kingly state
 Love himself shall on me wait.
 Fill to me, Love; nay fill it up;
 And mingled cast into the cup
 Wit, and mirth, and noble fires,
 Vigorous health and gay desires.
 The wheel of life no less will stay
 In a smooth than rugged way:
 Since it equally doth flee,
 Let the motion pleasant be.
 Why do we precious ointments show'r?
 Nobler wines why do we pour?
 Beauteous flowers why do we spread,
 Upon the monuments of the dead?
 Nothing they but dust can show,
 Or bones that hasten to be so.
 Crown me with roses whilst I live,
 Now your wines and ointments give;
 After death I nothing crave,
 Let me alive my pleasures have,
 All are Stoics in the grave.

X. THE GRASSHOPPER.

HAPPY Insect! what can be
 In happiness compar'd to thee?
 Fed with nourishment divine,
 The dewy Morning's gentle wine!
 Nature waits upon thee still,
 And thy verdant cup does fill;
 'Tis fill'd wherever thou dost tread,
 Nature's self's thy Ganymede.
 Thou dost drink, and dance, and sing;
 Happier than the happiest king!
 All the fields which thou dost see,
 All the plants, belong to thee;
 All that summer-hours produce,
 Fertile made with early juice.
 Man for thee does sow and plow;
 Farmer be, and landlord thou!
 Thou dost innocently joy;
 Nor does thy luxury destroy;
 The shepherd gladly heareth thee,
 More harmonious than he.
 Thee country hinds with gladness hear,
 Prophet of the ripen'd year!
 Thee Phœbus loves, and does inspire;
 Phœbus is himself thy sire.
 To thee, of all things upon earth,
 Life is no longer than thy mirth.
 Happy insect, happy thou!
 Dost neither age nor winter know;
 But, when thou'st drunk, and danc'd, and sung
 Thy fill, the flow'ry leaves among, (Voluptuous, and wise withal, Epicurean animal!)
 Sated with thy summer feast,
 Thou retir'st to endless rest.

XI. THE SWALLOW.

FOOLISH Prater, what dost thou
 So early at my window do,

With thy tuneless serenade ?
 Well 't had been had Tereus made
 Thee as dumb as Philomel ;
 There his knife had done but well.
 In thy undiscovered nest
 Thou dost all the winter rest,
 And dreamest o'er thy summer joys,
 Free from the stormy seasons' noise,
 Free from th' ill thou'st done to me ;
 Who disturbs or seeks-out thee ?
 Hadst thou all the charming notes
 Of the wood's poetic throats,
 All thy art could never pay
 What thou hast ta'en from me away.
 Cruel bird ! thou'st ta'en away
 A dream out of my arms to-day ;
 A dream, that ne'er must equall'd be
 By all that waking eyes may see.
 Thou, this damage to repair,
 Nothing half so sweet or fair,
 Nothing half so good, canst bring,
 Though men say thou bring'st the Spring.

ELEGY UPON ANACREON ;

WHO WAS CHOAKED BY A GRAPE-STONE.

Spoken by the God of Love.

How shall I lament thine end,
 My best servant and my friend ?
 Nay, and, if from a deity
 So much deified as I,
 It sound not too profane and odd,
 Oh, my master and my god !
 For 'tis true, most mighty poet !
 Though I like not men should know it)
 I am in naked Nature less,
 Less by much, than in thy dress.
 All thy verse is softer far
 Than the downy feathers are
 Of my wings, or of my arrows,
 Of my mother's doves or sparrows,
 Sweet as lovers' freshest kisses,
 Or their riper following blisses,
 Graceful, cleanly, smooth, and round,
 All with Venus' girdle bound ;
 And thy life was all the while
 Kind and gentle as thy style,
 The smooth-pac'd hours of every day
 Glided numerously away.
 Like thy verse each hour did pass ;
 Sweet and short, like that, it was.

Some do but their youth allow me,
 Just what they by Nature owe me,
 I'm time that's mine, and not their own,
 The certain tribute of my crown :
 When they grow old, they grow to be Too busy, or too wise, for me.
 Thou wert wiser, and didst know
 None too wise for love can grow ;
 Love was with thy life entwin'd,
 Close as heat with fire is join'd ;
 A powerful brand prescrib'd the date
 Of thine, like Meleager's, fate.
 'Tis antiperistasis of age
 More enflam'd thy amorous rage ;
 Thy silver hairs yielded me more
 Than even golden curls before.

Had I the power of creation,
 As I have of generation,
 Where I the matter must obey,
 And cannot work plate out of clay,
 My creatures should be all like thee,
 'Tis thou should'st their idea be :
 They, like thee, should thoroughly hate
 Business, honour, title, state ;
 Other wealth they should not know,
 But what my living mines bestow ;
 The pomp of kings, they should confess,
 At their crownings, to be less
 Than a lover's humblest guise,
 When at his mistress' feet he lies.
 Rumour they no more should mind
 Than men safe landed do the wind ;
 Wisdom itself they should not hear,
 When it presumes to be severe ;
 Beauty alone they should admire,
 Nor look at Fortune's vain attire.
 Nor ask what parents it can shew ;
 With dead or old 't has nought to do.
 They should not love yet all, or any,
 But very much and very many :
 All their life should gilded be
 With mirth, and wit, and gaiety ;
 Well remembering and applying
 The necessity of dying.
 Their cheerful heads should always wear
 All that crowns the flowery year :
 They should always laugh, and sing,
 And dance, and strike th' harmonious string,
 Verse should from their tongue so flow,
 As if it in the mouth did grow,
 As swiftly answering their command,
 As tunes obey the artful hand.
 And whilst I do thus discover
 Th' ingredients of a happy lover,
 'Tis, my Anacreon ! for thy sake
 I of the Grape no mention make.

Till my Anacreon by thee fell,
 Cursed Plant ! I lov'd thee well ;
 And 'twas oft my wanton use
 To dip my arrows in thy juice.
 Cursed Plant ! 'tis true, I see,
 The old report that goes of thee —
 That with giants' blood the Earth
 Stain'd and poison'd gave thee birth ;
 And now thou wreak'st thy ancient spite
 On men in whom the gods delight.
 Thy patron, Bacchus, 'tis no wonder,
 Was brought forth in flames and thunder ;
 In rage, in quarrels, and in fights,
 Worse than his tigers, he delights ;
 In all our Heaven I think there be
 No such ill-natur'd god as he.
 Thou pretendest, traitorous Wine !
 To be the Muses' friend and mine :
 With love and wit thou dost begin,
 False fires, alas ! to draw us in ;
 Which, if our course we by them keep,
 Misguide to madness or to sleep :
 Sleep were well, thou'st learnt a way
 To death itself now to betray.

It grieves me when I see what fate
 Does on the best of mankind wait.
 Poets or lovers let them be,
 'Tis neither love nor poesy
 Can arm, against Death's smallest dart,
 The poet's head or lover's heart ;

But when their life, in its decline,
Touches th' inevitable line,
All the world's mortal to them then,
And wine is aconite to men ;
Nay, in Death's hand, the grape-stone proves
As strong as thunder is in Jove's.

ODE, FROM CATULLUS.

ACME AND SEPTIMIUS.

WHILST on Septimius' panting breast
(Meaning nothing less than rest)
Acme lean'd her loving head,
Thus the pleas'd Septimius said :

" My dearest Acme, if I be Once alive, and love not thee
With a passion far above
All that e'er was called love ;
In a Libyan desert may
I become some lion's prey ;
Let him, Acme, let him tear
My breast, when Acme is not there."

The god of love, who stood to hear him
(The god of love was always near him)
Pleas'd and tickled with the sound,
Sneez'd aloud ; and all around
The little Loves, that waited by,
Bow'd, and blest the augury.
Acme, inflam'd with what he said,
Rear'd her gently-bending head ;
And, her purple mouth with joy
Stretching to the delicious boy,
Twice (and twice could scarce suffice)
She kist his drunken rolling eyes.

" My little life, my all !" (said she)
So may we ever servants be
To this best god, and ne'er retain
Our hated liberty again !
So may thy passion last for me,
As I a passion have for thee,
Greater and fiercer much than can
Be conceiv'd by thee a man !
Into my marrow is it gone,
Fixt and settled in the bone ;
It reigns not only in my heart,
But runs, like life, through every part."
She spoke ; the god of love aloud
Sneez'd again ; and all the crowd
Of little Loves, that waited by,
Bow'd, and bless'd the augury.

This good omen thus from Heaven
Like a happy signal given,
Their loves and lives (all four) embrace,
And hand in hand run all the race.
To poor Septimius (who did now
Nothing else but Acme grow)
Acme's bosom was alone
The whole world's imperial throne ;
And to faithful Acme's mind
Septimius was all human-kind.

If the gods would please to be
But advis'd for once by me,

I'd advise them, when they spy
Any illustrious piety,
To reward her, if it be she —
To reward him, if it be he —
With such a husband, such a wife ;
With Acme's and Septimius' life.

THE COMPLAINT.

IN a deep vision's intellectual scene,
Beneath a bower for sorrow made,
Th' uncomfortable shade
Of the black yew's unlucky green,
Mixt with the mourning willow's careful grey,
Where reverend Cham cuts out his famous way,
The melancholy Cowley lay :
And lo ! a Muse appear'd to's closed sight,
(The Muses oft in lands of vision play,)
Body'd, array'd, and seen, by an internal light.
A golden harp with silver strings she bore ;
A wondrous hieroglyphic robe she wore,
In which all colours and all figures were,
That Nature or that Fancy can create,
That Art can never imitate ;
And with loose pride it wanton'd in the air.
In such a dress, in such a well-cloth'd dream,
She us'd, of old, near fair Ismenus' stream,
Pindar, her Theban favourite, to meet ;
A crown was on her head, and wings were on her feet.

She touch'd him with her harp, and rais'd him from the ground ;
The shaken strings melodiously resound.
" Art thou return'd at last," said she,
" To this forsaken place and me ?
Thou prodigal ! who didst so loosely waste
Of all thy youthful years the good estate ;
Art thou return'd here, to repent too late,
And gather husks of learning up at last,
Now the rich harvest-time of life is past,
And Winter marches on so fast ?
But, when I meant t'adopt thee for my son,
And did as learn'd a portion assign,
As ever any of the mighty Nine
Had to their dearest children done ;
When I resolv'd t'exalt thy anointed name,
Among the spiritual lords of peaceful fame ;
Thou, changeling ! thou, bewitch'd with noise and show,
Would'st into courts and cities from me go ;
Would'st see the world abroad, and have a share
In all the follies and the tumults there :
Thou would'st, forsooth, be something in a state,
And business thou would'st find, and would'st create ;
Business ! the frivolous pretence
Of human lusts, to shake off innocence ;
Business ! the grave impertinence ;
Business ! the thing which I of all things hate ;
Business ! the contradiction of thy fate.
" Go, renegado ! cast up thy account,
And see to what amount
Thy foolish gains by quitting me :
The sale of knowledge, fame, and liberty,
The fruits of thy unlearn'd apostacy.
Thou thought'st, if once the public storm were past,

All thy remaining life should sunshine be ;
Behold ! the public storm is spent at last,
The sovereign's tost at sea no more,
And thou, with all the noble company,
Art got at last to shore.

But, whilst thy fellow-voyagers I see
All march'd up to possess the promis'd land,
Thou, still alone, alas ! dost gaping stand
Upon the naked beach, upon the barren sand !

" As a fair morning of the blessed spring,
After a tedious stormy night,
Such was the glorious entry of our king ;
Enriching moisture drop'd on every thing :
Plenty he sow'd below, and cast about him light !

But then, alas ! to thee alone,
One of old Gideon's miracles was shown ;
For every tree and every herb around
With pearly dew was crown'd,
And upon all the quicken'd ground
The fruitful seed of Heaven did brooding lie,
And nothing but the Muse's fleece was dry.

It did all other threats surpass,
When God to his own people said
(The men whom through long wanderings he had led)
That he would give them ev'n a heaven of brass :

They look'd up to that Heaven in vain,
That bounteous Heaven, which God did not restrain
Upon the most unjust to shine and rain.

" The Rachel, for which twice seven years and more
Thou didst with faith and labour serve,
And didst (if faith and labour can) deserve,
Though she contracted was to thee,
Given to another thou didst see
Given to another, who had store
Of fairer and of richer wives before,
And not a Leah left, thy recompense to be !
Go on ; twice seven years more thy fortune try ;
Twice seven years more God in his bounty may Give thee, to fling away
Into the court's deceitful lottery :

But think how likely 'tis that thou,
With the dull work of thy unwieldy plough,
Should'st in a hard and barren season thrive,
Should'st at even able be to live ;
Thou, to whose share so little bread did fall,
In that miraculous year, when manna rain'd on all."

Thus spake the Muse, and spake it with a smile,
That seem'd at once to pity and revile.

And to her thus, raising his thoughtful head,
The melancholy Cowley said —

" Ah, wanton foe ! dost thou upbraid
The ills which thou thyself hast made ?
When in the cradle innocent I lay,
Thou, wicked spirit ! stolest me away,
And my abused soul didst bear
Into thy new-found worlds, I know not where,
Thy golden Indies in the air ;
And ever since I strive in vain
My ravish'd freedom to regain ;
Still I rebel, still thou dost reign ;
Lo ! still in verse against thee I complain.
There is a sort of stubborn weeds,
Which, if the earth but once, it ever, breeds ;
No wholesome herb can near them thrive,
No useful plant can keep alive :

The foolish sports I did on thee bestow,
Make all my art and labour fruitless now ;
Where once such fairies dance, no grass doth ever grow.

" When my new mind had no infusion known,
Thou gav'st so deep a tincture of thine own,
That ever since I vainly try
To wash away th' inherent dyé :
Long work perhaps may spoil thy colours quite ;
But never will reduce the native white :
To all the ports of honour and of gain,
I often steer my course in vain ;
Thy gale comes cross, and drives me back again.
Thou slack'nest all my nerves of industry,
By making them so oft to be
The tinkling strings of thy loose minstrelsy.
Whoever this world's happiness would see,
Must as entirely cast off thee,
As they who only Heaven desire
Do from the world retire.

This was my error, this my gross mistake.
Myself a demi-votary to make.
Thus, with Sapphira and her husband's fate,
(A fault which I, like them, am taught too late,)
For all that I gave up I nothing gain,
And perish for the part which I retain.

" Teach me not then, O thou fallacious Muse !
The court, and better king, t'accuse :
The heaven under which I live is fair,
The fertile soil will a full harvest bear :
Thine, thine is all the barrenness ; if thou
Mak'st me sit still and sing, when I should plough.
When I but think how many a tedious year
Our patient sovereign did attend
His long misfortunes' fatal end ;
How cheerfully, and how exempt from fear,
On the Great Sovereign's will he did depend ;
I ought to be accurst, if I refuse
To wait on his, O thou fallacious Muse !
Kings have long hands, they say ; and, though I be
So distant, they may reach at length to me.
However, of all the princes, thou
Should'st not reproach rewards for being small or slow ;
Thou ! who rewardest but with popular breath,
And that too after death."

HYMN TO LIGHT.

FIRST-BORN of Chaos, who so fair didst come
From the old Negro's darksome womb !
Which, when it saw the lovely child,
The melancholy mass put on kind looks and smil'd ;

Thou tide of glory, which no rest dost know,
But ever ebb and ever flow !
Thou golden shower of a true Jove !
Who does in thee descend, and Heaven to Earth make love !

Hail, active Nature's watchful life and health !
Her joy, her ornament, and wealth !
Hail to thy husband, Heat, and thee !
Thou the world's beautiful bride, the lusty bridegroom he !

Say, from what golden quivers of the sky
Do all thy winged arrows fly?
Swiftness and Power by birth are thine:
From thy great sire they came, thy sire, the Word
Divine,

'Tis, I believe, this archery to show,
That so much cost in colours thou,
And skill in painting, dost bestow,
Upon thy ancient arms, the gaudy heavenly bow.

Swift as light thoughts their empty career run,
Thy race is finish'd when begun;
Let a post-angel start with thee,
And thou the goal of Earth shalt reach as soon as he.

Thou in the Moon's bright chariot, proud and gay,
Dost thy bright wood of stars survey!
And all the year dost with thee bring
Of thousand flowery lights thine own nocturnal spring.

Thou, Scythian-like, dost round thy lands above
The Sun's gilt tents for ever move,
And still, as thou in pomp dost go,
The shining pageants of the world attend thy show.

Nor amidst all these triumphs dost thou scorn
The humble glow-worms to adorn,
And with those living spangles gild
(O greatness without pride!) the bushes of the field.

Night, and her ugly subjects, thou dost fright,
And Sleep, the lazy owl of night;
Asham'd, and fearful to appear,
They screen their horrid shapes with the black hemisphere.

With them there hastes, and wildly takes th' alarm,
Of painted dreams a busy swarm:
At the first opening of thine eye
The various clusters break, the antic atoms fly

The guilty serpents, and obscener beasts,
Creep, conscious, to their secret rests:
Nature to thee does reverence pay,
Ill omens and ill sights removes out of thy way.

At thy appearance, Grief itself is said
To shake his wings, and rouse his head:
And cloudy Care has often took
A gentle beamy smile, reflected from thy look.

At thy appearance, Fear itself grows bold;
Thy sun-shine melts away his cold.
Encouraged at the sight of thee,
To the cheek colour comes, and firmness to the knee.

Ev'n Lust, the master of a harden'd face,
Blushes, if thou be'st in the place,
To Darkness' curtains he retires;
In sympathising night he rolls his smoky fires.

When, goddess! thou lift'st up thy waken'd head,
Out of the morning's purple bed,
Thy quire of birds about thee play
And all the joyful world salutes the rising day.

The ghosts, and monster-spirits, that did presume
A body's privilege to assume,
Vanish again invisibly,
And bodies gain again their visibility.

All the world's bravery, that delights our eyes,
Is but thy several liveries;
Thou the rich dye on them bestow'st,
Thy nimble pencil paints this landscape as thou go'st.

A crimson garment in the rose thou wear'st;
A crown of studded gold thou bear'st;
The virgin-lilies, in their white,
Are clad but with the lawn of almost naked light.

The violet, Spring's little infant, stands
Girt in thy purple swaddling-bands
On the fair tulip thou dost doat;
Thou cloth'st it in a gay and party-colour'd coat.

With flame condens'd thou do'st thy jewels fix,
And solid colours in it mix:
Flora herself envies to see
Flowers fairer than her own, and durable as she.

Ah, goddess! would thou could'st thy hand withhold,
And be less liberal to gold!
Did'st thou less value to it give,
Of how much care, alas! might'st thou poor man relieve!

To me the Sun is more delightful far,
And all fair days much fairer are.
But few, ah! wondrous few, there be,
Who do not gold prefer, O goddess! ev'n to thee.

Through the soft ways of Heaven, and air, and sea,
Which open all their pores to thee,
Like a clear river thou dost glide,
And with thy living stream through the close channels slide.

But, where firm bodies thy free course oppose,
Gently thy source the land o'erflows;
Takes there possession, and does make,
Of colours mingled light, a thick and standing lake.

But the vast ocean of unbounded day,
In th' empyrean Heaven does stay.
Thy rivers, lakes, and springs, below,
From thence took first their rise, thither at last must flow.

AGAINST HOPE.

Horz! whose weak being ruin'd is,
Alike, if it succeed, and if it miss;
Whom good or ill does equally confound,
And both the horns of Fate's dilemma wound:
Vain shadow! which does vanish quite,
Both at full noon and perfect night!
The stars have not a possibility
Of blessing thee;
If things then from their end we happy call,
'Tis hope is the most hopeless thing of all.

Hope! thou bold taster of delight, [quite!
Who, whilst thou should'st but taste, devour'st it

Thou bring'st us an estate, yet leav'st us poor,
By clogging it with legacies before !
The joys which we entire should wed,
Come deflower'd virgins to our bed ;
Good fortunes without gain imported be,
Such mighty custom's paid to thee.
For joy, like wine, kept close does better taste ;
If it take air before, its spirits waste.

Hope ! Fortune's cheating lottery !
Where for one prize an hundred blanks there be ;
Fond archer, Hope ! who tak'st thy aim so far,
That still or short or wide thine arrows are !
Thin, empty cloud, which th' eye deceives
With shapes that our own fancy gives !
A cloud, which gilt and painted now appears,
But must drop presently in tears !
When thy false beams o'er Reason's light prevail,
By ignes fatui for north-stars we sail.

Brother of Fear, more gayly clad !
The merrier fool o' th' two, yet quite as mad :
Sire of Repentance ! child of fond Desire !
That blow'st the chymics', and the lovers', fire,
Leading them still insensibly on
By the strange witchcraft of "anon !"
By thee the one does changing Nature, through
Her endless labyrinths, pursue ;
And th' other chases woman, whilst she goes
More ways and turns than hunted Nature knows.

FOR HOPE.

How ! of all ills that men endure,
The only cheap and universal cure !
Thou captive's freedom, and thou sick man's health !
Thou loser's victory, and thou beggar's wealth !
Thou manna, which from Heaven we eat,
To every taste a several meat !
Thou strong retreat ! thou sure-entail'd estate,
Which nought has power to alienate !
Thou pleasant, honest flatterer ! for none
Flatter unhappy men, but thou alone !

Hope ! thou first-fruits of happiness !
Thou gentle dawning of a bright success !
Thou good preparative, without which our joy
Does work too strong, and, whilst it cures, destroy !
Who out of Fortune's reach dost stand,
And art a blessing still in hand !
Whilst thee, her earnest-money, we retain,
We certain are to gain,
Whether she her bargain break or else fulfil ;
Thou only good, not worse for ending ill !

Brother of Faith ! 'twixt whom and thee
The joys of Heaven and Earth divided be !
Though Faith be heir, and have the fixt estate,
Thy portion yet in moveables is great.
Happiness itself's all one
In thee, or in possession !
Only the future's thine, the present his !
Thine's the more hard and noble bliss :
Best apprehender of our joys ! which hast
So long a reach, and yet canst hold so fast !

Hope ! thou sad lovers' only friend !
Thou Way, that may'st dispute it with the End !
For love, I fear, 's a fruit that does delight
The taste itself less than the smell and sight.

Fruition more deceitful is
Than thou canst be, when thou dost miss ;
Men leave thee by obtaining, and straight flee
Some other way again to thee ;
And that's a pleasant country, without doubt,
To which all soon return that travel out.

CLAUDIAN'S OLD MAN OF VERONA.

DE SENE VERONENSI, QUI SUBURBIUM NUNQUAM
EGRESSUS EST.

FELIX, qui patriis, &c.

HAPPY the man, who his whole time doth bound
Within th' enclosure of his little ground.
Happy the man, whom the same humble place
(Th' hereditary cottage of his race)
From his first rising infancy has known,
And by degrees sees gently bending down,
With natural propension, to that earth
Which both preserv'd his life, and gave him birth.
Him no false distant lights, by fortune set,
Could ever into foolish wanderings get.
He never dangers either saw or fear'd :
The dreadful storms at sea he never heard.
He never heard the shrill alarms of war,
Or the worse noises of the lawyers' bar.
No change of consuls marks to him the year,
The change of seasons is his calendar.
The cold and heat, winter and summer shows ;
Autumn by fruits, and spring by flowers, he knows ;
He measures time by land-marks, and has found
For the whole day the dial of his ground.
A neighbouring wood, born with himself, he sees,
And loves his old contemporary trees.
He 'as only heard of near Verona's name,
And knows it, like the Indies, but by fame.
Does with a like concernment notice take
Of the Red-sea, and of Benacus' lake.
Thus health and strength he to a third age enjoys,
And sees a long posterity of boys.
About the spacious world let others roam,
The voyage, life, is longest made at home.

THE WISH.

WELL, then ; I now do plainly see
This busy world and I shall ne'er agree ;
The very honey of all earthly joy
Does of all meats the soonest cloy ;
And they, methinks, deserve my pity,
Who for it can endure the stings,
The crowd, and buzz, and murmurings,
Of this great hive, the city.

Ah, yet, ere I descend to th' grave,
May I a small house and large garden have !
And a few friends, and many books, both true,
Both wise, and both delightful too !
And, since love ne'er will from me flee,
A mistress moderately fair,
And good as guardian-angels are
Only belov'd, and loving me !

Oh, fountains ! when in you shall I
Myself, eas'd of unpeaceful thoughts, espy ?
Oh fields ! oh woods ! when, when shall I be made
The happy tenant of your shade ?

Here's the spring-head of Pleasure's flood ;
Where all the riches lie, that she
Has coin'd and stamp'd for good.

Pride and ambition here
Only in far-fetch'd metaphors appear ;
Here nought but winds can hurtful murmurs scatter,
And nought but Echo flatter.
The gods, when they descended, hither
From Heaven did always chuse their way ;
And therefore we may boldly say,
That 'tis the way too thither.

How happy here should I,
And one dear she, live, and embracing die !
She, who is all the world, and can exclude
In deserts solitude.
I should have then this only fear —
Lest men, when they my pleasures see,
Should hither throng to live like me,
And so make a city here.

FROM THE DAVIDEIS.

Awake, awake, my Lyre !
And tell thy silent master's humble tale
In sounds that may prevail ;
Sounds that gentle thoughts inspire :

Though so exalted she,
And I so lowly be,
Tell her, such different notes make all thy harmony.

Hark ! how the strings awake :
And, though the moving hand approach not near,
Themselves with awful fear,
A kind of numerous trembling make.
Now all thy forces try,
Now all thy charms apply,
Revenge upon her ear the conquests of her eye.

Weak Lyre ! thy virtue sure
Is useless here, since thou art only found
To cure, but not to wound,
And she to wound, but not to cure.
Too weak too wilt thou prove
My passion to remove,
Physic to other ills, thou'rt nourishment to love.

Sleep, sleep again, my Lyre !
For thou canst never tell my humble tale
In sounds that will prevail ;
Nor gentle thoughts in her inspire :
All thy vain mirth lay by,
Bid thy strings silent lie,
Sleep, sleep again, my Lyre ; and let thy master die.

JOHN MILTON.

JOHN MILTON, a poet of the first rank in eminence, was descended from an ancient family, settled at Milton, in Oxfordshire. His father, whose desertion of the Roman Catholic faith was the cause of his disinheritor, settled in London as a scrivener, and marrying a woman of good family, had two sons and a daughter. John, the eldest son, was born in Bread-street, on December 9. 1608. He received the rudiments of learning from a domestic tutor, Thomas Young, afterwards chaplain to the English merchants at Hamburg, whose merits are gratefully commemorated by his pupil, in a Latin elegy. At a proper age he was sent to St. Paul's school, and there began to distinguish himself by his intense application to study, as well as by his poetical talents. In his sixteenth year he was removed to Christ's college, Cambridge, where he was admitted a pensioner, under the tuition of Mr. W. Chappel.

Of his course of studies in the university little is known; but it appears, from several exercises preserved in his works, that he had acquired extraordinary skill in writing Latin verses, which are of a purer taste than any preceding compositions of the kind by English scholars. He took the degrees both of Bachelor and Master of Arts; the latter in 1632, when he left Cambridge. He renounced his original intention of entering the church, for which he has given as a reason, that, "coming to some maturity of years, he had perceived what tyranny had invaded it;" which denotes a man early habituated to think and act for himself.

He now returned to his father, who had retired from business to a residence at Horton, in Buckinghamshire; and he there passed five years in the study of the best Roman and Grecian authors, and in the composition of some of his finest miscellaneous poems. This was the period of his Allegro and Penseroso, his Comus and Lycidas. That his learning and talents had at this time attracted considerable notice, appears from an application made to him from the Bridgewater family, which produced his admirable masque of "Comus," performed in 1634, at Ludlow Castle, before the Earl of Bridgewater, then Lord President of Wales; and also by his "Arcades," part of an entertainment presented to the Countess Dowager of Derby, at Harfield, by some of her family.

In 1638, he obtained his father's leave to improve himself by foreign travel, and set out for the continent. Passing through France, he proceeded to Italy, and spent a considerable time in that seat of the arts and of literature. At Naples he was kindly received by Mano, Marquis of Villa, who had long before deserved the gratitude of poets by his patronage of Tasso; and, in return for a laudatory epich of Mano, Milton addressed to him a Latin poem, of great elegance. He left Italy by the way of Geneva, where he contracted an acquaintance with two learned divines, John Diodati and Frederic Spanheim; and he returned through France, having been absent about a year and three months.

On his arrival, Milton found the nation agitated by civil and religious disputes, which threatened a crisis; and as he had expressed himself impatient to be present on the theatre of contention, it has been thought extraordinary that he did not immediately place himself in some active station. But his turn was not military; his fortune precluded a seat in parliament; the pulpit he had declined; and for the bar he had made no preparation. His taste and habits were altogether literary; for the present, therefore, he fixed himself in the metropolis, and undertook the education of his sister's two sons, of the name of Philips. Soon after, he was applied to by several parents to admit their children to the benefit of his tuition. He therefore took a commodious house in Aldersgate-street, and opened an academy. Disapproving the plan of education in the public schools and universities, he deviated from it as widely as possible. He put into the hands of his scholars, instead of the common classics, such Greek and Latin authors as treated on the arts and sciences, and on philosophy; thus expecting to instil the knowledge of things with that of words. We are not informed of the result of his plan; but it will appear singular that one who had himself drunk so deeply at the muse's fount, should withhold the draught from others. We learn, however, that he performed the task of instruction with great assiduity.

Milton did not long suffer himself to lie under the reproach of having neglected the public cause in his private pursuits; and, in 1641, he published four treatises relative to church-government, in which he gave the preponderance to the presbyterian form above the episcopalian. Resuming the same controversy in the following year, he numbered among his antagonists such men as Bishop Hall and Archbishop Usher. His father, who had been disturbed by the king's troops, now came to live with him; and the necessity of a female head of such a house, caused Milton, in 1643, to form a connection with the daughter of Richard Powell, Esq., a magistrate of Oxfordshire. This was, in several respects, an unhappy marriage; for his father-in-law was a zealous royalist, and his wife had accustomed herself to the jovial hospitality of that party. She had not, therefore, passed above a month in her husband's house, when, having procured an invitation from her father, she went to pass the summer in his mansion. Milton's invitations for her return were treated with contempt; upon which, regarding her conduct as a desertion which broke the nuptial contract, he determined to punish it by repudiation. In 1644 he published a work on "The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce;" and, in the next year, it was followed by "Tetrachordon, or Expositions upon the four chief Places in Scripture which treat of Marriage." He further reduced his doctrine into practice, by paying his addresses to a young lady of great accomplishments; but, as he was paying a visit to a neighbour and kinsman, he was surprised with the sudden entrance of his wife, who threw herself at his feet, and implored forgiveness. After a short struggle of resentment, he took her to his bosom; and he sealed the reconciliation by opening his house to her father and brothers, when they had been driven from home by the triumph of the republican arms.

In the progress of Milton's prose works, it will be right to mention his "Areopagitica; a Speech of Mr. John Milton, for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing,"—a work, published in 1644, written with equal spirit and ability, and which, when reprinted in 1738, was affirmed by the editor to be the best defence that had ever then appeared of that essential article of public liberty. In the following year he took care that his poetical character should not be lost to the world, and published his juvenile poems, Latin and English.

Milton's principles of the origin and end of government carried him to a full approbation of the trial and execution of the king; and, in order to conciliate the minds of the people to that act, he published, early in 1649, a work entitled, "The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates; proving that it is lawful, and hath been so held through all ages, for any who have the power, to call to account a tyrant or wicked king; and, after due conviction, to depose and put him to death, if the ordinary magistrate have neglected or denied to do it." Certainly, it would not be easy to express, in stronger terms, an author's resolution to leave no doubts concerning his opinion on this important topic. His appointment to the Latin Secretaryship to the Council of State was, probably, the consequence of his decision.

The learned Frenchman, Salmasius, or Saumaise, having been hired by Charles II., while in Holland, to write a work in favour of the royal cause, which he entitled, "Defensio Regia," Milton was employed to answer it; which he did in 1651, by his celebrated "Defensio pro Populo Anglicano," in which he exercised all his powers of Latin rhetoric, both to justify the republican party, and to confound and vilify the famous scholar against whom he took up the pen. By this piece he acquired a high reputation, both at home and abroad; and he received a present of a thousand pounds from the English government. His book went through several editions; while, on the other hand, the work of Salmasius was suppressed by the States of Holland, in whose service he lived as a professor at Leyden.

Milton's intense application to study had, for some years preceding, brought on an affection of the eyes, which gradually impaired his sight; and, before he wrote his "Defensio," he was warned by his physicians that the effort would probably end in total blindness. This opinion was soon after justified by a gutta serena, which seized both his eyes, and subjected the remainder of his life to those privations which he has so feelingly described in some passages of his poems. His intellectual powers, however, suffered no eclipse from this loss of his sensitive faculties; and he pursued, without intermission, both his official and his controversial occupations. Cromwell, about this time, having assumed the supreme power, with the title of Protector, Milton acted with a subservience towards this usurper which is the part of his conduct that it is the most difficult to justify. It might have been expected, that when the wisest and most conscientious of the republicans had become sensible of his arts, and opposed his ambitious projects, the mind of Milton would neither have been blinded by his hypocrisy, nor overawed by his power. Possibly the real cause of his predilection for Cromwell, was that he saw no refuge from the intolerance of the Presbyterians, but in the moderation of the Protector. And, in fact, the very passage in which he addresses him with the loftiest encomium, contains a free and noble exhortation to him to respect that public liberty, of which he appeared to be the guardian.

Cromwell at length died; and so zealous and sanguine was Milton, to the very last, that one of his latest political productions was, "A ready and easy Way to establish a free Commonwealth." It was in vain, however, to contend, by pamphlets, with the national inclination; and Charles II. returned in triumph. Milton was discharged from his office, and lay for some time concealed in the house of a friend. The House of Commons desired that his Majesty would issue a proclamation to call in Milton's Defences of the People, and Iconoclastes, together with a book of Goodwyn's. The books were accordingly burnt by the common hangman; but the authors were returned as having absconded; nor, in the act of indemnity, did the name of Milton appear among those of the excepted persons.

He now, in reduced circumstances, and under the discountenance of power, removed to a private habitation near his former residence. He had buried his first wife; and a second, the daughter of a Captain Woodcock, in Hackney, died in childbed. To solace his forlorn condition, he desired his friend, Dr. Paget, to look out a third wife for him, who recommended a relation of his own, named Elizabeth Minshull, of a good family in Cheshire. His powerful mind, now centered in itself, and undisturbed by contentions and temporary topics, opened to those great ideas which were continually filling it, and the result was, Paradise Lost. Much discussion has taken place concerning the original conception of this grand performance; but whatever hint may have suggested the rude outline, it is certain that all the creative powers of a strong imagination, and all the accumulated stores of a life devoted to learning, were expended in its completion. Though he appears, at an early age, to have thought of some subject in the heroic times of English history, as peculiarly calculated for English verse, yet his religious turn, and assiduous study of the Hebrew Scriptures, produced a final preference of a story derived from the Sacred Writings, and giving scope to the introduction of his theological system. It would be superfluous, at this time, to weigh the merits of Milton's great work, which stands so much beyond competition; but it may be affirmed, that whatever his other poems can exhibit of beauty in some parts, or of grandeur in others, may all be referred to Paradise Lost as the most perfect model of both.

Milton, not exhausted by this great effort, followed it in 1670 by "Paradise Regained," written upon a suggestion of the Quaker Elwood's, and apparently regarded as the theological completion of the Paradise Lost. Although, in point of invention, its inferiority is plainly apparent, yet modern criticism has pronounced that there are passages in it by no means unworthy of the genius of Milton, allowance being made for the small compass of the subject, and his purpose in writing it. Together with it appeared his tragedy of "Sampson Agonistes," composed upon the model of antiquity, and never intended for the stage.

With this work his poetical account closes; and a few pieces in prose can scarcely claim particular notice. He sunk tranquilly under an exhaustion of the vital powers in November, 1674, when he had nearly completed his 66th year. His remains were carried from his house in Bunhill-Fields to the church of St. Giles, Cripplegate, with a numerous and splendid attendance. No monument marked the tomb of this great man, but his memory was honoured with a tomb in 1737, in Westminster Abbey, at the expense of Auditor Benson. The only family whom he left were daughters.

L'ALLEGRO.

HENCE, loathed Melancholy,
Of Cerberus and blackest Midnight born,
In Stygian cave forlorn, [holy !
'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights un-
Find out some uncouth cell, [wings,
Where brooding Darkness spreads his jealous
And the night-raven sings;
There under ebon shades, and low-brow'd rocks,
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell.
But come, thou goddess fair and free,
In Heaven yclep'd Euphrosyne,
And by men, heart-easing Mirth;
Whom lovely Venus, at a birth,
With two sister Graces more,
To ivy-crowned Bacchus bore:
(Or whether (as some sager sing)
The frolic wind, that breathes the spring,
Zephyr, with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a-maying;
There on beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,
Find'd her with thee a daughter fair,
So blazon, blithe, and debonair.
Haste thee, Nymph, and bring with thee
Joy and youthful Jollity,
Quips, and Cranks, and wanton Wiles,
Nods, and Becks, and wreathed Smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek;
Sport that wrinkled Care derides,
And laughter holding both his sides.
Come, and trip it, as you go,
On the light fantastic toe;
And in thy right hand lead with thee
The mountain-nymph, sweet Liberty;
And if I give thee honour due,
Mirth admit me of thy crew,
To live with her, and live with thee,
In unreprov'd pleasures free.
I hear the lark begin his flight,
And singing scurle the dull Night,
His watch-tower in the skies,
And the dappled Dawn doth rise;

Then to come, in spite of sorrow,
And at my window bid good morrow,
Through the sweet-brier, or the vine,
Or the twisted eglantine:
While the cock, with lively din,
Scatters the rear of Darkness thin.
And to the stack, or the barn-door,
Stoutly struts his dames before:
Oft listening how the hounds and horn
Cheerly rouse the slumbering Morn,
From the side of some hoar hill,
Through the high wood echoing shrill:
Some time walking, not unseen,
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green,
Right against the eastern-gate
Where the great Sun begins his state,
Rob'd in flames, and amber light,
The clouds in thousand liveries dight;
While the ploughman, near at hand,
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land,
And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his sithe,
And every shepherd tells his tale
Under the hawthorn in the dale.
Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures,
Whilst the landscape round it measures;
Russet lawns, and fallows gray,
Where the nibbling flocks do stray;
Mountains, on whose barren breast,
The labouring clouds do often rest;
Meadows trim with daisies pide,
Shallow brooks, and rivers wide:
Towers and battlements it sees
Bossom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies,
The Cynosure of neighbouring eyes.
Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes,
From betwixt two aged oaks,
Where Corydon and Thyrsis met,
Are at their savoury dinner set
Of herbs and other country messes,
Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses;
And then in haste her bower she leaves,
With Thestylis to bind the sheaves;
Or, if the earlier season lead,
To the tann'd haycock in the mead.

Sometimes with secure delight
 The upland hamlets will invite,
 When the merry bells ring round,
 And the jocund rebecks sound
 To many a youth, and many a maid.
 Dancing in the chequer'd shade ;
 And young and old come forth to play
 On a sun-shine holiday,
 Till the live-long day-light fail :
 Then to the spicy nut-brown ale,
 With stories told of many a feat,
 How faery Mab the junkets eat ;
 She was pinch'd, and pull'd, she sed ;
 And he, by friars lantern led,
 Tells how the drudging goblin swet,
 To earn his cream-bowl duly set,
 When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
 His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,
 That ten day-labourers could not end ;
 Then lies him down the lubbar fiend,
 And, stretch'd out all the chimney's length,
 Basks at the fire his hairy strength ;
 And crop-full out of doors he flings,
 Ere the first cock his matin rings.
 Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
 By whispering winds soon lull'd asleep.
 Tower'd cities please us then,
 And the busy hum of men,
 Where throngs of knights and barons bold,
 In weeds of peace, high triumphs hold,
 With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
 Rain influence, and judge the prize
 Of wit, or arms, while both contend
 To win her grace, whom all commend.
 There let Hymen oft appear
 In saffron robe, with taper clear,
 And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
 With mask, and antique pageantry ;
 Such sights as youthful poets dream
 On summer eves by haunted stream.
 Then to the well-trod stage anon,
 If Jonson's learned sock be on,
 Or sweetest Shakspeare, Fancy's child,
 Warble his native wood-notes wild.

And ever, against eating cares,
 Lap me in soft Lydian airs,
 Married to immortal verse ;
 Such as the meeting soul may pierce,
 In notes, with many a winding bout
 Of linked sweetness long drawn out,
 With wanton heed and giddy cunning ;
 The melting voice through mazes running,
 Untwisting all the chains that tie
 The hidden soul of harmony ;
 That Orpheus' self may heave his head
 From golden slumber on a bed
 Of heap'd Elysian flowers, and hear
 Such strains as would have won the car
 Of Pluto, to have quite set free
 His half-regain'd Eurydice.

These delights if thou canst give,
 Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

IL PENSEROSO.

HENCE, vain deluding Joys,
 The brood of Folly, without father bred !
 How little you bested,
 Or fill the fixed mind with all your toys !

Dwell in some idle brain,
 And fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
 As thick and numberless
 As the gay motes that people the sun-beams ;
 Or likest hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train.
 But hail, thou goddess, sage and holy,
 Hail, divinest Melancholy !
 Whose saintly visage is too bright
 To hit the sense of human sight,
 And therefore to our weaker view
 O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue ;
 Black, but such as in esteem
 Prince Memnon's sister might beseeem,
 Or that starr'd Ethiop queen that strove
 To set her beauty's praise above
 The sea-nymphs, and their powers offended :
 Yet thou art higher far descended :
 Thee bright-hair'd Vesta, long of yore,
 To solitary Saturn bore ;
 His daughter she ; in Saturn's reign,
 Such mixture was not held a stain :
 Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
 He met her, and in secret shades
 Of woody Ida's inmost grove,
 Whilst yet there was no fear of Jove.
 Come, pensive Nun, devout and pure,
 Sober, stedfast, and demure,
 All in a robe of darkest grain,
 Flowing with majestic train,
 And sable stole of Cyprus lawn,
 Over thy decent shoulders drawn.
 Come, but keep thy wonted state,
 With even step, and musing gait ;
 And looks commercing with the skies,
 Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes :
 There, held in holy passion still,
 Forget thyself to marble, till
 With a sad leaden downward cast
 Thou fix them on the earth as fast :
 And join with thee calm Peace, and Quiet,
 Spare Fast, that oft with gods doth diet,
 And hears the Muses in a ring
 Aye round about Jove's altar sing :
 And add to these retired Leisure,
 That in trim gardens takes his pleasure :
 But first, and chiefest, with thee bring,
 Him that yon soars on golden wing,
 Guiding the fiery-wheeled throne,
 The cherub Contemplation ;
 And the mute Silence hist along,
 'Less Philomel will deign a song,
 In her sweetest saddest plight,
 Smoothing the rugged brow of Night,
 While Cynthia checks her dragon yoke,
 Gently o'er the accusom'd oak :
 Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy !
 Thee, chantress, oft, the woods among,
 I woo, to hear thy even-song ;
 And, missing thee, I walk unseen
 On the dry smooth-shaven green,
 To behold the wandering Moon,
 Riding near her highest noon,
 Like one that had been led astray
 Through the Heaven's wide pathless way ;
 And oft, as if her head she bow'd,
 Stooping through a fleecy cloud.
 Oft, on a plat of rising ground,
 I hear the far-off Curfeu sound,

Over some wide-water'd shore,
Swinging slow with sullen roar :
Or, if the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
Where glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom ;
Far from all resort of mirth,
Save the cricket on the hearth,
Or the belman's drowsy charm,
To bless the doors from nightly harm.
Or let my lamp at midnight hour,
Be seen in some high lonely tower,
Where I may oft out-watch the Bear,
With thrice-great Hermes, or unsphere
The spirit of Plato, to unfold
What worlds or what vast regions hold
The immortal mind, that hath forsook
Her mansion in this fleshly nook :
And of those demons that are found
In fire, air, flood, or under ground,
Whose power hath a true consent
With planet, or with element.
Sometime let gorgeous Tragedy
In scepter'd pall come sweeping by,
Presenting Thebes, or Pelops' line,
Or the tale of Troy divine ;
Or what (though rare) of later age
Enobled hath the buskin'd stage.

But, O sad virgin, that thy power
Might raise Musæus from his bower !
Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes, as, warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,
And made Hell grant what love did seek !
Or call up him that left half-told
The story of Cambuscan bold,
Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
And who had Canace to wife,
That own'd the virtuous ring and glass ;
And of the wondrous horse of brass,
On which the Tartar king did ride :
And if aught else great bards beside
In age and solemn tunes have sung,
Of turneys, and of trophies hung,
Of forests, and enchantments drear,
Where more is meant than meets the ear.

Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Thy civil-suited Morn appear,
Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont
With the Attic boy to hunt,
But kercheft in a comely cloud,
While rocking winds are piping loud,
Or ushered with a shower still,
Or when the gust hath blown his fill,
Sitting on the rumbling leaves,
With minute drops from off the eaves.
And, when the Sun begins to fling
His flaming beams, me, goddess, bring
To arch'd walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown, that Sylvan loves,
Of pine, or monumental oak,
Where the rude axe, with heaved stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt.
There in close covert by some brook,
Where no profaner eye may look,
Hide me from day's garish eye,
While the bee with honied thigh,
That at her flowery work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,

With such consort as they keep,
Entice the dewy feather'd Sleep ;
And let some strange mysterious dream
Wave at his wings in aery stream
Of lively portraiture display'd,
Softly on my eye-lids laid.
And, as I wake, sweet music breathe
Above, about, or underneath,
Sent by some spirit to mortal good,
Or the unseen genius of the wood.
But let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloysters pale,
And love the high-embowed roof,
With antic pillars massy proof,
And storied windows richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light :
There let the pealing organ blow,
To the full-voic'd quire below,
In service high and anthems clear,
As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
Dissolve me into ecstasies,
And bring all Heaven before mine eyes.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that Heaven doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew ;
Till old experience do attain
To something like prophetic strain.

These pleasures, Melancholy, give,
And I with thee will choose to live.

LYCIDAS.

YET once more, O ye laurels, and once more,
Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never-sere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude :
And, with forc'd fingers rude,
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year :
Bitter constraint, and sad occasion dear,
Compels me to disturb your season due :
For Lycidas is dead, dead ere his prime,
Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer :
Who would not sing for Lycidas ? he knew 10
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
He must not float upon his watery bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear.

Begin then, Sisters of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring ;
Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse :
So may some gentle Muse
With lucky words favour my destin'd urn ; 20
And, as he passes, turn
And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud.

For we were nurs'd upon the self-same hill,
Fed the same flock, by fountain, shade, and rill.
Together both, ere the high lawns appear'd
Under the opening eye-lids of the Morn,
We drove afield, and both together heard
What time the gray-fly winds her sultry horn,
Battening our flocks with the fresh dews of night,
Oft till the star, that rose, at evening bright, 30
Toward Heaven's descent had slop'd his westering wheel.

Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute,
Temper'd to the oaten flute;
Rough Satyrs danc'd, and Fawns with cloven heel
From the glad sound would not be absent long;
And old Damoetas lov'd to hear our song.

But, O the heavy change, now thou art gone,
Now thou art gone, and never must return!
Thee, shepherd, thee the woods, and desert caves
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echoes, mourn: 40
The willows, and the hazel copses green,
Shall now no more be seen
Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays.
As killing as the canker to the rose,
Or taint-worm to the weanling herds that graze,
Or frost to flowers, that their gay wardrobe wear,
When first the white-thorn blows;
Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherds' ear.

Where were ye, Nymphs, when the remorseless deep
Clos'd o'er the head of your lov'd Lycidas? 51
For neither were ye playing on the steep,
Where your old bards, the famous Druids, lie,
Nor on the shaggy top of Mona high,
Nor yet where Deva spreads her wizard stream:
Ay me! I fondly dream!
Had ye been there — for what could that have done?

What could the Muse herself that Orpheus bore,
The Muse herself, for her enchanting son,
Whom universal Nature did lament, 60
When, by the rout that made the hideous roar,
His gory visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?

Alas! what boots it with incessant care
To tend the homely, slighted, shepherd's trade,
And strictly meditate the thankless Muse?
Were it not better done, as others use,
To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Nerera's hair?
Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
(That last infirmity of noble mind) 71
To scorn delights and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind Fury with the abhorred shears,
And slits the thin-spun life. "But not the praise,"
Phœbus replied, and touch'd my trembling ears;
"Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glittering foil
Set off to the world, nor in broad rumour lies:
But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes,
And perfect witness of all-judging Jove; 81
As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
Of so much fame in Heaven expect thy meed."
O fountain Arethuse, and thou honour'd flood,
Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal reeds!
That strain I heard was of a higher mood:
But now my oat proceeds,
And listens to the herald of the sea
That came in Neptune's plea; 90
He ask'd the waves, and ask'd the felon winds,
What hard mishap hath doom'd this gentle swain?
And question'd every gulf of rugged wings
That blows from off each beaked promontory:
They knew not of his story;
And sage Hippotades their answer brings,
That not a blast was from his dungeon stray'd;
The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panope with all her sisters play'd.

It was that fatal and perfidious bark, 100
Built in the eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.

Next Camus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with woe.
"Ah! who hath reft" (quoth he) "my dearest pledge?"

Last came, and last did go,
The pilot of the Galilean lake;
Two massy keys he bore of metals twain, 110
(The golden opes, the iron shuts amain,)
He shook his miter'd locks, and stern bespake:
"How well could I have spared for thee, young swain,

Enow of such, as for their bellies' sake
Creep, and intrude, and climb into the fold?
Of other care they little reckoning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearers' feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest;
Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold

A sheep-hook, or have learn'd aught else the least
That to the faithful herdman's art belongs! 121
What recks it them? What need they? They are sped;

And, when they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw;
The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,
But, swoln with wind and the rank mist they draw,

Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread:
Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing sed:
But that two-handed engine at the door 130
Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more."

Return, Alpheus, the dread voice is past,
That shrunk thy streams; return, Sicilian Muse,
And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
Their bells, and flowerets of a thousand hues.
Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks,
On whose fresh lap the swart-star sparsely looks;
Throw hither all your quaint enamell'd eyes,
That on the green turf suck the honied showers,
And purple all the ground with vernal flowers.
Bring the rathe primrose that forsaken dies, 149
The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,
The white pink, and the pansy freak'd with jet,
The glowing violet,
The musk-rose, and the well-attired wood-bine,
With cowslips wan that hang the pensive head,
And every flower that sad embroidery wears;
Bid Amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffadillies fill their cups with tears, 150
To strew the laureat herse where Lycid lies.
For, so to interpose a little ease,
Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise;
Ay me! whilst thee the shores and sounding seas
Wash far away, where'er thy bones are hurl'd,
Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides,
Where thou, perhaps, under the whelming tide,
Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous world;
Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old, 160
Where the great vision of the guarded mount
Looks toward Namancos and Bayona's hold;
Look homeward, angel, now, and melt with ruth:
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth.

Weep no more, woful shepherds, weep no more,
 For Lycidas your sorrow is not dead,
 Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor ;
 So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
 And yet anon repairs his drooping head, 169
 And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore
 Flames in the forehead of the morning sky :
 So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,
 Through the dear might of him that walk'd the waves ;

Where, other groves and other streams along,
 With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
 And bears the unexpressive nuptial song,
 Is the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
 There entertain him all the saints above,
 In solemn troops, and sweet societies,
 That sing, and, singing in their glory, move,
 And wipe the tears for ever from his eyes.
 Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no more ; 180
 Henceforth thou art the genius of the shore,
 In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
 To all that wander in that perilous flood.

Thus sang the uncouth swain to the oaks and rills,

While the still Morn went out with sandals gray ;
 He touch'd the tender stops of various quills,
 With eager thought warbling his Doric lay ;
 And now the Sun had stretch'd out all the hills,
 And now was dropt into the western bay : 191
 At last he rose, and twitch'd his mantle blue :
 To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new.

The ATTENDANT SPIRIT descends or enters.

Beyond the starry threshold of Jove's court
 No mansion is, where those immortal shapes
 Of bright æreal spirits live insph'rd
 In regions mild of calm and serene air,
 Above the smoke and stir of this dim spot,
 Which men call earth ; and, with low-thoughted care
 Confin'd and pester'd in this pin-fold here,
 Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being,
 Unmindful of the crown that Virtue gives, 10
 After this mortal change, to her true servants,
 Amongst the enthron'd gods on sainted seats.
 Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire

To lay their just hands on that golden key,
 That opes the palace of Eternity :
 To such my errand is ; and, but for such,
 I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds
 With the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould.

But to my task. Neptune, besides the sway
 Of every salt flood, and each ebbing stream,
 Took in by lot 'twixt high and nether Jove 20
 Imperial rule of all the sea-girt isles,
 That, like to rich and various gems, inlay
 The unadorned bosom of the deep :
 Which he, to grace his tributary gods,
 By course commits to several government,
 And gives them leave to wear their sapphire crowns,
 And wield their little tridents : but this isle,
 The greatest and the best of all the main,
 He quarters to his blue-hair'd deities ;
 And all this tract that fronts the falling Sun 30
 A noble peer of mickle trust and power
 Has in his charge, with temper'd awe to guide
 An old and haughty nation, proud in arms :
 Where his fair offspring, nurs'd in princely lore,
 Are coming to attend their father's state,
 And new-entrusted sceptre : but their way
 Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood,
 The nodding horror of whose shady brows
 Threats the forlorn and wandering passenger ;
 And here their tender age might suffer peril, 40
 But that by quick command from sovran Jove
 I was dispatch'd for their defence and guard :
 And listen why ; for I will tell you now
 What never yet was heard in tale or song,
 From old or modern bard, in hall or bower.

Bacchus, that first from out the purple grape
 Crush'd the sweet poison of misused wine,
 After the Tuscan mariners transform'd,
 Coasting the Tyrrhene shore, as the winds listed,
 On Circe's island fell : (Who knows not Circe, 50
 The daughter of the Sun, whose charmed cup
 Whoever tasted, lost his upright shape,
 And downward fell into a grovelling swine ?)
 This nymph, that gaz'd upon his clustering locks
 With ivy berries wreath'd, and his blithe youth,
 Had by him, ere he parted thence, a son
 Much like his father, but his mother more,
 Whom therefore she brought up, and Comus nam'd :
 Who, ripe and frolic of his full grown age,
 Roving the Celtic and Iberian fields
 At last betakes him to this ominous wood ;
 And, in thick shelter of black shades imbower'd,
 Excels his mother at her mighty art,
 Offering to every weary traveller
 His orient liquor in a crystal glass,
 To quench the drought of Phœbus ; which as they taste

(For most do taste through fond intemperate thirst :)
 Soon as the potion works, their human countenance,
 The express resemblance of the gods, is chang'd
 Into some brutish form of wolf, or bear, 70
 Or ounce, or tiger, hog, or bearded goat,
 All other parts remaining as they were ;
 And they, so perfect is their misery,
 Not once perceive their foul disfigurement,
 But boast themselves more comely than before ;
 And all their friends and native home forget,
 To roll with pleasure in a sensual sty.
 Therefore when any, favour'd of high Jove,
 Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
 Swift as the sparkle of a glancing star 80
 I shoot from Heaven, to give him safe convoy,

As now I do : but first I must put off
 These my sky-ropes spun out of Iris' woof,
 And take the weeds and likeness of a swain
 That to the service of this house belongs,
 Who with his soft pipe, and smooth-dittied song,
 Well knows to still the wild winds when they roar,
 And hush the waving woods ; nor of less faith,
 And in this office of his mountain watch
 Likeliest, and nearest to the present aid
 Of this occasion. But I hear the tread
 Of hateful steps ; I must be viewless now.

Comus enters with a charming-rod in one hand, his glass in the other ; with him a rout of monsters, headed like sundry sorts of wild beasts, but otherwise like men and women, their apparel glistening ; they come in making a riotous and unruly noise, with torches in their hands.

COMUS.

The star, that bids the shepherd fold,
 Now the top of Heaven doth hold ;
 And the gilded car of day
 His glowing axle doth allay
 In the steep Atlantic stream ;
 And the slope Sun his upward beam
 Shoots against the dusky pole,
 Pacing towards the other goal
 Of his chamber in the east.
 Meanwhile welcome Joy, and Feast,
 Midnight Shout, and Revelry,
 Topsy Dance, and Jollity.
 Braid your locks with rosy twine,
 Dropping odours, dropping wine.
 Rigour now is gone to bed,
 And advice with scrupulous head.
 Strict Age and sour Severity,
 With their grave saws, in slumber lie.
 We, that are of purer fire,
 Imitate the starry quire,
 Who, in their nightly watchful spheres,
 Lead in swift round the months and years.
 The sounds and seas, with all their finny drove,
 Now to the Moon in wavering morrice move ;
 And, on the tawny sands and shelves,
 Trip the pert faeries and the dapper elves,
 By dimpled brook and fountain brim,
 The wood-nymphs, deck'd with daisies trim,
 Their merry wakes and pastimes keep ;
 What hath night to do with sleep ?
 Night hath better sweets to prove,
 Venus now wakes, and wakens love.
 Come, let us our rites begin ;
 'Tis only day-light that makes sin,
 Which these dun shades will ne'er report : —
 Hail, goddess of nocturnal sport,
 Dark-veil'd Cotytto ! to whom the secret flame
 Of midnight torches burns ; mysterious dame,
 That ne'er art call'd, but when the dragon woom
 Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom,
 And makes one blot of all the air ;
 Stay the cloudy ebon chair,
 Wherein thou rid'st with Hecat', and befriend
 Us thy vow'd priests, till utmost end
 Of all thy dues be done, and none left out ;
 Ere the babbling eastern scout,
 The nice Morn, on the Indian steep
 From her cabin'd loop-hole peep,
 And to the tell-tale Sun decry
 Our conceal'd solemnity.—

Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
 In a light fantastic round.

THE MEASURE.

Break off, break off, I feel the different pace
 Of some chaste footing near about this ground.
 Run to your shrouds, within these brakes and trees ;
 Our number may affright : some virgin sure
 (For so I can distinguish by mine art)
 Benighted in these woods Now to my charms,
 And to my wily trains : I shall ere long
 Be well-stocked with as fair a herd as graz'd
 About my mother Circe. Thus I hurl
 My dazzling spells into the spongy air,
 Of power to cheat the eye with blear illusion,
 And give it false presentments, lest the place
 And my quaint habits breed astonishment,
 And put the damsel to suspicious flight ;
 Which must not be, for that's against my course :
 I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
 And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy
 Baited with reasons not unplaussible,
 Wind me into the easy-hearted man,
 And hug him into snares. When once her eye
 Hath met the virtue of this magic dust,
 I shall appear some harmless villager,
 Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear.
 But here she comes ; I fairly step aside,
 And hearken, if I may, her business here.

THE LADY enters.

This way the noise was, if mine ear be true,
 My best guide now ; methought it was the sound
 Of riot and ill-manag'd merriment,
 Such as the jocund flute, or gamesome pipe,
 Stirs up among the loose unletter'd hinds ;
 When for their teeming flocks, and granges full,
 In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan,
 And thank the gods amiss. I should be loth
 To meet the rudeness, and swill'd insolence,
 Of such late wassailers ; yet, O ! where else
 Shall I inform my unacquainted feet
 In the blind mazes of this tangled wood ?
 My brothers, when they saw me wearied out
 With this long way, resolving here to lodge
 Under the spreading favour of these pines,
 Stept, as they said, to the next thicket side,
 To bring me berries, or such cooling fruit
 As the kind hospitable woods provide.
 They left me then, when the gray-hooded Even,
 Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
 Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phoebus' wain.
 But where they are, and why they came not back,
 Is now the labour of my thoughts ; 'tis likeliest
 They had engag'd their wandering steps too far ;
 And envious darkness, ere they could return,
 Had stole them from me : else, O thievish Night,
 Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
 In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
 That Nature hung in Heaven, and fill'd their lamps
 With everlasting oil, to give due light
 To the misled and lonely traveller ?
 This is the place, as well as I may guess,
 Whence even now the tumult of loud mirth
 Was rife, and perfect in my listening ear ;
 Yet nought but single darkness do I find.
 What this might be ? A thousand fantasies
 Begin to throng into my memory,

Of calling shapes, and beckoning shadows dire,
 And aery tongues, that syllable men's names 208
 (On sands, and shores, and desert wildernesses.
 These thoughts may startle well, but not astound,
 The virtuous mind, that ever walks attended
 By a strong siding champion, Conscience. —
 O welcome pure-ey'd Faith, white-handed Hope,
 Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings,
 And thou, unblemish'd form of Chastity!
 I see ye visibly, and now believe
 That he, the Supreme Good, to whom all things ill

Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
 Would send a glistening guardian, if need were,
 To keep my life and honour unassail'd. 220
 Was I deceiv'd, or did a sable cloud
 Turn forth her silver lining on the night?
 I did not err, there does a sable cloud
 Turn forth her silver lining on the night,
 And casts a gleam over this tufted grove:
 I cannot halloo to my brothers, but
 Such noise as I can make to be heard farthest
 I'll venture; for my new-enliven'd spirits
 Prompt me; and they perhaps are not far off.

SONG.

SWEET Echo, sweetest nymph, that liv'st unseen
 Within thy aery shell, 231
 By slow Meander's margent green,
 And in the violet-embroider'd vale,
 Where the love-lorn nightingale
 Nightly to thee her sad song mourneth well;
 Canst thou not tell me of a gentle pair
 That liketh thy Narcissus are?
 O, if thou have
 Hid them in some flowery cave,
 Tell me but where, 240
 Sweet queen of parley, daughter of the sphere!
 So may'st thou be translated to the skies,
 And give resounding grace to all Heaven's harmonies.

Enter COMUS.

COMUS. Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould
 Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment? 245
 Sate something holy lodges in that breast,
 And with these raptures moves the vocal air
 To testify his hidden residence.
 How sweetly did they float upon the wings
 Of silence, through the empty vaulted night.
 At every fall smoothing the raven-down 251
 Of darkness, till it smil'd! I have oft heard
 My mother Circe with the Syrens three,
 Amidst the flowery-kirtled Naiades,
 Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs;
 Who, as they sung, would take the prison'd soul,
 And lap it in Elysium: Scylla wept,
 And did her barking waves into attention,
 And fell Charybdis murmur'd soft applause:
 Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,
 And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself; 261
 But such a sacred and home-felt delight,
 Such sober certainty of waking bliss,
 I never heard till now. — I'll speak to her,
 And she shall be my queen. — Hail, foreign wonder!
 Whom certain these rough shades did never breed,
 Unless the goddess that in rural shrine
 Dwells at home with Pan, or Sylvan; by blest song

Forbidding every bleak unkindly fog
 To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood.
 Lad. Nay, gentle shepherd, ill is lost that praise
 That is address'd to unattending ears;
 Not any boast of skill, but extreme shift
 How to regain my sever'd company,
 Compell'd me to awake the courteous Echo 275
 To give me answer from her mossy couch.

COM. What chance, good lady, hath bereft you thus?

LAD. Dim darkness, and this leafy labyrinth.

COM. Could that divide you from near-ushering guides?

LAD. They left me weary on a grassy turf. 280

COM. By falsehood, or discourtesy, or why?

LAD. To seek i' the valley some cool friendly
 spring.

COM. And left your fair side all unguarded, lady?

LAD. They were but twain, and purpos'd quick return.

COM. Perhaps forestalling night prevented them.

LAD. How easy my misfortune is to hit!

COM. Imports their loss, beside the present need?

LAD. No less than if I should my brothers lose.

COM. Were they of manly prime, or youthful bloom? 289

LAD. As smooth as Hebe's their unrazor'd lips.

COM. Two such I saw, what time the labour'd ox
 In his loose traces from the furrow came,
 And the swink'd hedger at his supper sat;
 I saw them under a green mantling vine,
 That crawls along the side of yon small hill,
 Plucking ripe clusters from the tender shoots;
 Their port was more than human, as they stood:
 I took it for a faery vision
 Of some gay creatures of the element,
 That in the colours of the rainbow live, 300
 And play i' the plighted clouds. I was aw-struck,
 And, as I past, I worshipt; if those you seek,
 It were a journey like the path to Heaven,
 To help you find them.

LAD. Gentle villager,
 What readiest way would bring me to that place?

COM. Due west it rises from this shrubby point.

LAD. To find out that, good shepherd, I suppose,
 In such a scant allowance of star-light,
 Would overtask the best land-pilot's art,
 Without the sure guess of well-practis'd feet. 310

COM. I know each lane, and every alley green,
 Dingle, or bushy dell of this wild wood,
 And every bosky bourn from side to side,
 My daily walks and ancient neighbourhood;
 And if your stray attendants be yet lodg'd, 315
 Or shroud within these limits, I shall know
 Ere morrow wake, or the low roosted lark
 From her thatch'd pallet rouse; if otherwise
 I can conduct you, lady, to a low,
 But loyal cottage, where you may be safe
 Till further quest.

LAD. Shepherd, I take thy word
 And trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,
 Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds
 With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls
 In courts of princes, where it first was nam'd 325
 And yet is most pretended: in a place
 Less warranted than this, or less secure,
 I cannot be, that I should fear to change it. —
 Eye me, blest Providence, and square my trial
 To my proportion'd strength. — Shepherd, lead on.

[Exeunt.]

Enter The Two BROTHERS.

El. Br. Unmuffle, ye faint stars; and thou, fair Moon,

That wont'st to love the traveller's benison,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit Chaos, that reigns here
In double night of darkness and of shades; 335
Or, if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long-levell'd rule of streaming light;
And thou shalt be our star of Arcady,
Or Tyrian Cynosure.

Sec. Br. Or, if our eyes
Be barr'd that happiness, might we but hear
The folded flocks penn'd in their wattled cotes,
Or sound of pastoral reed with oaten stops, 345
Or whistle from the lodge, or village cock
Count the night watches to his feathery dames,
'Twould be some solace yet, some little cheering,
In this close dungeon of innumerable boughs.
But, O that hapless virgin, our lost sister!
Where may she wander now, whither betake her
From the chill dew, among rude burs and thistles?
Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now,
Or 'gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm
Leans her unpillow'd head, fraught with sad 355 fears.

What, if in wild amazement and affright?
Or, while we speak, within the direful grasp
Of savage hunger, or of savage heat?
El. Br. Peace, brother: be not over-exquisite
To cast the fashion of uncertain evils:
For grant they be so, while they rest unknown,
What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid?
Or, if they be but false alarms of fear,
How bitter is such self-delusion! 365

I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in Virtue's book,
And the sweet peace that goodness bosoms ever,
As that the single want of light and noise
(Not being in danger, as I trust she is not,)
Could stir the constant mood of her calm thoughts,
And put them into misbecoming plight.
Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though Sun and Moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. And Wisdom's self
Oft seeks to sweet retired solitude; 376
Where, with her best nurse, Contemplation,
She plumes her feathers, and lets grow her wings,
That in the various bustle of resort
Were all-to ruffled, and sometimes impair'd.
He that has light within his own clear breast,
May sit i' the centre, and enjoy bright day:
But he, that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts,
Benighted walks under the mid-day Sun;
Himself is his own dungeon. 385

Sec. Br. 'Tis most true,
That musing Meditation most affects
The pensive secrecy of desert cell,
Far from the cheerful haunt of men and herds,
And sits as safe as in a senate-house;
For who would rob a hermit of his weeds,
His few books, or his beads, or maple dish,
Or do his gray hairs any violence?
But Beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard

Of dragon-watch, with unenchanted eye, 395
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit,
From the rash hand of bold Incontinence.
You may as well spread out the unsunn'd heaps
Of misers' treasure by an outlaw's den,
And tell me it is safe, as bid me hope
Danger will wink on Opportunity,
And let a single helpless maiden pass
Uninjur'd in this wild surrounding waste.
Of night, or loneliness, it recks me not;
I fear the dread events that dog them both, 405
Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unowned sister.

El. Br. I do not, brother,
Infer, as if I thought my sister's state
Secure, without all doubt or controversy;
Yet, where an equal poise of hope and fear
Does arbitrate the event, my nature is
That I incline to hope, rather than fear,
And gladly banish squint suspicion.
My sister is not so defenceless left
As you imagine; she has a hidden strength, 415
Which you remember not.

Sec. Br. What hidden strength,
Unless the strength of Heaven, if you mean that?

El. Br. I mean that too, but yet a hidden strength,
Which, if Heaven gave it, may be term'd her own;

'Tis Chastity, my brother, Chastity:
She, that has that, is clad in complete steel;
And, like a quivered nymph with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests, and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds;
Where, through the sacred rays of Chastity, 425
No savage fierce, bandite, or mountaineer,
Will dare to soil her virgin purity:
Yea there, where very Desolation dwells,
By grotts and caverns shagg'd with horrid shades,
She may pass on with unblench'd majesty,
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption.
Some say, no evil thing that walks by night
In fog or fire, by lake or moorish fen,
Blue meager hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost
That breaks his magic chains at Curfew time,
No goblin, or swart faery of the mine, 436
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity.
Do ye believe me yet, or shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece
To testify the arms of Chastity?
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste,
Wherewith she tam'd the brindled lioness
And spotted mountain-pard, but set at nought
The frivolous bolt of Cupid; gods and men
Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' the woods.

What was that snaky-headed Gorgon shield,
That wise Miperva wore, unconquer'd virgin,
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone, 450
But rigid looks of chaste austerity,
And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence
With sudden adoration and blank awe?
So dear to Heaven is saintly Chastity,
That, when a soul is found sincerely so,
A thousand liveried angels lackey her,
Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt;
And, in clear dream and solemn vision,
Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear;
Till oft converse with heavenly habitants

Begin to cast a beam on the outward shape,
 The unpolluted temple of the mind,
 And turns it by degrees to the soul's essence, 460
 Till all be made immortal: but when Lust,
 By unchaste looks, loose gestures, and foul talk,
 But most by lewd and lavish act of sin,
 Lets in defilement to the inward parts,
 The soul grows clotted by contagion,
 Imbodies, and imbrutes, till she quite lose
 The divine property of her first being.
 Such are those thick and gloomy shadows damp,
 Oft seen in charnel vaults and sepulchres 471
 Lingering, and sitting by a new made grave,
 As loth to leave the body that it lov'd,
 And link'd itself by carnal sensuality
 To a degenerate and degraded state.
Sec. Br. How charming is divine philosophy!
 Not harsh, and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,
 But musical as is Apollo's lute,
 And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,
 Where no crude surfeit reigns.

El. Br. List, list; I hear
 Some far off halloo break the silent air. 481

Sec. Br. Methought so too; what should it be?

El. Br. For certain
 Either some one like us night-founder'd here,
 Or else some neighbour woodman, or, at worst,
 Some roving robber, calling to his fellows.

Sec. B. Heaven keep my sister. Again, again, and near!

Best draw, and stand upon our guard.

El. B. I'll halloo:
 If he be friendly, he comes well; if not,
 Defence is a good cause, and Heaven be for us.

[Enter the Attendant Spirit, habited like a shepherd.]

That halloo I should know; what are you? speak;
 Come not too near, you fall on iron stakes else.

Spr. What voice is that? my young lord? speak
 again. 492

Sec. B. O brother, 'tis my father's shepherd, surc.

El. B. Thyrsis? Whose artful strains have oft delay'd

The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,
 And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale?
 How cam'st thou here, good swain? hath any ram
 Sipt from the fold, or young kid lost his dam,
 Or straggling wether the pent flock forsook?
 How could'st thou find this dark sequester'd nook?

Spr. O my lov'd master's heir, and his next joy,
 I came not here on such a trivial toy 502

As a stray'd ewe, or to pursue the stealth
 Of pilfering wolf; not all the fleecy wealth,
 That doth enrich these downs, is worth a thought
 To this my errand, and the care it brought.

But, O my virgin lady, where is she?
 How chance she is not in your company?

El. B. To tell thee sadly, shepherd, without blame,
 Or our neglect, we lost her as we came. 510

Spr. Ay me unhappy! then my fears are true.

El. B. What fears, good Thyrsis? Pr'ythee briefly
 show.

Spr. I'll tell ye; 'tis not vain or fabulous,
 (Though so esteem'd by shallow ignorance,)
 What the sage poets, taught by the heavenly Muse,
 Storied of old in high immortal verse,
 Of dire chimeras, and enchanted isles,
 And rifted rocks whose entrance leads to Hell;
 For such there be, but unbelief is blind.

Within the navel of this hideous wood, 520
 Immur'd in cypress shades a sorcerer dwells,
 Of Bacchus and of Circe born, great Comus,
 Deep skill'd in all his mother's witcheries;
 And here to every thirsty wanderer
 By sly enticement gives his baneful cup,
 With many murmurs mix'd, whose pleasing poison
 The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
 And the inglorious likeness of a beast
 Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage
 Character'd in the face: this have I learnt 530
 Tending my flocks hard by i' the hilly crofts,
 That brow this bottom-glade; whence night by night

He and his monstrous rout are heard to howl,
 Like stabled wolves, or tigers at their prey,
 Doing abhorred rites to Hecate
 In their obscured haunts of inmost bowers.
 Yet have they many baits, and guileful spells,
 To inveigle and invite the unwary sense
 Of them that pass unweeting by the way.

This evening late, by then the chewing flocks
 Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb 541
 Of knot-grass dew-besprent, and were in fold,
 I sat me down to watch upon a bank

With ivy canopied, and interwove
 With flaunting honey-suckle, and began,
 Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
 To meditate my rural minstrelsy,
 Till fancy had her fill; but, ere a close,
 The wonted roar was up amidst the woods,
 And fill'd the air with barbarous dissonance; 550

At which I ceas'd, and listen'd them a while,
 Till an unusual stop of sudden silence

Gave respite to the drowsy frightened steeds,
 That draw the litter of close-curtain'd Sleep;

At last a soft and solemn-breathing sound
 Rose like a steam of rich distill'd perfumes,

And stole upon the air, that even Silence
 Was took ere she was 'ware, and wish'd she might

Deny her nature, and be never more,
 Still to be so displac'd. I was all ear, 560

And took in strains that might create a soul
 Under the ribs of Death: but O! ere long,

Too well I did perceive it was the voice
 Of my most honour'd lady, your dear sister.

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and fear,
 And, O poor hapless nightingale, thought I,

How sweet thou sing'st, how near the deadly snare!

Then down the lawns I ran with headlong haste,
 Through paths and turnings often trod by day,

Till, guided by mine ear, I found the place, 570
 Where that damn'd wisard, hid in sly disguise,

(For so by certain signs I knew,) had met
 Already, ere my best speed could prevent,

The aidless innocent lady, his wish'd prey;
 Who gently ask'd if he had seen such two,

Supposing him some neighbour villager.
 Longer I durst not stay, but soon I guess'd

Ye were the two she meant; with that I sprung
 Into swift flight, till I had found you here;

But further know I not.

Sec. Br. O night, and shades! 580
 How are ye join'd with Hell in triple knot

Against the unarm'd weakness of one virgin,
 Alone and helpless! Is this the confidence

You gave me, brother?
El. Br. Yes, and keep it still;
 Lean on it safely; not a period

Shall be unsaid for me : against the threats
Of malice, or of sorcery, or that power
Which erring men call Chance, this I hold firm, —
Virtue may be assail'd, but never hurt,
Surpris'd by unjust force, but not enthrall'd : 590
Yea, even that, which mischief meant most harm,
Shall in the happy trial prove most glory :
But evil on itself shall back recoil,
And mix no more with goodness ; when at last
Gather'd like scum, and settled to itself,
It shall be in eternal restless change
Self-fed, and self-consum'd : if this fail,
The pillar'd firmament is rottenness,
And Earth's base built on stubble. — But come,
let's on.

Against the opposing will and arm of Heaven 600
May never this just sword be lifted up ;
But for that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grissly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron,
Harpies and Hydras, or all the monstrous forms
'Twixt Africa and Ind, I'll find him out,
And force him to return his purchase back,
Or drag him by the curls to a foul death,
Curs'd as his life.

Spir. Alas ! good venturous youth,
I love thy courage yet, and bold emprise ; 610
But here thy sword can do thee little stead ;
Far other arms and other weapons must
Be those, that quell the might of hellish charms :
He with his bare wand can unthread thy joints,
And crumble all thy sinews.

El. Br. Why pr'ythee, shepherd,
How durst thou then thyself approach so near,
As to make this relation ?

Spir. Care, and utmost shifts,
How to secure the lady from surprisal,
Brought to my mind a certain shepherd lad,
Of small regard to see to, yet well skill'd 620
In every virtuous plant, and healing herb,
That spreads her verdant leaf to th' morning ray :
He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing ;
Which when I did, he on the tender grass
Would sit and hearken even to ecstasy,
And in requital ope his leathern scrip,
And show me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties :
Amongst the rest a small unsightly root,
But of divine effect, he cull'd me out ; 630
The leaf was darkish, and had prickles on it,
But in another country, as he said,
Bore a bright golden flower, but not in this soil :
Unknown, and like esteem'd, and the dull swain
Treads on it daily with his clouted shoon :
And yet more med'cinal is it than that moly,
That Hermes once to wise Ulysses gave ;
He call'd it hamony, and gave it me,
And bade me keep it as of sovran use
'Gainst all enchantments, mildew, blast, or damp,
Or ghastly furies' apparition. 641

I purs'd it up, but little reckoning made,
Till now that this extremity compell'd :
But now I find it true ; for by this means
I knew the foul enchanter though disguis'd,
Enter'd the very lime-twigs of his spells,
And yet came off : if you have this about you,
As (I will give you when we go) you may
Boldly assault the necromancer's hall ;
Where if he be, with dauntless hardihood, 650
And brandish'd blade, rush on him ; break his glass,

And shed the luscious liquor on the ground.
But seize his wand ; though he and his curs'd crew

Fierce sign of battle make, and menace high,
Or like the sons of Vulcan vomit smoke,
Yet will they soon retire, if he but shrink.
El. Br. Thyrsis, lead on apace, I'll follow thee ;
And some good angel bear a shield before us.

The Scene changes to a stately palace, set out with all manner of deliciousness : soft music, tables spread with all dainties. Comus appears with his rabble, and the Lady set in an enchanted chair, to whom he offers his glass, which she puts by, and goes about to rise.

COMUS.

Nay, lady, sit ; if I but wave this wand,
Your nerves are all chain'd up in alabaster, 660
And you a statue, or, as Daphne was,
Root-bound, that fled Apollo.

Lad. Fool, do not boast ;
Thou canst not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immanacled, while Heaven sees good.
Com. Why are you vex'd, lady ? Why do you frown ?

Here dwell no frowns, nor anger ; from these gates
Sorrow flies far : see, here be all the pleasures,
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns
Brisk as the April buds in primrose-season. 671
And first, behold this cordial julep here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds,
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrops mix'd ;
Not that nepenthes, which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,
Is of such power to stir up joy as this,
To life so friendly, or so cool to thirst.
Why should you be so cruel to yourself,
And to those dainty limbs, which Nature lent 680
For gentle usage and soft delicacy ?
But you invert the covenants of her trust,
And harshly deal like an ill borrower
With that which you receiv'd on other terms ;
Scorning the unexempt condition,
By which all mortal frailty must subsist,
Refreshment after toil, ease after pain,
That have been tir'd all day without repast,
And timely rest have wanted ; but, fair virgin,
This will restore all soon.

Lad. 'Twill not, false traitor ! 690
'Twill not restore the truth and honesty,
That thou hast banished from thy tongue with lies
Was this the cottage, and the safe abode,
Thou toldst me of ? What grim aspects are these,
These ugly-headed monsters ? Mercy guard me !
Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver !

Hast thou betray'd my credulous innocence
With visor'd falsehood and base forgery ?
And wouldst thou seek again to trap me here
With lickerish baits, fit to ensnare a brute ? 700
Were it a draught for Juno when she banquets,
I would not taste thy treasonous offer ; none
But such as are good men can give good things ;
And that which is not good, is not delicious
To a well-govern'd and wise appetite,
Com. O foolishness of men ! that lend their ears

To those budge doctors of the Stoic fur,
 And fetch their precepts from the Cynic tub,
 Praising the lean and sallow Abstinence.
 Wherefore did nature pour her bounties forth 710
 With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
 Covering the Earth with odours, fruits, and flocks,
 Thronging the seas with spawn innumerable,
 But all to please and sate the curious taste?
 And set to work millions of spinning worms,
 That in their green-shops weave the smooth-hair'd silk,
 To deck her sons; and that no corner might
 Be vacant of her plenty, in her own loins
 She hutch'd the all-worshipt ore, and precious gems,
 To store her children with: if all the world 720
 Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
 Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,
 The All-giver would be unthank'd, would be un-
 prais'd,
 Not half his riches known, and yet despis'd:
 And we should serve him as a grudging master,
 As a penurious niggard of his wealth;
 And live like Nature's bastards, not her sons,
 Who would be quite surcharg'd with her own weight,
 And strangled with her waste fertility;
 The Earth cumber'd, and the wing'd air dark'd with plumes, 730
 The herds would over-multitude their lords,
 The sea o'erfraught would swell, and the unsought diamonds
 Would so imblaze the forehead of the deep,
 And so bestud with stars, that they below
 Would grow inur'd to light, and come at last
 To gaze upon the Sun with shameless brows.
 List, lady: be not coy, and be not cosen'd
 With that same vaunted name, Virginity.
 Beauty is Nature's coin, must not be hoarded,
 But must be current; and the good thereof 740
 Consists in mutual and partaken bliss,
 Unsavoury in the enjoyment of itself;
 If you let slip time, like a neglected rose
 It withers on the stalk with languish'd head.
 Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shown
 In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities,
 Where most may wonder at the workmanship;
 It is for homely features to keep home,
 They had their name thence; coarse complexions,
 And cheeks of sorry grain, will serve to ply 750
 The sampler, and to tease the huswife's wool.
 What need a vermeil-tinctur'd lip for that,
 Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the Morn?
 There was another meaning in these gifts;
 Think what, and be advis'd; you are but young yet.
 Let. I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips
 In this unhallow'd air, but that this juggler
 Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
 Obtruding false rules prank'd in reason's garb.
 I hate when Vice can bolt her arguments, 760
 And Virtue has no tongue to check her pride.—
 Impostor! do not charge most innocent Nature,
 As if she would her children should be riotous
 With her abundance; she, good cateress,
 Means her provision only to the good,
 That live according to her sober laws,
 And holy dictates of spare Temperance:

If every just man, that now pines with want,
 Had but a moderate and beseeching share
 Of that which lewdly pamper'd Luxury 770
 Now heaps upon some few with vast excess,
 Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
 In unsuperfluous even proportion,
 And she no whit encumber'd with her store;
 And then the Giver would be better thank'd,
 His praise due paid: for swinish Gluttony
 Ne'er looks to Heaven amidst his gorgeous feast,
 But with besotted base ingratitude
 Crams, and blasphemes his feeder. Shall I go on?
 Or have I said enough? To him that dares 780
 Arm his profane tongue with contemptuous words
 Against the sun-clad power of Chastity,
 Fain would I something say, yet to what end?
 Thou hast nor ear, nor soul, to apprehend
 The sublime notion, and high mystery,
 That must be utter'd to unfold the sage
 And serious doctrine of Virginity;
 And thou art worthy that thou shouldst not know
 More happiness than this thy present lot.
 Enjoy your dear wit, and gay rhetoric, 790
 That hath so well been taught her dazzling fence;
 Thou art not fit to hear thyself convinc'd:
 Yet, should I try, the uncontrolled worth
 Of this pure cause would kindle my rapt spirits
 To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
 That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize,
 And the brute Earth would lend her nerves, and shake,
 Till all thy magic structures, rear'd so high,
 Were shatter'd into heaps o'er thy false head.
 Com. She fables not; I feel that I do fear 800
 Her words set off by some superior power;
 And though not mortal, yet a cold shuddering dew
 Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove
 Speaks thunder, and the chains of Erebus,
 To some of Saturn's crew. I must dissemble,
 And try her yet more strongly. — Come, no more;
 This is mere moral babble, and direct,
 Against the canon-laws of our foundation;
 I must not suffer this: yet 'tis but the lees
 And settlings of a melancholy blood: 810
 But this will cure all straight: one sip of this
 Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight,
 Beyond the bliss of dreams. Be wise and taste. —

The Brothers rush in with swords drawn, wrest his glass out of his hand, and break it against the ground; his rout make sign of resistance; but are all driven in. The Attendant Spirit comes in.

SPIRIT.

What, have you let the false enchanter 'scape?
 O ye mistook, ye should have snatch'd his wand,
 And bound him fast; without his rod revers'd,
 And backward mutters of dissevering power,
 We cannot free the Lady that sits here
 In stony fetters fix'd, and motionless: 819
 Yet stay, be not disturb'd; now I bethink me,
 Some other means I have which may be us'd,
 Which once of Melibœus old I learnt,
 The soothest shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains.
 There is a gentle nymph not far from hence,
 That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn stream,
 Sabrina is her name, a virgin pure;

Whilom she was the daughter of Locrine,
 That had the sceptre from his father brute.
 She, guiltless damsel, flying the mad pursuit
 Of her enraged stepdame Guendolen, 830
 Commended her fair innocence to the flood,
 That staid her flight with his cross-flowing course.
 'The water-nymphs, that in the bottom play'd,
 Held up their pearled wrists, and took her in,
 Bearing her straight to aged Nereus' hall;
 Who, piteous of her woes, rear'd her lank head,
 And gave her to his daughters to imbathe
 In nectar'd lavers, strew'd with asphodel;
 And through the porch and inlet of each sense 840
 Dropt in ambrosial oils, till she reviv'd,
 And underwent a quick immortal change,
 Made goddess of the river: still she retains
 Her maiden gentleness, and oft at eve
 Visits the herds along the twilight meadows,
 Helping all urchin blasts, and ill-luck signs
 That the shrewd meddling elfe delights to make,
 Which she with precious vial'd liquors heals;
 For which the shepherds at their festivals
 Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays,
 And throw sweet garland wreaths into her stream
 Of pansies, pinks, and gaudy daffodils. 851
 And, as the old swain said, she can unlock
 The clasp'ing charm, and thaw the numming spell,
 If she be right invok'd in warbled song;
 For maidenhood she loves, and will be swift
 To aid a virgin, such as was herself,
 In hard-besetting need; this will I try,
 And add the power of some adjuring verse.

SONG.

Sabrina fair,
 Listen where thou art sitting 860
 Under the glassy, cool, translucent wave,
 In twisted braids of lilies knitting
 The loose train of thy amber-dropping hair;
 Listen for dear honour's sake,
 Goddess of the silver lake,
 Listen, and save.
 Listen, and appear to us,
 In name of great Oceanus;
 By the Earth-shaking Neptune's mace,
 And Tethys' grave majestic pace, 870
 By hoary Nereus' wrinkled look,
 And the Carpathian wisard's hook,
 By scaly Triton's winding shell,
 And old sooth-saying Glaucus' spell,
 By Leucothea's lovely hands,
 And her son that rules the strands,
 By Thetis' tinsel-slipper'd feet,
 And the songs of Syrens sweet,
 By dead Parthenope's dear tomb,
 And fair Ligea's golden comb, 880
 Wherewith she sits on diamond rock,
 Sleeking her soft alluring locks;
 By all the nymphs that nightly dance
 Upon thy streams with wily glance,
 Rise, rise, and heave thy rosy head,
 From thy coral-paven bed,
 And bridle in thy headlong wave,
 Till thou our summons answer'd have.
 Listen, and save.

SABRINA rises, attended by water-nymphs, and sings.
 By the rushy-fringed bank, 890
 Where grows the willow, and the ozier dank,

My sliding chariot stays,
 Thick set with agate, and the azurn sheen
 Of turkis blue, and emerald green,
 That in the channel strays;
 Whilst from off the waters fleet
 Thus I set my printless feet
 O'er the cowslip's velvet head,
 That bends not as I tread;
 Gentle swain, at thy request, 900
 I am here.

Sp. Goddess dear,
 We implore thy powerful hand
 To undo the charmed band
 Of true virgin here distrest,
 Through the force, and through the wile,
 Of unblest enchanter vile.
 Sabr. Shepherd, 'tis my office best
 To help ensnared chastity:
 Brightest lady, look on me; 910
 Thus I sprinkle on thy breast
 Drops, that from my fountain pure
 I have kept, of precious cure;
 Thrice upon thy finger's tip
 Thrice upon thy rubied lip:
 Next this marble venom'd seat,
 Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat.
 I touch with chaste palms moist and cold: —
 Now the spell hath lost his hold;
 And I must haste, ere morning hour, 920
 To wait in Amphitrite's bower.

Sabrina descends, and the Lady rises out of her seat.

Sp. Virgin, daughter of Locrine
 Sprung of old Anchises' line,
 May thy brimmed waves for this 860
 Their full tribute never miss
 From a thousand petty rills,
 That tumble down the snowy hills:
 Summer drought, or singed air,
 Never scorch thy tresses fair,
 Nor wet October's torrent flood 930
 Thy molten crystal fill with mud;
 May thy billows roll ashore
 The beryl and the golden ore;
 May thy lofty head be crown'd 870
 With many a tower and terrace round,
 And here and there thy banks upon
 With groves of myrrh and cinnamon.
 Come, lady, while Heaven lends us grace,
 Let us fly this cursed place,
 Lest the sorcerer us entice 940
 With some other new device.
 Not a waste or needless sound,
 Till we come to holier ground;
 I shall be your faithful guide 880
 Through this gloomy covert wide,
 And not many furlongs thence
 Is your father's residence,
 Where this night are met in state
 Many a friend to gratulate
 His wish'd presence; and beside 950
 All the swains, that there abide,
 With jigs and rural dance resort;
 We shall catch them at their sport,
 And our sudden coming there
 Will double all their mirth and cheer:
 Come, let us haste, the stars grow high,
 But night sits monarch yet in the mid sky.

The Scene changes, presenting Ludlow town and the president's castle; then come in country dancers, after them the Attendant Spirit, with the two Brothers, and the Lady.

SONG.

Sp. Back, shepherds, back; enough your play,
Till next sun-shine holiday:
Here be, without duck or nod, 960
Other trippings to be trod
Of lighter toes, and such court guise
As Mercury did first devise,
With the mincing Dryades,
On the lawns, and on the leas.

This second Song presents them to their Father and Mother.

Noble lord, and lady bright,
I have brought ye new delight;
Here behold so goodly grown
Three fair branches of your own;
Heaven hath timely tried their youth, 970
Their faith, their patience, and their truth,
And sent them here through hard assays
With a crown of deathless praise,
To triumph in victorious dance
O'er sensual Folly and Intemperance.

The dances [being] ended, the Spirit epiloguizes.

Sp. To the ocean now I fly,
And those happy climes that lie
Where day never shuts his eye,
Up in the broad fields of the sky:
There I suck the liquid air 980
All amidst the gardens fair
Of Hesperus, and his daughters three
That sing about the golden tree;
Along the crisped shades and bowers
Revels the spruce and jocund Spring;
The Graces, and the rosy-bosom'd Hours,
Hither all their bounties bring;
There eternal Summer dwells,
And west-winds, with musky wing, 990
About the cedar'd alleys fling
Nard and cassia's balmy smells.
Lies there with humid bow
Waters the odorous banks, that blow
Flowers of more mingled hew
Than her purpled scarf can show;
And drenches with Elysian dew
Lust, mortals, if your ears be true)
Beds of hyacinth and roses,
Where young Adonis oft reposes, 1000
Waxing well of his deep wound
In dumber soft, and on the ground
Sicily sits the Assyrian queen:
But far above in spangled sheen
Celestial Cupid, her fam'd son, advanc'd,
Holds his dear Psyche sweet entranc'd.
After her wandering labours long,
Till free consent the Gods among
Make her his eternal bride,
And from her fair unspotted side 1010
Two blissful twins are to be born,
Youth and Joy: so Jove hath sworn.
But now my task is smoothly done,
I can fly, or I can run,
Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the bow'd welkin slow doth lend;

And from thence can soar as soon
To the corners of the Moon.

Mortals that would follow me,
Love Virtue; she alone is free:
She can teach ye how to climb 1020
Higher than the sphery chime;
Or if Virtue feeble were,
Heaven itself would stoop to her.

PARADISE LOST.

Book I.

The Argument.

The first Book proposes, first in brief, the whole subject, Man's disobedience, and the loss thereupon of Paradise wherein he was placed: then touches the prime cause of his fall, the Serpent, or rather Satan in the serpent; who, revolting from God, and drawing to his side many legions of angels, was, by the command of God, driven out of Heaven, with all his crew, into the great deep. Which action passed over, the poem hastens into the midst of things, presenting Satan with his angels now falling into Hell described here, not in the center (for Heaven and Earth may be supposed as yet not made, certainly not yet accursed) but in a place of utter darkness, fitliest called Chaos: here Satan with his angels lying on the burning lake, thunder-struck and astonished, after a certain space recovers, as from confusion, calls up him who next in order and dignity lay by him: they confer of their miserable fall; Satan awakens all his legions, who lay till then in the same manner confounded. They rise; their numbers; array of battle; their chief leaders named, according to the idols known afterwards in Canaan and the countries adjoining. To these Satan directs his speech, comforts them with hope yet of regaining Heaven, but tells them lastly of a new world and new kind of creature to be created, according to an ancient prophecy, or report in Heaven; for, that angels were long before this visible creation, was the opinion of many ancient Fathers. To find out the truth of this prophecy, and what to determine thereon, he refers to a full council. What his associates thence attempt. Pandemonium, the palace of Satan, rises, suddenly built out of the deep: the infernal peers there sit in council.

Of Man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world, and all our woe,
With loss of Eden, till one greater Man
Restore us, and regain the blissful seat,
Sing, heavenly Muse, that on the secret top
Of Oreb, or of Sinai, didst inspire
That shepherd, who first taught the chosen seed,
In the beginning, how the Heavens and Earth
Rose out of Chaos: Or, if Sion hill
Delight thee more, and Siloa's brook that flow'd
Fast by the oracle of God; I thence Invoke thy aid to my adventurous song,
That with no middle flight intends to soar
Above the Aonian mount, while it pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.

And chiefly thou, O Spirit, that dost prefer
Before all temples the upright heart and pure,
Instruct me, for thou know'st ; thou from the first
Wast present, and, with mighty wings out-spread,
Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,
And mad'st it pregnant : what in me is dark
Illumine ; what is low, raise and support ;
That to the height of this great argument
I may assert eternal Providence,
And justify the ways of God to men.

Say first, for Heaven hides nothing from thy view,
Nor the deep tract of Hell ; say first, what cause
Mov'd our grand parents, in that happy state,
Favour'd of Heaven so highly, to fall off
From their Creator, and transgress his will
For one restraint, lords of the world besides ?
Who first seduc'd them to that foul revolt ?
The infernal Serpent ; he it was, whose guile,
Stirr'd up with envy and revenge, deceiv'd
The mother of mankind, what time his pride
Had cast him out from Heaven, with all his host
Of rebel angels ; by whose aid, aspiring
To set himself in glory above his peers,
He trusted to have equalled the Most High,
If he oppos'd ; and, with ambitious aim
Against the throne and monarchy of God,
Rais'd impious war in Heaven, and battle proud,
With vain attempt. Him the Almighty power,
Hurl'd headlong flaming from the ethereal sky,
With hideous ruin and combustion, down
To bottomless perdition ; there to dwell
In adamant chains and penal fire,
Who durst defy the Omnipotent to arms.
Nine times the space that measures day and night
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulf,
Confounded, though immortal : but his doom
Reserv'd him to more wrath ! for now the thought
Both of lost happiness and lasting pain
Torments him : round he throws his baleful eyes,
That witness'd huge affliction and dismay,
Mix'd with obdurate pride and stedfast hate ;
At once, as far as angels ken, he views
The dismal situation, waste and wild ;
A dungeon horrible on all sides round,
As one great furnace flam'd ; yet from those flames
No light ; but rather darkness visible.
Serv'd only to discover sights of woe,
Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
And rest can never dwell ; hope never comes
That comes to all : but torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With ever-burning sulphur unconsum'd :
Such place eternal Justice had prepar'd
For those rebellious ; here their prison ordain'd
In utter darkness, and their portion set
As far remov'd from God and light of Heaven,
As from the centre thrice to the utmost pole.
O, how unlike the place from whence they fell !
There the companions of his fall, o'erwhelm'd
With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous fire,
He soon discerns ; and weltering by his side
One next himself in power, and next in crime,
Long after known in Palestine, and nam'd
Beëlzebub. To whom the arch-enemy,
And thence in Heaven call'd Satan, with bold words
Breaking the horrid silence, thus began.

“ If thou beest he ; but O, how fall'n ! how chang'd
From him, who in the happy realms of light,

Cloth'd with transcendent brightness, didst outshine
Myriads though bright ! If he whom mutual league,
United thoughts and counsels, equal hope
And hazard in the glorious enterprise,
Join'd with me once, now misery bath join'd
In equal ruin : into what pit thou seest
From what height fall'n, so much the stronger prov'd
He with his thunder : and till then who knew
The force of those dire arms ? Yet not for those,
Nor what the potent Victor in his rage
Can else inflict, do I repent or change,
Though chang'd in outward lustre, that fix'd mind,
And high disdain from sense of injur'd merit,
That with the Mightiest rais'd me to contend,
And to the fierce contention brought along
Innumerable force of spirits arm'd,
That durst dislike his reign, and, me preferring,
His utmost power with adverse power oppos'd
In dubious battle on the plains of Heaven,
And shook his throne. What though the field be lost ?

All is not lost ; the unconquerable will,
And study of revenge, immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield,
And what is else not to be overcome ;
That glory never shall his wrath or might Extort from me. To bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, and deify his power
Who from the terror of this arm so late
Doubted his empire ; that were low indeed,
That were an ignominy, and shame beneath
This downfall : since by fate the strength of Gods
And this empyreal substance cannot fail,
Since through experience of this great event
In arms not worse, in foresight much advanc'd,
We may with more successful hope resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war,
Irreconcilable to our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and, in the excess of joy
Sole reigning, holds the tyranny of Heaven.”

So spake the apostate angel, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair :
And him thus answer'd soon his bold compeer.

“ O prince, O chief of many throned powers,
That led the embattled seraphim to war
Under thy conduct, and in dreadful deeds
Fearless, endanger'd Heaven's perpetual king,
And put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate ;
Too well I see, and rue the dire event,
That with sad overthrow, and foul defeat,
Hath lost us Heaven, and all this mighty host
In horrible destruction laid thus low,
As far as gods and heavenly essences
Can perish : for the mind and spirit remains
Invincible, and vigour soon returns,
Though all our glory extinct, and happy state
Here swallow'd up in endless misery.
But what if he our conqueror (whom I now
Of force believe almighty, since no less
Than such could have o'erpower'd such force as ours)
Have left us this our spirit and strength entire Strongly to suffer and support our pains,
That we may so suffice his vengeful ire,
Or do him mightier service as his thralls
By right of war, whate'er his business be,
Here in the heart of Hell to work in fire,
Or do his errands in the gloomy deep ;
What can it then avail, though yet we feel
Strength undiminish'd, or eternal being

To undergo eternal punishment?"
 Whereto with speedy words the arch-fiend replied,
 " Fall'n cherub, to be weak is miserable
 Doing or suffering; but of this be sure,
 To do aught good never will be our task,
 But ever to do ill our sole delight,
 As being the contrary to his high will
 Whom we resist. If then his providence
 Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
 Our labour must be to pervert that end,
 And out of good still to find means of evil;
 Which oft-times may succeed, so as perhaps
 Shall grieve him, if I fail not, and disturb
 His inmost counsels from their destin'd aim.
 But see, the angry victor hath recall'd
 His ministers of vengeance and pursuit
 Back to the gates of Heaven: the sulphurous hail,
 Shot after us in storm, o'erblown, hath laid
 The fiery surge, that from the precipice
 Of Heaven receiv'd us falling; and the thunder,
 Wing'd with red lightning and impetuous rage,
 Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
 To bellow through the vast and boundless deep.
 Let us not slip the occasion, whether scorn,
 Or satiate fury, yield it from our foe.
 Seest thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
 The seat of desolation, void of light,
 Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
 Cast pale and dreadful? Thither let us tend
 From off the tossing of these fiery waves;
 There rest, if any rest can harbour there;
 And re-assembling our afflicted powers,
 Consult how we may henceforth most offend
 Our enemy; our own loss how repair;
 How overcome this dire calamity;
 What reinforcement we may gain from hope;
 If not, what resolution from despair."

Thus Satan, talking to his nearest mate,
 With head up-lift above the wave, and eyes
 That sparkling blaz'd; his other parts besides,
 Prone on the flood, extended long and large,
 Lay floating many a rood; in bulk as huge
 As when the fables name of monstrous size,
 Titian, or Earth-born, that warr'd on Jove;
 Briareos or Typhon, whom the den
 By ancient Tarsus held; or that sea-beast
 Leviathan, which God of all his works
 Created hugest that swim the ocean stream:
 Him haply slumbering on the Norway foam
 The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
 Drowning some island, oft, as sea-men tell,
 With fixed anchor in his scaly rind
 Views by his side under the lee, while night
 Invests the sea, and wished morn delays:
 So stretch'd out huge in length the arch-fiend lay
 Stoop'd on the burning lake: nor ever thence
 That ris'n or heav'd his head; but that the will
 And high permission of all-ruling Heaven
 Left him at large to his own dark designs;
 That with reiterated crimes he might
 Heap on himself damnation, while he sought
 Evil to others; and, enrag'd, might see
 How all his malice serv'd but to bring forth
 Infinite goodness, grace and mercy, shown
 On Man by him seduc'd; but on himself
 Triple confusion, wrath and vengeance pour'd.
 Forthwith upright he rears from off the pool
 His mighty stature; on each hand the flames,
 Driven backward, slope their pointing spires, and roll'd

In billows, leave i' the midst a horrid vale.
 Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
 Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air
 That felt unusual weight; till on dry land
 He lights, if it were land that ever burn'd
 With solid, as the lake with liquid fire;
 And such appear'd in hue, as when the force
 Of subterranean wind transports a hill
 Torn from Pelorus, or the shatter'd side
 Of thundering Ætna, whose combustible
 And fuell'd entrails thence conceiving fire,
 Sublim'd with mineral fury, aid the winds,
 And leave a singed bottom all involv'd
 With stench and smoke: such resting found the sole
 Of unblest feet. Him follow'd his next mate.
 Both glorying to have 'scap'd the Stygian flood
 As gods, and by their own recover'd strength,
 Not by the sufferance of supernal Power.
 " Is this the region, this the soil, the clime,"
 Said then the lost arch-angel, " this the seat
 That we must change for Heaven: this mournful gloom
 For that celestial light? Be it so, since he,
 Who now is Sovran, can dispose and bid
 What shall be right: farthest from him is best,
 Whom reason hath equall'd, force hath made supreme
 Above his equals. Farewell, happy fields,
 Where joy for ever dwells. Hail horrors, hail
 Infernal world, and thou, profoundest Hell,
 Receive thy new possessor, one who brings
 A mind not to be chang'd by place or time:
 The mind is its own place, and in itself
 Can make a Heaven of Hell, a Hell of Heaven.
 What matter where, if I be still the same,
 And what I should be, all but less than he Whom thunder hath made greater? Here at least
 We shall be free; the Almighty hath not built
 Here for his envy, will not drive us hence:
 Here we may reign secure, and, in my choice,
 To reign is worth ambition, though in Hell:
 Better to reign in Hell, than serve in Heaven.
 But wherefore let we then our faithful friends,
 The associates and copartners of our loss,
 Lie thus astonish'd on the oblivious pool,
 And call them not to share with us their part
 In this unhappy mansion; or once more
 With rallied arms to try what may be yet
 Regain'd in Heaven, or what more lost in Hell?"

So Satan spake, and him Beëlzebub
 Thus answer'd; " Leader of those armies bright,
 Which but the Omnipotent none could have foil'd,
 If once they hear that voice, their liveliest pledge
 Of hope in fears and dangers, heard so oft
 In worst extremes, and on the perilous edge
 Of battle when it rag'd, in all assaults
 Their surest signal, they will soon resume
 New courage and revive; though now they lie
 Grovelling and prostrate on yon lake of fire,
 As we ere while, astounded and amaz'd;
 No wonder, fall'n such a pernicious highth."

He scarce had ceas'd when the superior fiend
 Was moving toward the shore: his ponderous shield,
 Ethereal temper, massy, large and round,
 Behind him cast; the broad circumference
 Hung on his shoulders like the Moon, whose orb
 Through optic glass the Tuscan artist views
 At evening from the top of Fesolè,

Or in Valdarno, to descry new lands,
 Rivers or mountains in her spotty globe.
 His spear, to equal with the tallest pine
 Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
 Of some great ammiral, were but a wand,
 He walk'd with, to support uneasy steps
 Over the burning marle, not like those steps
 On Heaven's azure, and the torrid clime
 Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire :
 Nathless he so endur'd, till on the beach
 Of that inflamed sea he stood, and call'd
 His legions, angel forms, who lay intranc'd
 Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks
 In Vallombrosa, where the Etrurian shades,
 High over-arch'd, imbower ; or scatter'd sedge
 Afloat, when with fierce winds Orion arm'd
 Hath vex'd the Red-Sea coast, whose waves o'er-threw

Busiris, and his Memphian chivalry,
 While with perfidious hatred they pursued
 The sojourners of Goshen, who beheld
 From the safe shore their floating carcasses
 And broken chariot wheels : so thick bestrown,
 Abject and lost lay these, covering the flood,
 Under amazement of their hideous change.
 He call'd so loud, that all the hollow deep
 Of Hell resounded. " Princes, potentates,
 Warriors, the flower of Heaven, once yours, now
 lost,

If such astonishment as this can seize
 Eternal spirits ; or have ye chos'n this place
 After the toil of battle to repose
 Your wearied virtue, for the ease you find
 To slumber here, as in the vales of Heaven ?
 Or in this abject posture have ye sworn
 T' adore the Conqueror ? who now beholds
 Cherub and seraph rolling in the flood
 With scatter'd arms and ensigns, till anon
 His swift pursuers from Heaven-gates discern
 Th' advantage, and, descending, tread us down
 Thus drooping, or with linked thunderbolts
 Transfix us to the bottom of this gulf,
 Awake, arise, or be for ever fall'n." [sprung

They heard, and were abas'd, and up they
 Upon the wing ; as when men wont to watch
 On duty, sleeping found by whom they dread,
 Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake ;
 Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
 In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel ;
 Yet to their general's voice they soon obey
 Innumerable. As when the potent rod
 Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
 Wav'd round the coast, up call'd a pitchy cloud
 Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
 That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
 Like night, and darkened all the land of Nile :
 So numberless were those bad angels seen
 Hovering on wing under the cope of Hell,
 Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires,
 Till, as a signal given, the up-lifted spear
 Of their great Sultan waving to direct
 Their course, in even balance down they light
 On the firm brimstone, and fill all the plain.
 A multitude, like which the populous North
 Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to pass
 Rhene or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons
 Came like a deluge on the South, and spread
 Beneath Gibraltar to the Lybian sands.
 Forthwith from ev'ry squadron and each band
 The heads and leaders thither haste where stood

Their great commander ; godlike shapes and forms
 Excelling human, princely dignities,
 And powers that erst in Heaven sat on thrones,
 Though of their names in heavenly records now
 Be no memorial ; blotted out and ras'd
 By their rebellion from the books of life.
 Nor had they yet among the sons of Eve
 Got them new names, till, wandering o'er the Earth,

Through God's high sufferance for the trial of man,

By falsities and lies the greatest part
 Of mankind they corrupted to forsake
 God their Creator, and th' invisible
 Glory of him that made them to transform
 Oft to the image of a brute, adorn'd
 With gay religions full of pomp and gold,
 And devils to adore for deities :
 Then were they known to men by various names,
 And various idols through the Heathen world.
 Say, Muse, their names then known, who first,
 who last,

Rous'd from the slumber, on that fiery couch.
 At their great emperor's call, as next in worth
 Came singly where he stood on the bare strand,
 While the promiscuous cloud stood yet aloof.
 The chief were those, who, from the pit of Hell
 Roaming to seek their prey on Earth, durst fix
 Their seats long after next the seat of God.
 Their altars by his altar, gods ador'd
 Among the nations round, and durst abide
 Jehovah thund'ring out of Sion, thron'd
 Between the cherubim ; yea, often plac'd
 Within his sanctuary itself their shrines,
 Abominations ; and with cursed things
 His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd,
 And with their darkness durst affront his light.
 First Moloch, horrid king, besmear'd with blood
 Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears ;
 Though for the noise of drums and timbrels loud
 Their children's cries unheard, that pass'd through fire

To his grim idol. Him the Ammonite
 Worshipt in Rabba and her watry plain,
 In Argob and in Basan, to the stream
 Of utmost Arnon. Nor content with such Audacious neighbourhood, the wisest heart
 Of Solomon he led by fraud to build
 His temple right against the temple of God,
 On that opprobrious hill ; and made his grove
 The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
 And black Gehenna call'd, the type of Hell.
 Next, Chemos, th' obscene dread of Moab's sons,
 From Aroer to Nebo, and the wild
 Of southmost Abarim ; in Hesebon
 And Horonaim, Seon's realm, beyond
 The flowery dale of Sibma clad with vines,
 And Eleale to th' Asphaltic pool.
 Peor his other name, when he entic'd
 Israel in Sittim, on their march from Nile,
 To do him wanton rites, which cost them woe.
 Yet thence his lustful orgies he enlarg'd
 Even to that hill of scandal, by the grove
 Of Moloch homicide ; lust hard by hate ;
 Till good Josiah drove them thence to Hell.
 With these came they, who, from the bord'ring flood

Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
 Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
 Of Baalim and Ashtaroth ; those male,

These feminine : for spirits, when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both ; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure ;
Not tied or manacled with joint or limb,
Not founded on the brittle strength of bones,
Like cumbrous flesh ; but, in what shape they choose,

Dilated or condens'd, bright or obscure,
Can execute their airy purposes,
And works of love or enmity fulfil.
For those the race of Israel oft forsook
Their living strength, and unfrequented left
His righteous altar, bowing lowly down
To bestial gods ; for which their heads as low
Bow'd down in battle, sunk before the spear
Of despicable foes. With these in troop
Came Astoreth, whom the Phœnicians call'd
Astarte, queen of Heaven, with crescent horns ;
To whose bright image nightly by the Moon
Sidonian virgins paid their vows and songs ;
In Sion also not unsung, where stood
Her temple on the offensive mountain, built
By that uxorious king, whose heart, though large,
Beguil'd by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols foul. Thammuz came next behind,
Whose annual wound in Lebanon allur'd
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
In amorous ditties all a summer's day ;
While smooth Adonis from his native rock
Ran purple to the sea, suppos'd with blood
Of Thammuz yearly wounded : the love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat ;
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw, when, by the vision led,
His eye survey'd the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Next came one
Who mourn'd in earnest, when the captive ark
Maim'd his brute image, head and hands lopt off
In his own temple, on the grunsel edge,
Where he fell flat, and sham'd his worshippers :
Dagon his name, sea-monster, upward man
And downward fish : yet had his temple high
Rear'd in Asotus, dreaded through the coast
Of Palestine, in Gath and Ascalon,
And Accaron and Gaza's frontier bounds.
Him follow'd Rimmon, whose delightful seat
Was fair Damascus, on the fertile banks
Of Abbana and Pharpar, lucid streams.
He also against the house of God was bold !
A leper once he lost, and gain'd a king ;
Abas his sottish conqueror, whom he drew
God's altar to dispage and displace
For one of Syrian mode, whereon to burn
His odious offerings, and adore the gods
Whom he had vanquish'd. After these appear'd
A crew, who, under names of old renown,
Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abus'd
Fancie Egypt and her priests, to seek
Their wandering gods disguis'd in brutish forms
Rather than human. Nor did Israel 'scape
The infection, when their borrow'd gold compos'd
The calf in Oreb ; and the rebel king
Doubled that sin in Bethel and in Dan,
Likening his Maker to the grazed ox ;
Jehovah, who in one night, when he pass'd
From Egypt marching, equall'd with one stroke
Both her first-born and all her bleating gods.
Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from Heaven, or more gross to love

Vice for itself : to him no temple stood
Or altar smok'd ; yet who more oft than he
In temples and at altars, when the priest
Turns atheist, as did Eli's sons, who fill'd
With lust and violence the house of God ?
In courts and palaces he also reigns,
And in luxurious cities, where the noise
Of riot ascends above their loftiest towers,
And injury and outrage : and when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine.
Witness the streets of Sodom, and that night
In Gibeah, when the hospitable door
Expos'd a matron, to avoid worse rape.
These were the prime in order and in might :
The rest were long to tell, though far renown'd,
The Ionian gods, of Javan's issue ; held
Gods, yet confess'd later than Heaven and Earth,
Their boasted parents : Titan, Heaven's first-born,
With his enormous brood, and birthright seiz'd
By younger Saturn ; he from mightier Jove,
His own and Rhea's son, like measure found ;
So Jove usurping reign'd : these first in Crete
And Ida known, thence on the snowy top
Of bold Olympus, rul'd the middle air,
Their highest Heaven ; or on the Delphian cliff,
Or in Dodona, and through all the bounds
Of Doric land : or who with Saturn old
Fled over Adria to the Hesperian fields,
And o'er the Celtic roam'd the utmost isles.

All these and more came flocking ; but with looks
Down-cast and damp ; yet such wherein appear'd
Obscure some glimpse of joy, to have found their chief

Not in despair, to 'ave found themselves not lost
In loss itself ; which on his countenance cast
Like doubtful hue : but he, his wonted pride
Soon recollecting, with high words, that bore
Semblance of worth, not substance, gently rais'd
Their fainting courage, and dispell'd their fears.
Then straight commands, that at the warlike sound
Of trumpets loud and clarions be uprear'd
His mighty standard ; that proud honour claim'd
Azazel as his right, a cherub tall ;
Who forthwith from the glittering staff unfurl'd
The imperial ensign ; which, full high advanc'd,
Shone like a meteor streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich imblaz'd,
Seraphic arms and trophies ; all the while
Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds :
At which the universal host up-sent
A shout, that tore Hell's concave, and beyond
Frighted the reign of Chaos and old Night.
All in a moment through the gloom were seen
Ten thousand banners rise into the air
With orient colours waving : with them rose
A forest huge of spears ; and thronging helms
Appear'd, and serried shields in thick array
Of depth immeasurable ; anon they move
In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood
Of flutes and soft recorders ; such as rais'd
To highth of noblest temper heroes old
Arming to battle ; and instead of rage
Deliberate valour breath'd, firm and unmov'd
With dread of death to flight or foul retreat :
Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage
With solemn touches troubled thoughts, and chase
Anguish, and doubt, and fear, and sorrow, and pain,

From mortal or immortal minds. Thus they,
 Breathing united force, with fixed thought,
 Mov'd on in silence to soft pipes, that charm'd
 Their painful steps o'er the burnt soil : and now
 Advanc'd in view they stand ; a horrid front
 Of dreadful length and dazzling arms, in guise
 Of warriors old with order'd spear and shield ;
 Awaiting what command their mighty chief
 Had to impose : he through the armed files
 Darts his experienc'd eye, and soon traverse
 The whole battalion views, their order due,
 Their visages and stature as of gods ;
 Their number last he sums. And now his heart
 Distends with pride, and hardening in his strength
 Glories : for never, since created man,
 Met such imbodied force, as nam'd with these Could merit more than that small infantry
 Warr'd on by cranes : though all the giant brood
 Of Phlegra with the heroic race were join'd
 That fought at Thebes and Ilium, on each side
 Mix'd with auxiliar gods ; and what resounds
 In fable or romance of Uther's son
 Begirt with British and Armoric knights ;
 And all who since, baptiz'd or infidel,
 Jousted in Aspramont, or Montalban,
 Damasco, or Marocco, or Trebisonde,
 Or whom Biserta sent from Afric shore,
 When Charlemain with all his peerage fell
 By Fontarabbia. Thus far these beyond
 Compare of mortal prowess, yet observ'd
 Their dread commander : he, above the rest
 In shape and gesture proudly eminent,
 Stood like a tower ; his form had yet not lost
 All her original brightness ; nor appear'd
 Less than arch-angel ruin'd, and the excess
 Of glory obscur'd : as when the Sun, new risen,
 Looks through the horizontal misty air
 Shorn of his beams ; or from behind the Moon,
 In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
 On half the nations, and with fear of change
 Perplexes monarchs. Darken'd so, yet shone
 Above them all the arch-angel : but his face
 Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd ; and care
 Sat on his faded cheek, but under brows
 Of dauntless courage, and considerate pride
 Waiting revenge ; cruel his eye, but cast
 Signs of remorse and passion, to behold
 The fellows of his crime, the followers rather,
 (Far other once beheld in bliss) condemn'd
 For ever now to have their lot in pain :
 Millions of spirits for his fault amerc'd
 Of Heaven, and from eternal splendours flung
 For his revolt, yet faithful how they stood,
 Their glory wither'd : as when Heaven's fire
 Hath scath'd the forest oaks, or mountain pines,
 With singed top their stately growth, though bare,
 Stands on the blasted heath. He now prepar'd
 To speak ; whereat their doubled ranks they bend
 From wing to wing, and half enclose him round
 With all his peers : attention held them mute.
 Thrice he assay'd, and thrice, in spite of scorn,
 Tears, such as angels weep, burst forth : at last
 Words, interwove with sighs, found out their way.

“ O myriads of immortal spirits, O powers
 Matchless, but with the Almighty ; and that strife
 Was not inglorious, though the event was dire,
 As this place testifies, and this dire change,
 Hateful to utter : but what power of mind,
 Foreseeing or presaging, from the depth
 Of knowledge past or present, could have fear'd

How such united force of gods ; how such
 As stood like these, could ever know repulse ?
 For who can yet believe, though after loss,
 That all these puissant legions, whose exile
 Hath emptied Heaven, shall fail to re-ascend
 Self-rais'd, and repossess their native seat ?
 For me, be witness all the host of Heaven,
 If counsels different, or dangers shunn'd
 By me, have lost our hopes. But he who reigns
 Monarch in Heaven, till then as one secure
 Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute,
 Consent or custom ; and his regal state
 Put forth at full, but still his strength conceal'd,
 Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall.
 Henceforth his might we know and know our own :
 So as not either to provoke, or dread
 New war, provok'd ; our better part remains
 To work in close design, by fraud or guile,
 What force effected not : that he no less
 At length from us may find, who overcomes
 By force, hath overcome but half his foe.
 Space may produce new worlds ; whereof so ripe
 There went a fame in Heaven that he ere long
 Intended to create, and therein plant
 A generation, whom his choice regard
 Should favour equal to the sons of Heaven :
 Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
 Our first eruption ; thither or elsewhere ;
 For this infernal pit shall never hold
 Celestial spirits in bondage, nor the abyss
 Long under darkness cover. But these thoughts
 Full counsel must mature : peace is despair'd ;
 For who can think submission ? War, then, war,
 Open or understood, must be resolv'd.”

He spake : and, to confirm his words, out-flew
 Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs
 Of mighty cherubim ; the sudden blaze
 Far round illumin'd Hell : highly they rag'd
 Against the Highest, and fierce with grasped arms
 Clash'd on their sounding shields the din of war,
 Hurling defiance toward the vault of Heaven.

There stood a hill not far, whose grisly top
 Belch'd fire and rolling smoke ; the rest entire Shone with a glossy scurf ; undoubted sign
 That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
 The work of sulphur. Thither, wing'd with speed,
 A numerous brigade hasten'd : as when bands
 Of pioneers, with spade and pick-axe arm'd,
 Forerun the royal camp, to trench a field,
 Or cast a rampart. Mammon led them on :
 Mammon, the least erected spirit that fell
 From Heaven ; for e'en in Heaven his looks and thoughts

Were always downward bent, admiring more
 The riches of Heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
 Than aught, divine or holy, else enjoy'd
 In vision beatific : by him first
 Men also, and by his suggestion taught,
 Ransack'd the centre, and with impious hands
 Rifled the bowels of their mother Earth
 For treasures, better hid. Soon had his crew
 Open'd into the hill a spacious wound,
 And digg'd out ribs of gold. Let none admire
 That riches grow in Hell ; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. And here let those,
 Who boast in mortal things, and wondering tell
 Of Babel, and the works of Memphian kings,
 Learn how their greatest monuments of fame,
 And strength and art, are easily out-done
 By spirits reprobate, and in an hour

What in an age they with incessant toil
And hands innumerable scarce perform.
High on the plain, in many cells prepar'd,
That underneath had veins of liquid fire
Sluic'd from the lake, a second multitude
With wonderous art founded the massy ore,
Serving each kind, and scumm'd the bullion dross:
A third as soon had form'd within the ground
A various mould, and from the boiling cells,
By strange conveyance, fill'd each hollow nook;
As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes.
Anon, out of the earth a fabric huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet,
Built like a temple, where pilasters round
Were set, and Doric pillars overlaid
With golden architrave; nor did there want
Cornice or frieze, with bossy sculptures graven:
The roof was fretted gold. Not Babylon,
Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence
Equall'd in all their glories, to enshrine
Belus or Serapis their gods, or seat
Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
In wealth and luxury. The ascending pile Stood fix'd her stately height: and straight the doors,

Opening their brazen folds, discover, wide
Within, her ample spaces, o'er the smooth
And level pavement; from the arched roof
Pendent by subtle magic many a row
Of starry lamps and blazing cressets, fed
With Naphtha and Asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. The hasty multitude
Admiring enter'd; and the work some praise,
And some the architect; his hand was known
In Heaven by many a tower'd structure high,
Where scepter'd angels held their residence,
And sat as princes; whom the supreme king
Elevated to such power, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright.
Nor was his name unheard, or unador'd,
In ancient Greece; and in Ausonian land
Men call'd him Mulciber; and how he fell
From Heaven, they fabled, thrown by angry Jove
Swept o'er the crystal battlements: from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day; and with the setting Sun
Dropt from the zenith like a falling star,
On Lemnos the Ægean isle: thus they relate,
Erring; for he with this rebellious rout
Fell long before; nor aught avail'd him now
To have built in Heaven high towers; nor did he
'scape

By all his engines, but was headlong sent
With his industrious crew, to build in Hell.

Meanwhile the winged heralds, by command
Of sovran power, with awful ceremony
And trumpet's sound, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council, forthwith to be held
At Pandemonium; the high capital
Of Satan and his peers; their summons call'd
From every band and squared regiment
By place or choice the worthiest; they anon,
With hundreds and with thousands, trooping came,
Attended: all access was throng'd: the gates
And purches wide, but chief the spacious hall
'Though like a cover'd field, where champions bold
Went ride in arm'd, and at the Soldan's chair
Descried the best of Panim chivalry

To mortal combat, or career with lance)
Thick swarm'd, both on the ground and in the air
Brush'd with the hiss of rustling wings. As bees
In spring time, when the Sun with Taurus rides,
Pour forth their populous youth about the hive
In clusters; they among fresh dews and flowers
Fly to and fro, or on the smoothed plank,
The suburb of their straw-built citadel,
New rubb'd with balm, expatiate and confer
Their state affairs. So thick the aery croud
Swarm'd and were straiten'd; till, the signal given,
Behold a wonder! They but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass Earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room
Throng numberless, like that pygmean race
Beyond the Indian mount; or faery elves,
Whose midnight revels, by a forest side
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees while over-head the Moon
Sits arbitress, and nearer to the Earth
Wheels her pale course; they, on their mirth and dance

Intent, with jocund music charm his ear;
At once with joy and fear his heart rebounds.
Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms
Reduce their shapes immense, and were at large,
Though without number still, amidst the hall
Of that infernal court. But far within,
And in their own dimensions, like themselves,
The great seraphic lords and cherubim
In close recess and secret conclave sat;
A thousand demi-gods on golden seats,
Frequent and full. After short silence then,
And summons read, the great consult began.

Book II.

The Argument.

The consultation begun, Satan debates whether another battle be to be hazarded for the recovery of Heaven: some advise it, others dissuade: a third proposal is preferred, mentioned before by Satan, to search the truth of that prophecy or tradition in Heaven concerning another world, and another kind of creature equal or not much inferior to themselves, about this time to be created. Their doubt, who shall be sent on this difficult search; Satan their chief undertakes alone the voyage, is honoured and applauded. The council thus ended, the rest betake them several ways, and to several employments, as their inclinations lead them, to entertain the time till Satan return. He passes on his journey to Hell gates; finds them shut, and who sat there to guard them; by whom at length they are opened, and discover to him the great gulf between Hell and Heaven; with what difficulty he passes through, directed by Chaos, the power of that place, to the sight of this new world which he sought.

High on a throne of royal state, which far
Outshone the wealth of Ormus and of Ind,
Or where the gorgeous East with richest hand
Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and gold,
Satan exalted sat, by merit rais'd
To that bad eminence: and, from despair
Thus high uplifted beyond hope, aspires

Beyond thus high, insatiate to pursue
Vain war with Heaven, and, by success untaught,
His proud imaginations thus display'd.

" Powers and dominions, deities of Heaven ;
For since no deep within her gulf can hold
Immortal vigour, though oppress'd and fall'n,
I give not Heaven for lost. From this descent
Celestial virtues rising, will appear
More glorious and more dread than from no fall,
And trust themselves to fear no second fate.
Me though just right, and the fix'd laws of Heaven,
Did first create your leader ; next, free choice,
With what besides, in counsel or in fight,
Hath been achiev'd of merit ; yet this loss,
Thus far at least recover'd, hath much more
Establish'd in a safe unenvied throne,
Yielded with full consent. The happier state
In Heaven, which follows dignity, might draw
Envy from each inferior ; but who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim,
Your bulwark, and condemns to greatest share
Of endless pain ? Where there is then no good
For which to strive, no strife can grow up there
From faction ; for none sure will claim in Hell
Precedence, none whose portion is so small
Of present pain, that with ambitious mind
Will covet more. With this advantage then
To union, and firm faith, and firm accord,
More than can be in Heaven, we now return
To claim our just inheritance of old,
Surer to prosper than prosperity
Could have assur'd us ; and, by what best way,
Whether of open war, or covert guile,
We now debate ; who can advise, may speak."

He ceas'd ; and next him Moloch, scepter'd king,
Stood up, the strongest and the fiercest spirit
That fought in Heaven, now fiercer by despair :
His trust was with the Eternal to be deem'd
Equal in strength ; and rather than be less
Car'd not to be at all ; with that care lost
Went all his fear : of God, or Hell, or worse,
He reck'd not ; and these words thereafter spake.

" My sentence is for open war : of wiles,
More unexpert, I boast not : them let those Contrive who need, or when they need, not now.
For, while they sit contriving, shall the rest,
Millions that stand in arms, and longing wait
The signal to ascend, sit lingering here
Heaven's fugitives, and for their dwelling-place
Accept this dark opprobrious den of shame,
The prison of his tyranny who reigns
By our delay ? No, let us rather choose,
Arm'd with Hell flames and fury, all at once,
O'er Heaven's high towers to force resistless way,
Turning our tortures into horrid arms
Against the torturer ; when to meet the noise
Of his almighty engine he shall hear
Infernal thunder ; and, for lightning, see
Black fire and horror shot with equal rage
Among his angels ; and his throne itself
Mix'd with Tartarean sulphur, and strange fire,
His own invented torments. But perhaps
The way seems difficult and steep to scale
With upright wing against a higher foe.
Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumn not still,
That in our proper motion we ascend
Up to our native seat ; descent and fall
To us is adverse. Who but felt of late,

When the fierce foe hung on our broken rear
Insulting, and pursued us through the deep,
With what compulsion and laborious flight
We sunk thus low ? The ascent is easy then ;
The event is fear'd ; should we again provoke
Our stronger, some worse way his wrath may find
To our destruction ; if there be in Hell
Fear to be worse destroy'd : what can be worse
Than to dwell here, driven out from bliss, condemn'd

In this abhorred deep to utter woe ;
Where pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us without hope of end,
The vassals of his anger, when the scourge
Inexorably, and the torturing hour,
Calls us to penance ? More destroy'd than thus,
We should be quite abolish'd, and expire.
What fear we then ? what doubt we to incense
His utmost ire ? which, to the height enrag'd,
Will either quite consume us, and reduce
To nothing this essential ; happier far
Than miserable to have eternal being :
Or, if our substance be indeed divine,
And cannot cease to be, we are at worst
On this side nothing ; and by proof we feel
Our power sufficient to disturb his Heaven,
And with perpetual inroads to alarm,
Though inaccessible, his fatal throne :
Which, if not victory, is yet revenge."

He ended frowning, and his look denounc'd
Desperate revenge, and battle dangerous
To less than gods. On th' other side up-rose
Belial, in act more graceful and humane :
A fairer person lost not Heaven ; he seem'd
For dignity compos'd, and high exploit :
But all was false and hollow ; though his tongue
Dropt manna, and could make the worse appear
The better reason, to perplex and dash
Maturest counsels : for his thoughts were low
To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds
Tim'rous and slothful : yet he pleas'd the ear,
And with persuasive accent thus began.

" I should be much for open war, O peers,
As not behind in hate ; if what was urg'd
Main reason to persuade immediate war,
Did not dissuade me most, and seem to cast
Ominous conjecture on the whole success ;
When he, who most excels in fact of arms,
In what he counsels, and in what excels,
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
And utter dissolution, as the scope
Of all his aim, after some dire revenge.
First, what revenge ? The towers of Heaven are fill'd

With arm'd watch, that render all access
Impregnable : oft on the bordering deep
Encamp their legions ; or, with obscure wing,
Scout far and wide into the realm of night,
Scorning surprise. Or could we break our way
By force, and at our heels all Hell should rise
With blackest insurrection, to confound
Heaven's purest light : yet our great enemy
All incorruptible, would on his throne
Sit unpolluted ; and the ethereal mould
Incapable of stain, would soon expel
Her mischief, and purge off the baser fire,
Victorious. Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair : we must exasperate
The almighty victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us ; that must be our cure,

'To be no more. Sad cure ! for who would lose,
 Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
 Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
 To perish rather, swallow'd up and lost
 In the wide womb of uncreated night,
 Devoid of sense and motion? And who knows,
 Let this be good, whether our angry foe
 Can give it, or will ever? how he can,
 Is doubtful ; that he never will, is sure.
 Will he, so wise, let loose at once his ire,
 Belike through impotence, or unaware,
 To give his enemies their wish, and end
 Them in his anger, whom his anger saves
 To punish endless? Wherefore cease we then?
 Say they who counsel war, we are decreed,
 Reserv'd, and destin'd to eternal woe ;
 Whatever doing, what can we suffer more,
 What can we suffer worse? Is this then worst,
 Thus sitting, thus consulting, thus in arms?
 What, when we fled amain, pursued, and struck
 With Heaven's afflicting thunder, and besought
 The deep to shelter us? this Hell then seem'd
 A refuge from those wounds ; or when we lay
 Chain'd on the burning lake? that sure was worse.
 What if the breath, that kindled those grim fires,
 Awak'd, should blow them into sevenfold rage,
 And plunge us in the flames? or, from above,
 Should intermitted vengeance arm again
 His red right hand to plague us? What if all
 Her stores were opened, and this firmament
 Of Hell should spout her cataracts of fire,
 Impendent horrors, threatening hideous fall
 One day upon our heads ; while we perhaps,
 Designing or exhorting glorious war,
 Caught in a fiery tempest shall be hurl'd
 Each on his rock transfix'd, the sport and prey
 Of wracking whirlwinds ; or for ever sunk
 Under yon boiling ocean, wrapt in chains :
 There to converse with everlasting groans,
 Unrespited, unpitied, unrepriev'd,
 Ages of hopeless end? This would be worse.
 War therefore, open or conceal'd, alike
 My voice dissuades ; for what can force or guile
 With him, or who deceive his mind, whose eye
 Views all things at one view? He from Heaven's height

All these our motions vain sees, and derides ;
 Not more almighty to resist our might
 Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles.
 Shall we then live thus vile, the race of Heaven
 Thus trampled, thus expell'd to suffer here
 Chains and these torments? better these than worse,

By my advice ; since fate inevitable
 Subdues us, and omnipotent decree,
 The victor's will. To suffer, as to do,
 Our strength is equal, nor the law unjust
 That so ordains : this was at first resolv'd,
 If we were wise, against so great a foe
 Contending, and so doubtful what might fall.
 I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
 And venturous, if that fail them, shrink and fear
 What yet they know must follow, to endure
 Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain,
 The sentence of their conqueror : this is now
 Our doom ; which if we can sustain and bear,
 Our supreme foe in time may much remit
 His anger ; and perhaps, thus far remov'd,
 Not mind us not offending, satisfied
 With what is punish'd ; whence these raging fires

Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames.
 Our purer essence then will overcome
 Their noxious vapour ; or, inur'd, not feel ;
 Or, chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd
 In temper and in nature, will receive
 Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain ;
 This horror will grow mild, this darkness light ;
 Besides what hope the never-ending flight
 Of future days may bring, what chance, what change

Worth waiting ; since our present lot appears
 For happy though but ill, for ill not worst,
 If we procure not to ourselves more woe."

Thus Belial, with words cloth'd in reason's garb,
 Counsell'd ignoble ease, and peaceful sloth,
 Not peace : and after him thus Mammon spake.

" Either to disenthroned the King of Heaven
 We war, if war be best, or to regain
 Our own right lost : him to unthroned we then
 May hope, when everlasting Fate shall yield
 To fickle Chance, and Chaos judge the strife :
 The former, vain to hope, argues as vain
 The latter : for what place can be for us
 Within Heaven's bound, unless Heaven's Lord supreme

We overpower? Suppose he should relent,
 And publish grace to all, on promise made
 Of new subjection ; with what eyes could we Stand in his presence humble, and receive
 Strict laws impos'd, to celebrate his throne
 With warbled hymns, and to his Godhead sing
 Forc'd Halleluiahs ; while he lordly sits
 Our envied sovran, and his altar breathes
 Ambrosial odours and ambrosial flowers,
 Our servile offerings? This must be our task
 In Heaven, this our delight ! how wearisome
 Eternity so spent, in worship paid
 To whom we hate ! Let us not then pursue
 By force impossible, by leave obtain'd
 Unacceptable, though in Heaven, our state
 Of splendid vassalage ; but rather seek
 Our own good from ourselves, and from our own
 Live to ourselves, though in this vast recess,
 Free, and to none accountable, preferring
 Hard liberty before the easy yoke
 Of servile pomp. Our greatness will appear
 Then most conspicuous, when great things of small,

Useful of hurtful, prosperous of adverse
 We can create ; and in what place so e'er
 Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain,
 Through labour and endurance. This deep world
 Of darkness do we dread? How oft amidst Thick clouds and dark doth Heaven's all-ruling
 Sire

Choose to reside, his glory unobscur'd,
 And with the majesty of darkness round
 Covers his throne ; from whence deep thunders
 roar

Mustering their rage, and Heaven resembles Hell?
 As he our darkness, cannot we his light
 Imitate when we please? This desert soil
 Wants not her hidden lustre, gems and gold ;
 Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise
 Magnificence ; and what can Heaven show more?
 Our torments also may in length of time
 Become our elements ; these piercing fires
 As soft as now severe, our temper chang'd
 Into their temper ; which must needs remove
 The sensible of pain. All things invite

To peaceful counsels, and the settled state
Of order, how in safety best we may
Compose our present evils, with regard
Of what we are, and were; dismissing quite
All thoughts of war. Ye have what I advise."

He scarce had finish'd, when such murmur
fill'd

The assembly, as when hollow rocks retain
The sound of blustering winds, which all night long

Had rous'd the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull
Sea-faring men o'erwatch'd, whose bark by chance
Or pinnace anchors in a craggy bay

After the tempest: such applause was heard
As Mammon ended, and his sentence pleas'd,
Advising peace: for such another field
They dreaded worse than Hell: so much the fear
Of thunder and the sword of Michaël

Wrought still within them, and no less desire
To found this nether empire, which might rise
By policy, and long process of time,
In emulation opposite to Heaven.

Which when Beëlzebub perceiv'd, than whom
Satan except, none higher sat, with grave
Aspect he rose, and in his rising seem'd
A pillar of state; deep on his front engraven
Deliberation sat, and public care;

And princely counsel in his face yet shone,
Majestic, though in ruin: sage he stood
With Atlantean shoulders fit to bear
The weight of mightiest monarchies; his look
Drew audience and attention still as night
Or summer's noon-tide air, while thus he spake.

"Thrones and imperial powers, offspring of Heaven,

Ethereal virtues: or these titles now
Must we renounce, and, changing style, be call'd
Princes of Hell? for so the popular vote
Inclines here to continue, and build up here
A growing empire; doubtless; while we dream,
And know not that the King of Heaven hath doom'd
This place our dungeon; not our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm, to live exempt
From Heaven's high jurisdiction, in new league
Banded against his throne, but to remain
In strictest bondage, though thus far remov'd
Under the inevitable curb, reserv'd

His captive multitude: for he, be sure,
In height or depth, still first and last will reign
Sole king, and of his kingdom lose no part
By our revolt; but over Hell extend
His empire, and with iron sceptre rule
Us here, as with his golden those in Heaven.
What sit we then projecting peace and war?
War hath determin'd us, and foil'd with loss
Irreparable: terms of peace yet none
Vouchsaf'd or sought; for what peace will be given

To us enslav'd, but custody severe
And stripes, and arbitrary punishment
Inflicted? and what peace can we return,
But to our power hostility and hate,
Untam'd reluctance, and revenge, though slow,
Yet ever plotting how the conqueror least
May reap his conquest, and may least rejoice
In doing what we most in suffering feel?
Nor will occasion want, nor shall we need
With dangerous expedition to invade
Heaven, whose high walls fear no assault or siege,
Or ambush from the deep. What if we find

Some easier enterprise? There is a place,
(If ancient and prophetic fame in Heaven
Err not) another world, the happy seat
Of some new race call'd Man, about this time
To be created like to us, though less
In power and excellence, but favour'd more
Of him who rules above; so was his will
Pronounc'd among the gods, and by an oath,
That shook Heaven's whole circumference, con-
firm'd.

Thither let us bend all our thoughts, to learn
What creatures there inhabit, of what mould
Or substance, how endued, and what their power,
And where their weakness, how attempted best,
By force or subtlety. Though Heaven be shut,
And Heaven's high Arbitrator sit secure
In his own strength, this place may lie expos'd,
The utmost border of his kingdom, left
To their defence who hold it: here perhaps
Some advantageous act may be achiev'd
By sudden onset; either with Hell fire
To waste his whole creation, or possess
All as our own, and drive, as we were driven,
The puny habitants, or, if not drive,
Seduce them to our party, that their God
May prove their foe, and with repenting hand
Abolish his own works. This would surpass
Common revenge, and interrupt his joy
In our confusion, and our joy upraise
In his disturbance; when his darling sons,
Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
Their frail original, and faded bliss,
Faded so soon. Advise, if this be worth
Attempting, or to sit in darkness here
Hatching vain empires." Thus Beëlzebub
Pleaded his devilish counsel, first devis'd
By Satan, and in part propos'd: for whence,
But from the author of all ill, could spring
So deep a malice, to confound the race
Of mankind in one root, and Earth with Hell
To mingle and involve, done all to spite
The great Creator? But their spite still serves
His glory to augment. The bold design
Pleas'd highly those infernal states, and joy
Sparkled in all their eyes; with full assent
They vote: whereat his speech he thus renews.

"Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate,
Synod of gods, and, like to what ye are,
Great things resolv'd, which, from the lowest deep,
Will once more lift us up, in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat; perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence, with neighbouring arms

And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter Heaven: or else in some mild zone
Dwell, not unvisited of Heaven's fair light,
Secure; and at the brightening orient beam
Purge off this gloom: the soft delicious air,
To heal the scar of these corrosive fires,
Shall breathe her balm. But first whom shall we send

In search of this new world? whom shall we find
Sufficient? who shall tempt with wandering feet
The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,
And through the palpable obscure find out
His uncouth way, or spread his aery flight
Upborne with indefatigable wings
Over the vast abrupt, ere he arrive
The happy isle? What strength, what art can then

Suffice, or what evasion bear him safe
Through the strict senteries and stations thick
Of angels watching round? Here he had need
All circumspection, and we now no less
Choice in our suffrage; for, on whom we send,
The weight of all and our last hope relies."

This said, he sat; and expectation held
His look suspense, awaiting who appear'd
To second, or oppose, or undertake
The perilous attempt: but all sat mute,
Pondering the danger with deep thoughts; and each

In other's countenance read his own dismay
Astonish'd: none among the choice and prime
Of those Heaven-warring champions could be found

So hardy, as to proffer or accept,
Alone, the dreadful voyage; till at last
Satan, whom now transcendent glory rais'd
Above his fellows, with monarchal pride,
Conscious of highest worth, unmov'd thus spake.

"O progeny of Heaven, empyreal thrones,
With reason hath deep silence and demur
Siz'd us, though undismay'd. Long is the way
And hard, that out of Hell leads up to light:
Our prison strong; this huge convex of fire,
Outrageous to devour, immures us round
Ninefold; and gates of burning adamant,
Bar'd over us, prohibit all egress.
There pass'd, if any pass, the void profound
Of unemential Night receives him next
Wide gaping, and with utter loss of being
Threatens him, plung'd in that abortive gulf.
If thence he 'scape into whatever world,
Or unknown region, what remains him less
Than unknown dangers, and as hard escape?
But I should ill become this throne, O peers,
And this imperial sovranity, adorn'd
With splendour, arm'd with power, if aught pro-pos'd

And judg'd of public moment, in the shape
(Of difficulty, or danger, could deter
Me from attempting. Wherefore do I assume
These royalties, and not refuse to reign,
Refusing to accept as great a share
(Of hazard as of honour, due alike
To him who reigns, and so much to him due
Of hazard more, as he above the rest
High honour'd sits? Go therefore, mighty powers, Terror of Heaven, though fall'n; intend at home,

While here shall be our home, what best may ease
The present misery, and render Hell
More tolerable; if there be cure or charm
To repite, or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion: intermit no watch
Against a wakeful foe, while I abroad
Through all the coasts of dark destruction seek Advantage for us all: this enterprise
None shall partake with me." Thus saying rose
The monarch, and prevented all reply;
Prudent, lest, from his resolution rais'd,
(Others among the chief might offer now
(Certain to be refus'd) what erst they fear'd;
And, so refus'd, might in opinion stand
His rivals; winning cheap the high repute,
Which he through hazard huge must earn. But they

Dreaded not more the adventure, than his voice
Forbidding; and at once with him they rose:

Their rising all at once, was as the sound
Of thunder heard remote. Towards him they bend
With awful reverence prone; and as a god
Extol him equal to the Highest in Heaven:
Nor fail'd they to express how much they prais'd,
That for the general safety he despis'd
His own: for neither do the spirits damn'd
Lose all their virtue; lest bad men should boast
Their specious deeds on Earth which glory excites,
Or close ambition, varnish'd o'er with zeal.
Thus they their doubtful consultations dark
Ended, rejoicing in their matchless chief:
As when from mountain-tops the dusky clouds
Ascending, while the north-wind sleeps, o'erspread
Heaven's cheerful face, the louring element
Scowls o'er the darken'd landskip snow, or shower;
If chance the radiant Sun with farewell sweet
Extend his evening-beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
Attest their joy, that hill and valley rings.
O shame to men! devil with devil damn'd
Firm concord holds, men only disagree
Of creatures rational, though under hope
Of heavenly grace: and, God proclaiming peace,
Yet live in hatred, enmity, and strife,
Among themselves, and levy cruel wars,
Wasting the Earth, each other to destroy:
As if (which might induce us to accord)
Man had not hellish foes enow besides,
That, day and night, for his destruction wait.

The Stygian council thus dissolv'd; and forth
In order came the grand infernal peers;
Midst came their mighty paramount, and seem'd
Alone the antagonist of Heaven, nor less
Than Hell's dread emperor, with pomp supreme,
And God-like imitated state: him round
A globe of fiery seraphim enclos'd,
With bright emblazonry, and horrent arms.
Then of their session ended they bid cry
With trumpets' regal sound the great result:
Towards the four winds four speedy cherubim
Put to their mouths the sounding alchemy,
By herald's voice explain'd; the hollow abyss
Heard far and wide, and all the host of Hell
With deafening shout return'd them loud acclaim.
Thence more at ease their minds, and somewhat rais'd

By false presumptuous hope, the ranged powers
Disband, and, wandering, each his several way
Pursues, as inclination or sad choice
Leads him, perplex'd where he may likeliest find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours, till his great chief return.
Part on the plain, or in the air sublime,
Upon the wing, or in swift race contend,
As at the Olympian games or Pythian fields;
Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels, or fronted brigades form.
As when, to warn proud cities, war appears
Wag'd in the troubled sky, and armies rush
To battle in the clouds, before each van
Prick forth the aery knights, and couch their spears
Till thickest legions close; with feats of arms
From either end of Heaven the welkin burns.
Others, with vast Typhoean rage more fell,
Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
In whirlwind; Hell scarce holds the wild uproar
As when Alcides, from Oechalia crown'd
With conquest, felt the envenom'd robe, and tore
Through pain up by the roots Thessalian pines,

And Lichas from the top of Oeta threw
 Into th' Euboic sea. Others more mild,
 Retreated in a silent valley, sing
 With notes angelical to many a harp
 Their own heroic deeds and hapless fall
 By doom of battle; and complain that fate
 Free virtue should enthrall to force or chance.
 Their song was partial; but the harmony
 (What could it less when spirits immortal sing?)
 Suspended Hell, and took with ravishment
 The thronging audience. In discourse more sweet
 (For eloquence the soul, song charms the sense,)
 Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
 In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
 Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate,
 Fix'd fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute,
 And found no end, in wandering mazes lost.
 Of good and evil much they argued then,
 Of happiness and final misery,
 Passion and apathy, and glory and shame,
 Vain wisdom all, and false philosophy:
 Yet, with a pleasing sorcery, could charm
 Pain for a while or anguish, and excite
 Fallacious hope, or arm th' obdured breast
 With stubborn patience, as with triple steel.
 Another part, in squadrons and gross bands,
 On bold adventure to discover wide
 That dismal world, if any clime perhaps
 Might yield them easier habitation, bend
 Four ways their flying march, along the banks
 Of four infernal rivers, that disgorge
 Into the burning lake their baleful streams:
 Abhorred Styx, the flood of deadly hate;
 Sad Acheron, of sorrow, black and deep;
 Cocytus, nam'd of lamentation loud,
 Heard on the rueful stream; fierce Phlegethon,
 Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.
 Far off from these, a slow and silent stream,
 Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
 Her watery labyrinth, whereof who drinks,
 Forthwith his former state and being forgets,
 Forgets both joy and grief, pleasure and pain.
 Beyond this flood a frozen continent
 Lies dark and wild, beat with perpetual storms
 Of whirlwind and dire hail, which on firm land
 Thaws not, but gathers heap, and ruin seems
 Of ancient pile; or else deep snow and ice.
 A gulf profound as that Serbonian bog
 Betwixt Damietta and Mount Casius old,
 Where armies whole have sunk: the parching air
 Burns frore, and cold performs the effect of fire.
 Thither by harpy-footed furies hal'd,
 At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
 Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
 Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more
 fierce,
 From beds of raging fire, to starve in ice
 Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine
 Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round,
 Periods of time, thence hurried back to fire.
 They ferry over this Lethean sound
 Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment,
 And wish and struggle, as they pass, to reach
 The tempting stream, with one small drop to lose
 In sweet forgetfulness all pain and woe,
 All in one moment, and so near the brink;
 But Fate withstands, and to oppose the attempt
 Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
 The ford, and of itself the water flies
 All taste of living wight, as once it fled

The lip of Tantalus. Thus roving on
 In confus'd march forlorn, the adventurous bands
 With shuddering horror pale, and eyes aghast,
 View'd first their lamentable lot, and found
 No rest. Through many a dark and dreary vale
 They pass'd, and many a region dolorous,
 O'er many a frozen, many a fiery Alp,
 Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death,

A universe of death; which God by curse
 Created evil, for evil only good,
 Where all life dies, death lives, and Nature breeds,
 Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious things,
 Abominable, inutterable, and worse
 Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd,
 Gorgons, and Hydras, and Chimeras dire.

Mean while, the adversary of God and man,
 Satan, with thoughts inflam'd of highest design,
 Puts on swift wings, and towards the gates of Hell
 Explores his solitary flight: sometimes
 He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left;
 Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars
 Up to the fiery concave towering high.
 As when far off at sea a fleet descried
 Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
 Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
 Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring
 Their spicy drugs; they, on the trading flood,
 Through the wide Ethiopian to the Cape,
 Ply stemming nightly toward the pole: so seem'd
 Far off the flying fiend. At last appear
 Hell bounds, high reaching to the horrid roof,
 And thrice three-fold the gates; three-folds were brass,

Three iron, three of adamant rock
 Impenetrable, impal'd with circling fire,
 Yet unconsum'd. Before the gates there sat
 On either side a formidable shape;
 The one seem'd woman to the waist and fair;
 But ended foul in many a scaly fold
 Voluminous and vast; a serpent arm'd
 With mortal sting: About her middle round
 A cry of Hell-hounds never ceasing bark'd
 With wide Cerberean mouths full loud, and rung
 A hideous peal; yet, when they list, would creep,
 If aught disturb'd their noise, into her womb,
 And kennel there; yet there still bark'd and howl'd,
 Within unseen. Far less abhor'd than these Vex'd Scylla, bathing in the sea that parts
 Calabria from the hoarse Trinacrian shore:
 Nor uglier follow the night-hag, when, call'd
 In secret, riding through the air she comes,
 Lur'd with the smell of infant blood, to dance
 With Lapland witches, while the labouring Moon
 Eclipses at their charms. The other shape,
 If shape it might be call'd that shape had none
 Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb;
 Or substance might be call'd that shadow seem'd,
 For each seem'd either: black it stood as night,
 Fierce as ten furies, terrible as Hell,
 And shook a dreadful dart; what seem'd his head
 The likeness of a kingly crown had on.
 Satan was now at hand, and from his seat
 The monster moving onward came as fast
 With horrid strides; Hell trembled as he strode.
 The undaunted fiend what this might be admir'd,
 Admir'd, not fear'd; God and his Son except,
 Created thing naught valued he, nor shunn'd;
 And with disdainful look thus first began.

"Whence and what art thou, execrable shape,

That dar'st, though grim and terrible, advance
Thy miscreated front athwart my way
To yonder gates? through them I mean to pass,
That be assur'd, without leave ask'd of thee:
Retire, or taste thy folly, and learn by proof,
Hell-born, not to contend with spirits of Heaven."

To whom the goblin full of wrath replied.
"Art thou that traitor-angel, art thou he,
Who first broke peace in Heaven, and faith, till then
Unbroken; and in proud rebellious arms
Drew after him the third part of Heaven's sons
Conjur'd against the Highest; for which both thou
And they, outcast from God are here condemn'd
To waste eternal days in woe and pain?
And reckon'st thou thyself with spirits of Heaven,
Hell-doom'd, and breath'st defiance here and scorn,
Where I reign king, and, to enrage thee more,
Thy king and lord? Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive, and to thy speed add wings,
Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue
Thy lingering, or with one stroke of this dart
Strange horror seize thee, and pangs unfelt before."

So spake the grisly terror, and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew ten-fold
More dreadful and deform. On the other side,
Incens'd with indignation, Satan stood
Interrified, and like a comet burn'd,
That fires the length of Ophiuchus huge
In the arctic sky, and from his horrid hair
Stakes pestilence and war. Each at the head
Levell'd his deadly aim; their fatal hands
No second stroke intend; and such a frown
Each cast at the other, as when two black clouds,
With Heaven's artillery fraught, come rattling on
Over the Caspian, then stand front to front,
Hovering a space, till winds the signal blow
To join their dark encounter in mid air:
So frown'd the mighty combatants, that Hell
Grew darker at their frown; so match'd they stood;
For never but once more was either like
To meet so great a foe: and now great deeds
Had been achiev'd, whereof all Hell had rung,
Had not the snaky sorceress, that sat
Fast by Hell-gate, and kept the fatal key,
En'sn, and with hideous outcry rush'd between.

"O father, what intends thy hand," she cried,
"Against thy only son? What fury, O son,
Powers thee to bend that mortal dart
Against thy father's head? and know'st for whom;
For him who sits above and laughs the while
At thee ordain'd his drudge, to execute
Whatever his wrath, which he calls justice, bids;
His wrath, which one day will destroy ye both."

She spake, and at her words the hellish pest
Forbore; then these to her Satan return'd.

"So strange thy outcry, and thy words so strange
Thou interposest, that my sudden hand,
Prevented, spares to tell thee yet by deeds
What it intends; till first I know of thee,
What thing thou art thus double-form'd; and why
In this infernal vale first met, thou call'st
Me father, and that phantasm call'st my son:
I know thee not, nor ever saw till now
Sight more detestable than him and thee."

To whom thus the portress of Hell-gate replied.
"Hast thou forgot me then, and do I seem
Now in thine eye so foul? once deem'd so fair
In Heaven, when at the assembly, and in sight
Of all the seraphim with thee combin'd
In bold conspiracy against Heaven's King,

All on a sudden miserable pain
Surpris'd thee, dim thine eyes, and dizzy swum
In darkness, while thy head flames thick and fast
Threw forth: till, on the left side opening wide,
Likest to thee in shape and countenance bright
Then shining heavenly fair, a goddess arm'd,
Out of thy head I sprung: amazement seiz'd
All the host of Heaven; back they recoil'd afraid
At first, and call'd me Sin, and for a sign
Portentous held me; but, familiar grown,
I pleas'd, and with attractive graces won
The most averse, thee chiefly, who full oft
Thyself in me thy perfect image viewing
Becam'st enamour'd, and such joy thou took'st
With me in secret, that my womb conceiv'd
A growing burden. Meanwhile war arose,
And fields were fought in Heaven; wherein re-main'd

(For what could else?) to our Almighty Foe
Clear victory; to our part loss and rout,
Through all the empyrean; down they fell
Driven headlong from the pitch of Heaven, down
Into this deep! and in the general fall
I also; at which time, this powerful key
Into my hand was given, with charge to keep
These gates for ever shut, which none can pass
Without my opening. Pensive here I sat
Alone; but long I sat not, till my womb,
Pregnant by thee, and now excessive grown,
Prodigious motion felt, and rueful throes.
At last this odious offspring whom thou seest,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails, that with fear and pain
Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew
Transform'd: but he my inbred enemy
Forth issued, brandishing his fatal dart
Made to destroy! I fled and cried out Death!
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back resounded Death!
I fled, but he pursued, (though more, it seems,
Inflam'd with lust than rage,) and, swifter far,
Me overtook his mother all dismay'd,
And in embraces forcible and foul
Engendering with me, of that rape begot
These yelling monsters, that with ceaseless cry
Surround me, as thou saw'st, hourly conceiv'd
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me; for, when they list, into the womb
That bred them they return, and howl and gnaw
My bowels, their repast; then bursting forth
Afresh with conscious terrors vex me round,
That rest or intermission none I find.

Before mine eyes in opposition sits
Grim Death, my son and foe; who sets them on,
And me his parent would full soon devour
For want of other prey, but that he knows
His end with mine involv'd; and knows that I
Should prove a bitter morsel, and his bane,
Whenever that shall be; so Fate pronounc'd.
But thou, O father, I forewarn thee, shun
His deadly arrow; neither vainly hope
To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
Though temper'd heavenly; for that mortal dint,
Save he who reigns above, none can resist."

She finish'd; and the subtle fiend his lore
Soon learn'd, now milder, and thus answer'd smooth.

"Dear daughter, since thou claim'st me for thy sire,
And my fair son here show'st me, the dear pledge
Of dalliance had with thee in Heaven, and joys

Then sweet, now sad to mention, through dire change
 Befall'n us, unforeseen, unthought of; know,
 I come no enemy, but to set free
 From out this dark and dismal house of pain
 Both him and thee, and all the heavenly host
 Of spirits, that, in our just pretences arm'd,
 Fell with us from on high: from them I go
 This uncouth errand sole; and one for all
 Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
 The unsounded deep, and through the void immense
 To search with wondering quest a place foretold
 Should be, and, by concurring signs, ere now
 Created vast and round, a place of bliss
 In the pourlieus of Heaven, and therein plac'd
 A race of upstart creatures, to supply
 Perhaps our vacant room; though more remov'd,
 Lest Heaven, surcharg'd with potent multitude,
 Might hap to move new broils. Be this or aught
 Than this more secret now design'd, I haste
 To know; and, this once known, shall soon return,
 And bring ye to the place where thou and Death
 Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
 Wing silently the buxom air, imbalm'd
 With odours: there ye shall be fed and fill'd
 Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey."

He ceas'd, for both seem'd highly pleas'd, and Death

Grinn'd horrible a ghastly smile, to hear
 His famine should he fill'd; and blest his maw
 Destin'd to that good hour: no less rejoic'd
 His mother bad, and thus bespake her sire.
 "The key of this infernal pit by due,
 And by command of Heaven's all-powerful King,
 I keep, by him forbidden to unlock
 These adamant gates; against all force
 Death ready stands to interpose his dart,
 Fearless to be o'ermatch'd by living might.
 But what owe I to his commands above
 Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down
 Into this gloom of Tartarus profound,
 To sit in hateful office here confin'd,
 Inhabitant of Heaven, and heavenly-born,
 Here in perpetual agony and pain,
 With terrors and with clamours compass'd round
 Of mine own brood, that on my bowels feed?
 Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
 My being gav'st me; whom should I obey
 But thee? whom follow? thou wilt bring me soon
 To that new world of light and bliss, among
 The gods who live at ease, where I shall reign
 At thy right hand voluptuous, as beseems
 Thy daughter and thy darling, without end."

Thus saying, from her side the fatal key,
 Sad instrument of all our woe, she took;
 And, towards the gate rolling her bestial train,
 Forthwith the huge portcullis high up drew,
 Which but herself, not all the Stygian powers
 Could once have mov'd; then in the key-hole turns

The intricate wards, and every bolt and bar
 Of massy iron or solid rock with ease
 Unfastens. On a sudden open fly
 With impetuous recoil and jarring sound
 The infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
 Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook
 Of Erebus. She open'd, but to shut
 Excell'd her power; the gates wide open stood,
 That with extended wings a banner'd host,
 Under spread ensigns marching, might pass through
 With horse and chariots rank'd in loose array;

So wide they stood, and like a furnace mouth
 Cast forth redounding smoke and ruddy flame.
 Before their eyes in sudden view appear
 The secrets of the hoary deep; a dark
 Illimitable ocean, without bound,
 Without dimension, where length, breadth, and height,

And time, and place, are lost; where eldest Night
 And Chaos, ancestors of Nature, hold
 Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise
 Of endless wars, and by confusion stand.
 For Hot, Cold, Moist, and Dry, four champions
 fierce,

Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring
 Their embryon atoms; they around the flag
 Of each his faction, in their several clans,
 Light-arm'd or heavy, sharp, smooth, swift, or slow,
 Swarm populous, unnumber'd as the sands
 Of Barca or Cyrene's torrid soil,
 Levied to side with warring winds, and poise
 Their lighter wings. To whom these most adhere,
 He rules a moment: Chaos umpire sits,
 And by decision more embroils the fray,
 By which he reigns: next him high arbiter
 Chance governs all. Into this wild abyss,
 The womb of Nature, and perhaps her grave,
 Of neither sea, nor shore, nor air, nor fire,
 But all these in their pregnant causes mix'd
 Confus'dly, and which thus must ever fight,
 Unless the Almighty Maker them ordain
 His dark materials to create more worlds;
 Into this wild abyss the wary fiend
 Stood on the brink of Hell, and look'd a while,
 Pondering his voyage: for no narrow frith
 He had to cross. Nor was his ear less peal'd
 With noises loud and ruinous, (to compare
 Great things with small,) than when Bellona storms,
 With all her battering engines bent to rase
 Some capital city; or less than if this frame
 Of Heaven were falling, and these elements
 In mutiny had from her axle torn
 The stedfast Earth. At last his sail-broad vans
 He spreads for flight, and in the surging smoke
 Uplifted spurns the ground; thence many a league.
 As in a cloudy chair, ascending rides
 Audacious; but, that seat soon failing, meets
 A vast vacuity: all unawares
 Fluttering his pennons vain, plumb down he drops
 Ten thousand fathom deep; and to this hour
 Down had been falling, had not by ill chance
 The strong rebuff of some tumultuous cloud,
 Instinct with fire and nitre, hurried him
 As many miles aloft: that fury staid,
 Quench'd in a boggy Syrtis, neither sea,
 Nor good dry land: nigh founder'd on he fares,
 Treading the crude consistence, half on foot,
 Half flying; behoves him now both oar and sail.
 As when a gryphon, through the wilderness
 With winged course, o'er hill or moory dale,
 Pursues the Arimaspean, who by stealth
 Had from his wakeful custody purloin'd
 The guarded gold: so eagerly the fiend
 O'er bog, or steep, through strait, rough, dense or rare,

With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues his way,
 And swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies;
 At length a universal hubbub wild
 Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd,
 Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
 With loudest vehemence: thither he plies;

Undaunted to meet there whatever power
Or spirit of the nethermost abyss
Might in that noise reside, of whom to ask
Which way the nearest coast of darkness lies Bordering on light; when straight behold the throne

Of Chaos, and his dark pavilion spread
Wide on the wasteful deep: with him entron'd
Sat sable-vested Night, eldest of things,
The consort of his reign; and by them stood
Orus and Ades, and the dreaded name
Of Demogorgon! Rumour next and Chance,
And Tumult and Confusion all embroil'd,
And Discord with a thousand various mouths.
To whom Satan turning boldly, thus: "Ye powers
And spirits of this nethermost abyss,
Chaos and ancient Night, I come no spy,
With purpose to explore or to disturb
The secrets of your realm; but, by constraint
Wandering this darksome desert, as my way
Lies through your spacious empire up to light,
Alone, and without guide, half lost, I seek
What readiest path leads where your gloomy bounds
Confine with Heaven; or if some other place,
From your dominion won, the ethereal King
Possesses lately, thither to arrive
I travel this profound; direct my course;
Directed, no mean recompense it brings
To your behoof, if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expell'd, reduce
To her original darkness, and your sway,
'Which is my present journey) and once more
Erect the standard there of ancient Night:
Yours be the advantage all, mine the revenge."

Thus Satan; and him thus the Anarch old,
With faltering speech and visage incompas'd,
Answer'd. "I know thee, stranger, who thou art,
That mighty leading angel, who of late
Made head against Heaven's King, though overthrown.

I saw and heard: for such a numerous host
Fled not in silence through the frighted deep,
With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
Confusion worse confounded; and Heaven-gates
Pour'd out by millions her victorious bands
Pursuing. I upon my frontiers here
Keep residence: if all I can will serve
That little which is left so to defend,
Encroach'd on still through your intestine broils
Weakening the sceptre of old Night: first Hell,
Your dungeon, stretching far and wide beneath;
Now lately Heaven and Earth, another world,
Hung o'er my realm, link'd in a golden chain
To that side Heaven from whence your legions fell:

If that way be your walk, you have not far;
So much the nearer danger; go, and speed;
Havoc, and spoil, and ruin, are my gain."

He cess'd; and Satan staid not to reply,
But glad that now his sea should find a shore,
With fresh alacrity, and force renew'd,
Rings upward, like a pyramid of fire,
Into the wild expanse, and, through the shock
Of fighting elements, on all sides round
Environ'd, wins his way; harder beset
And more endanger'd, than when Argo pass'd
Through Bosphorus, betwixt the jutting rocks!
Or when Ulysses on the larboard shunn'd
Charybdis, and by the other whirlpool steer'd.
So he with difficulty and labour hard

Mov'd on, with difficulty and labour he;
But, he once past, soon after, when man fell,
Strange alteration! Sin and Death amain
Following his track, such was the will of Heaven,
Pav'd after him a broad and beaten way
Over the dark abyss, whose boiling gulf
Tamely endur'd a bridge of wondrous length,
From Hell continued reaching the utmost orb
Of this frail world; by which the spirits perverse
With easy intercourse pass to and fro
To tempt or punish mortals, except whom
God, and good angels, guard by special grace.
But now at last the sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of Heaven
Shoots far into the bosom of dim Night
A glimmering dawn: here Nature first begins
Her farthest verge, and Chaos to retire
As from her outmost works a broken foe
With tumult less, and with less hostile din,
That Satan with less toil, and now with ease
Wafts on the calmer wave by dubious light,
And, like a weather-beaten vessel, holds
Gladly the port through shrouds and tackle torn;
Or in the emptier waste, resembling air,
Weighs his spread wings, at leisure to behold
Far off the empyreal Heaven, extended wide
In circuit, undetermin'd square or round,
With opal towers and battlements adorn'd
Of living sapphire, once his native seat;
And fast by, hanging in a golden chain,
This pendant world, in bigness as a star
Of smallest magnitude close by the Moon.
Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a cursed hour he hies.

Book III.

The Argument.

God, sitting on his throne, sees Satan flying towards this world, then newly created: shows him to the Son, who sat at his right hand;
foretels the success of Satan in perverting mankind, clears his own justice and wisdom from all imputation, having created Man free, and able enough to have withstood his tempter;
yet declares his purpose of grace towards him,
in regard he fell not of his own malice, as did Satan, but by him seduced. The Son of God renders praises to his Father for the manifestation of his gracious purpose towards Man:
but God again declares, that grace cannot be extended towards Man without the satisfaction of divine justice: Man hath offended the majesty of God by aspiring to godhead, and therefore, with all his progeny, devoted to death, must die, unless some can be found sufficient to answer for his offence, and undergo his punishment. The Son of God freely offers himself a ransom for Man: the Father accepts him, ordains his incarnation, pronounces his exaltation above all names in Heaven and Earth; commands all the angels to adore him: They obey, and hymning to their harps in full quire, celebrate the Father and the Son. Meanwhile Satan alights upon the bare convex of this world's outermost orb; where wandering, he first finds a place, since called the Limbo of Vanity: what persons and things fly up thither: thence comes to the gate of Heaven, described ascending by stairs, and the waters above the firmament that flow about it: his passage thence to the orb of the Sun; he finds there Uriel, the regent of that orb, but first changes himself into the shape of a meaner angel; and, pretending a zealous desire to behold the new creation, and Man whom God had placed here, inquires of him the place of his habitation, and is directed: alights first on mount Niphates.

HAIL, holy Light, offspring of Heaven, first-born,
Or of the Eternal coeternal beam
May I express thee unblam'd? since God is light,
And never but in unapproach'd light
Dwelt from eternity, dwelt then in thee,
Bright effluence of bright essence increate.
Or hear'st thou rather, pure ethereal stream,
Whose fountain who shall tell? Before the Sun,
Before the Heavens thou wert, and at the voice
Of God, as with a mantle, didst invest
The rising world of waters dark and deep,
Won from the void and formless infinite.
Thee I revisit now with bolder wing,
Escap'd the Stygian pool, though long detain'd
In that obscure sojourn, while in my flight
Through utter and through middle darkness borne,
With other notes than to the Orphéan lyre,
I sung of Chaos and eternal Night;
Taught by the heavenly Muse to venture down
The dark descent, and up to re-ascend,
Though hard and rare: thee I revisit safe,
And feel thy sovran vital lamp; but thou
Revisit'st not these eyes, that roll in vain
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn;
So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veil'd. Yet not the more
Cease I to wander, where the Muses haunt
Clear spring, or shady grove, or sunny hill,
Smit with the love of sacred song; but chief
Thee, Sion, and the flowery brooks beneath,
That wash thy hallow'd feet, and warbling flow,
Nightly I visit: nor sometimes forget
Those other two equall'd with me in fate,
So were I equall'd with them in renown,
Blind Thamyras, and blind Mæonides,
And Tiresias, and Phineus, prophets old:
Then feed on thoughts, that voluntary move
Harmonious numbers; as the wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and in shadiest covert hid
Tunes her nocturnal note. Thus with the year
Seasons return; but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of even or morn,
Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose,
Or flocks, or herds, or human face divine;
But cloud instead, and ever-during dark
Surrounds me, from the cheerful ways of men
Cut off, and for the book of knowledge fair
Presented with a universal blank
Of Nature's works to me expung'd and ras'd,
And wisdom at one entrance quite shut out.
So much the rather thou, celestial Light,
Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers
Irradiate; there plant eyes, all mist from thence Purge and disperse, that I may see and tell
Of things invisible to mortal sight.

Now had the Almighty Father from above,
From the pure empyrean where he sits
High thron'd above all height, bent down his eye
His own works and their works at once to view:

About him all the sanctities of Heaven
Stood thick as stars, and from his sight received
Beatitude past utterance; on his right
The radiant image of his glory sat,
His only Son; on Earth he first beheld
Our two first parents, yet the only two
Of mankind, in the happy garden plac'd,
Reaping immortal fruits of joy and love,
Uninterrupted joy, unrivall'd love,
In blissful solitude; he then survey'd
Hell and the gulf between, and Satan there
Coasting the wall of Heaven on this side Night
In the dun air sublime, and ready now
To stoop with wearied wings, and willing feet,
On the bare outside of this world, that seem'd
Firm land imbosom'd without firmament,
Uncertain which, in ocean or in air.
Him God beholding from his prospect high,
Wherein past, present, future, he beholds,
Thus to his only Son foreseeing spake.

"Only begotten Son, seest thou what rage
Transports our adversary? whom no bounds
Prescrib'd, no bars of Hell, nor all the chains
Heap'd on him there, nor yet the main abyss
Wide interrupt, can hold; so bent he seems
On desperate revenge, that shall redound
Upon his own rebellious head. And now,
Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way
Not far off Heaven, in the precincts of light,
Directly towards the new-created world,
And Man there plac'd, with purpose to assay
If him by force he can destroy, or, worse,
By some false guile pervert; and shall pervert;
For Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress the sole command,
Sole pledge of his obedience: so will fall
He and his faithless progeny. Whose fault?
Whose but his own? Ingrate, he had of me
All he could have; I made him just and right,
Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall.
Such I created all the ethereal powers
And spirits, both them who stood, and them who fail'd;

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell.
Not free, what proof could they have given sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do appear'd,
Not what they would? what praise could they receive?

What pleasure I from such obedience paid,
When will and reason (reason also is choice)
Useless and vain, of freedom both despoil'd,
Made passive both, had serv'd necessity,
Not me? They therefore, as to right belong'd,
So were created, nor can justly accuse
Their maker, or their making, or their fate,
As if predestination over-rul'd
Their will, dispos'd by absolute decree
Or high foreknowledge; they themselves decreed
Their own revolt, not I; if I foreknew,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown.
So without least impulse or shadow of fate,
Or aught by me immutably foreseen,
They trespass, authors to themselves in all
Both what they judge, and what they choose;
for so

I form'd them free: and free they must remain,
Till they enthrall themselves; I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree

Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
 Their freedom ; they themselves ordain'd their fall.
 The first sort by their own suggestion fell,
 Self-tempted, self-deprav'd : Man falls, deceiv'd
 By the other first : Man therefore shall find grace,
 The other none : in mercy and justice both,
 Through Heaven and Earth, so shall my glory excel :

But mercy, first and last, shall brightest shine."

Thus while God spake, ambrosial fragrance
 fill'd

All Heaven, and in the blessed spirits elect
 Sense of new joy ineffable diffus'd.
 Beyond compare the Son of God was seen
 Most glorious : in him all his Father shone
 Substantially express'd ; and in his face
 Divine compassion visibly appear'd,
 Love without end, and without measure grace,
 Which uttering, thus he to his Father spake :

" O, Father, gracious was that word which clos'd
 Thy sovran sentence, that Man should find grace ;
 For which both Heaven and Earth shall high extol
 Thy praises, with the innumerable sound
 Of hymns and sacred songs, wherewith thy throne
 Encompass'd shall resound thee ever blest.

For should man finally be lost, should man,
 Thy creature late so lov'd, thy youngest son,
 Fall circumvented thus by fraud, though join'd
 With his own folly ? That he from thee far,
 That far be from thee, Father, who art judge
 Of all things made, and judgest only right.

Or shall the adversary thus obtain
 His end, and frustrate thine ; shall he fulfil
 His malice, and thy goodness bring to nought,
 Or proud return, though to his heavier doom,
 Yet with revenge accomplish'd, and to Hell
 Draw after him the whole race of mankind,
 By him corrupted ? or wilt thou thyself
 Undo thy creation, and unmake
 From him, what for thy glory thou hast made ?
 Should thy goodness and thy greatness both
 Be question'd and blasphem'd without defence."

To whom the great Creator thus replied.
 " O Son, in whom my soul hath chief delight,
 Son of my bosom, Son who art alone
 My word, my wisdom, and effectual might,
 Hast thou spoken as my thoughts are, all
 A my eternal purpose hath decreed.

Man shall not quite be lost, but sav'd who will ;
 Yet not of will in him, but grace in me
 Freely vouchsaf'd ; once more I will renew
 His lapsed powers, though forfeit, and enthrall'd
 By sin to foul exorbitant desires ;
 Yield by me, yet once more he shall stand
 On even ground against his mortal foe ;
 By me upheld, that he may know how frail
 His fall'n condition is, and to me owe
 All his deliverance, and to none but me.

Since I have chosen of peculiar grace,
 Erect above the rest ; so is my will :
 The rest shall hear me call, and oft be warn'd
 Their sinful state, and to appease betimes
 The incensed Deity, while offer'd grace
 Invites ; for I will clear their senses dark,
 What may suffice, and soften stony hearts
 To pray, repent, and bring obedience due.
 To prayer, repentance, and obedience due,
 Though but endeavour'd with sincere intent,
 Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut.
 And I will place within them as a guide,

My umpire, Conscience ; whom if they will hear,
 Light after light, well us'd they shall attain,
 And to the end, persisting, safe arrive.
 This my long sufferance, and my day of grace,
 They who neglect and scorn, shall never taste ;
 But hard be harden'd, blind be blinded more,
 That they may stumble on, and deeper fall ;
 And none but such from mercy I exclude.

But yet all is not done ; Man disobeying,
 Disloyal, breaks his fealty, and sins
 Against the high supremacy of Heaven,
 Affecting god-head, and, so losing all,
 To expiate his treason hath nought left,
 But to destruction sacred and devote,
 He, with his whole posterity, must die,
 Die he or justice must ; unless for him
 Some other able, and as willing, pay
 The rigid satisfaction, death for death.
 Say, heavenly powers, where shall we find such love ?

Which of ye will be mortal, to redeem
 Man's mortal crime, and just the unjust to save ?
 Dwells in all Heaven charity so dear ?"

He ask'd, but all the heavenly quire stood mute,
 And silence was in Heaven : on man's behalf
 Patron or intercessor none appear'd,
 Much less that durst upon his own head draw
 The deadly forfeiture, and ransom set.
 And now without redemption all mankind
 Must have been lost, adjudg'd to Death and Hell
 By doom severe, had not the Son of God,
 In whom the fulness dwells of love divine,
 His dearest mediation thus renew'd.

" Father, thy word is past, Man shall find grace ;
 And shall grace not find means, that finds her way
 The speediest of thy winged messengers,
 To visit all thy creatures, and to all
 Comes unprevented, unimplor'd, unsought ?
 Happy for Man, so coming ; he her aid
 Can never seek, once dead in sins, and lost ;
 Atonement for himself, or offering meet,
 Indebted and undone, hath none to bring :
 Behold me then ; me for him, life for life
 I offer ; on me let thine anger fall ;
 Account me Man ; I for his sake will leave
 Thy bosom, and this glory next to thee
 Freely put off, and for him lastly die
 Well pleas'd ; on me let Death wreak all his rage ;
 Under his gloomy power I shall not long
 Lie vanquish'd ; thou hast given me to possess
 Life in myself for ever ; by thee I live,
 Though now to Death I yield, and am his due.
 All that of me can die : yet, that debt paid,
 Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave
 His prey, nor suffer my unspotted soul
 For ever with corruption there to dwell ;
 But I shall rise victorious, and subdue
 My vanquisher, spoil'd of his vaunted spoil ;
 Death his death's wound shall then receive, and stoop

Inglorious, of his mortal sting disarm'd.
 I through the ample air in triumph high
 Shall lead Hell captive, maugre Hell, and show
 The powers of darkness bound. Thou, at the sight

Pleas'd, out of Heaven shalt look down and smile,
 While, by thee rais'd, I ruin all my foes,
 Death last, and with his carcass glut the grave :
 Then, with the multitude of my redeem'd,
 Shall enter Heaven, long absent, and return,

Father, to see thy face, wherein no cloud
Of anger shall remain, but peace assur'd
And reconcilment; wrath shall be no more
Thenceforth, but in thy presence joy entire."

His words here ended, but his meek aspect
Silent yet spake, and breath'd immortal love
To mortal men, above which only shone
Filial obedience: as a sacrifice
Glad to be offer'd, he attends the will
Of his great Father. Admiration seiz'd
All Heaven, what this might mean, and whither tend,

Wondering; but soon the Almighty thus replied.

"O thou in Heaven and Earth the only peace
Found out for mankind under wrath! O thou
My sole complacence! well thou know'st how dear
To me are all my works, nor Man the least,
Though last created; that for him I spare
Thee from my bosom and right hand to save,
By losing thee awhile, the whole race lost.
Thou, therefore, whom thou only canst redeem,
Their nature also to thy nature join;
And be thyself man among men on Earth,
Made flesh, when time shall be, of virgin seed,
By wonderous birth: be thou in Adam's room
The head of all mankind, though Adam's son.
As in him perish all men, so in thee,
As from a second root, shall be restor'd
As many as are restor'd, without thee none.
His crime makes guilty all his sons; thy merit,
Imputed, shall absolve them who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds,
And live in thee transplanted, and from thee
Receive new light. So man, as is most just,
Shall satisfy for man, be judg'd and die,
And dying rise, and rising with him raise
His brethren, ransom'd with his own dear life.
So heavenly love shall outdo hellish hate,
Giving to death, and dying to redeem,
So dearly to redeem what hellish hate
So easily destroy'd, and still destroys
In those who, when they may, accept not grace.
Nor shalt thou, by descending to assume
Man's nature, lessen or degrade thine own.
Because thou hast, though thron'd in highest bliss
Equal to God, and equally enjoying
God-like fruition, quitted all, to save
A world from utter loss, and hast been found
By merit more than birthright Son of God,
Found worthiest to be so by being good,
Far more than great or high; because in thee
Love hath abounded more than glory abounds,
Therefore thy humiliation shall exalt
With thee thy manhood also to this throne;
Here shalt thou sit incarnate, here shalt reign
Both God and Man, Son both of God and Man,
Anointed universal King; all power
I give thee; reign for ever, and assume
Thy merits; under thee, as head supreme,
Thrones, principdoms, powers, dominions, I reduce:
All knees to thee shall bow, of them that bide
In Heaven, or Earth, or under Earth in Hell.
When thou, attended gloriously from Heaven,
Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send
The summoning arch-angels to proclaim
Thy dread tribunal: forthwith from all winds
The living, and forthwith the cited dead
Of all past ages, to the general doom
Shall hasten; such a peel shall rouse their sleep.
Then, all thy saints assembled, thou shalt judge

Bad men and angels; they, arraign'd, shall sink
Beneath thy sentence; Hell, her numbers full,
Thenceforth shall be for ever shut. Meanwhile
The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
New Heaven and Earth, wherein the just shall dwell,

And after all their tribulations long,
See golden days, fruitful of golden deeds,
With joy and love triumphing, and fair truth.
Then thou thy regal sceptre shalt lay by,
For regal sceptre then no more shall need,
God shall be all in all. But, all ye gods,
Adore him, who to compass all this dies,
Adore the Son, and honour him as me."

No sooner had the Almighty ceas'd, but all
The multitude of angels, with a shout
Loud as from numbers without number, sweet
As from blest voices, uttering joy, Heaven rung
With jubilee, and loud Hosannas fill'd
The eternal regions: lowly reverent
Towards either throne they bow, and to the ground
With solemn adoration down they cast
Their crowns inwove with amarant and gold;
Immortal amarant, a flower which once
In Paradise, fast by the tree of life,
Began to bloom; but soon for man's offence
To Heaven remov'd where first it grew, there grows,
And flowers aloft shading the fount of life,
And where the river of bliss through midst of Heaven

Rolls o'er Elysian flowers her amber stream.
With these that never fade the spirits elect
Bind their resplendent locks inwreath'd with beams;
Now in loose garlands thick thrown off, the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,
Impurpled with celestial roses smil'd.
Then, crown'd again, their golden harps they took,
Harps ever tun'd, that glittering by their side
Like quivers hung, and with preamble sweet
Of charming symphony they introduce
Their sacred song, and waken raptures high;
No voice exempt, no voice but well could join
Melodious part, such concord is in Heaven.

Thee, Father, first they sung Omnipotent,
Immutable, Immortal, Infinite,
Eternal King; thee Author of all being,
Fountain of light, thyself invisible
Amidst the glorious brightness where thou sitst
Thron'd inaccessible, but when thou shad'st
The full blaze of thy beams, and, through a cloud
Drawn round about thee like a radiant shrine,
Dark with excessive bright thy skirts appear,
Yet dazzle Heaven, that brightest seraphim
Approach not, but with both wings veil their eyes.
Thee next they sang of all creation first,
Begotten Son, Divine Similitude,
In whose conspicuous countenance, without cloud
Made visible, the Almighty Father shines,
Whom else no creature can behold; on thee
Impress'd the effulgence of his glory abides,
Transfus'd on thee his ample Spirit rests.
He Heaven of Heavens and all the powers therein
By thee created; and by thee threw down
The aspiring dominations: thou that day
Thy Father's dreadful thunder didst not spare,
Nor stop thy flaming chariot-wheels, that shook
Heaven's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks
Thou drov'st of warring angels disarray'd.
Back from pursuit thy powers with loud acclaim
Thee only extoll'd, Son of thy Father's might,

To execute fierce vengeance on his foes;
 Not so on Man: him, through their malice fall'n,
 Father of mercy and grace, thou didst not doom
 So strictly, but much more to pity incline:
 No sooner did thy dear and only Son
 Perceive thee purpos'd not to doom frail Man
 So strictly, but much more to pity inclin'd,
 He to appease thy wrath, and end the strife
 Of mercy and justice in thy face discern'd,
 Regardless of the bliss wherein he sat
 Second to thee, offer'd himself to die
 For Man's offence. O unexampled love,
 Love no where to be found less than Divine!
 Hail, Son of God, Saviour of Men! Thy name
 Shall be the copious matter of my song
 Henceforth, and never shall my harp thy praise
 Forget, nor from thy Father's praise disjoin.

Thus they in Heaven, above the starry sphere,
 Their happy hours in joy and hymning spent.
 Meanwhile upon the firm opacous globe
 Of this round world, whose first convex divides
 The luminous inferior orbs, enclos'd
 From Chaos, and the inroad of Darkness old,
 Satan alighted walks: a globe far off
 It seem'd, now seems a boundless continent
 Dark, waste, and wild, under the frown of Night
 Starless expos'd, and ever-threatening storms
 Of Chaos blustering round, inclement sky;
 Save on that side which from the wall of Heaven,
 Though distant far, some small reflection gains
 Of glimmering air, less vex'd with tempest loud:
 Here walk'd the fiend at large in spacious field.
 As when a vulture on Imaus bred,
 Whose snowy ridge the roving Tartar bounds,
 Dislodging from a region scarce of prey,
 To gorge the flesh of lambs or yearling kids,
 On hills where flocks are fed, flies toward the springs

Of Ganges or Hydaspes, Indian streams;
 But in his way lights on the barren plains
 Of Sericana, where Chineses drive
 With sails and wind their cany waggons light:
 So, on this windy sea of land, the fiend
 Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey;
 None, for other creature in this place,
 Living or lifeless, to be found was none,
 None yet, but store hereafter from the Earth
 To higher like aerial vapours flew
 Of all things transitory and vain, when sin
 With vanity had fill'd the works of men;
 Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
 Built their fond hopes of glory or lasting fame,
 Of happiness in this or the other life;
 All who have their reward on Earth, the fruits
 Of painful superstition and blind zeal,
 Night seeking but the praise of men, here find
 Full retribution, empty as their deeds;
 All the unaccomplish'd works of Nature's hand,
 Abusive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd,
 Devolv'd on Earth, fleet hither, and in vain,
 Till final dissolution, wander here;
 Not in the neighbouring Moon, as some have dream'd;

Those argent fields more likely habitants,
 Translated minds, or middle spirits hold
 Betwixt the angelical and human kind.
 Father of ill-join'd sons and daughters born
 First from the ancient world those giants came
 With many a vain exploit, though then renown'd:
 The builders next of Babel on the plain

Of Sennaar, and still with vain design
 New Babels, had they wherewithal, would build:
 Others came single; he, who to be deem'd
 A god, leap'd fondly into Ætna flames,
 Empedocles; and he, who to enjoy
 Plato's Elysium, leap'd into the sea,
 Cleombrotus; and many more too long,
 Embryos and idiots, eremites and friars
 White, black, and gray, with all their trumpery.
 Here pilgrims roam, that stray'd so far to seek
 In Golgotha him dead, who lives in Heaven;
 And they, who to be sure of Paradise,
 Dying, put on the weeds of Dominic,
 Or in Franciscan think to pass disguis'd;
 They pass the planets seven, and pass the fix'd,
 And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs
 The trepidation talk'd, and that first mov'd
 And now Saint Peter at Heaven's wicket seems
 To wait them with his keys, and now at foot;
 Of Heaven's ascent they lift their feet, when lo
 A violent cross wind from either coast
 Blows them transverse, ten thousand leagues awry
 Into the devious air: then might ye see
 Cowls, hoods, and habits, with their wearers, tost
 And flutter'd into rags; then reliques, beads,
 Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
 The sport of winds: all these, upwhirl'd aloft,
 Fly o'er the backside of the world far off,
 Into a Limbo large and broad, since call'd
 The Paradise of Fools, to few unknown
 Long after, now unpeopled and untrod.
 All this dark globe the fiend found as he pass'd,
 And long he wander'd, till at last a gleam
 Of dawning light turn'd thither-ward in haste
 His travell'd steps: far distant he descries
 Ascending by degrees magnificent
 Up to the wall of Heaven a structure high;
 At top whereof, but far more rich appear'd
 The work as of a kingly palace-gate,
 With frontispiece of diamond and gold
 Embellish'd; thick with sparkling orient gems
 The portal shone, inimitable on Earth
 By model, or by shading pencil, drawn.
 The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw
 Angels ascending and descending, bands
 Of guardians bright, when he from Esau fled
 To Padan-Aram, in the field of Luz
 Dreaming by night under the open sky,
 And waking cried, "This is the gate of Heaven."
 Each stair mysteriously was meant, nor stood
 There always, but drawn up to Heaven sometimes
 Viewless; and underneath a bright sea flow'd
 Of jasper, or of liquid pearl, whereon
 Who after came from Earth, sailing arriv'd,
 Wafted by angels, or flew o'er the lake
 Rapt in a chariot drawn by fiery steeds.
 The stairs were then let down, whether to dare
 The fiend by easy ascent, or aggravate
 His sad exclusion from the doors of bliss:
 Direct against which open'd from beneath,
 Just o'er the blissful seat of Paradise,
 A passage down to the Earth, a passage wide,
 Wider by far than that of after-times
 Over mount Sion, and, though that were large,
 Over the Promis'd Land, to God so dear;
 By which, to visit oft those happy tribes,
 On high behests his angels to and fro
 Pass'd frequent, and his eye with choice regard
 From Parnass, the fount of Jordan's flood,
 To Beersaba, where the Holy Land

Borders on Egypt and the Arabian shore ;
 So wide the opening seem'd, where bounds were set
 To darkness, such as bound the ocean wave.
 Satan from hence, now on the lower stair,
 That scal'd by steps of gold to Heaven-gate,
 Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
 Of all this world at once. As when a scout,
 Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
 All night, at last by break of cheerful dawn
 Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill,
 Which to 'is eye discovers unaware
 The goodly prospect of some foreign land
 First seen, or some renown'd metropolis
 With glistering spires and pinnacles adorn'd,
 Which now the rising Sun gilds with his beams :
 Such wonder seiz'd, though after Heaven seen,
 The spirit malign, but much more envy seiz'd,
 At sight of all this world beheld so fair.
 Round he surveys (and well might, where he stood
 So high above the circling canopy
 Of night's extended shade) from eastern point
 Of Libra to the fleecy star that bears
 Andromeda far off Atlantic seas
 Beyond the horizon ; then from pole to pole
 He views in breadth, and without longer pause
 Down right into the world's first region throws
 His flight precipitant, and winds with ease
 Through the pure marble air his oblique way
 Amongst innumerable stars, that shone
 Stars distant, but nigh hand seem'd other worlds ;
 Or other worlds they seem'd, or happy isles,
 Like those Hesperian gardens fam'd of old,
 Fortunate fields, and groves, and flowery vales,
 Thrice happy isles ; but who dwelt happy there
 He staid not to inquire : above them all
 The golden Sun, in splendour likest Heaven,
 Allur'd his eye ; thither his course he bends
 Through the calm firmament, (but up or down,
 By centre or eccentric, hard to tell,
 Or longitude,) where the great luminary
 Aloof the vulgar constellations thick,
 That from his lordly eye keep distance due,
 Dispenses light from far ; they, as they move
 Their starry dance in numbers that compute
 Days, months and years, towards his all-cheering lamp

Turn swift their various motions, or are turn'd
 By his magnetic beam, that gently warms
 The universe, and to each inward part
 With gentle penetration, though unseen,
 Shoots invisible virtue even to the deep ;
 So wonderously was set his station bright.
 There lands the fiend, a spot like which perhaps Astronomer in the Sun's lucent orb
 Through his glaz'd optic tube yet never saw.
 The place he found beyond expression bright,
 Compar'd with aught on Earth, metal or stone ;
 Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
 With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire ;
 If metal, part seem'd gold, part silver clear ;
 If stone, carbuncle most or chrysolite,
 Ruby or topaz, to the twelve that shone
 In Aaron's breast-plate, and a stone besides
 Imagin'd rather oft than elsewhere seen,
 That stone, or like to that, which here below
 Philosophers in vain so long have sought,
 In vain, though by their powerful art they bind
 Volatile Hermes, and call up unbound
 In various shapes old Proteus from the sea,
 Drain'd through a limbeck to his native form.

What wonder then if fields and regions here
 Breathe forth elixir pure, and rivers run
 Potable gold, when with one virtuous touch
 The arch-chymic Sun, so far from us remote,
 Produces, with terrestrial humour mix'd,
 Here in the dark so many precious things
 Of colour glorious, and effect so rare ?
 Here matter new to gaze the Devil met
 Undazzled ; far and wide his eye commands ;
 For sight no obstacle found here, nor shade,
 But all sun-shine, as when his beams at noon
 Culminate from the equator, as they now
 Shot upward still direct, whence no way round
 Shadow from body opaque can fall : and the air,
 No where so clear, sharpen'd his visual ray
 To objects distant far, whereby he soon
 Saw within ken a glorious angel stand,
 The same whom John saw also in the Sun :
 His back was turn'd, but not his brightness hid ;
 Of beaming sunny rays a golden tiar
 Circled his head, nor less his locks behind
 Illustrious on his shoulders, fledge with wings,
 Lay waving round ; on some great charge employ'd
 He seem'd, or fix'd in cogitation deep.
 Glad was the spirit impure, as now in hope
 To find who might direct his wandering flight
 To Paradise, the happy seat of Man,
 His journey's end and our beginning woe.
 But first he casts to change his proper shape,
 Which else might work him danger or delay :
 And now a stripling cherub he appears,
 Not of the prime, yet such as in his face
 Youth smil'd celestial, and to every limb
 Suitable grace diffus'd, so well he feign'd :
 Under a coronet his flowing hair
 In curls on either cheek play'd ; wings he wore,
 Of many a colour'd plume, sprinkled with gold ;
 His habit fit for speed succinct, and held
 Before his decent steps a silver wand.
 He drew not nigh unheard ; the angel bright,
 Ere he drew nigh, his radiant visage turn'd,
 Admonish'd by his ear, and straight was known
 The arch-angel Uriel, one of the seven
 Who in God's presence, nearest to his throne,
 Stand ready at command, and are his eyes
 That run through all the Heavens, or down to the Earth

Bear his swift errands over moist and dry,
 O'er sea and land : him Satan thus accosts.

“ Uriel, for thou of those seven spirits that stand
 In sight of God's high throne, gloriously bright,
 The first art wont his great authentic will Interpreter through highest Heaven to bring,
 Where all his sons thy embassy attend ;
 And here art likeliest by supreme decree
 Like honour to obtain, and as his eye
 To visit oft this new creation round ;
 Unspeakable desire to see, and know
 All these his wonderous works, but chiefly Man,
 His chief delight and favour, him for whom
 All these his works so wonderous he ordain'd,
 Hath brought me from the quires of cherubim
 Alone thus wandering. Brightest seraph, tell
 In which of all these shining orbs hath Man
 His fixed seat, or fixed seat hath none,
 But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell ;
 That I may find him, and with secret gaze
 Or open admiration him behold,
 On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd
 Worlds, and on whom hath all these graces pour'd ;

That both in him and all things, as is meet,
The universal Maker we may praise;
Who justly hath driven out his rebel foes
To deepest Hell, and, to repair that loss,
Created this new happy race of Men
To serve him better: wise are all his ways.'

So spake the false dissembler unperceiv'd;
For neither man nor angel can discern
Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks
Invisible, except to God alone,
By his permissive will, through Heaven and Earth:
And oft, though wisdom wake, suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Reigns her charge, while goodness thinks no ill
Where no ill seems: which now for once beguil'd
Uriel, though regent of the Sun, and held
The sharpest-sighted spirit of all in Heaven;
Who to the fraudulent impostor foul,
In his uprightness, answer thus return'd.

"Fair angel, thy desire, which tends to know
The works of God, thereby to glorify
The great Work-master, leads to no excess
That reaches blame, but rather merits praise
The more it seems excess, that led thee hither
From thy empyreal mansion thus alone,
To witness with thine eyes what some perhaps,
Contented with report, hear only in Heaven:
For wonderful indeed are all his works.
Pleasant to know, and worthiest to be all
Had in remembrance always with delight;
But what created mind can comprehend
Their number, or the wisdom infinite
That brought them forth, but hid their causes deep?
I saw when at his word the formless mass,
This world's material mould, came to a heap:
Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood rui'd, stood vast infinitude confin'd;
At his second bidding Darkness fled,
Light shone, and order from disorder sprung:
Swift to their several quarters hasted then
The cumbrous elements, earth, flood, air, fire;
And this ethereal quintessence of Heaven
Flew upward, spirited with various forms,
That roll'd orbicular, and turn'd to stars
Numerous, as thou seest, and how they move;
Each had his place appointed, each his course;
The rest in circuit walls this universe.
Look downward on that globe, whose hither side
With light from hence, though but reflected, shines;
That place is Earth, the seat of Man; that light
His day, which else, as the other hemisphere,
Would invade; but there the neighbouring
Moon

Do call that opposite fair star) her aid
Swiftly interposes, and her monthly round
Ending, still renewing, through mid Heaven,
Borrow'd light her countenance triform.
These fills and empties to enlighten th' Earth,
And in her pale dominion checks the night.
That spot, to which I point, is Paradise,
Adam's abode; those lofty shades, his bower.
The way thou canst not miss, me mine requires."
Thus said, he turn'd; and Satan, bowing low,
To superior spirits is wont in Heaven,
Where honour due and reverence none neglects,
To leave, and toward the coast of Earth beneath,
Down from the ecliptic, sped with hop'd success,
Pursues his steep flight in many an aery wheel;
Nor staid, till on Niphates' top he lights.

BOOK IV.

The Argument.

Satan, now in prospect of Eden, and nigh the place where he must now attempt the bold enterprise which he undertook alone against God and Man, falls into many doubts with himself, and many passions, fear, envy, and despair; but at length confirms himself in evil, journeys on to Paradise, whose outward prospect and situation is described; overleaps the bounds; sits in the shape of a cormorant on the tree of life, as highest in the garden, to look about him. The garden described; Satan's first sight of Adam and Eve; his wonder at their excellent form and happy state, but with resolution to work their fall; overhears their discourse, thence gathers that the tree of knowledge was forbidden them to eat of, under penalty of death; and thereon intends to found his temptation, by seducing them to transgress: then leaves them a while to know further of their state by some other means. Meanwhile Uriel descending on a sunbeam warns Gabriel, who had in charge the gate of Paradise, that some evil spirit had escaped the deep, and passed at noon by his sphere in the shape of a good angel down to Paradise, discovered after by his furious gesture in the mount. Gabriel promises to find him ere morning. Night coming on, Adam and Eve discourse of going to their rest: their bower described; their evening worship. Gabriel, drawing forth his bands of night-watch to walk the round of Paradise, appoints two strong angels to Adam's bower, lest the evil spirit should be there doing some harm to Adam or Eve, sleeping; there they find him at the ear of Eve tempting her in a dream, and bring him, though unwilling, to Gabriel; by whom questioned, he scornfully answers; prepares resistance; but, hindered by a sign from Heaven, flies out of Paradise.

O FOR that warning voice, which he, who saw
Th' Apocalypse, heard cry in Heaven aloud,
Then when the Dragon, put to second rout,
Came furious down to be reveng'd on men,
Woe to the inhabitants on Earth! that now,
While time was, our first parents had been warn'd
The coming of their secret foe, and 'scap'd,
Haply so 'scap'd his mortal snare: for now
Satan, now first inflam'd with rage, came down,
The tempter ere the accuser of mankind,
To wreak on innocent frail man his loss
Of that first battle, and his flight to Hell:
Yet, not rejoicing in his speed, though bold
Far off and fearless, nor with cause to boast,
Begins his dire attempt; which nigh the birth
Now rolling boils in his tumultuous breast,
And like a devilish engine back recoils
Upon himself; horror and doubt distract
His troubled thoughts, and from the bottom stir
The Hell within him; for within him Hell
He brings, and round about him, nor from Hell
One step, no more than from himself, can fly
By change of place: now conscience wakes despair,
That slumbered; wakes the bitter memory
Of what he was, what is, and what must be Worse; of worse deeds worse sufferings must ensue.

Sometimes towards Eden, which now in his view

Lay pleasant, his griev'd look he fix'd sad ;
Sometimes towards Heaven, and the full-blazing
Sun,

Which now sat high in his meridian tower :
Then, much revolving, thus in sighs began.

" O thou, that, with surpassing glory crown'd,
Look'st from thy sole dominion like the God
Of this new world ; at whose sight all the stars
Hide their diminish'd heads ; to thee I call,
But with no friendly voice, and add thy name,
O Sun ! to tell thee how I hate thy beams,
That bring to my remembrance from what state
I fell, how glorious once above thy sphere ;
Till pride and worse ambition threw me down,
Warring in Heaven against Heaven's matchless
King :

Ah, wherefore ! he deserv'd no such return
From me, whom he created what I was
In that bright eminence, and with his good
Upbraided none ; nor was his service hard.
What could be less than to afford him praise,
The easiest recompense, and pay him thanks,
How due ! yet all his good prov'd ill in me,
And wrought but malice ; lifted up so high
I 'sdein'd subjection, and thought one step higher
Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
The debt immense of endless gratitude,
So burthensome still paying, still to owe,
Forgetful what from him I still receiv'd ;
And understood not that a grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays, at once
Indebted and discharg'd ; what burthen then ?
O had his powerful destiny ordain'd
Me some inferior angel, I had stood
Then happy ; no unbounded hope had rais'd
Ambition. Yet why not ? some other power
As great might have aspir'd, and me, though mean,
Drawn to his part ; but other powers as great Fell not, but stand unshaken, from within
Or from without, to all temptations arm'd.
Hadst thou the same free will and power to stand ?
Thou hadst : whom hast thou then or what to accuse,

But Heaven's free love dealt equally to all ?
Be then his love accurs'd, since love or hate,
To me alike, it deals eternal woe.
Nay, curs'd be thou ; since against his thy will Chose freely what it now so justly rues.
Me miserable ! which way shall I fly
Infinite wrath, and infinite despair ?
Which way I fly is Hell ; myself am Hell ;
And, in the lowest deep, a lower deep
Still threatening to devour me opens wide,
To which the Hell I suffer seems a Heaven.
O, then, at last relent : is there no place
Left for repentance, none for pardon left ?
None left but by submission ; and that word
Disdain forbids me, and my dread of shame
Among the spirits beneath, whom I seduc'd
With other promises and other vaunts
Than to submit, boasting I could subdue
The Omnipotent. Ay me ! they little know
How dearly I abide that boast so vain.
Under what torments inwardly I groan,
While they adore me on the throne of Hell.
With diadem and sceptre high advanc'd,
The lower still I fall, only supreme
In misery : such joy ambition finds.
But say I could repent, and could obtain,
By act of grace, my former state ; how soon

Would height recal high thoughts, how soon unmy
What feign'd submission swore ? Ease would recast
Vows made in pain, as violent and void.

For never can true reconciliation grow,
Where wounds of deadly hate have pierc'd so deep :
Which would but lead me to a worse relapse
And heavier fall : so should I purchase dear
Short intermission bought with double smart.
This knows my punisher ; therefore as far
From granting he, as I from begging peace :
All hope excluded thus, behold, instead
Of us outcast, exil'd, his new delight,
Mankind created, and for him this world.
So farewell hope, and with hope farewell fear
Farewell remorse : all good to me is lost ;
Evil, be thou my good : by thee at least
Divided empire with Heaven's King I hold,
By thee, and more than half perhaps will reign ;
As Man ere long, and this new world, shall know."

Thus while he spake, each passion dimm'd his face

Thrice chang'd with pale, ire, envy, and despair ;
Which marr'd his borrow'd visage, and betray'd
Him counterfeit, if any eye beheld.
For heavenly minds from such distempers foul
Are ever clear. Whereof he soon aware,
Each perturbation smooth'd with outward calm,
Artificer of fraud ; and was the first
That practis'd falsehood under saintly show,
Deep malice to conceal, couch'd with revenge :
Yet not enough had practis'd to deceive
Uriel once warn'd ; whose eye pursued him down
The way he went, and on the Assyrian mount
Saw him disfigur'd, more than could befall
Spirit of happy sort : his gestures fierce
He mark'd and mad demeanour, then alone,
As he suppos'd, all unobserv'd, unseen.
So on he fares, and to the border comes
Of Eden, where delicious Paradise
Now nearer, crowns with her enclosure green,
As with a rural mound, the champaign head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,
Access denied ; and over-head up grew
Insuperable height of loftiest shade,
Cedar, and pine, and fir, and branching palm,
A sylvan scene ; and, as the ranks ascend
Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Yet higher than their tops
The verdurous wall of Paradise up sprung :
Which to our general sire gave prospect large
Into his nether empire neighbouring round.
And higher than that wall a circling row
Of goodliest trees, loaden with fairest fruit,
Blossoms and fruits at once of golden hue,
Appear'd, with gay enamell'd colours mix'd :
On which the Sun more glad impress'd his beams
Than in fair evening cloud, or humid bow,
When God hath showered the earth ; so level
seem'd

That landscape : and of pure, now purer air
Meets his approach, and to the heart inspires
Vernal delight and joy, able to drive
All sadness but despair : now gentle gales,
Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense
Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole
Those balmy spoils. As when to them who sail
Beyond the Cape of Hope, and now are past
Mozambic, off at sea north-east winds blow
Sabeian odours from the spicy shore

Of Araby the blest ; with such delay [league
Well pleas'd they slack their course, and many a
Cheer'd with the grateful smell old Ocean smiles :
So entertain'd those odorous sweets the fiend,
Who came their bane : though with them better
pleas'd

Than Asmodæus with the fishy fume
That drove him, though enamour'd, from the spouse
Of Tobit's son, and with a vengeance sent
From Media post to Egypt, there fast bound.

Now to the ascent of that steep savage hill
Sam had journey'd on, pensive and slow ;
But further way found none, so thick entwin'd,
As one continued brake, the undergrowth
Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast that pass'd that way.
One gate there only was, and that look'd east
On the other side : which when the arch-felon saw,
Doe entrance he disdain'd ; and, in contempt,
At one slight bound high over-leap'd all bound
Of hill or highest wall, and sheer within Lights on his feet. As when a prowling wolf,
Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey,
Watching where shepherds pen their flocks at eve
In hurdled cotes amid the field secure,
Leaps o'er the fence with ease into the fold :
Or as a thief, bent to unboard the cash
Of some rich burgher, whose substantial doors,
Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assault,
In at the window climbs, or o'er the tiles :
So clomb this first grand thief into God's fold ;
So since into his church lewd hirelings climb.
Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life,
The middle tree and highest there that grew,
Sat like a cormorant ; yet not true life
Thereby regain'd, but sat devising death
To them who liv'd ; nor on the virtue thought
Of that life-giving plant, but only us'd
For prospect, what well us'd had been the pledge
Of immortality. So little knows

Any, but God alone, to value right.
The good before him, but perverts best things
To worst abuse, or to their meanest use.
Beneath him with new wonder now he views,
To all delight of human sense expos'd,
In narrow room, Nature's whole wealth, yea more,
A Heaven on Earth : for blissful Paradise
Of God the garden was, by him in the east
Of Eden planted : Eden stretch'd her line
From Auran eastward to the royal towers
Of great Seleucia, built by Grecian kings,
Where the sons of Eden long before
Dwelt in Telassar : in this pleasant soil
His far more pleasant garden God ordain'd ;
Out of the fertile ground he caus'd to grow
All trees of noblest kind for sight, smell, taste ;
And all amid them stood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold ; and next to life,
Our death, the tree of knowledge, grew fast by,
Knowledge of good, bought dear by knowing ill.
Southward through Eden went a river large,
Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hill
Pass'd underneath ingulf'd ; for God had thrown
That mountain as his garden-mould high rais'd
Upon the rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst up-drawn,
Rose a fresh fountain, and with many a rill
Water'd the garden ; thence united fell
Down the steep glade, and met the nether flood,

Which from his darksome passage now appears,
And now, divided into four main streams,
Runs diverse, wandering many a famous realm
And country, whereof here needs no account ;
But rather to tell how, if Art could tell,
How from that sapphire fount the crisped brooks,
Rolling on orient pearl and sands of gold,
With many error under pendent shades
Ran nectar, visiting each plant, and fed
Flowers worthy of Paradise, which not nice Art
In beds and curious knots, but Nature boon
Pour'd forth profuse on hill, and dale, and plain,
Both where the morning Sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade
Imbrown'd the noontide bowers : thus was this place

A happy rural seat of various view ; [balm,
Groves whose rich trees wept odorous gums and Others whose fruit burnish'd with golden rind,
Hung amiable, Hesperian fables true,
If true, here only, and of delicious taste :
Betwixt them lawns, or level downs, and flocks
Grazing the tender herb, were interpos'd,
Or palmy hillock ; or the flowery lap
Of some irriguous valley spread her store,
Flowers of all hue, and without thorn the rose :
Another side, umbrageous grots and caves
Of cool recess, o'er which the mantling vine
Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps
Luxuriant ; meanwhile murmuring waters fall
Down the slope hills, dispers'd, or in a lake,
That to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
Her crystal mirror holds, unite their streams.
The birds their quire apply ; airs, vernal airs,
Breathing the smell of field and grove, attune
The trembling leaves, while universal Pan,
Knit with the Graces and the Hours in dance,
Led on the eternal Spring. Not that fair field
Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flowers,
Herself a fairer flower, by gloomy Dis
Was gather'd, which cost Ceres all that pain
To seek her through the world ; nor that sweet grove
Of Daphne by Orontes, and the inspir'd
Castalian spring, might with this Paradise
Of Eden strive ; nor that Nyseian isle
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham,
Whom Gentiles Ammon call and Lybian Jove,
Hid Amalthea, and her florid son
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye ;
Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True Paradise under the Ethiop line
By Nilus' head, enclos'd with shining rock,
A whole day's journey high, but wide remote
From this Assyrian garden, where the fiend
Saw, undelighted, all delight, all kind
Of living creatures, new to sight, and strange.
Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect, with native honour clad
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all :
And worthy seem'd ; for in their looks divine
The image of their glorious Maker shone,
Truth, wisdom, sanctitude severe and pure,
(Severe, but in true filial freedom plac'd,)
Whence true authority in men ; though both
Not equal, as their sex not equal seem'd ;
For contemplation he and valour form'd ;
For softness she and sweet attractive grace ;
He for God only, she for God in him :
His fair large front and eye sublime declar'd

Absolute rule; and hyacinthine locks
 Round from his parted forelock manly hung
 Clustering, but not beneath his shoulders broad;
 She, as a veil, down to the slender waist
 Her unadorned golden tresses wore
 Dishevell'd, but in wanton ringlets wav'd,
 As the vine curls her tendrils, which implied
 Subjection, but requir'd with gentle sway,
 And by her yielded, by him best receiv'd,
 Yielded with coy submission, modest pride,
 And sweet, reluctant, amorous delay.
 Nor those mysterious parts were then conceal'd;
 Then was not guilty shame: dishonest shame
 Of Nature's works, honour dishonourable,
 Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind
 With shows instead, mere shows of seeming pure,
 And banish'd from man's life his happiest life,
 Simplicity and spotless innocence!
 So pass'd they naked on, nor shunn'd the sight
 Of God or angel; for they thought no ill:
 So hand in hand they pass'd, the loveliest pair,
 That ever since in love's embraces met:
 Adam the goodliest man of men since born
 His sons, the fairest of her daughters Eve.
 Under a tuft of shade that on a green
 Stood whispering soft, by a fresh fountain side
 They sat them down: and, after no more toil
 Of their sweet gardening labour than suffic'd
 To recommend cool Zephyr, and made ease
 More easy, wholesome thirst and appetite
 More grateful, to their supper-fruits they fell,
 Nectarine fruits which the compliant boughs
 Yielded them, side-long as they sat recline
 On the soft downy bank damask'd with flowers:
 The savoury pulp they chew, and in the rind,
 Still as they thirsted, scoop the brimming stream;
 Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles
 Wanted, nor youthful dalliance, as beseems
 Fair couple, link'd in happy nuptial league,
 Alone as they. About them frisking play'd
 All beasts of the Earth, since wild, and of all chase
 In wood or wilderness, forest or den;
 Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw
 Dandled the kid; bears, tigers, ounces, pards,
 Gamboll'd before them; the unwieldy elephant,
 To make them mirth, us'd all his might, and wreath'd

His lithe proboscis; close the serpent sly,
 Insinuating, wove with Gordian twine
 His braided train, and of his fatal guile
 Gave proof unheeded; others on the grass
 Couch'd, and now fill'd with pasture gazing sat,
 Or bedward ruminating; for the Sun,
 Declin'd, was hastening now with prone career
 To the ocean isles, and in the ascending scale
 Of Heaven the stars that usher evening rose:
 When Satan still in gaze, as first he stood,
 Scarce thus at length fail'd speech recover'd sad.

"O Hell! what do mine eyes with grief behold!
 Into our room of bliss thus high advanc'd
 Creatures of other mould, Earth-born perhaps,
 Not spirits, yet to heavenly spirits bright
 Little inferior; whom my thoughts pursue
 With wonder, and could love, so lively shines
 In them divine resemblance, and such grace
 The hand that form'd them on their shape hath pour'd.

Ah! gentle pair, ye little think how nigh
 Your change approaches, when all these delights
 Will vanish, and deliver ye to woe;

More woe, the more your taste is now of joy;
 Happy, but for so happy ill secur'd
 Long to continue, and this high seat your Heaven
 Ill fenc'd for Heaven to keep out such a foe
 As now is enter'd; yet no purpos'd foe
 To you, whom I could pity thus forlorn
 Though I unpitied: league with you I seek,
 And mutual amity, so strait, so close,
 That I with you must dwell, or you with me
 Henceforth; my dwelling haply may not please,
 Like this fair Paradise, your sense: yet such Accept your Maker's work; he gave it me,
 Which I as freely give: Hell shall unfold,
 To entertain you two, her widest gates,
 And send forth all her kings; there will be room,
 Not like these narrow limits, to receive
 Your numerous offspring; if no better place,
 Thank him who puts me loth to this revenge
 On you, who wrong me not, for him who wrong'd
 And should I at your harmless innocence
 Melt, as I do, yet public reason just,
 Honour and empire with revenge enlarg'd,
 By conquering this new world, compels me now
 To do what else, though damn'd, I should abhor."

So spake the fiend, and with necessity,
 The tyrant's plea, excus'd his devilish deeds.
 Then from his lofty stand on that high tree
 Down he alights among the sportful herd
 Of those four-footed kinds, himself now one,
 Now other, as their shape serv'd best his end
 Nearer to view his prey, and, unespied,
 To mark what of their state he more might learn,
 By word or action mark'd: about them round
 A lion now he stalks with fiery glare;
 Then as a tiger, who by chance hath spied
 In some purlieu two gentle fawns at play,
 Straight couches close, then rising, changes oft
 His couchant watch, as one who chose his ground,
 Whence rushing he might surest seize them both,
 Grip'd in each paw: when Adam first of men
 To first of women Eve thus moving speech,
 Turn'd him all ear to hear new utterance flow.

"Sole partner, and sole part, of all these joys,
 Dearer thyself than all; needs must the Power
 That made us, and for us this ample world,
 Be infinitely good, and of his good
 As liberal and free as infinite;
 That rais'd us from the dust, and plac'd us here
 In all this happiness, who at his hand
 Have nothing merited, nor can perform
 Aught whereof he hath need; he who requires
 From us no other service than to keep
 This one, this easy charge, of all the trees
 In Paradise that bear delicious fruit
 So various, not to taste that only tree
 Of knowledge, planted by the tree of life;
 So near grows death to life, whate'er death is,
 Some dreadful thing no doubt; for well thou know'st

God hath pronounc'd it death to taste that tree,
 The only sign of our obedience left,
 Among so many signs of power and rule
 Conferr'd upon us, and dominion given
 Over all other creatures that possess
 Earth, air, and sea. Then let us not think hard
 One easy prohibition, who enjoy
 Free leave so large to all things else, and choice
 Unlimited of manifold delights:
 But let us ever praise him and extol
 His bounty, following our delightful task,

To prune these growing plants, and tend these flowers,

Which were it toilsome, yet with thee were sweet."

To whom thus Eve replied. "O thou for whom And from whom I was form'd, flesh of thy flesh, And without whom am to no end, my guide And head! what thou hast said is just and right. For we to Him indeed all praises owe, And daily thanks; I chiefly, who enjoy So far the happier lot, enjoying thee Pre-eminent by so much odds, while thou Like consort to thyself canst no where find. That day I oft remember, when from sleep I first awak'd, and found myself repos'd Under a shade on flowers, much wondering where And what I was, whence thither brought, and how. Not distant far from thence a murmuring sound Of waters issued from a cave, and spread Into a liquid plain, then stood unmov'd Pure as the expanse of Heaven; I thither went With unexperienced thought, and laid me down On the green bank, to look into the clear Smooth lake, that to me seem'd another sky. As I bent down to look, just opposite A shape within the watery gleam appear'd, Bending to look on me: I started back, It started back; but pleas'd I soon return'd, Pleas'd it return'd as soon with answering looks Of sympathy and love: there I had fix'd Mine eyes till now, and pin'd with vain desire, Had not a voice thus warn'd me; 'What thou seest,

What there thou seest, fair creature, is thyself; With thee it came and goes: but follow me, And I will bring thee where no shadow stays Thy coming, and thy soft embraces, he Whose image thou art; him thou shalt enjoy Inseparably thine, to him shalt bear Multitudes like thyself, and thence be call'd Mother of human race.' What could I do, But follow straight, invisibly thus led? Till I espied thee, fair indeed and tall, Under a platane; yet methought less fair, Less winning soft, less amiably mild, Than that smooth watery image: back I turn'd; Thou following cry'dst aloud, 'Return, fair Eve, Whom fly'st thou? whom thou fly'st, of him thou art,

His flesh, his bone; to give thee being I lent Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart, Substantial life, to have thee by my side Henceforth an individual solace dear; Part of my soul I seek thee, and thee claim My other half.' With that thy gentle hand Seiz'd mine: I yielded; and from that time see How beauty is excell'd by manly grace, And wisdom, which alone is truly fair."

So spake our general mother, and with eyes Of conjugal attraction unprov'd, And meek surrender, half-embracing lean'd On our first father; half her swelling breast Nud'd met his, under the flowing gold Of her loose tresses hid: he in delight Both of her beauty, and submissive charms, Smil'd with superior love, as Jupiter On Juno smiles, when he impregns the clouds That shed May flowers; and press'd her matron lip With kisses pure: aside the Devil turn'd For envy; yet with jealous leer malign Ey'd them askance, and to himself thus 'plain'd.

"Sight hateful, sight tormenting; thus these two,

Imparadis'd in one another's arms, The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill Of bliss on bliss; while I to Hell am thrust, Where neither joy nor love, but fierce desire, Among our other torments not the least, Still unfulfill'd, with pain of longing pines. Yet let me not forget what I have gain'd From their own mouths: all is not theirs, it seems; One fatal tree there stands, of knowledge call'd, Forbidden them to taste: Knowledge forbidden? Suspicious, reasonless. Why should their Lord Envy them that? Can it be sin to know? Can it be death? And do they only stand By ignorance? Is that their happy state, The proof of their obedience and their faith? O fair foundation laid whereon to build Their ruin! Hence I will excite their minds With more desire to know, and to reject Envious commands, invented with design To keep them low, whom knowledge might exalt Equal with gods: aspiring to be such, They taste and die: what likelier can ensue? But first with narrow search I must walk round This garden, and no corner leave unspied; A chance but chance may lead where I may meet Some wandering spirit of Heaven by fountain side, Or in thick shade retir'd, from him to draw What further would be learn'd. Live while ye may, Yet happy pair; enjoy, till I return, Short pleasures, for long woes are to succeed."

So saying, his proud step he scornful turn'd, But with sly circumspection, and began Through wood, through waste, o'er hill, o'er dale, his roam.

Meanwhile in utmost longitude, where Heaven With earth and ocean meets, the setting Sun Slowly descended, and with right aspect Against the eastern gate of Paradise Levell'd his evening rays: it was a rock Of alabaster, pil'd up to the clouds, Conspicuous far, winding with one ascent Accessible from Earth, one entrance high; The rest was craggy cliff, that overhung Still as it rose, impossible to climb. Betwixt these rocky pillars Gabriel sat, Chief of the angelic guards, awaiting night; About him exercis'd heroic games The unarmed youth of Heaven, but nigh at hand Celestial armoury, shields, helms, and spears, Hung high, with diamond flaming, and with gold. Thither came Uriel, gliding through the even On a sun-beam, swift as a shooting star In autumn thwarts the night, when vapours fir'd Impress the air, and shows the mariner From what point of his compass to beware Impetuous winds: he thus began in haste.

"Gabriel, to thee thy course by lot hath given Charge and strict watch, that to this happy place No evil thing approach or enter in. This day at height of noon came to my sphere A spirit, zealous, as he seem'd, to know More of the Almighty's works, and chiefly Man, God's latest image: I describ'd his way Bent all on speed, and mark'd his aery gait; But in the mount that lies from Eden north, Where he first lighted, soon discern'd his looks Alien from Heaven, with passions foul obscur'd: Mine eye pursued him still, but under shade

Lost sight of him : one of the banish'd crew,
I fear, hath ventur'd from the deep to raise
New troubles ; him thy care must be to find."

To whom the wing'd warrior thus return'd.
" Uriel, no wonder if thy perfect sight,
Amid the Sun's bright circle where thou sit'st,
See far and wide : in at this gate none pass
The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
Well known from Heaven ; and since meridian hour
No creature thence : if spirit of other sort,
So minded, have o'er-leap'd these earthy bounds
On purpose, hard thou know'st it to exclude
Spiritual substance with corporeal bar.
But if within the circuit of these walks,
In whatsoever shape he lurk, of whom
Thou tell'st, by morrow dawning I shall know."

So promis'd he ; and Uriel to his charge
Return'd on that bright beam, whose point now rais'd
Bore him slope downward to the Sun now fall'n
Beneath the Azores ; whether the prime orb,
Incredible how swift, had thither roll'd
Diurnal, or this less volúbil Earth,
By shorter flight to the east, had left him there
Arraying with reflected purple and gold
The clouds that on his western throne attend.
Now came still Evening on, and Twilight gray
Had in her sober livery all things clad ;
Silence accompanied ; for beast and bird,
They to their grassy couch, these to their nests
Were slunk, all but the wakeful nightingale ;
She all night long her amorous descant sung ;
Silence was pleas'd : now glow'd the firmament
With living sapphires : Hesperus, that led
The starry host, rode brightest, till the Moon,
Rising in clouded majesty, at length
Apparent queen unveil'd her peerless light,
And o'er the dark her silver mantle threw.

When Adam thus to Eve. " Fair consort, the hour
Of night, and all things now retir'd to rest,
Mind us of like repose ; since God hath set
Labour and rest, as day and night, to men
Successive ; and the timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumbrous weight, inclines
Our eye-lids : other creatures all day long
Rove idle, unemploy'd, and less need rest ;
Man hath his daily work of body or mind
Appointed, which declares his dignity,
And the regard of Heaven on all his ways ;
While other animals unactive range,
And of their doings God takes no account.
To-morrow, ere fresh morning streak the east
With first approach of light, we must be risen,
And at our pleasant labour to reform
Yon flowery arbours, yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown,
That mock our scant manuring, and require
More hands than ours to lop their wanton growth ;
Those blossoms also, and those dropping gums,
That lie bestrown, unsightly and unsmooth,
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease ;
Meanwhile, as Nature wills, night bids us rest."

To whom thus Eve, with perfect beauty adorn'd.
" My author and disposer, what thou bidst
Unargued I obey : so God ordains ;
God is thy law, thou mine : to know no more
Is woman's happiest knowledge, and her praise,
With thee conversing I forget all time ;
All seasons, and their change, all please alike.
Sweet is the breath of Morn, her rising sweet,
With charm of earliest birds ; pleasant the Sun,

When first on this delightful land he spreads
His orient beams, on herb, tree, fruit, and flower,
Glistening with dew : fragrant the fertile Earth
After soft showers ; and sweet the coming on
Of grateful Evening mild ; then silent Night,
With this her solemn bird, and this fair Moon,
And these the gems of Heaven, her starry train :
But neither breath of Morn, when she ascends
With charm of earliest birds ; nor rising Sun
On this delightful land ; nor herb, fruit, flower,
Glistening with dew ; nor fragrance after showers ;
Nor grateful Evening mild ; nor silent Night,
With this her solemn bird ; nor walk by Moon,
Or glittering star-light, without thee is sweet.
But wherefore all night long shine these ? for whom
This glorious sight, when sleep hath shut all eyes ?"

To whom our general ancestor replied.
" Daughter of God and Man, accomplish'd Eve,
These have their course to finish round the Earth,
By morrow evening, and from land to land
In order, though to nations yet unborn,
Ministring light prepar'd, they set and rise ;
Lest total Darkness should by night regain
Her old possession, and extinguish life,
In Nature, and all things ; which these soft fires
Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat
Of various influence foment and warm,
Temper or nourish, or in part shed down
Their stellar virtue on all kinds that grow
On Earth, made hereby apter to receive
Perfection from the Sun's more potent ray.
These then, though unbeheld in deep of night,
Shine not in vain ; nor think, though men were none,
That Heaven would want spectators, God want praise :

Millions of spiritual creatures walk the Earth
Unseen, both when we wake, and when we sleep :
All these with ceaseless praise his works behold
Both day and night : how often from the steep
Of echoing hill or thicket have we heard
Celestial voices to the midnight air,
Sole, or responsive each to other's note,
Singing their great Creator ? Oft in bands
While they keep watch, or nightly rounding walk,
With heavenly touch of instrumental sounds
In full harmonic number join'd, their songs
Divide the night, and lift our thoughts to Heaven."

Thus talking hand in hand alone they pass'd
On to their blissful bower : it was a place
Chos'n by the sovran Planter, when he fram'd
All things to Man's delightful use ; the roof
Of thickest covert was inwoven shade
Laurel and myrtle, and what higher grew
Of firm and fragrant leaf ; on either side
Acanthus, and each odorous bushy shrub,
Fenc'd up the verdant wall ; each beauteous flower,
Iris all hues, roses, and jessamin, [wrought
Rear'd high their flourish'd heads between, and Mosaic ; underfoot the violet,
Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay
Broider'd the ground, more colour'd than with stone
Of costliest emblem : other creature here,
Bird, beast, insect, or worm, durst enter none,
Such was their awe of Man. In shadier bower
More sacred and sequester'd, though but feign'd,
Pan or Sylvanus never slept, nor nymph
Nor Faunus haunted. Here, in close recess,
With flowers, garlands, and sweet smelling herbs,
Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed ;
And heavenly quires the hymenean sung,

What day the genial angel to our sire
Brought her, in naked beauty more adorn'd,
More lovely, than Pandora, whom the gods
Endow'd with all their gifts, and O too like
Is sad event, when to the unwiser son
Of Japhet brought by Hermes, she ensnar'd
Mankind with her fair looks, to be aveng'd
On him who had stole Jove's authentic fire.

Thus, at their shady lodge arriv'd, both stood,
Both turn'd, and under open sky ador'd
The God that made both sky, air, Earth, and
Heaven,

Which they beheld, the Moon's resplendent globe,
And starry pole: "Thou also mad'st the night,
Maker Omnipotent, and thou the day,
Which we, in our appointed work employ'd,
Have finish'd, happy in our mutual help
And mutual love, the crown of all our bliss
Ordain'd by thee; and this delicious place
For us too large, where thy abundance wants
Partakers, and uncropt falls to the ground.
But thou hast promis'd from us two a race
To fill the Earth, who shall with us extol
Thy goodness infinite, both when we wake,
And when we seek, as now, thy gift of sleep."

This said unanimous, and other rites
Observing none, but adoration pure
Which God likes best, into their inmost bower
Handed they went; and, eas'd the putting off
These troublesome disguises which we wear,
Straight side by side were laid; nor turn'd, I ween,
Adam from his fair spouse, nor Eve the rites
Mysterious of connubial love refus'd:
Whatever hypocrites austere talk
Of purity, and place, and innocence,
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all
Our Maker bids increase; who bids abstain
But our destroyer, foe to God and Man?
Hail, wedded love, mysterious law, true source
Of human offspring, sole propriety
In Paradise of all things common else.
By thee adulterous Lust was driven from men
Among the bestial herds to range; by thee
Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure,
Laws dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known.
Far be it, that I should write thee sin or blame,
Or think thee unbefitting holiest place,
Perpetual fountain of domestic sweets,
Whose bed is undefil'd and chaste pronounc'd,
Present, or past, as saints and patriarchs us'd.
Here Love his golden shafts employs, here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings,
Reigns here and revels; not in the bought smile
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd,
(Or casual fruition; nor in court-amours,
Mix'd dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball,
Or serenate, which the starv'd lover sings
To his proud fair, best quitted with disdain.
There, lull'd by nightingales, embracing slept,
And on their naked limbs the flowery roof
Showered roses, which the morn repair'd. Sleep on,
Best pair; and O yet happiest, if ye seek
No happier state, and know to know no more.

Now had Night measur'd with her shadowy cone

Half way up hill this vast sublunar vault,
And from their ivory port the cherubim,
Forth issuing at the accustomed hour, stood arm'd

To their night watches in warlike parade;
When Gabriel to his next in power thus spake.

"Uzziel, half these draw off, and coast the south
With strictest watch; these other wheel the north;
Our circuit meets full west." As flame they part,
Half wheeling to the shield, half to the spear.
From these two strong and subtle spirits he call'd
That near him stood, and gave them thus in charge.

"Ithuriel and Zephon, with wing'd speed
Search through this garden, leave unsearch'd no nook;

But chiefly where those two fair creatures lodge,
Now laid perhaps asleep, secure of harm.
This evening from the Sun's decline arriv'd,
Who tells of some infernal spirit seen
Hitherward bent (who could have thought?) escap'd
The bars of hell, on errand bad no doubt:
Such, where ye find, seize fast, and hither bring."

So saying, on he led his radiant files,
Dazzling the Moon; these to the bower direct
In search of whom they sought: him there they found

Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve,
Assaying by his devilish art to reach
The organs of her fancy, and with them forge
Illusions, as he list, phantasms and dreams;
Or if, inspiring venom, he might taint
The animal spirits, that from pure blood arise
Like gentle breaths from rivers pure, thence raise
At least distemper'd, discontented thoughts,
Vain hopes, vain aims, inordinate desires,
Blown up with high conceits engendering pride.
Him thus intent Ithuriel with his spear
Touch'd lightly; for no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness: up he starts
Discover'd and surpris'd. As when a spark
Lights on a heap of nitrous powder, laid
Fit for the tun some magazine to store
Against a rumour'd war, the smutty grain,
With sudden blaze diffus'd, inflames the air:
So started up in his own shape the fiend.
Back stept those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grisly king;
Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon.

"Which of those rebel spirits adjudg'd to Hell
Com'st thou, escap'd thy prison? and, transform'd,
Why sat'st thou like an enemy in wait,
Here watching at the head of these that sleep?"

"Know ye not then," said Satan, fill'd with scorn,

"Know ye not me? ye knew me once no mate
For you, there sitting where ye durst not soar:
Not to know me argues yourselves unknown,
The lowest of your throng; or if ye know
Why ask ye, and superfluous begin
Your message, like to end as much in vain."

To whom thus Zephon, answering scorn with scorn.

"Think not, revolted spirit, thy shape the same,
Or undiminish'd brightness to be known,
As when thou stood'st in Heaven upright and pure;
That glory then, when thou no more wast good,
Departed from thee; and thou resemblest now
Thy sin and place of doom obscure and foul.
But come, for thou, be sure, shall give account
To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep
This place inviolable, and these from harm."

So spake the cherub; and his grave rebuke
Severe in youthful beauty, added grace

Invincible : abash'd the Devil stood,
And felt how awful goodness is, and saw
Virtue in her shape how lovely ; saw, and pin'd
His loss ; but chiefly to find here observ'd
His lustre visibly impair'd ; yet seem'd
Undaunted. " If I must contend," said he,
" Best with the best, the sender not the sent,
Or all at once ; more glory will be won,
Or less be lost." " Thy fear," said Zephon bold,
" Will save us trial what the least can do
Single against thee wicked, and thence weak."

The fiend replied not, overcome with rage ;
But, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on,
Champing his iron curb : to strive or fly
He held it vain ; awe from above had quell'd
His heart, not else dismay'd. Now drew they nigh
The western point, where those half-rounding guards
Just met, and closing stood in squadron join'd,
Awaiting next command. To whom their chief,
Gabriel, from the front thus call'd aloud.

" O friends ! I hear the tread of nimble feet
Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern
Ithuriel and Zephon through the shade ;
And with them comes a third of regal port,
But faded splendour wan ; who by his gait
And fierce demeanour seems the prince of Hell,
Not likely to part hence without contest ;
Stand firm, for in his look defiance lours."

He scarce had ended, when those two approach'd,
And brief related whom they brought, where found,
How busied, in what form and posture couch'd.

To whom with stern regard thus Gabriel spake.
" Why hast thou, Satan, broke the bounds prescrib'd
To thy transgressions, and disturb'd the charge
Of others, who approve not to transgress
By thy example, but have power and right
To question thy bold entrance on this place ;
Employ'd, it seems, to violate sleep, and those Whose dwelling God hath planted here in bliss?"

To whom thus Satan with contemptuous brow.
" Gabriel ! thou hadst in Heaven the esteem of wise,
And such I held thee ; but this question ask'd
Puts me in doubt. Lives there who loves his pain ?
Who would not, finding way, break loose from Hell,
Though thither doom'd ? Thou wouldst thyself, no doubt,

And boldly venture to whatever place [change
Farthest from pain, where thou mightst hope to Torment with ease, and soonest recompense
Dole with delight, which in this place I sought ;
To thee no reason, who know'st only good,
But evil hast not tried : and wilt object
His will who bounds us ? Let him surer bar
His iron gates, if he intends our stay
In that dark durance : thus much what was ask'd.
The rest is true, they found me where they say ;
But that implies not violence or harm."

Thus he in scorn. The warlike angel moved,
Disdainfully half smiling, thus replied.

" O loss of one in Heaven to judge of wise
Since Satan fell, whom folly overthrew,
And now returns him from his prison 'scap'd,
Gravely in doubt whether to hold them wise
Or not, who ask what boldness brought him hither
Unlicens'd from his bounds in Hell prescrib'd ;
So wise he judges it to fly from pain
However, and to 'scape his punishment !
So judge thou still, presumptuous ! till the wrath,
Which thou incurr'st by flying, meet thy flight
Sevenfold, and scourge that wisdom back to Hell,

Which taught thee yet no better, that no pain
Can equal anger infinite provok'd.
But wherefore thou alone ? wherefore with thee
Came not all Hell broke loose ? is pain to them
Less pain, less to be fled ; or thou than they
Less hardy to endure ; courageous chief !
The first in flight from pain ! hadst thou alleg'd
To thy deserted host this cause of flight,
Thou surely hadst not come sole fugitive."

To which the fiend thus answer'd, frowning stern
" Not that I less endure or shrink from pain,
Insulting angel ! well thou know'st I stood
Thy fiercest, when in battle to thy aid
The blasting vollied thunder made all speed,
And seconded thy else not dreaded spear.
But still thy words at random, as before,
Argue thy inexperience what behoves
From hard assays and ill successes past
A faithful leader, not to hazard all
Through ways of danger by himself untried :
I therefore, I alone first undertook
To wing the desolate abyss, and spy
This new created world, whereof in Hell
Fame is not silent, here in hope to find
Better abode, and my afflicted powers
To settle here on Earth, or in mid air ;
Though for possession put to try once more
What thou and thy gay legions dare against ;
Whose easier business were to serve their Lord
High up in Heaven, with songs to hymn his throne
And practis'd distances to cringe, not fight."

To whom the warrior-angel soon replied.
" To say and straight unsay, pretending first
Wise to fly pain, professing next the spy,
Argues no leader but a liar trac'd,
Satan, and couldst thou faithful add ? O name,
O sacred name of faithfulness profan'd !
Faithful to whom ? to thy rebellious crew ?
Army of fiends, fit body to fit head.
Was this your discipline and faith engag'd,
Your military obedience, to dissolve
Allegiance to the acknowledged Power supreme ?
And thou, sly hypocrite, who now wouldst seem
Patron of liberty, who more than thou
Once fawn'd, and cring'd, and servilely ador'd
Heaven's awful Monarch ? wherefore, but in hope
To dispossess him, and thyself to reign ?
But mark what I areed thee now : avant !
Fly thither whence thou fledst ! If from this hour
Within these hallow'd limits thou appear,
Back to the infernal pit I drag thee chain'd,
And seal thee so, as henceforth not to scorn
The facile gates of Hell too slightly barr'd."

So threaten'd he ; but Satan to no threats
Gave heed, but waxing more in rage replied.

" Then when I am thy captive talk of chains,
Proud liminary cherub ! but ere then
Far heavier load thyself expect to feel
From my prevailing arm, though Heaven's King
Ride on thy wings, and thou with thy compeers,
Us'd to the yoke, draw'st his triumphant wheels
In progress through the road of Heaven star-par'd."

While thus he spake, the angelic squadron bright
Turn'd fiery red, sharpening in mooned horns
Their phalanx, and began to hem him round
With ported spears, as thick as when a field
Of Ceres ripe for harvest waving bends
Her bearded grove of ears, which way the wind
Sways them ; the careful ploughman doubling stands,

Lest on the threshing-floor his hopeful sheaves
Prove chaff. On the other side, Satan, alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated stood,
Like Teneriff or Atlas, unremov'd:
His stature reach'd the sky, and on his crest
Sat Horror plum'd; nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both spear and shield: now dreadful deeds

Might have ensued, nor only Paradise
In this commotion, but the starry cope
Of Heaven perhaps, or all the elements
At least had gone to wrack, disturb'd and torn
With violence of this conflict, had not soon
The Eternal, to prevent such horrid fray,
Hung forth in Heaven his golden scales, yet seen
Betwixt Astrea and the Scorpion sign,
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd,
The pendulous round Earth with balanc'd air
In counterpoise, now ponders all events,
Battles and realms: in these he put two weights,
The sequel each of parting and of fight:
The latter quick up flew, and kick'd the beam;
Which Gabriel spying, thus bespake the fiend.

"Satan, I know thy strength, and thou know'st
mine;

Neither our own, but given: what folly then
To boast what arms can do! since thine no more Than Heaven permits, nor mine, though doubled now

To trample thee as mire: for proof look up,
And read thy lot in yon celestial sign; [weak
Were thou art weigh'd, and shown how light, how thou resist." The fiend look'd up, and knew
His mounted scale aloft: nor more; but fled
Murmuring, and with him fled the shades of night.

Book V.

The Argument.

Morning approached, Eve relates to Adam her troublesome dream; he likes it not, yet comforts her: they come forth to their day-labours: their morning hymn at the door of their bower. God, to render man inexcusable, sends Raphael to admonish him of his obedience, of his free estate, of his enemy near at hand, who he is, and why his enemy, and whatever else may avail Adam to know. Raphael comes down to Paradise; his appearance described; his coming discerned by Adam afar off sitting at the door of his bower;
he goes out to meet him, brings him to his lodge, entertains him with the choicest fruits of Paradise got together by Eve; their discourse at length: Raphael performs his message, minds
Adam of his state and of his enemy; relates, at Adam's request, who that enemy is, and how he came to be so, beginning from his first revolt in Heaven, and the occasion thereof; how he drew his legions after him to the parts of the north, and there incited them to rebel with him, persuading all but only Abdiel a scraph, who in argument dissuades and opposes him, then forsakes him.

Now Morn, her rosy steps in the eastern clime
Advancing, sow'd the earth with orient pearl,
When Adam wak'd, so custom'd; for his sleep
Was airy-light, from pure digestion bred,

And temperate vapours bland, which the only sound
Of leaves and fuming rills, Aurora's fan,
Lightly dispers'd, and the shrill matin song
Of birds on every bough; so much the more
His wonder was to find unwaken'd Eve
With tresses discomposed, and glowing cheek,
As through unquiet rest: he, on his side,
Leaning half rais'd, with looks of cordial love
Hung over her enamour'd, and beheld
Beauty, which, whether waking or asleep,
Shot forth peculiar graces; then with voice
Mild, as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes,
Her hand soft touching, whisper'd thus. "Awake,
My fairest, my espous'd, my latest found,
Heaven's last best gift, my ever new delight!
Awake: the morning shines, and the fresh field
Calls us; we lose the prime, to mark how spring
Our tender plants, how blows the citron grove,
What drops the myrrh, and what the bulmy reed,
How Nature paints her colours, how the bee
Sits on the bloom extracting liquid sweet."

Such whispering wak'd her, but with startled eye
On Adam, whom embracing, thus she spake.

"O sole in whom my thoughts find all repose,
My glory, my perfection! glad I see
Thy face, and morn return'd; for I this night
(Such night till this I never pass'd) have dream'd,
If dream'd, not, as I oft am wont, of thee,
Works of day past, or morrow's next design,
But of offence and trouble, which my mind
Knew never till this irksome night: methought
Close at mine ear one call'd me forth to walk
With gentle voice; I thought it thine: it said,
'Why sleep'st thou, Eve? now is the pleasant time,
The cool, the silent, save where silence yields
To the night-warbling bird, that now awake
Tunes sweetest his love-labour'd song; now reigns
Full-orb'd the Moon, and with more pleasing light
Shadowy sets off the face of things; in vain,
If none regard; Heaven wakes with all his eyes,
Whom to behold but thee, Nature's desire?
In whose sight all things joy, with ravishment
Attracted by thy beauty still to gaze.'

I rose as at thy call, but found thee not;
To find thee I directed then my walk;
And on, methought, alone I pass'd through ways
That brought me on a sudden to the tree
Of interdicted knowledge: fair it seem'd,
Much fairer to my fancy than by day:
And, as I wondering look'd, beside it stood
One shap'd and wing'd like one of those from
Heaven

By us oft seen: his dewy locks distill'd
Ambrosia; on that tree he also gaz'd;
And 'O fair plant,' said he, 'with fruit surcharg'd,
Deigns none to ease thy load, and taste thy sweet,
Nor God, nor Man? Is knowledge so despis'd?
Or envy, or what reserve forbids to taste?
Forbid who will, none shall from me withhold
Longer thy offer'd good; why else set here?'
This said, he paus'd not, but with venturous arm
He pluck'd, he tasted; me damp horror chill'd
At such bold words vouch'd with a deed so bold:
But he thus, overjoy'd; 'O fruit divine,
Sweet of thyself, but much more sweet thus cropt,
Forbidden here, it seems, as only fit
For gods, yet able to make gods of men:
And why not gods of men; since good, the more
Communicated, more abundant grows,
The author not impair'd but honour'd more?

Here, happy creature, fair angelic Eve !
 Partake thou also ; happy though thou art,
 Happier thou may'st be, worthier canst not be :
 Taste this and be henceforth among the gods
 Thyself a goddess, not to Earth confin'd,
 But sometimes in the air, as we, sometimes
 Ascend to Heaven, by merit thine, and see
 What life the gods live there, and such live thou.'
 So saying, he drew nigh, and to me held,
 Even to my mouth of that same fruit held part
 Which he had pluck'd : the pleasant savoury smell
 So quicken'd appetite, that I, methought,
 Could not but taste. Forthwith up to the clouds
 With him I flew, and underneath beheld
 The Earth outstretch'd immense, a prospect wide
 And various : wondering at my flight and change
 To this high exaltation : suddenly
 My guide was gone, and I, methought, sunk down,
 And fell asleep ; but O, how glad I wak'd
 To find this but a dream !" Thus Eve her night
 Related, and thus Adam answer'd sad.

" Best image of myself, and dearer half,
 The trouble of thy thoughts this night in sleep
 Affects me equally ; nor can I like
 This uncouth dream, of evil sprung, I fear ;
 Yet evil whence ? in thee can harbour none,
 Created pure. But know, that in the soul
 Are many lesser faculties, that serve
 Reason as chief ; among these Fancy next
 Her office holds ; of all external things,
 Which the five watchful senses represent,
 She forms imaginations, aery shapes,
 Which Reason, joining or disjoining, frames
 All what we affirm or what deny, and call
 Our knowledge or opinion ; then retires
 Into her private cell, when nature rests.
 Oft in her absence mimic Fancy wakes
 To imitate her ; but, misjoining shapes,
 Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams ;
 Ill matching words and deeds long past or late.
 Some such resemblances, methinks, I find
 Of our last evening's talk, in this thy dream,
 But with addition strange ; yet be not sad.
 Evil into the mind of God or Man
 May come and go, so unapprov'd, and leave
 No spot or blame behind : which gives me hope
 That what in sleep thou didst abhor to dream,
 Waking thou never wilt consent to do.
 Be not dishearten'd then, nor cloud those looks,
 That wont to be more cheerful and serene,
 Than when fair morning first smiles on the world ;
 And let us to our fresh employments rise
 Among the groves, the fountains, and the flowers
 That open now their choicest bosom'd smells,
 Reserv'd from night, and kept for thee in store."

So cheer'd he his fair spouse, and she was cheer'd ;
 But silently a gentle tear let fall
 From either eye, and wip'd them with her hair ;
 Two other precious drops that ready stood,
 Each in their crystal sluice, he ere they fell
 Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remorse
 And pious awe, that fear'd to have offended.

So all was clear'd, and to the field they haste.
 But first, from under shady arborous roof
 Soon as they forth were come to open sight
 Of day-spring, and the Sun, who, scarce up-risen,
 With wheels yet hovering o'er the ocean brim,
 Shot parallel to the Earth his dewy ray,
 Discovering in wide landscape all the east
 Of Paradise and Eden's happy plains,

Lowly they bow'd adoring, and began
 Their orisons, each morning duly paid
 In various style ; for neither various style
 Nor holy rapture wanted they to praise
 Their Maker, in fit strains pronounc'd, or sung
 Unmeditated ; such prompt eloquence
 Flow'd from their lips, in prose or numerous verse,
 More tuneable than needed lute or harp
 To add more sweetness ; and they thus began.

" These are thy glorious works, Parent of good,
 Almighty ! Thine this universal frame,
 Thus wondrous fair ; Thyself how wondrous then !
 Unspeakable, who sitst above these heavens
 To us invisible, or dimly seen
 In these thy lowest works ; yet these declare
 Thy goodness beyond thought, and power divine.
 Speak, ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
 Angels ; for ye behold him, and with songs
 And choral symphonies, day without night,
 Circle his throne rejoicing ; ye in Heaven.
 On Earth join, all ye creatures, to extol
 Him first, him last, him midst, and without end.
 Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,
 If better thou belong not to the dawn,
 Sure pledge of day, that crown'st the smiling morn
 With thy bright circlet, praise him in thy sphere,
 While day arises, that sweet hour of prime.
 Thou Sun, of this great world both eye and soul,
 Acknowledge him thy greater ; sound his praise
 In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
 And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st.

Moon, that now meet'st the orient Sun, now fly'st,
 With the fix'd stars, fix'd in their orb that flies ;
 And ye five other wandering fires, that move
 In mystic dance not without song, resound
 His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light.
 Air, and ye elements, the eldest birth
 Of Nature's womb, that in quaternion run
 Perpetual circle, multiform ; and mix
 And nourish all things ; let your ceaseless change
 Vary to our great Maker still new praise.
 Ye mists and exhalations, that now rise
 From hill or streaming lake, dusky, or gray,
 Till the Sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,
 In honour to the World's great Author rise ;
 Whether to deck with clouds the uncolour'd sky,
 Or wet the thirsty Earth with falling showers,
 Rising or falling still advance his praise.
 His praise, ye winds, that from four quarters blow,
 Breathe soft or loud ; and wave your tops, ye pines,
 With every plant, in sign of worship wave.
 Fountains, and ye that warble, as ye flow,
 Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise.
 Join voices, all ye living souls : ye birds,
 That singing up to Heaven-gate ascend,
 Bear on your wings and in your notes his praise.
 Ye that in waters glide, and ye that walk
 The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep ;
 Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
 To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade,
 Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise.
 Hail, universal Lord, be bounteous still
 To give us only good ; and if the night
 Have gather'd aught of evil or conceal'd,
 Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark !"

So pray'd they innocent, and to their thoughts
 Firm peace recover'd soon, and wonted calm.
 On to their morning's rural work they haste,
 Among sweet dewes and flowers ; where any row

If fruit-trees over-woody reach'd too far
 Their pamp'ring boughs, and needed hands to check
 Their fruitless embraces: or they led the vine
 To wed her elm; she, spous'd, about him twines
 Her marriageable arms, and with her brings
 Her dower, the adopted clusters, to adorn
 His barren leaves. Them thus employ'd beheld
 With pity Heaven's high King, and to him call'd
 Raphael, the sociable spirit, that deign'd
 To travel with Tobias, and secur'd
 His marriage with the seventimes-wedded maid.
 "Raphael," said he, "thou hear'st what stir on Earth

Is, from Hell 'scap'd through the darksome gulf,
 Hath rais'd in Paradise; and how disturb'd
 This night the human pair; how he designs
 To bring them at once to ruin all mankind.
 So therefore, half this day as friend with friend converse with Adam, in what bower or shade
 Thou find'st him from the heat of noon retir'd,
 To respite his day-labour with repast,
 And with repose: and such discourse bring on,
 As may advise him of his happy state,
 Happiness in his power left free to will,
 Left to his own free will, his will though free,
 Yet mutable; whence warn him to beware
 He swerve not, too secure: tell him withal
 His danger, and from whom; what enemy,
 Late fall'n himself from Heaven, is plotting now
 The fall of others from like state of bliss;
 By violence? no, for that shall be withstood;
 But by deceit and lies: this let him know,
 Lest, wilfully transgressing, he pretend
 Surprisal, unadmonish'd, unforewarn'd."
 So spake the Eternal Father, and fulfill'd
 All justice: nor delay'd the winged saint
 After his charge receiv'd; but from among
 The sacred and celestial ardours, where he stood
 Beset with his gorgeous wings, up springing light
 Flew through the midst of Heaven; the angelic
 quires,

On each hand parting, to his speed gave way
 Through all the empyreal road; till, at the gate
 Of Heaven arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide
 By golden hinges turning, as by work
 Divine the sovran Architect had fram'd.
 Hence, no cloud, or, to obstruct his sight,
 Interpos'd, however small he sees,
 Nor unconform to other shining globes,
 Earth, and the garden of God, with cedars crown'd
 Above all hills. As when by night the glass
 Of Galileo, less assur'd, observes
 Imagin'd lands and regions in the Moon:
 Or, from amidst the Cyclades
 Lemnos or Samos first appearing, kens
 A dusky spot. Down thither prone in flight
 He speeds, and through the vast ethereal sky
 Soars between worlds and worlds, with steady wing,
 Now on the polar winds, then with quick fan
 Now shows the buxom air; till, within soar
 Of towering eagles, to all the fowls he seems
 A deniz, gaz'd by all, as that sole bird,
 Worn, to enshrine his reliques in the Sun's
 Bright temple, to Egyptian Thebes he flies.
 At once on the eastern cliff of Paradise
 He lights, and to his proper shape returns
 A seraph wing'd: six wings he wore, to shade
 His lineaments divine; the pair that clad
 His shoulder broad, came mantling o'er his breast
 As regal ornament; the middle pair

Girt like a starry zone his waist, and round
 Skirted his loins and thighs with downy gold
 And colours dipt in Heaven; the third his feet
 Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail,
 Sky-tinctur'd grain. Like Maia's son he stood,
 And shook his plumes, that heavenly fragrance fill'd
 The circuit wide. Straight knew him all the bands
 Of angels under watch; and to his state,
 And to his message high, in honour rise;
 For on some message high they guess'd him bound.
 Their glittering tents he pass'd, and now is come
 Into the blissful field, through groves of myrrh,
 And flowering odours, cassia, nard, and balm;
 A wilderness of sweets; for Nature here
 Wanton'd as in her prime, and play'd at will
 Her virgin fancies, pouring forth more sweet,
 Wild above rule or art, enormous bliss.
 Him through the spicy forest onward come
 Adam discern'd, as in the door he sat
 Of his cool bower, while now the mounted Sun
 Shot down direct his fervid rays to warm
 Earth's inmost womb, more warmth than Adam needs;

And Eve within, due at her hour prepar'd
 For dinner savoury fruits, of taste to please
 True appetite, and not disrelish thirst
 Of nectarous draughts between, from milky stream,
 Berry or grape: to whom thus Adam call'd.

"Haste hither, Eve, and worth thy sight behold
 Eastward among those trees, what glorious shape
 Comes this way moving: seems another morn
 Ris'n on mid-noon; some great behest from Heaven
 To us perhaps he brings, and will vouchsafe
 This day to be our guest. But go with speed,
 And, what thy stores contain, bring forth and pour
 Abundance, fit to honour and receive
 Our heavenly stranger; well we may afford
 Our givers their own gifts, and large bestow
 From large bestow'd, where Nature multiplies
 Her fertile growth, and by disburdening grows
 More fruitful, which instructs us not to spare."

To whom thus Eve. "Adam, Earth's hallow'd
 mould,
 Of God inspir'd! small store will serve, where store,
 All seasons, ripe for use hangs on the stalk;
 Save what by frugal storing firmness gains
 To nourish, and superfluous moist consumes:
 But I will haste, and from each bough and brake,
 Each plant and juiciest gourd, will pluck such choice

To entertain our angel-guest, as he
 Beholding shall confess, that here on Earth
 God hath dispens'd his bounties as in Heaven."

So saying, with dispatchful looks in haste
 She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent
 What choice to choose for delicacy best,
 What order so contriv'd as not to mix
 Tastes, not well join'd, inelegant, but bring
 Taste after taste upheld with kindest change;
 Bestirs her then, and from each tender stalk
 Whatever Earth, all-bearing mother, yields
 In India East or West, or middle shore
 In Pontus or the Punic coast, or where
 Alcinous reign'd, fruit of all kinds, in coat
 Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husk, or shell,
 She gathers, tribute large, and on the board
 Heaps with unsparing hand; for drink the grape
 She crushes, inoffensive must, and meaths
 From many a berry, and from sweet kernels press'd
 She tempers dulcet creams; nor these to hold

Wants her fit vessels pure ; then strows the ground
With rose and odours from the shrub unfum'd.

Meanwhile our primitive great sire, to meet
His God-like guest, walks forth, without more train
Accompanied than with his own complete
Perfections ; in himself was all his state,
More solemn than the tedious pomp that waits
On princes when their rich retinue long
Of horses led, and grooms besmear'd with gold,
Dazzles the croud, and sets them all agape.
Nearer his presence Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet with submiss approach and reverence meek,
As to a superior nature bowing low,
Thus said. " Native of Heaven, for other place
None can than Heaven such glorious shape contain ;
Since, by descending from the thrones above,
Those happy places thou hast deign'd a while
To want, and honour these, vouchsafe with us
Two only, who yet by sovran gift possess
This spacious ground, in yonder shady bower
To rest, and what the garden choicest bears
To sit and taste, till this meridian heat
Be over, and the Sun more cool decline."

Whom thus the angelic virtue answer'd mild.
" Adam, I therefore came ; nor art thou such Created, or such place hast here to dwell,
As may not oft invite, though spirits of Heaven,
To visit thee ; lead on then where thy bower
O'ershades ; for these mid-hours, till evening rise,
I have at will." So to the sylvan lodge
They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flowerets deck'd, and fragrant smells ; but Eve,

Undeck'd save with herself more lovely fair
Than wood-nymph, or the fairest goddess feign'd
Of three that in mount Ida naked strove,
Stood to entertain her guest from Heaven ; no veil
She needed, virtue proof ; no thought infirm
Alter'd her cheek. On whom the angel Hail
Bestow'd, the holy salutation us'd
Long after to blest Mary, second Eve.

" Hail, Mother of Mankind, whose fruitful womb
Shall fill the world more numerous with thy sons,
Than with these various fruits the trees of God
Have heap'd this table." — Rais'd of grassy turf
Their table was, and mossy seats had round,
And on her ample square from side to side
All autumn pil'd, though Spring and Autumn here
Danc'd hand in hand. A while discourse they hold ;
No fear lest dinner cool ; when thus began
Our author. " Heavenly stranger, please to taste
These bounties, which our Nourisher, from whom
All perfect good, unmeasur'd out, descends,
To us for food and for delight hath caus'd
The Earth to yield ; unsavoury food perhaps
To spiritual natures ; only this I know,
That one celestial Father gives to all."

To whom the angel. " Therefore what he gives (Whose praise be ever sung) to Man in part
Spiritual, may of purest spirits be found
No ingrateful food : and food alike those pure
Intelligential substances require,
As doth your rational ; and both contain
Within them every lower faculty
Of sense, whereby they hear, see, smell, touch, taste,
Tasting concoct, digest, assimilate,
And corporeal to incorporeal turn.
For know, whatever was created, needs
To be sustain'd and fed : of elements
The grosser feeds the purer, earth the sea,

Earth and the sea feed air, the air those fires
Ethereal, and as lowest first the Moon ;
Whence in her visage round those spots, unpurg'd
Vapours not yet into her substance turn'd.
Nor doth the Moon no nourishment exhale
From her moist continent to higher orbs.
The Sun, that light imparts to all, receives
From all his alimental recompense
In humid exhalations, and at even Supps with the Ocean. Though in Heaven the trees
Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines
Yield nectar ; though from off the boughs each mom
We brush mellifluous dew, and find the ground
Cover'd with pearly grain : yet God hath here
Varied his bounty so with new delights,
As may compare with Heaven ; and to taste
Think not I shall be nice." So down they sat,
And to their viands fell ; nor seemingly
The angel, nor in mist, the common gloss
Of theologians ; but with keen dispatch
Of real hunger, and concoctive heat
To transubstantiate : what redounds, transpires
Through spirits with ease ; nor wonder ; if by fire
Of sooty coal the empiric alchymist
Can turn, or holds it possible to turn,
Metals of drossiest ore to perfect gold,
As from the mine. Meanwhile at table Eve
Minister'd naked, and their flowing cups
With pleasant liquors crown'd : O innocence
Deserving Paradise ! if ever, then,
Then had the sons of God excuse to have been
Enamour'd at that sight ; but in those hearts
Love unlibidinous reign'd, nor jealousy
Was understood, the injur'd lover's Hell.

Thus when with meats and drinks they had suffic'd
Not burthen'd nature, sudden mind arose
In Adam, not to let the occasion pass
Given him by this great conference to know
Of things above his world, and of their being
Who dwell in Heaven, whose excellence he saw
Transcend his own so far ; whose radiant forms,
Divine effulgence, whose high power, so far
Exceeded human : and his wary speech
Thus to the empyreal minister he fram'd.

" Inhabitant with God, now know I well
Thy favour, in this honour done to man ;
Under whose lowly roof thou hast vouchsaf'd
To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste,
Food not of angels, yet accepted so,
As that more willingly thou couldst not seem
At Heaven's high feasts to have fed : yet what compare ?"

To whom the winged hierarch replied.
" O Adam, one Almighty is, from whom
All things proceed, and up to him return,
If not deprav'd from good, created all
Such to perfection, one first matter all,
Endued with various forms, various degree
Of substance, and, in things that live, of life ;
But more refin'd, more spiritous, and pure,
As nearer to him plac'd, or nearer tending
Each in their several active spheres assign'd,
Till body up to spirit work, in bounds
Proportion'd to each kind. So from the root Springs lighter the green stalk, from thence the leaves

More aery, last the bright consummate flower
Spirits odorous breathes : flowers and their fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd,
To vital spirits aspire, to animal,

To intellectual : give both life and sense,
 Fancy and understanding ; whence the soul
 Reason receives, and reason is her being,
 Discursive, or intuitive ; discourse
 Is oftst yours, the latter most is ours,
 Differing but in degree, of kind the same.
 Wonder not then, what God for you saw good
 If I refuse not, but convert, as you,
 To proper substance. Time may come, when men
 With angels may participate, and find
 No inconvenient diet, nor too light fare ;
 And from these corporal nutriments perhaps
 Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit,
 Improv'd by tract of time, and, wing'd, ascend
 Ethereal, as we : or may, at choice,
 Here or in heavenly Paradises dwell ;
 If ye be found obedient, and retain Unalterably firm his love entire,
 Whose progeny you are. Meanwhile enjoy
 Your fill what happiness this happy state
 Can comprehend, incapable of more."

To whom the patriarch of mankind replied.
 " O favourable spirit, propitious guest,
 Well hast thou taught the way that might direct
 Our knowledge, and the scale of nature set
 From centre to circumference ; whereon,
 In contemplation of created things,
 By steps we may ascend to God. But say,
 What meant that caution join'd, If ye be found
 Obedient ? Can we want obedience then
 To him, or possibly his love desert,
 Who form'd us from the dust, and plac'd us here
 Full to the utmost measure of what bliss
 Human desires can seek or apprehend ?"

To whom the angel. " Son of Heaven and Earth,
 Attend : that thou art happy, owe to God ;
 That thou continuest such, owe to thyself,
 That is, to thy obedience ; therein stand.
 This was that caution given thee, be advis'd.
 God made thee perfect, not immutable ;
 And good he made thee ; but to persevere
 He left it in thy power ; ordain'd thy will
 By nature free, not over-rul'd by fate
 Inextricable, or strict necessity :
 Our voluntary service he requires,
 Not our necessitated ; such with him
 Finds no acceptance, nor can find ; for how
 Can hearts, not free, be tried whether they serve
 Willing or no, who will but what they must
 By destiny, and can no other choose ?
 Myself, and all the angelic host, that stand
 In sight of God enthron'd, our happy state
 Hold, as you yours, while our obedience holds ;
 No other surety none : freely we serve,
 Because we freely love, as in our will
 To love or not ; in this we stand or fall :
 And some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n,
 And so from Heaven to deepest Hell ; O fall
 From what high state of bliss, into what woe !"

To whom our great progenitor. " Thy words
 Attentive, and with more delighted ear,
 Divine instructor, I have heard, than when
 Cherubic songs by night from neighbouring hills
 Aereal music send : nor knew I not
 To be both will and deed created free ;
 Yet that we never shall forget to love
 Our Maker, and obey him whose command
 Single is yet so just, my constant thoughts
 Amur'd me, and still assure : though what thou tell'st

Hath pass'd in Heaven, some doubts within me move,

But more desire to hear, if thou consent,
 The full relation, which must needs be strange,
 Worthy of sacred silence to be heard ;
 And we have yet large day, for scarce the Sun
 Hath finish'd half his journey, and scarce begins
 His other half in the great zone of Heaven."

Thus Adam made request : and Raphaël,
 After short pause assenting, thus began.

" High matter thou enjoin'st me, O prime of men,
 Sad task and hard : for how shall I relate
 To human sense the invisible exploits
 Of warring spirits ? how, without remorse,
 The ruin of so many glorious once
 And perfect while they stood ? how last unfold
 The secrets of another world, perhaps
 Not lawful to reveal ? yet for thy good
 This is dispens'd ; and what surmounts the reach
 Of human sense, I shall delineate so,
 By likening spiritual to corporal forms,
 As may express them best ; though what if Earth
 Be but the shadow of Heaven, and things therein
 Each to other like, more than on Earth is thought ?

" As yet this world was not, and Chaos wild
 Reign'd where these Heavens now roll, where Earth
 now rests

Upon her centre pois'd ; when on a day
 (For time, though in eternity, applied
 To motion, measures all things durable
 By present, past, and future,) on such day [host
 As Heaven's great year brings forth, the empyreal
 Of angels by imperial summons call'd,
 Innumerable before the Almighty's throne
 Forthwith, from all the ends of Heaven, appear'd
 Under their hierarchs in orders bright :
 Ten thousand thousand ensigns high advanc'd,
 Standards and gonfalons 'twixt van and rear
 Stream in the air, and for distinction serve
 Of hierarchies, of orders, and degrees ;
 Or in their glittering tissues bear imblaz'd
 Holy memorials, acts of zeal and love
 Recorded eminent. Thus when in orbs
 Of circuit inexpressible they stood,
 Orb within orb, the Father Infinite,
 By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the Son,
 Amidst as from a flaming mount, whose top
 Brightness had made invisible, thus spake.

" Hear, all ye angels, progeny of light,
 Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, powers,
 Hear my decree, which unrevok'd shall stand.
 This day I have begot whom I declare
 My only Son, and on this holy hill
 Him have anointed, whom ye now behold
 At my right hand ; your head I him appoint ;
 And by myself have sworn, to him shall bow
 All knees in Heaven, and shall confess him Lord :
 Under his great vice-gerent reign abide
 United, as one individual soul,
 For ever happy : him who disobeys,
 Me disobeys, breaks union, and that day,
 Cast out from God and blessed vision, falls
 Into utter darkness, deep ingulf'd, his place
 Ordain'd without redemption, without end."

" So spake the Omnipotent, and with his words
 All seem'd well pleas'd : all seem'd, but were not all.

That day, as other solemn days, they spent
 In song and dance about the sacred hill :
 Mystical dance, which yonder starry sphere

Of planets, and of fix'd, in all her wheels
 Resembles nearest, mazes intricate,
 Eccentric, intervolv'd, yet regular
 Then most, when most irregular they seem ;
 And in their motions Harmony divine
 So smooths her charming tones, that God's own ear
 Listens delighted. Evening now approach'd,
 (For we have also our evening and our morn,
 We ours for change delectable, not need ;)
 Forthwith from dance to sweet repast they turn
 Desirous ; all in circles as they stood,
 Tables are set, and on a sudden pil'd
 With angel's food, and rubied nectar flows
 In pearl, in diamond, and massy gold,
 Fruit of delicious vines, the growth of Heaven.
 On flowers repos'd, and with fresh flowerets crown'd,
 They eat, they drink, and in communion sweet
 Quaff immortality and joy, secure
 Of surfeit, where full measure only bounds
 Excess, before the all-bounteous King, who shower'd
 With copious hand, rejoicing in their joy.
 Now when ambrosial night with clouds exhal'd
 From that high mount of God, whence light and shade

[chang'd]
 Spring both, the face of brightest Heaven had
 To grateful twilight, (for night comes not there
 In darker veil,) and roseat dew's dispos'd
 All but the unsleeping eyes of God to rest ;
 Wide over all the plain, and wider far
 Than all this globous Earth in plain outspread,
 (Such are the courts of God,) the angelic throng
 Dispers'd in bands and files, their camp extend
 By living streams among the trees of life,
 Pavilions numberless, and sudden rear'd,
 Celestial tabernacles, where they slept [course
 Fann'd with cool winds ; save those, who, in their Melodious hymns about the sovran throne
 Alternate all night long : but not so wak'd
 Satan ; so call him now, his former name
 Is heard no more in Heaven ; he of the first,
 If not the first arch-angel, great in power,
 In favour and pre-eminence, yet fraught
 With envy against the Son of God, that day
 Honour'd by his great Father, and proclaim'd
 Messiah King anointed, could not bear [pair'd.
 Through pride that sight, and thought himself im-
 Deep malice thence conceiving and disdain,
 Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour
 Friendliest to sleep and silence, he resolv'd
 With all his legions to dislodge, and leave
 Unworshipt, unbey'd, the throne supreme,
 Contemptuous ; and his next subordinate
 Awakening, thus to him in secret spake : [close

“ ‘ Sleep'st thou, companion dear ? What sleep can Thy eye-lids ? and remember'st what decree
 Of yesterday, so late hath pass'd the lips
 Of Heaven's Almighty. Thou to me thy thoughts
 Wast wont, I mine to thee was wont to impart ;
 Both waking we were one : how then can now
 Thy sleep dissent ? New laws thou seest impos'd ;
 New laws from him who reigns, new minds may raise

In us who serve, new counsels, to debate
 What doubtful may ensue : more in this place
 To utter is not safe. Assemble thou
 Of all those myriads which we lead the chief ;
 Tell them, that by command, ere yet dim night
 Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste,
 And all who under me their banners wave,
 Homeward, with flying march, where we possess

The quarters of the north ; there to prepare
 Fit entertainment to receive our King,
 The great Messiah, and his new commands,
 Who speedily through all the hierarchies
 Intends to pass triumphant, and give laws.'

“ So spake the false arch-angel, and infus'd
 Bad influence into the unwary breast
 Of his associate : he together calls,
 Or several one by one, the regent powers,
 Under him regent ; tells, as he was taught,
 That the Most High commanding, now ere night,
 Now ere dim night had disencumber'd Heaven,
 The great hierarchal standard was to move ;
 Tells the suggested cause, and casts between Ambiguous words and jealousies, to sound
 Or taint integrity : but all obey'd
 The wonted signal, and superior voice
 Of their great potentate ; for great indeed
 His name, and high was his degree in Heaven ;
 His countenance, as the morning-star that guides
 The starry flock, allur'd them, and with lies
 Drew after him the third part of Heaven's host.
 Meanwhile the Eternal Eye, whose sight discerns
 Abstrusest thoughts, from forth his holy mount,
 And from within the golden lamps that burn
 Nightly before him, saw without their light
 Rebellion rising ; saw in whom, how spread
 Among the sons of morn, what multitudes
 Were banded to oppose his high decree ;
 And, smiling, to his only Son thus said.

“ ‘ Son, thou in whom my glory I behold
 In full resplendence, heir of all my might,
 Nearly it now concerns us to be sure
 Of our omnipotence, and with what arms
 We mean to hold what anciently we claim
 Of deity or empire : such a foe
 Is rising, who intends to erect his throne
 Equal to ours, throughout the spacious north :
 Nor so content, hath in his thought to try
 In battle, what our power is, or our right.
 Let us advise, and to this hazard draw
 With speed what force is left, and all employ
 In our defence ; lest unawares we lose
 This our high place, our sanctuary, our hill.

“ To whom the Son with calm aspect and clear
 Lightening divine, ineffable, serene,
 Made answer. ‘ Mighty Father, thou thy foes
 Justly hast in derision, and, secure,
 Laugh'st at their vain designs and tumults vain,
 Matter to me of glory, whom their hate
 Illustrates, when they see all regal power
 Given me to quell their pride, and in event
 Know whether I be dextrous to subdue
 Thy rebels, or be found the worst in Heaven.'

“ So spake the Son ; but Satan, with his powers,
 Far was advanc'd on winged speed ; an host
 Innumerable as the stars of night,
 Or stars of morning, dew-drops, which the Sun
 Impearls on every leaf and every flower.
 Regions they pass'd, the mighty regencies
 Of seraphim, and potentates, and thrones,
 In their triple degrees ; regions to which
 All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
 Than what this garden is to all the earth,
 And all the sea, from one entire globose
 Stretch'd into longitude ; which having pass'd,
 At length into the limits of the north
 They came ; and Satan to his royal seat
 High on a hill, far blazing, as a mount
 Rais'd on a mount, with pyramids and towers

From diamond quarries hewn, and rocks of gold ;
 The palace of great Lucifer, (so call
 That structure in the dialect of men
 Interpreted,) which not long after, he,
 Affecting all equality with God,
 In imitation of that mount whereon
 Messiah was declar'd in sight of Heaven,
 The Mountain of the Congregation call'd ;
 For thither he assembled all his train,
 Pretending, so commanded, to consult
 About the great reception of their king,
 Thither to come, and with calumnious art
 Of counterfeited truth thus held their ears :
 " Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues,
 powers ;

If these magnificent titles yet remain
 Not merely titular, since by decree
 Another now hath to himself ingross'd
 All power, and us eclips'd under the name
 Of King anointed, for whom all this haste
 Of midnight-march, and hurried meeting here,
 This only to consult how we may best,
 With what may be devis'd of honours new,
 Receive him coming to receive from us
 Knee-tribute yet unpaid, prostration vile !
 Too much to one ! but double how endur'd,
 To one, and to his image now proclaim'd ?
 But what if better counsels might erect
 Our minds, and teach us to cast off this yoke ?
 Will ye submit your necks, and choose to bend
 The supple knee ? Ye will not, if I trust
 To know ye right, or if ye know yourselves
 Natives and sons of Heaven possess'd before
 By none ; and if not equal all, yet free,
 Equally free ; for orders and degrees
 Jar not with liberty, but well consist.
 Who can in reason then, or right, assume
 Monarchy over such as live by right
 His equals, if in power and splendour less,
 In freedom equal ? or can introduce
 Law and edict on us, who without law
 Err not ? much less for this to be our lord,
 And look for adoration, to the abuse
 Of those imperial titles, which assert
 Our being ordain'd to govern, not to serve.'

" Thus far his bold discourse without controul
 Had audience : when among the seraphim
 Abdiel, than whom none with more zeal ador'd
 The Deity, and divine commands obey'd,
 Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe
 The current of his fury thus oppos'd.

" O argument blasphemous, false and proud !
 Words which no ear ever to hear in Heaven
 Expected, least of all from thee, ingrate,
 In place thyself so high above thy peers.
 Canst thou with impious obloquy condemn
 The just decree of God, pronounc'd and sworn,
 That to his only Son, by right endued
 With regal sceptre, every soul in Heaven
 Shall bend the knee, and in that honour due
 Confess him rightful king ? unjust, thou say'st,
 Flathy unjust, to bind with laws the free,
 And equal over equals to let reign,
 One over all with unsucceeded power.
 Shalt thou give law to God ? shalt thou dispute
 With him the points of liberty, who made [Heaven
 Thine what thou art, and form'd the powers of
 Such as he pleas'd, and circumscrib'd their being ?
 Yet, by experience taught, we know how good,
 And of our good and of our dignity,

How provident he is ; how far from thought
 To make us less, bent rather to exalt
 Our happy state, under one head more near United. But to grant it thee unjust,
 That equal over equals monarch reign :
 Thyself, though great and glorious, dost thou count,
 Or all angelic nature join'd in one,
 Equal to him begotten son ? by whom,
 As by his word, the Mighty Father made [Heaven
 All things, even thee ; and all the spirits of
 By him created in their bright degrees,
 Crown'd them with glory, and to their glory nam'd
 Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, powers,
 Essential powers ; nor by his reign obscur'd,
 But more illustrious made ; since he the head
 One of our number thus reduc'd becomes ;
 His laws our laws ; all honour to him done
 Returns our own. Cease then this impious rage,
 And tempt not these ; but hasten to appease
 The incensed Father, and the incensed Son,
 While pardon may be found in time besought.'

" So spake the fervent angel ; but his zeal
 None seconded, as out of season judg'd,
 Or singular and rash : whereat rejoic'd
 The apostate, and, more haughty, thus replied.
 ' That we were form'd then, say'st thou ? and the work

Of secondary hands, by task transferr'd
 From Father to his Son ? strange point and new !
 Doctrine which we would know whence learn'd :
 who saw

When this creation was ? remember'st thou
 Thy making, while the Maker gave thee being ?
 We know no time when we were not as now ;
 Know none before us, self-begot, self-rais'd
 By our own quickening power, when fatal course
 Had circled his full orb, the birth mature
 Of this our native Heaven, ethereal sons.
 Our puissance is our own : our own right hand
 Shall teach us highest deeds, by proof to try
 Who is our equal : then thou shalt behold
 Whether by supplication we intend
 Address, and to begirt the almighty throne
 Beseeching or besieging. This report,
 These tidings carry to the anointed King ;
 And fly, ere evil intercept thy flight.'

" He said ; and, as the sound of waters deep,
 Hoarse murmur echo'd to his words applause
 Through the infinite host : nor less for that
 The flaming seraph fearless, though alone
 Encompass'd round with foes, thus answer'd bold.

" O alienate from God, O spirit accurs'd,
 Forsaken of all good ! I see thy fall
 Determin'd, and thy hapless crew involv'd
 In this perfidious fraud, contagion spread
 Both of thy crime and punishment ; henceforth
 No more be troubled how to quit the yoke
 Of God's Messiah ; those indulgent laws
 Will not be now vouchsaf'd ; other decrees
 Against thee are gone forth without recall :
 That golden sceptre, which thou didst reject,
 Is now an iron rod to bruise and break
 Thy disobedience. Well thou didst advise ;
 Yet not for thy advice or threats I fly
 These wicked tents devoted, lest the wrath
 Impendent, raging into sudden flame,
 Distinguish not : for soon expect to feel
 His thunder on thy head, devouring fire.
 Then who created thee lamenting learn,
 When who can uncreate thee thou shalt know.

" So spake the seraph Abdiel, faithful found
Among the faithless, faithful only he ;
Among innumerable false, unmov'd,
Unshaken, uneduc'd, unterrified,
His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal ;
Nor number, nor example, with him wrought
To swerve from truth, or change his constant mind,
Though single. From amidst them forth he pass'd,
Long way through hostile scorn, which he sustain'd
Superior, nor of violence fear'd aught ;
And, with retorted scorn, his back he turn'd
On those proud towers to swift destruction doom'd."

Book VI.

The Argument.

Raphaël continues to relate how Michael and Gabriel were sent forth to battle against Satan and his angels. The first fight described : Satan and his powers retire under night : he calls a council ; invents devilish engines, which, in the second day's fight, put Michael and his angels to some disorder ; but they at length, pulling up mountains, overwhelmed both the force and machines of Satan : yet, the tumult not so ending, God, on the third day, sends MESSIAH his Son, for whom he had reserved the glory of that victory : he, in the power of his Father, coming to the place, and causing all his legions to stand still on either side, with his chariot and thunder driving into the midst of his enemies, pursues them, unable to resist, towards the wall of Heaven ; which opening, they leap down, with horror and confusion, into the place of punishment prepared for them in the deep : MESSIAH returns with triumph to his Father.

" ALL night the dreadless angel, unpursued,
Through Heaven's wide champain held his way ;
till Morn,

Wak'd by the circling Hours, with rosy hand
Unbarr'd the gates of Light. There is a cave
Within the mount of God, fast by his throne,
Where Light and Darkness in perpetual round
Lodge and dislodge by turns, which makes through
Heaven

Grateful vicissitude, like day and night ;
Light issues forth, and at the other door
Obsequious Darkness enters, till her hour [well
To veil the Heaven, though darkness there might Seem twilight here : and now went forth the Morn,
Such as in highest Heaven, array'd in gold
Empyrean ; from before her vanish'd Night,
Shot through with orient beams ; when all the plain
Cover'd with thick embattled squadrons bright,
Chariots, and flaming arms, and fiery steeds,
Reflecting blaze on blaze, first met his view :
War he perceiv'd, war in procinct ; and found
Already known what he for news had thought
To have reported : gladly then he mix'd
Among those friendly powers, who him receiv'd
With joy and acclamations loud, that one
That of so many myriads fall'n yet one,
Return'd not lost. On to the sacred hill
They led him high applauded, and present
Before the seat supreme ; from whence a voice,
From midst a golden cloud, thus mild was heard.

" ' Servant of God, well done ; ' well hast thou fought

The better fight, who single hast maintain'd
Against revolted multitudes the cause
Of truth, in word mightier than they in arms ;
And for the testimony of truth hast borne
Universal reproach, far worse to bear
Than violence ; for this was all thy care
To stand approv'd in sight of God, though worlds
Judg'd thee perverse : the easier conquest now
Remains thee, aided by this host of friends,
Back on thy foes more glorious to return,
Than scorn'd thou didst depart ; and to subdue
By force, who reason for their law refuse,
Right reason for their law, and for their king
Messiah, who by right of merit reigns.
Go, Michael, of celestial armies prince,
And thou, in military prowess next,
Gabriel, lead forth to battle these my sons
Invincible ; lead forth my armed saints,
By thousands and by millions, rang'd for fight,
Equal in number to that godless crew
Rebellious : them with fire and hostile arms
Fearless assault ; and, to the brow of Heaven
Pursuing, drive them out from God and bliss,
Into their place of punishment, the gulf
Of Tartarus, which ready opens wide
His fiery Chaos to receive their fall."

" So spake the Sovran Voice, and clouds began
To darken all the hill, and smoke to roll
In dusky wreaths, reluctant flames, the sign
Of wrath awak'd ; nor with less dread the loud
Ethereal trumpet from on high 'gan blow :
At which command the powers militant
That stood for Heaven, in mighty quadrate join'd
Of union irresistible, mov'd on
In silence their bright legions, to the sound
Of instrumental harmony, that breath'd
Heroic ardour to adventurous deeds
Under their God-like leaders, in the cause
Of God and his Messiah. On they move
Indissolubly firm ; nor obvious hill,
Nor straitening vale, nor wood, nor stream, divides
Their perfect ranks : for high above the ground
Their march was, and the passive air upbore
Their nimble tread ; as when the total kind
Of birds, in orderly array on wing,
Came summoned over Eden to receive
Their names of thee ; so over many a tract [wide,
Of Heaven they march'd, and many a province
Tenfold the length of this terrene : at last,
Far in the horizon to the north appear'd
From skirt to skirt a fiery region, stretch'd
In battailous aspect, and nearer view
Bristled with upright beams innumerable
Of rigid spears, and helmets throng'd, and shields
Various, with boastful argument pourtray'd,
The banded powers of Satan hasting on
With furious expedition ; for they ween'd
That self-same day, by fight, or by surprise,
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To set the Envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer ; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain
In the mid way : though strange to us it seem'd
At first, that angel should with angel war,
And in fierce hosting meet, who wont to meet
So oft in festivals of joy and love
Unanimous, as sons of one great Sire,
Hymning the Eternal Father : but the shout
Of battle now began, and rushing sound
Of onset ended soon each milder thought.
Ugh in the midst exalted as a God,

The apostate in his sun-bright chariot sat,
 Idol of majesty divine, enclos'd
 With flaming cherubim, and golden shields;
 Then lighted from his gorgeous throne, for now
 'Twixt host and host but narrow space was left,
 A dreadful interval, and front to front
 Presented stood in terrible array
 Of hideous length: before the cloudy van,
 On the rough edge of battle ere it join'd,
 Satan, with vast and haughty strides advanc'd,
 Came towering, arm'd in adamant and gold;
 Abdiel that sight endur'd not, where he stood
 Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,
 And thus his own undaunted heart explores.
 "O Heaven! that such resemblance of the Highest

Should yet remain, where faith and realty [might Remain not: wherefore should not strength and Here fail where virtue fails, or weakest prove
 Where boldest, though to sight unconquerable?
 His puissance, trusting in the Almighty's aid,
 I mean to try, whose reason I have tried
 Found and false: nor is it aught but just,
 That he, who in debate of truth hath won,
 Should win in arms, in both disputes alike
 True; though brutish that contest and foul,
 When reason hath to deal with force, yet so
 True reason is that reason overcome."

"So pondering, and from his armed peers
 Turn stepping opposite, half-way he met
 His daring foe, at this prevention more
 Accid'd, and thus securely him defied. [reach'd
 "Proud, art thou met? thy hope was to have
 The height of thy aspiring unoppos'd,
 The throne of God unguarded, and his side
 Unsound'd, at the terror of thy power
 To tent tongue: fool! not to think how vain
 Against the Omnipotent to rise in arms;
 No out of smallest things could, without end,
 Have rais'd incessant armies to defeat
 Thy folly; or with solitary hand
 Leaping beyond all limit, at one blow,
 Loaded, could have finish'd thee, and whelm'd
 Thy regions under darkness: but thou seest
 We are not of thy train; there be, who faith
 Prefer, and piety to God, though then
 To thee not visible, when I alone
 Would in thy world erroneous to dissent
 From all: my sect thou seest; now learn too late
 How few sometimes may know, when thousands Err."

When the grand foe, with scornful eye askance,
 Answer'd. "Ill for thee, but in wish'd hour
 My revenge, first sought for, thou return'st
 In fight, seditious angel! to receive
 Thy merited reward, the first assay
 Of thy right hand provok'd since first that tongue,
 And with contradiction, durst oppose
 A part of the gods, in synod met
 To assert; who, while they feel
 A divine within them, can allow Resistance to none. But well thou com'st
 Before thy fellows, ambitious to win
 From me some plume, that thy success may show
 Instruction to the rest: this pause between,
 I answer'd lest thou boast,) to let thee know,
 I thought that liberty and Heaven
 Evenly souls had been all one; but now
 We that most through sloth had rather serve,
 Leading spirits, train'd up in feast and song!

Such hast thou arm'd, the minstrelsy of Heaven,
 Servility with freedom to contend,
 As both their deeds compar'd this day shall prove."
 "To whom in brief thus Abdiel stern replied.
 'Apostate! still thou err'st, nor end wilt find
 Of erring. from the path of truth remote:
 Unjustly thou depriv'st it with the name
 Of servitude, to serve whom God ordains,
 Or nature: God and nature bid the same,
 When he who rules is worthiest, and excels
 Them whom he governs. This is servitude,
 To serve the unwise, or him who hath rebell'd
 Against his worthier, as thine now serve thee,
 Thyself not free, but to thyself enthrall'd;
 Yet lewdly dar'st our ministring upbraid.
 Reign thou in Hell, thy kingdom; let me serve
 In Heaven God ever blest, and his divine
 Behests obey, worthiest to be obey'd; [while
 Yet chains in Hell, not realms, expect: mean-
 From me return'd, as erst thou saidst, from flight,
 This greeting on thy impious crest receive.'

"So saying, a noble stroke he lifted high,
 Which hung not, but so swift with tempest fell
 On the proud crest of Satan, that no sight,
 Nor motion of swift thought, less could his shield,
 Such ruin intercept: ten paces huge
 He back recoil'd; the tenth on bended knee
 His massy spear upstaid; as if on Earth
 Winds under ground, or waters forcing way
 Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
 Half sunk with all his pines. Amazement seiz'd
 The rebel thrones, but greater rage, to see [shout,
 Thus foil'd their mightiest; ours joy fill'd, and Presage of victory, and fierce desire
 Of battle: whereat Michael bid sound
 The arch-angel trumpet; through the vast of Heaven
 It sounded, and the faithful armies rung
 Hosanna to the Highest: nor stood at gaze
 The adverse legions, nor less hideous join'd
 The horrid shock. Now storming fury rose,
 And clamour, such as heard in Heaven till now
 Was never; arms on armour clashing bray'd
 Horrible discord, and the madding wheels
 Of brazen chariots rag'd; dire was the noise
 Of conflict; over head the dismal hiss
 Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew,
 And flying vaulted either host with fire.
 So under fiery cope together rush'd
 Both battles main, with ruinous assault
 And inextinguishable rage. All Heaven
 Resounded; and had Earth been then, all Earth
 Had to her centre shook. What wonder? where Millions of fierce encountering angels fought
 On either side, the least of whom could wield
 These elements, and arm him with the force
 Of all their regions: how much more of power
 Army against army numberless to raise
 Dreadful combustion warring, and disturb,
 Though not destroy, their happy native seat;
 Had not the Eternal King Omnipotent,
 From his strong hold of Heaven, high over-rul'd
 And limited their might; though number'd such
 As each divided legion might have seem'd
 A numerous host; in strength each armed hand
 A legion; led in fight, yet leader seem'd
 Each warrior single as in chief, expert
 When to advance, or stand, or turn the sway
 Of battle, open when, and when to close
 The ridges of grim war: no thought of flight,
 None of retreat, no unbecoming deed

That argued fear ; each on himself relied,
 As only in his arm the moment lay
 Of victory : deeds of eternal fame
 Were done, but infinite ; for wide was spread
 That war, and various, sometimes on firm ground
 A standing fight, then, soaring on main wing,
 'Tormented all the air ; all air seem'd then
 Conflicting fire. Long time in even scale
 The battle hung ; till Satan, who that day
 Prodigious power had shown, and met in arms
 No equal, ranging through the dire attack
 Of fighting seraphim confus'd, at length
 Saw where the sword of Michael smote, and fell'd
 Squadrons at once ; with huge two-handed sway
 Brandish'd aloft, the horrid edge came down
 Wide-wasting ; such destruction to withstand
 He hasted, and oppos'd the rocky orb
 Of tenfold adamant, his ample shield,
 A vast circumference. At his approach
 The great arch-angel from his warlike toil
 Surceas'd, and glad, as hoping here to end
 Intestine war in Heaven, the arch-foe subdued
 Or captive dragg'd in chains, with hostile frown
 And visage all inflam'd first thus began.

“ ‘ Author of evil, unknown till thy revolt,
 Unnam'd in Heaven, now plenteous, as thou seest
 These acts of hateful strife, hateful to all,
 Though heaviest by just measure on thyself
 And thy adherents : how hast thou disturb'd
 Heaven's blessed peace, and into nature brought Misery, uncreated till the crime
 Of thy rebellion ! how hast thou instill'd
 Thy malice into thousands, once upright
 And faithful, now proved false ! But think not here
 To trouble holy rest ; Heaven casts thee out
 From all her confines. Heaven, the seat of bliss,
 Brooks not the works of violence and war.
 Hence then, and evil go with thee along,
 Thy offspring, to the place of evil, Hell ;
 Thou and thy wicked crew ! there mingle broils,
 Ere this avenging sword begin thy doom, [God,
 Or some more sudden vengeance, wing'd from Precipitate thee with augmented pain.’

“ So spake the prince of angels ; to whom thus
 The adversary. ‘ Nor think thou with wind
 Of aery threats to awe whom yet with deeds
 Thou canst not. Hast thou turn'd the least of these
 To flight, or if to fall, but that they rise
 Unvanquish'd, easier to transact with me [threats
 That thou should'st hope, imperious, and with
 To chase me hence ? err not, that so shall end
 The strife which thou call'st evil, but we style
 The strife of glory ; which we mean to win,
 Or turn this Heaven itself into the Hell
 Thou fablest ; here however to dwell free,
 If not to reign : meanwhile thy utmost force,
 And join him nam'd Almighty to thy aid,
 I fly not, but have sought thee far and nigh.

“ They ended parle, and both address'd for fight
 Unspeakable ; for who, though with the tongue
 Of angels, can relate, or to what things
 Liken on Earth conspicuous, that may lift
 Human imagination to such height
 Of godlike power ? for likest gods they seem'd,
 Stood they or mov'd, in stature, motion, arms,
 Fit to decide the empire of great Heaven.
 Now wav'd their fiery swords, and in the air
 Made horrid circles : two broad suns their shields
 Blaz'd opposite, while expectation stood
 In horror : from each hand with speed retir'd,

Where erst was thickest fight, the angelic throng,
 And left large field, unsafe within the wind
 Of such commotion ; such as, to set forth
 Great things by small, if, Nature's concord broke,
 Among the constellations war were sprung,
 Two planets, rushing from aspect malign
 Of fiercest opposition, in mid sky
 Should combat, and their jarring spheres confound
 Together both with next to almighty arm
 Uplifted imminent, one stroke they aim'd
 That might determine, and not need repeat,
 As not of power at once ; nor odds appear'd
 In might or swift prevention : but the sword
 Of Michael from the armoury of God
 Was given him temper'd so, that neither keen
 Nor solid might resist that edge : it met
 The sword of Satan, with steep force to smite
 Descending, and in half cut sheer ; nor staid,
 But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering, shar'd
 All his right side : then Satan first knew pain,
 And writh'd him to and fro convolv'd ; so sore
 The griding sword with discontinuous wound
 Pass'd through him : but the ethereal substance clos'd
 Not long divisible ; and from the gash
 A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd
 Sanguine, such as celestial spirits may bleed,
 And all his armour stain'd, ere while so bright
 Forthwith on all sides to his aid was run
 By angels many and strong, who interpos'd
 Defence, while others bore him on their shields
 Back to his chariot, where it stood retir'd
 From off the files of war : there they him laid
 Gnashing for anguish, and despite, and shame,
 To find himself not matchless, and his pride
 Humbled by such rebuke, so far beneath
 His confidence to equal God in power.
 Yet soon he heal'd ; for spirits that live thorough
 Vital in every part, not as frail man
 In entrails, heart or head, liver or reins,
 Cannot but by annihilating die ;
 Nor in their liquid texture mortal wound
 Receive, no more than can the fluid air :
 All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,
 All intellect, all sense ; and, as they please,
 They limb themselves, and colour, shape, or size
 Assume, as likes them best, condense or rare.

“ Meanwhile in other parts like deeds deserv'd
 Memorial, where the might of Gabriel fought,
 And with fierce ensigns pierc'd the deep array
 Of Moloch, furious king ; who him defied,
 And at his chariot-wheels to drag him bound
 Threaten'd, nor from the Holy One of Heaven
 Refrain'd his tongue blasphemous ; but anon
 Down cloven to the waist, with shatter'd arms
 And uncouth pain fled bellowing. On each wing
 Uriel, and Raphaël, his vaunting foe,
 Though huge, and in a rock of diamond arm'd,
 Vanquish'd Adramelech, and Asmadai,
 Two potent thrones, that to be less than gods
 Disdain'd, but meaner thoughts learn'd in the flight, [m
 Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate
 Nor stood unmindful Abdiel to annoy
 The atheist crew, but with redoubled blow
 Ariel, and Arioch, and the violence
 Of Ramiel scorch'd and blasted, overthrew.
 I might relate of thousands, and their names
 Eternize here on Earth ; but those elect
 Angels, contented with their fame in Heaven,
 Seek not the praise of men : the other sort,

In might though wond'rous and in acts of war,
Nor of renown less eager, yet by doom
Cancell'd from Heaven and sacred memory,
Nameless in dark oblivion let them dwell.
For strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise
And ignominy; yet to glory aspires
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame:
Therefore eternal silence be their doom. [swerv'd,

"And now, their mightiest quell'd, the battle
With many an inroad gor'd; deformed rout
Enter'd, and foul disorder; all the ground
With shiver'd armour strown, and on a heap
Chariot and charioteer lay overturn'd,
And fiery-foaming steeds; what stood, recoil'd
O'er-wearied, through the faint Satanic host
Defensive scarce, or with pale fear surpris'd,
Then first with fear surpris'd, and sense of pain,
Fled ignominious, to such evil brought
By sin of disobedience; till that hour
Not liable to fear, or flight, or pain.

Far otherwise the inviolable saints,
In cubic phalanx firm, advanc'd entire,
Invulnerable, impenetrably arm'd;
Such high advantages their innocence
Gave them above their foes; not to have sinn'd,
Not to have disobey'd; in fight they stood
Unwearied, unobnoxious to be pain'd [mov'd.

By wound, though from their place by violence
Now Night her course began, and, over Heaven
Inducing darkness, grateful truce impos'd,
And silence on the odious din of war:
Under her cloudy covert both retir'd,
Victor and vanquish'd: on the foughten field
Michael and his angels prevalent
Encamping, plac'd in guard their watches round,
Cherubic waving fires: on the other part,
Satan with his rebellious disappear'd,
Far in the dark dislodg'd; and, void of rest,
His potentates to council call'd by night;
And in the midst thus undismay'd began.

"O now in danger tried, now known in arms
Not to be overpower'd, companions dear,
Found worthy not of liberty alone,
Too mean pretence! but what we more affect,
Honour, dominion, glory, and renown;
Who have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight
And if one day, why not eternal days?)
What Heaven's Lord had powerfulest to send Against us from about his throne, and judg'd
Sufficient to subdue us to his will,
But proves not so: then fallible, it seems,
Of future we may deem him, though till now
Omniscient thought. True is, less firmly arm'd,
Some disadvantage we endur'd and pain,
Till now not known, but, known, as soon condemn'd;
Since now we find this our empyreal form
Incapable of mortal injury,
Imperishable, and though pierc'd with wound,
Soon closing, and by native vigour heal'd.
Of evil then so small, as easy think
The remedy; perhaps more valid arms,
Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes,
Or equal what between us made the odds,
Is nature none: if other hidden cause
Left them superior, while we can preserve
Unclost our minds, and understanding sound,
Due search and consultation will disclose."

"He sat; and in the assembly next upstood

Nisroch, of principalities the prime;
As one he stood escap'd from cruel fight,
Sore toil'd, his riven arms to havoc hewn,
And cloudy in aspect thus answering spake.

"Deliverer from new lords, leader to free
Enjoyment of our right as gods; yet hard
For gods, and too unequal work we find,
Against unequal arms to fight in pain,
Against unpain'd, impassive; from which evil
Ruin must needs ensue; for what avails [pain
Valour or strength, though matchless, quell'd with Which all subdues, and makes remiss the hands
Of mightiest? Sense of pleasure we may well
Spare out of life perhaps, and not repine,
But live content, which is the calmest life:
But pain is perfect misery, the worst
Of evils, and, excessive, overturns
All patience. He, who therefore can invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies, or arm
Ourselves with like defence, to me deserves
No less than for deliverance what we owe."

"Whereto with look compos'd Satan replied.
'Not uninvented that, which thou aright
Believ'st so main to our success, I bring.
Which of us who beholds the bright surface
Of this ethereous mould whereon we stand,
This continent of spacious Heaven adorn'd
With plant, fruit, flower ambrosial, gems, and gold;
Whose eye so superficially surveys
These things, as not to mind from whence they grow
Deep under ground, materials dark and crude,
Of spiritous and fiery spume, till, touch'd
With Heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
So beauteous, opening to the ambient light?
These in their dark nativity the deep
Shall yield us, pregnant with infernal flame;
Which into hollow engines, long and round,
Thick ramm'd, at the other bore with touch of fire
Dilated and infuriate, shall send forth
From far, with thundering noise, among our foes
Such implements of mischief, as shall dash
To pieces, and o'erwhelm whatever stands
Adverse, that they shall fear we have disarm'd
The Thunderer of his only dreaded bolt.
Nor long shall be our labour; yet ere dawn
Effect shall end our wish. Meanwhile revive;
Abandon fear; to strength and counsel join'd
Think nothing hard, much less to be despair'd.

"He ended, and his words their drooping cheer
Enlighten'd, and their languish'd hope reviv'd.
The invention all admir'd, and each, how he
To be the inventor miss'd; so easy it seem'd
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought

Impossible: yet, haply, of thy race
In future days, if malice should abound,
Some one intent on mischief, or inspir'd
With devilish machination, might devise
Like instrument to plague the sons of men
For sin, on war and mutual slaughter bent.
Forthwith from council to the work they flew;
None arguing stood; innumerable hands
Were ready; in a moment up they turn'd
Wide the celestial soil, and saw beneath
The originals of nature in their crude
Conception; sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled, and, with subtle art,
Concocted and adusted they reduc'd
To blackest grain, and into store convey'd:

Part hidden veins digg'd up (nor hath this Earth
Entrails unlike) of mineral and stone,
Whereof to found their engines and their balls
Of missive ruin ; part incentive reed
Provide, pernicious with one touch to fire.
So all ere day-spring, under conscious night,
Secret they finish'd, and in order set,
With silent circumspection, unespied.

" Now when fair morn orient in Heaven appear'd,
Up rose the victor-angels, and to arms
The matin trumpet sung : in arms they stood
Of golden panoply, refulgent host,
Soon banded ; others from the dawning hills
Look'd round, and scouts each coast light armed scour,

Each quarter, to descry the distant foe,
Where lodg'd, or whither fled, or if for fight,
In motion or in halt : him soon they met
Under spread ensigns moving nigh, in slow
But firm battalion : back with speediest sail
Zophiel, of cherubim the swiftest wing,
Came flying, and in mid air aloud thus cried.

" ' Arm, warriors, arm for fight ; the foe at hand,

Whom fled we thought, will save us long pursuit
This day ; fear not his flight ; so thick a cloud
He comes, and settled in his face I see
Sad resolution, and secure : let each
His adamantine coat gird well, and each
Fit well his helm, gripe fast his orb'd shield,
Borne even or high ; for this day will pour down,
If I conjecture aught, no drizzling shower,
But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire.'

" So warn'd he them, aware themselves, and soon
In order, quit of all impediment ;
Instant without disturb they took alarm,
And onward mov'd embattled : when behold !
Not distant far with heavy pace the foe
Approaching gross and huge, in hollow cube
Training his devilish enginery, impal'd
On every side with shadowing squadrons deep,
To hide the fraud. At interview both stood
A while ; but suddenly at head appear'd
Satan, and thus was heard commanding loud.

" ' Vanguard, to right and left the front unfold ;
That all may see who hate us, how we seek
Peace and composure, and with open breast
Stand ready to receive them, if they like
Our overture, and turn not back perverse :
But that I doubt ; however witness Heaven !
Heaven, witness thou anon ! while we discharge
Freely our part : ye, who appointed stand,
Do as you have in charge, and briefly touch
What we propound, and loud that all may hear !

" So scoffing in ambiguous words, he scarce
Had ended ; when to right and left the front
Divided, and to either flank retir'd :
Which to our eyes discover'd, new and strange,
A triple mounted row of pillars laid
On wheels, (for like to pillars most they seem'd,
Or hollow'd bodies made of oak or fir,
With branches lopt, in wood or mountain fell'd,)
Brass, iron, stony mould, had not their mouths
With hideous orifice gap'd on us wide,
Portending hollow truce : at each behind
A seraph stood, and in his hand a reed
Stood waving tipt with fire ; while we, suspense,
Collected stood within our thoughts amus'd,
Not long ; for sudden all at once their reeds
Put forth, and to a narrow vent applied

With nicest touch. Immediate in a flame,
But soon obscur'd with smoke, all Heaven appear'd,
From those deep-throated engines belch'd, whose roar

Embowell'd with outrageous noise the air,
And all her entrails tore, disgorging foul
Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts and hail
Of iron globes ; which, on the victor host
Levell'd, with such impetuous fury smote,
That, whom they hit, none on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks, but down they fell
By thousands, angel on arch-angel roll'd ;
The sooner for their arms ; unarm'd, they might
Have easily, as spirits, evaded swift
By quick contraction or remove ; but now
Foul dissipation follow'd, and forc'd rout ;
Nor serv'd it to relax their serried files.

What should they do ? if on they rush'd, repulse
Repeated, and indecent overthrow
Doubled, would render them yet more despis'd,
And to their foes a laughter ; for in view
Stood rank'd of seraphim another row,
In posture to displode their second tire
Of thunder : back defeated to return

They worse abhorr'd. Satan beheld their plight,
And to his mates thus in derision call'd. [proud?

" ' O friends ! why come not on these victors
Ere while they fierce were coming ; and when we,
To entertain them fair with open front
And breast (what could we more ?) propounded terms

Of composition, straight they chang'd their minds,
Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
As they would dance ; yet for a dance they seem'd
Somewhat extravagant and wild : perhaps
For joy of offer'd peace : but I suppose,
If our proposals once again were heard,
We should compel them to a quick result.'

" To whom thus Belial, in like gamesome mood,
' Leader ! the terms we sent were terms of weight,
Of hard contents, and full of force urg'd home ;
Such as we might perceive amus'd them all,
And stumbled many : who receives them right,
Had need from head to foot well understand ;
Not understood, this gift they have besides,
They show us when our foes walk not upright.'

" So they among themselves in pleasant vein
Stood scoffing, heighten'd in their thoughts beyond
All doubt of victory : Eternal Might
To match with their inventions they presum'd
So easy, and of his thunder made a scorn,
And all his host derided, while they stood
Awhile in trouble : but they stood not long ;
Rage prompted them at length, and found their arms

Against such hellish mischief fit to oppose.
Forthwith (behold the excellence, the power,
Which God hath in his mighty angels plac'd !)
Their arms away they threw, and to the hills
(For Earth hath this variety from Heaven
Of pleasure situate in hill and dale,)
Light as the lightning glimpse they ran, they flew
From their foundations loosening to and fro,
They pluck'd the seated hills, with all their load,
Rocks, waters, woods, and by the shaggy tops
Up-lifting bore them in their hands : amaze,
Be sure, and terrour, seiz'd the rebel host,
When coming towards them so dread they saw
The bottom of the mountains upward turn'd ;
Till on those cursed engines' triple row.

They saw them whelm'd, and all their confidence
Under the weight of mountains buried deep ;
Themselves invaded next, and on their heads
Main promontories flung, which in the air
Came shadowing, and oppress'd whole legions
arm'd ; [bruise'd

Their armour help'd their harm, crush'd in and
Into their substance pent, which wrought them pain
Implacable, and many a dolorous groan ;
Long struggling underneath, ere they could wind
Out of such prison, though spirits of purest light,
Purest at first, now gross by sinning grown.

The rest, in imitation, to like arms
Retook them, and the neighbouring hills upore :

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,
Hurld to and fro with jaculation dire ;

That under ground they fought in dismal shade ;
Infernal noise ! war seem'd a civil game

To this uproar ; horrid confusion heap'd
Upon confusion rose : and now all Heaven

Had gone to wrack, with ruin overspread ;
Had not the Almighty Father, where he sits

Satin'd in his sanctuary of Heaven secure,
Consulting on the sum of things, foreseen

This tumult, and permitted all, advis'd :

That his great purpose he might so fulfil,

To honour his anointed Son aveng'd

Upon his enemies, and to declare

All power on him transferr'd : whence to his Son,
The assessor of his throne, he thus began.

" Effulgence of my glory, Son belov'd,
Son, in whose face invisible is beheld

Visibly, what by Deity I am ;

And in whose hand what by decree I do,

Second Omnipotence ! two days are past,

Two days, as we compute the days of Heaven,

Since Michael and his powers went forth to tame

These disobedient : sore hath been their fight,

Wilkeliest was, when two such foes met arm'd ;

For to themselves I left them ; and thou know'st,

Equal in their creation they were form'd, [wrought

Not what sin hath impair'd ; which yet hath

Inevitably, for I suspend their doom ;

Whence in perpetual fight they needs must last

Endless, and no solution will be found :

War wearied hath perform'd what war can do,

And to disorder'd rage let loose the reins,

With mountains, as with weapons, arm'd ; which makes

My work in Heaven, and dangerous to the main.

Two days are therefore past, the third is thine ;

For thee I have ordain'd it ; and thus far

Have suffer'd, that the glory may be thine

Of ending this great war, since none but thou

Can end it. Into thee such virtue and grace

I have transfus'd, that all may know

In Heaven and Hell thy power above compare ;

And this perverse commotion govern'd thus,

To manifest thee worthiest to be Heir

Of all things ; to be Heir, and to be King

By sacred unction, thy deserved right.

Go then, thou Mightiest, in thy Father's might ;

Ascend my chariot, guide the rapid wheels

That shake Heaven's basis, bring forth all my war,

My bow and thunder, my almighty arms

Ord on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh ;

Pursue these sons of darkness, drive them out

From all Heaven's bounds into the utter deep :

There let them learn, as likes them, to despise

God, and Messiah, his anointed king.'

" He said, and on his son with rays direct
Shone full ; he all his Father full express'd
Ineffably into his face receiv'd ;
And thus the filial godhead answering spake.

" ' O Father, O Supreme of heavenly thrones,
First, Highest, Holiest, Best ; thou always seek'st
To glorify thy Son ; I always thee,
As is most just : this I my glory account,
My exaltation, and my whole delight,
That thou, in me well pleas'd, declar'st thy will Fulfill'd, which to fulfil is all my bliss.

Sceptre and power, thy giving, I assume,
And gladlier shall resign, when in the end

Thou shalt be all in all, and I in thee

For ever ; and in me all whom thou lov'st :

But whom thou hat'st, I hate, and can put on

Thy terrors, as I put thy mildness on,

Image of thee in all things ; and shall soon,

Arm'd with thy might, rid Heaven of these rebell'd ;

To their prepar'd ill mansion driven down,

To chains of darkness, and the undying worm ;

That from thy just obedience could revolt,

Whom to obey is happiness entire.

Then shall thy saints unmix'd, and from the impure

Far separate, circling thy holy mount,

Unfeigned halleluiahs to thee sing,

Hymns of high praise, and I among them chief.'

" So said, he, o'er his sceptre bowing, rose

From the right hand of glory where he sat ;

And the third sacred morn began to shine,

Dawning through Heaven. Forth rush'd with whirlwind sound

The chariot of Paternal Deity,

Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel undrawn,
Itself instinct with spirit, but convoy'd

By four cherubic shapes ; four faces each

Had wonderous ; as with stars, their bodies all

And wings were set with eyes ; with eyes the wheels

Of beryl, and careering fires between ;

Over their heads a crystal firmament,

Whereon a sapphire throne, inlaid with pure

Amber, and colours of the showery arch.

He, in celestial panoply all arm'd

Of radiant Urim, work divinely wrought,

Ascended ; at his right hand Victory

Sat eagle-wing'd ; beside him hung his bow

And quiver with three bolted thunder stor'd ;

And from about him fierce effusion roll'd

Of smoke, and bickering flame, and sparkles dire :

Attended with ten thousand thousand saints,

He onward came ; far off his coming shone ;

And twenty thousand (I their number heard)

Chariots of God, half on each hand, were seen :

He on the wings of cherub rode sublime

On the crystalline sky, in sapphire thron'd,

Illustrious far and wide ; but by his own

First seen : them unexpected joy surpris'd,

When the great ensign of Messiah blaz'd

Aloft by angels borne, his sign in Heaven ;

Under whose conduct Michael soon reduc'd

His army, circumfus'd on either wing,

Under their head imbody'd all in one.

Before him Power Divine his way prepar'd ;

At his command the uprooted hills retir'd

Each to his place ; they heard his voice, and went

Obsequious ; Heaven his wonted face renew'd,

And with fresh flowerets hill and valley smil'd.

This saw his hapless foes, but stood obdur'd,

And to rebellious fight rail'd their powers,

Insensate, hope conceiving from despair.

In heavenly spirits could such perverseness dwell ?
 But to convince the proud what signs avail,
 Or wonders move the obdurate to relent ?
 They, harden'd more by what might most reclaim,
 Grieving to see his glory, at the sight
 Took envy ; and, aspiring to his height,
 Stood re-embattled fierce, by force or fraud
 Weening to prosper, and at length prevail
 Against God and Messiah, or to fall
 In universal ruin last ; and now
 To final battle drew, disdaining flight,
 Or faint retreat ; when the great Son of God
 To all his host on either hand thus spake. [stand,

“ ‘ Stand still in bright array, ye saints ; here
 Ye angels arm'd ; this day from battle rest :
 Faithful hath been your warfare, and of God
 Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause ;
 And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done,
 Invincibly : but of this cursed crew
 The punishment to other hand belongs ;
 Vengeance is his, or whose he sole appoints :
 Number to this day's work is not ordain'd,
 Nor multitude ; stand only, and behold
 God's indignation on these godless pour'd
 By me ; not you, but me, they have despis'd,
 Yet envied ; against me is all their rage,
 Because the Father, to whom in Heaven supreme Kingdom, and power, and glory appertains,
 Hath honour'd me, according to his will,
 Therefore to me their doom he hath assign'd ;
 That they may have their wish to try with me
 In battle which the stronger proves : they all,
 Or I alone against them ; since by strength
 They measure all, of other excellence
 Not emulous, nor care who them excels ;
 Nor other strife with them do I vouchsafe. ’

“ So spake the Son, and into terroure chang'd
 His countenance too severe to be beheld,
 And full of wrath bent on his enemies.
 At once the Four spread out their starry wings
 With dreadful shade contiguous, and the orbs
 Of his fierce chariot roll'd, as with the sound
 Of torrent floods, or of a numerous host.
 He on his impious foes right onward drove,
 Gloomy as night, under his burning wheels
 The stedfast empyréan shook throughout,
 All but the throne itself of God. Full soon
 Among them he arriv'd ; in his right hand
 Grasping ten thousand thunders, which he sent
 Before him, such as in their souls infix'd
 Plagues : they, astonish'd, all resistance lost,
 All courage ; down their idle weapons dropt :
 O'er shields, and helms, and helmed heads he rode
 Of thrones and mighty seraphim prostrate,
 That wish'd the mountains now might be again
 Thrown on them, as a shelter from his ire.
 Nor less on either side tempestuous fell
 His arrows, from the fourfold-visag'd Four Distinct with eyes, and from the living wheels
 Distinct alike with multitude of eyes ;
 One spirit in them rul'd ; and every eye
 Glar'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire
 Among the accurs'd, that wither'd all their strength,
 And of their wonted vigour left them drain'd,
 Exhausted, spiritless, afflicted, fall'n.
 Yet half his strength he put not forth, but check'd
 His thunder in mid volley ; for he meant
 Not to destroy, but root them out of Heaven :
 The overthrown he rais'd, and as a herd
 Of goats or timorous flock together throng'd

Drove them before him thunder-struck, pursued
 With terrors, and with furies, to the bounds
 And crystal wall of Heaven ; which, opening wide,
 Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
 Into the wasteful deep : the monstrous sight
 Struck them with horror backward, but far worse
 Urg'd them behind : headlong themselves they Threw

Down from the verge of Heaven ; eternal wrath
 Burnt after them to the bottomless pit.

“ Hell heard the unsufferable noise, Hell saw
 Heaven ruining from Heaven, and would have fled
 Affrighted ; but strict Fate had cast too deep
 Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound.
 Nine days they fell : confounded Chaos roar'd,
 And felt tenfold confusion in their fall
 Through his wild anarchy, so huge a rout
 Encumber'd him with ruin : Hell at last
 Yawning receiv'd them whole, and on them clos'd ;
 Hell their fit habitation, fraught with fire
 Unquenchable, the house of woe and pain.
 Disburden'd Heaven rejoic'd, and soon repair'd
 Her mural breach, returning whence it roll'd.
 Sole victor, from the expulsion of his foes,
 Messiah his triumphal chariot turn'd :
 To meet him all his saints, who silent stood
 Eye-witnesses of his almighty acts,
 With jubilee advanc'd ; and, as they went,
 Shaded with branching palm, each order bright,
 Sung triumph, and him sung victorious King,
 Son, Heir, and Lord, to him dominion given,
 Worthiest to reign : He, celebrated, rode Triumphant through mid Heaven, into the courts
 And temple of his mighty Father thron'd
 On high ; who into glory him receiv'd,
 Where now he sits at the right hand of bliss.

“ Thus measuring things in Heaven by things on Earth,
 At thy request, and that thou may'st beware
 By what is past, to thee I have reveal'd
 What might have else to human race been hid ;
 The discord which befel, and war in Heaven
 Among the angelic powers, and the deep fall
 Of those too high aspiring, who rebell'd
 With Satan ; he who envies now thy state,
 Who now is plotting how he may seduce
 Thee also from obedience, that, with him
 Bereav'd of happiness, thou may'st partake
 His punishment, eternal misery ;
 Which would be all his solace and revenge,
 As a despite done against the Most High,
 Thee once to gain companion of his woe.
 But listen not to his temptations, warn
 Thy weaker ; let it profit thee to have heard,
 By terrible example, the reward
 Of disobedience ; firm they might have stood,
 Yet fell ; remember, and fear to transgress. ”

BOOK VII.

The Argument.

Raphael, at the request of Adam, relates how and wherefore this world was first created ; that God, after the expelling of Satan and his angels out of Heaven, declared his pleasure to create another world, and other creatures to dwell therein ;
 sends his Son with glory, and attendance of angels, to perform the work of creation in six days: the angels celebrate with hymns the performance thereof, and his re-ascension into Heaven.

Descend from Heaven, Urania, by that name
If rightly thou art call'd, whose voice divine
Following, above the Olympian hill I soar,
Above the flight of Pegaséan wing.
The naming, not the name, I call: for thou
Nor of the Muses nine, nor on the top
Of old Olympus dwell'st; but, heavenly-born,
Before the hills appeared, or fountain flow'd,
Thou with eternal Wisdom didst converse.
Wisdom thy sister, and with her didst play
In presence of the Almighty Father, pleas'd
With thy celestial song. Up led by thee,
Into the Heaven of Heavens I have presum'd,
As earthly guest, and drawn empyreal air,
Thy tempering: with like safety guided down
Return me to my native element:
Lest from this flying steed unrein'd, (as once Bellerophon, though from a lower clime,)
Dismounted, on the Aleian field I fall,
Erroneous there to wander, and forlorn.
Half yet remains unsung, but narrower bound
Within the visible diurnal sphere;
Standing on earth, not rapt above the pole,
More safe I sing with mortal voice, unchang'd
To hoarse or mute, though fall'n on evil days,
On evil days though fall'n, and evil tongues;
Is darkness, and with dangers compass'd round,
And solitude; yet not alone, while thou
Vest'st my slumbers nightly, or when morn
Purple the east: still govern thou my song,
Urania, and fit audience find, though few.
But drive far off the barbarous dissonance
Of Bacchus and his revellers, the race
Of that wild rout that tore the Thracian bard
In Rhodope, where woods and rocks had ears
To rapture, till the savage clamour drown'd
Both harp and voice: nor could the Muse defend
Her son. So fail not thou, who thee implores:
For thou art heavenly, she an empty dream.
Say, goddess, what ensued when Raphaél,
The affable arch-angel, had forewarn'd
Adam, by dire example, to beware
Apostasy, by what befel in Heaven
To those apostates; lest the like befall
Is Paradise to Adam or his race,
Cur'd not to touch the interdicted tree,
If they transgress, and slight that sole command,
So easily obey'd amid the choice
Of all tastes else to please their appetite,
Tough wandering. He, with his consorted Eve,
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse, to hear [thought
Of things so high and strange; things, to their
So unimaginable, as hate in Heaven,
And war so near the peace of God in bliss,
With such confusion: but the evil, soon
Driven back, redounded as a flood on those
From whom it sprung; impossible to mix
With blessedness. Whence Adam soon repeal'd
The doubts that in his heart arose: and now
Led on, yet sated, with desire to know
What nearer might concern him, how this world
Of Heaven and Earth conspicuous first began;
When, and whereof created: for what cause,
What within Eden, or without, was done
Before his memory: as one whose drought

Yet scarce allay'd still eyes the current stream,
Whose liquid murmur heard new thirst excites,
Proceeded thus to ask his heavenly guest.

"Great things, and full of wonder in our ears
Far differing from this world, thou hast reveal'd,
Divine interpreter! by favour sent
Down from the empyréan, to forewarn
Us timely of what might else have been our loss,
Unknown, which human knowledge could not reach:

For which to the infinitely Good we owe
Immortal thanks, and his admonishment
Receive with solemn purpose to observe
Immutably his sovran will, the end
Of what we are. But since thou hast vouchsaf'd
Gently, for our instruction, to impart
Things above earthly thought, which yet concern'd
Our knowing, as to highest Wisdom seem'd,
Deign to descend now lower, and relate
What may no less perhaps avail us known,
How first began this Heaven which we behold
Distant so high, with moving fires adorn'd
Innumerable; and this which yields or fills
All space, the ambient air wide interfus'd
Embracing round this florid Earth? what cause
Mov'd the Creator in his holy rest
Through all eternity so late to build
In Chaos; and the work begun, how soon
Absolv'd; if unforbid thou may'st unfold
What we, not to explore the secrets ask
Of his eternal empire, but the more
To magnify his works, the more we know.
And the great light of day yet wants to run
Much of his race though steep; suspense in Heaven,
Held by thy voice, thy potent voice, he hears,
And longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of Nature from the unapparent deep:
Or if the star of evening and the Moon
Haste to thy audience, Night with her will bring Silence; and Sleep, listening to thee, will watch;
Or we can bid his absence, till thy song
End, and dismiss thee ere the morning shine."

Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought:
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild.
"This also thy request, with caution ask'd,
Obtain; though to recount almighty works
What words or tongue of seraph can suffice,
Or heart of man suffice to comprehend?
Yet what thou canst attain, which best may serve
To glorify the Maker, and infer
Thee also happier, shall not be withheld
Thy hearing; such commission from above
I have receiv'd, to answer thy desire
Of knowledge within bounds; beyond, abstain
To ask; nor let thine own inventions hope
Things not reveal'd, which the invisible King,
Only Omniscient, hath suppress'd in night;
To none communicable in Earth or Heaven:
Enough is left besides to search and know.
But knowledge is as food, and needs no less
Her temperance over appetite, to know
In measure what the mind may well contain;
Oppresses else with surfeit, and soon turns
Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind.

"Know then, that, after Lucifer from Heaven
(So call him, brighter once amidst the host Of angels, than that star the stars among)
Fell with his flaming legions through the deep
Into his place, and the great Son return'd

Victorious with his saints, the Omnipotent
Eternal Father from his throne beheld
Their multitude, and to his Son thus spake.

“ ‘ At least our envious foe hath fail'd, who thought

All like himself rebellious, by whose aid
This inaccessible high strength, the seat
Of Deity supreme, us dispossess'd,
He trusted to have seiz'd, and into fraud
Drew many, whom their place knows here no more :
Yet far the greater part have kept, I see,
Their station ; Heaven, yet populous, retains Number sufficient to possess her realms
Though wide, and this high temple to frequent
With ministeries due, and solemn rites :
But, lest his heart exalt him in the harm
Already done, to have dispeopled Heaven,
My damage fondly deem'd, I can repair
That detriment, if such it be to lose
Self-lost ; and in a moment will create
Another world, out of one man a race
Of men innumerable, there to dwell,
Not here ; till, by degrees of merit rais'd,
They open to themselves at length the way
Up hither, under long obedience tried ; [Earth
And Earth be chang'd to Heaven, and Heaven to
One kingdom, joy and union without end.
Meanwhile inhabit lax, ye powers of Heaven ;
And thou my Word, begotten Son, by thee
This I perform ; speak thou, and be it done !
My overshadowing spirit and might with thee
I send along ; ride forth, and bid the deep
Within appointed bounds be Heaven and Earth ;
Boundless the deep, because I am who fill
Infinitude, nor vacuous the space.

Though I, uncircumscrib'd myself, retire,
And put not forth my goodness, which is free
To act or not, necessity and chance
Approach not me, and what I will is fate. ’

“ So spake the Almighty, and to what he spake
His Word, the filial Godhead, gave effect.
Immediate are the acts of God, more swift
Than time or motion, but to human ears
Cannot without process of speech be told,
So told as earthly notion can receive.
Great triumph and rejoicing was in Heaven,
When such was heard declared the Almighty's will ;
Glory they sung to the Most High, good will
To future men, and in their dwellings peace :
Glory to him, whose just avenging ire
Had driven out the ungodly from his sight
And the habitations of the just ; to him
Glory and praise, whose wisdom had ordain'd
Good out of evil to create ; instead
Of spirits malign, a better race to bring
Into their vacant room, and thence diffuse
His good to worlds and ages infinite.

“ So sang the hierarchies : meanwhile the Son
On his great expedition now appear'd,
Girt with omnipotence, with radiance crown'd
Of majesty divine ; sapience and love
Immense, and all his Father in him shone.
About his chariot numberless were pour'd
Cherub, and seraph, potentates, and thrones,
And virtues, winged spirits, and chariots wing'd
From the armoury of God ; where stand of old
Myriads, between two brazen mountains lodg'd
Against a solemn day, harness'd at hand,
Celestial equipage ; and now came forth
Spontaneous, for within them spirit liv'd,

Attendant on their Lord : Heaven open'd wide
Her ever-during gates, harmonious sound
On golden hinges moving, to let forth
The King of Glory, in his powerful Word
And Spirit, coming to create new worlds. [born
On heavenly ground they stood ; and from thence
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss
Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild,
Up from the bottom turn'd by furious winds
And surging waves, as mountains, to assault
Heaven's height, and with the centre mix the pole.

“ ‘ Silence, ye troubled waves, and thou deep peace, ’

Said then the omnific Word ; ‘ your discord end ! ’
Nor staid ; but, on the wings of cherubim
Uplifted, in paternal glory rode
Far into Chaos, and the world unborn ;
For Chaos heard his voice : him all his train
Follow'd in bright procession, to behold
Creation, and the wonders of his might.
Then staid the fervid wheels, and in his hand
He took the golden compasses, prepar'd
In God's eternal store, to circumscribe
This universe, and all created things :
One foot he center'd, and the other turn'd
Round through the vast profundity obscure ;
And said, ‘ Thus far extend, thus far thy bounds,
This be thy just circumference, O World ! ’
Thus God the Heaven created, thus the Earth,
Matter unform'd and void : darkness profound
Cover'd the abyss ; but on the watery calm
His brooding wings the Spirit of God outspread,
And vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth
Throughout the fluid mass ; but downward purg'd
The black tartareous cold infernal dregs,
Adverse to life : then founded, then conglob'd
Like things to like ; the rest to several place
Disparted, and between spun out the air ;
And Earth, self-balanc'd, on her centre hung.

“ ‘ Let there be light, ’ said God ; and forthwith
Light

Ethereal, first of things, quintessence pure
Sprung from the deep ; and from her native east
To journey through the æry gloom began,
Spher'd in a radiant cloud, for yet the Sun
Was not ; she in a cloudy tabernacle
Sojourn'd the while. God saw the light was good
And light from darkness by the hemisphere
Divided : light the Day, and darkness Night,
He nam'd. Thus was the first day even and morn
Nor past uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld ; [shown Birth-day of Heaven and Earth, with joy and
The hollow universal orb they fill'd,
And touch'd their golden harps, and hymning
prais'd

God and his works ; Creator him they sung,
Both when first evening was, and when first morn

“ Again, God said, ‘ Let there be firmament
Amid the waters, and let it divide
The waters from the waters ; ’ and God made
The firmament, expanse of liquid, pure,
Transparent, elemental air, diffus'd
In circuit to the uttermost convex
Of this great round ; partition firm and sure,
The waters underneath from those above
Dividing : for as Earth, so he the world
Built on circumfluous waters calm, in wide
Crystalline ocean, and the loud misrule

Of Chaos far remov'd; lest fierce extremes
Contiguous might distemper the whole frame:
And Heaven be nam'd the Firmament: so even
And morning chorus sung the second day.

"The Earth was form'd, but in the womb as yet
Of waters, embryo immature involv'd,
Appear'd not: over all the face of Earth
Main ocean flow'd, not idle; but, with warm
Prolific humour softening all her globe,
Femented the great mother to conceive,
Satur'd with genial moisture; when God said,
'Be gather'd now ye waters under Heaven
Into one place, and let dry land appear.'
Immediately the mountains huge appear
Emergent, and their broad bare backs upheave
Into the clouds; their tops ascend the sky:
So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low
Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep,
Capacious bed of waters: thither they
Hasted with glad precipitance, uproll'd,
As drops on dust conglobing from the dry:
Part rise in crystal wall, or ridge direct,
For haste; such flight the great command impress'd
On the swift floods: as armies at the call
Of trumpets (for of armies thou hast heard)
Troop to their standard; so the watery throng,
Wave rolling after wave, where way they found,
If steep, with torrent rapture, if through plain,
Soft-ebbing! nor withstood them rock or hill;
But they, or under ground, or circuit wide
With serpent error wandering, found their way,
And on the washy ooze deep channels wore;
Ere God had bid the ground be dry,
All but within those banks, where rivers now
Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train.
The dry land, Earth; and the great receptacle
Of congregated waters, he call'd Seas: [Earth
And saw that it was good; and said, 'Let the Forth the verdant grass, herb yielding seed,
And fruit-tree yielding fruit after her kind,
Whose seed is in herself upon the Earth.'
He scarce had said, when the bare Earth, till then
Desert and bare, unsightly, unadorn'd,
Brought forth the tender grass, whose verdure clad
Her universal face with pleasant green;
Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd
Opening their various colours, and made gay
Her bosom, smelling sweet: and, these scarce blown,
Forth flourish'd thick the clustering vine, forth crept
The swelling gourd, up stood the corny reed
Embellish'd in her field, and the humble shrub,
And bush with frizzled hair implicit: last
Rose, as in dance, the stately trees, and spread
Their branches hung with copious fruit, or gemm'd
Their blossoms: with high woods the hills were crown'd,
With tufts the valleys, and each fountain side;
With borders long the rivers: that Earth now
Seem'd like to Heaven a seat where gods might dwell,
Or wander with delight, and love to haunt
Her sacred shades: though God had yet not rain'd
On the Earth, and man to till the ground
None was; but from the Earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each
Part of the field; which, ere it was in the Earth,
Was made, and every herb, before it grew
On the green stem: God saw that it was good:
So even and morn recorded the third day.

"Again the Almighty spake, 'Let there be lights
High in the expanse of Heaven, to divide
The day from night; and let them be for signs
For seasons, and for days, and circling years;
And let them be for lights, as I ordain
Their office in the firmament of Heaven,
To give light on the Earth;' and it was so.
And God made two great lights, great for their use
To Man, the greater to have rule by day,
The less by night, altern; and made the stars,
And set them in the firmament of Heaven
To illuminate the Earth, and rule the day
In their vicissitude, and rule the night,
And light from darkness to divide. God saw,
Surveying his great work, that it was good:
For of celestial bodies first the Sun
A mighty sphere he fram'd, unlightsome first,
Though of ethereal mould: then form'd the Moon
Globose, and every magnitude of stars,
And sow'd with stars the Heaven, thick as a field:
Of light by far the greater part he took,
Transplanted from her cloudy shrine, and plac'd
In the Sun's orb, made porous to receive
And drink the liquid light; firm to retain
Her gather'd beams, great palace now of light.
Hither, as to their fountain, other stars
Repairing, in their golden urns draw light,
And hence the morning-planet gilds her horns;
By tincture or reflection they augment
Their small peculiar, though from human sight
So far remote, with diminution seen.
First in his east the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day, and all the horizon round
Invested with bright rays, jocund to run
His longitude through Heaven's high road; the gray
Dawn, and the Pleiades, before him danc'd,
Shedding sweet influence: less bright the Moon,
But opposite in levell'd west was set,
His mirror, with full face borrowing her light
From him; for other light she needed none
In that aspect, and still that distance keeps
Till night; then in the east her turn she shines,
Revolv'd on Heaven's great axle, and her reign
With thousand lesser lights dividual holds,
With thousand thousand stars, that then appear'd
Spangling the hemisphere: then first adorn'd
With their bright luminaries that set and rose, [day.
Glad evening and glad morn crown'd the fourth
"And God said, 'Let the waters generate
Reptile with spawn abundant, living soul:
And let fowl fly above the Earth, with wings
Display'd on the open firmament of Heaven.'
And God created the great whales, and each
Soul living, each that crept, which plenteously
The waters generated by their kinds;
And every bird of wing after his kind;
And saw that it was good, and bless'd them, saying,
'Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas,
And lakes, and running streams, the waters fill:
And let the fowl be multiplied on the Earth.'
Forthwith the sounds and seas, each creek and bay,
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish that with their fins, and shining scales,
Glide under the green wave, in sculls that oft
Bank the mid sea: part single, or with mate,
Graze the sea-weed their pasture, and through groves
Of coral stray; or, sporting with quick glance,
Show to the Sun their wav'd coats dropt with gold;
Or, in their pearly shells at ease, attend

Moist nutriment ; or under rocks their food
 In jointed armour watch : on smooth the seal,
 And bended dolphins play : part huge of bulk
 Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
 Tempest the ocean : there leviathan,
 Hugest of living creatures, on the deep
 Stretch'd like a promontory sleeps or swims,
 And seems a moving land ; and at his gills
 Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out, a sea.
 Meanwhile the tepid caves, and fens, and shores,
 Their brood as numerous hatch, from the egg that soon

Bursting with kindly rupture forth disclos'd
 Their callow young ; but feather'd soon and fledge
 They sumam'd their pens ; and, soaring the air sublime,

With clang despis'd the ground, under a cloud
 In prospect ; there the eagle and the stork
 On cliffs and cedar tops their eyries build :
 Part loosely wing the region, part more wise
 In common, rang'd in figure, wedge their way,
 Intelligent of seasons, and set forth
 Their aery caravan, high over seas
 Flying, and over lands, with mutual wing
 Easing their flight ; so steers the prudent crane
 Her annual voyage, borne on winds ; the air
 Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes :

From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
 Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings
 Till even ; nor then the solemn nightingale
 Ceas'd warbling, but all night tun'd her soft lays :
 Others, on silver lakes and rivers, bath'd
 Their downy breast ; the swan with arched neck,
 Between her white wings mantling proudly, rows
 Her state with oary feet ; yet oft they quit
 The dank, and, rising on stiff pennons, tower
 The mid aëreal sky : others on ground
 Walk'd firm ; the crested cock whose clarion sounds
 The silent hours, and the other whose gay train
 Adorns him, colour'd with the florid hue
 Of rainbows and starry eyes. The waters thus
 With fish replenish'd, and the air with fowl,
 Evening and morn solemniz'd the fifth day.

“ The sixth, and of creation last, arose
 With evening harps and matin ; when God said,
 ‘ Let the Earth bring forth soul living in her kind,
 Cattle, and creeping things, and beast of the Earth,
 Each in their kind.’ The Earth obey'd, and straight
 Opening her fertile womb teem'd at a birth
 Innumerable living creatures ; perfect forms,
 Limb'd and full grown : out of the ground up rose,
 As from his lair, the wild beast, where he wons
 In forest wild, in thicket, brake, or den ;
 Among the trees in pairs they rose, they walk'd :
 The cattle in the fields and meadows green :
 Those rare and solitary, these in flocks
 Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upsprung.
 The grassy clods now calv'd ; now half appear'd
 The tawny lion, pawing to get free
 His hinder parts, then springs, as broke from bonds,
 And rampant shakes his brinded mane ; the ounce,
 The libbard, and the tiger, as the mole
 Rising, the crumbled earth above them threw
 In hillocks : the swift stag from under ground
 Bore up his branching head ; scarce from his mould
 Behemoth, biggest born of Earth, upheav'd
 His vastness : fleec'd the flocks and bleating rose,
 As plants : ambiguous between sea and land
 The river-horse, and scaly crocodile.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
 Insect or worm : those wav'd their limber fans
 For wings, and smallest lineaments exact
 In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride,
 With spots of gold and purple, azure and green :
 These, as a line, their long dimension drew,
 Streaking the ground with sinuous trace ; not all
 Minims of nature ; some of serpent-kind,
 Wonderous in length and corpulence, involv'd
 Their snaky folds, and added wings. First crept
 The parsimonious emmet, provident
 Of future ; in small room large heart enclos'd ;
 Pattern of just equality perhaps
 Hereafter, join'd in her popular tribes
 Of commonalty : swarming next appear'd
 The female bee, that feeds her husband drone
 Deliciously, and builds her waxen cells
 With honey stor'd : the rest are numberless,
 And thou their natures know'st, and gav'st them names,

Needless to thee repeated : nor unknown
 The serpent, subtlest beast of all the field,
 Of huge extent sometimes, with brazen eyes
 And hairy mane terrific, though to thee
 Not noxious, but obedient at thy call.

“ Now Heaven in all her glory shone, and roll'd
 Her motions, as the great first Mover's hand
 First wheel'd their course : Earth in her rich attire
 Consummate lovely smil'd ; air, water, earth,
 By fowl, fish, beast, was flown, was swum, was walk'd

Frequent ; and of the sixth day yet remain'd :
 There wanted yet the master-work, the end
 Of all yet done ; a creature, who, not prone
 And brute as other creatures, but endued
 With sanctity of reason, might erect
 His stature, and upright with front serene
 Govern the rest, self-knowing ; and from thence Magnanimous to correspond with Heaven,
 But grateful to acknowledge whence his good
 Descends, thither with heart, and voice, and eyes
 Directed in devotion, to adore
 And worship God Supreme, who made him chief
 Of all his works : therefore the Omnipotent
 Eternal Father (for where is not he Present?) thus to his Son audibly spake.

“ ‘ Let us make now Man in our image, Man
 In our similitude, and let them rule
 Over the fish and fowl of sea and air,
 Beast of the field, and over all the Earth,
 And every creeping thing that creeps the ground.’
 This said, he form'd thee, Adam, thee, O Man,
 Dust of the ground, and in thy nostrils breath'd
 The breath of life ; in his own image he Created thee, in the image of God
 Express ; and thou becam'st a living soul.
 Male he created thee ; but thy consort
 Female, for race ; then bless'd mankind, and said,
 ‘ Be fruitful, multiply, and fill th' Earth ;
 Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold
 Over fish of the sea, and fowl of th' air,
 And every living thing that moves on th' Earth.’
 Wherever thus created, for no place
 Is yet distinct by name, thence, as thou know'st,
 He brought thee into this delicious grove,
 This garden, planted with the trees of God,
 Delectable both to behold and taste ;
 And freely all their pleasant fruit for food
 Gave thee ; all sorts are here that all the Earth yields,

erity without end ; but of the tree,
Which, tasted, works knowledge of good and evil,
Thou may'st not ; in the day thou eat'st, thou diest ;
Death is the penalty imposed ; beware,
And govern well thy appetite ; lest Sin
Surprise thee, and her black attendant Death.'

" Here finish'd he, and all that he had made
Review'd, and behold all was entirely good ;
So even and morn accomplish'd the sixth day :
Yet not till the Creator from his work
Reposing, though unwearied, up return'd,
Up to the Heaven of Heavens, his high abode ;
Hence to behold this new created world,
The addition of his empire, how it show'd
The prospect from his throne, how good, how fair,
Answering his great idea. Up he rode Slow'd with acclamation, and the sound
Euphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd
Angelic harmonies : the Earth, the air
Resounded, (thou remember'st, for thou heard'st,)
The Heavens and all the constellations rung,
The planets in their station listening stood,
While the bright pomp ascended jubilant.
Open, ye everlasting gates !" they sung,
Open, ye Heavens ! your living doors ; let in
The great Creator from his work return'd
Magnificent, his six days' work, a world ;
From henceforth oft ; for God will deign
To visit oft the dwellings of just men,
Delighted ; and with frequent intercourse
He will send his winged messengers
To errands of supernal grace.' So sung
The glorious train ascending : he through Heaven,
But open'd wide her blazing portals, led
To God's eternal house direct the way ;
A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Lies in the galaxy, that milky way,
That nightly, as a circling zone, thou seest Border'd with stars. And now on Earth the seventh

Morning arose in Eden, for the Sun
Was set, and twilight from the east came on,
The morning night ; when at the holy mount
Of Heaven's high-seated top, the imperial throne
Of Godhead fix'd for ever firm and sure,
The Eternal Power arriv'd, and sat him down
His great Father ! for he also went
To sit, yet staid, (such privilege
His Omnipresence,) and the work ordain'd,
The End of all things ; and, from work
Now resting, bless'd and hallow'd the seventh day
Laying on that day from all his work,
He sat in silence holy kept : the harp
His work and rested not ; the solemn pipe,
The plover, all organs of sweet stop,
The sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
The harp'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice
Of unison : of incense clouds,
The fumes from golden censers, hid the mount.
And the six days' acts they sung :
What are thy works, Jehovah ! infinite [tongue
Thy power ! what thought can measure thee, or
Be like thee ? Greater now in thy return
Than from the giant angels : thee that day
Thy thunders magnified ; but to create
Is greater than created to destroy.
Who can impair thee, Mighty King, or bound
Thy empire ? Easily the proud attempt
Of spirits apostate, and their counsels vain,

Thou hast repell'd ; while impiously they thought
Thee to diminish, and from thee withdraw
The number of thy worshippers. Who seeks
To lessen thee, against his purpose serves
To manifest the more thy might : his evil
Thou usest, and from thence creat'st more good.
Witness this new-made world, another Heaven
From Heaven-gate not far, founded in view
On the clear hyaline, the glassy sea ;
Of amplitude almost immense, with stars
Numerous, and every star perhaps a world
Of destin'd habitation ; but thou know'st
Their seasons : among these the seat of men,
Earth, with her nether ocean circumfus'd,
Their pleasant dwelling-place. Thrice happy men,
And sons of men, whom God hath thus advanc'd !
Created in his image there to dwell
And worship him ; and in reward to rule
Over his works, on earth, in sea, or air,
And multiply a race of worshippers
Holy and just : thrice happy, if they know
Their happiness, and persevere upright !

" So sung they, and the empyréan rung
With halleluiahs : thus was sabbath kept.
And thy request think now fulfill'd, that ask'd
How first this world and face of things began,
And what before thy memory was done
From the beginning ; that posterity,
Inform'd by thee, might know : if else thou seek'st
Aught not surpassing human measure, say."

BOOK VIII.

The Argument.

Adam inquires concerning celestial motions ; is doubtfully answered, and exhorted to search rather things more worthy of knowledge : Adam assents ; and, still desirous to detain Raphael, relates to him what he remembered since his own creation ; his placing in Paradise ; his talk with God concerning solitude and fit society : his first meeting and nuptials with Eve : his discourse with the angel thereupon ; who, after admonitions repeated, departs.

THE angel ended, and in Adam's ear
So charming left his voice, that he a while
Thought him still speaking, still stood fix'd to hear ;
Then, as new wak'd, thus gratefully replied.

" What thanks sufficient, or what recompense
Equal, have I to render thee, divine
Historian, who thus largely hast allay'd
The thirst I had of knowledge, and vouchsaf'd
This friendly condescension to relate
Things else by me unsearchable ; now heard
With wonder, but delight, and, as is due,
With glory attributed to the high
Creator ? Something yet of doubt remains,
Which only thy solution can resolve.
When I behold this goodly frame, this world,
Of Heaven and Earth consisting ; and compute
Their magnitudes ; this Earth a spot, a grain,
An atom, with the firmament compar'd
And all her number'd stars, that seem to roll Spaces incomprehensible, (for such
Their distance argues, and their swift return
Diurnal,) merely to officiate light
Round this opacous Earth, this punctual spot,

One day and night ; in all their vast survey
 Useless besides ; reasoning I oft admire,
 How Nature wise and frugal could commit
 Such disproportions, with superfluous hand
 So many nobler bodies to create,
 Greater so manifold, to this one use,
 For aught appears, and on their orbs impose
 Such restless revolution day by day
 Repeated ; while the sedentary Earth,
 That better might with far less compass move,
 Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains
 Her end without least motion, and receives,
 As tribute, such a sumless journey brought
 Of incorporeal speed, her warmth and light ;
 Speed, to describe whose swiftness number fails."

So spake our sire, and by his countenance seem'd
 Entering on studious thoughts abstruse ; which Eve
 Perceiving, where she sat retir'd in sight,
 With lowliness majestic from her seat,
 And grace that won who saw to wish her stay,
 Rose, and went forth among her fruits and flowers,
 To visit how they prosper'd, bud and bloom,
 Her nursery ; they at her coming sprung,
 And, touch'd by her fair tendance, gladlier grew.
 Yet went she not, as not with such discourse
 Delighted, or not capable her ear
 Of what was high : such pleasure she reserv'd,
 Adam relating, she sole auditress :
 Her husband the relater she preferr'd
 Before the angel, and of him to ask
 Chose rather ; he, she knew, would intermix
 Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute
 With conjugal caresses ; from his lip
 Not words alone pleas'd her. O ! when meet now
 Such pairs, in love and mutual honour join'd ?
 With goddess-like demeanour forth she went,
 Not unattended ; for on her, as queen,
 A pomp of winning graces waited still,
 And from about her shot darts of desire
 Into all eyes, to wish her still in sight.
 And Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd,
 Benevolent and facile thus replied.

" To ask or search, I blame thee not ; for Heaven
 Is as the book of God before thee set,
 Wherein to read his wondrous works, and learn
 His seasons, hours, or days, or months, or years :
 This to attain, whether Heaven move or Earth,
 Imports not, if thou reckon right ; the rest
 From man or angel the great Architect
 Did wisely to conceal, and not divulge
 His secrets to be scann'd by them who ought Rather admire ; or, if they list to try
 Conjecture, he his fabric of the Heavens
 Hath left to their disputes, perhaps to move
 His laughter at their quaint opinions wide
 Hereafter ; when they come to model Heaven
 And calculate the stars, how they will wield
 The mighty frame ; how build, unbuild, contrive
 To save appearances ; how gird the sphere
 With centric and eccentric scribbled o'er,
 Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb :
 Already by thy reasoning this I guess,
 Who art to lead thy offspring, and supposest
 That bodies bright and greater should not serve
 The less not bright, nor Heaven such journeys run,
 Earth sitting still, when she alone receives
 The benefit : consider first, that great
 Or bright infers not excellence : the Earth,
 Though, in comparison of Heaven, so small,
 Nor glistening, may of solid good contain

More plenty than the Sun that barren shines ;
 Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
 But in the fruitful Earth ; there first receiv'd,
 His beams, unactive else, their vigour find.
 Yet not to Earth are those bright luminaries
 Officious ; but to thee, Earth's habitant.
 And for the Heaven's wide circuit, let it speak
 The Maker's high magnificence, who built
 So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far,
 That man may know he dwells not in his own ;
 An edifice too large for him to fill,
 Lodg'd in a small partition ; and the rest
 Ordain'd for uses to his Lord best known.
 The swiftness of those circles attribute,
 Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
 That to corporeal substances could add,
 Speed almost spiritual : me thou think'st not slow
 Who since the morning-hour set out from Heaven
 Where God resides, and ere mid-day arriv'd
 In Eden ; distance inexpressible
 By numbers that have name. But this I urge,
 Admitting motion in the Heavens, to show
 Invalid that which thee to doubt it mov'd ;
 Not that I so affirm, though so it seem
 To thee who hast thy dwelling here on Earth.
 God, to remove his ways from human sense,
 Plac'd Heaven from Earth so far, that earthly sight
 If it presume, might err in things too high,
 And no advantage gain. What if the Sun
 Be centre to the world ; and other stars,
 By his attractive virtue and their own
 Incited, dance about him various rounds ?
 Their wandering course now high, now low, the Progressive, retrograde, or standing still,
 In six thou seest ; and what if seventh to these
 The planet Earth, so steadfast though she seem,
 Insensibly three different motions move ?
 Which else to several spheres thou must ascribe,
 Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities ;
 Or save the Sun his labour, and that swift
 Nocturnal and diurnal rhomb suppos'd,
 Invisible else above all stars, the wheel
 Of day and night ; which needs not thy belief,
 If Earth, industrious of herself, fetch day
 Travelling east, and with her part averse
 From the Sun's beam meet night, her other part
 Still luminous by his ray. What if that light,
 Sent from her through the wide transpicious air,
 To the terrestrial Moon be as a star,
 Enlightening her by day as she by night
 This Earth ? reciprocal if land be there,
 Fields and inhabitants : her spots thou seest
 As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce
 Fruits in her soften'd soil, for some to eat
 Allotted there : and other suns perhaps,
 With their attendant moons, thou wilt descry
 Communicating male and female light ;
 Which two great sexes animate the world,
 Stor'd in each orb perhaps with some that live.
 For such vast room in Nature unpossess'd
 By living soul, desert, and desolate,
 Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
 Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far
 Down to this habitable, which returns
 Light back to them, is obvious to dispute.
 But whether thus these things, or whether not ;
 Whether the Sun, predominant in Heaven,
 Rise on the Earth ; or Earth rise on the Sun ;
 He from the east his flaming road begin ;
 Or she from west her silent course advance,

With inoffensive pace that spinning sleeps
On her soft axle, while she paces even,
And bears thee soft with the smooth air along ;
Solicit not thy thoughts with matters hid ;
Leave them to God above ; him serve, and fear !
Of other creatures, as him pleases best,
Wherever plac'd, let him dispose ; joy thou
In what he gives to thee, this Paradise
And thy fair Eve ; Heaven is for thee too high
To know what passes there ; be lowly wise :
Think only what concerns thee, and thy being ;
Dream not of other worlds, what creatures there
Live, in what state, condition, or degree ;
Contented that thus far hath been reveal'd
Not of Earth only, but of highest Heaven."

To whom thus Adam, clear'd of doubt, replied.
" How fully hast thou satisfied me, pure
Intelligence of Heaven, angel serene !
And freed from intricacies, taught to live
The easiest way ; nor with perplexing thoughts
To interrupt the sweet of life, from which God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us ; unless we ourselves [vain.
Seek them with wandering thoughts, and notions
But apt the mind or fancy is to rove
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end ;
Till warn'd, or by experience taught, she learn,
That not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle ; but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom : what is more, is fume,
Or emptiness, or fond impertinence :
And renders us, in things that most concern,
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek.
Therefore from this high pitch let us descend
A lower flight, and speak of things at hand
Useful ; whence, haply, mention may arise
Of something not unseasonable to ask,
By sufferance, and thy wonted favour deign'd.
Thee I have heard relating what was done
Ere my remembrance : now, hear me relate
My story, which perhaps thou hast not heard ;
And day is not yet spent : till then thou seest
How subtly to detain thee I devise ;
Inviting thee to hear while I relate ;
Had, were it not in hope of thy reply :
For, while I sit with thee, I seem in Heaven ;
And sweeter thy discourse is to my ear
Than fruits of palm-tree pleasantest to thirst
And hunger both, from labour at the hour
Of sweet repast ; they satiate, and soon fill,
Though pleasant ; but thy words, with grace divine
Labored, bring to their sweetness no satiety."

To whom thus Raphael answer'd heavenly meek.
" Nor are thy lips ungraceful, sire of men,
Nor tongue ineloquent ; for God on thee
Abundantly his gifts hath also pour'd
Inward and outward both, his image fair :
Speaking, or mute, all comeliness and grace
Attends thee ; and each word, each motion, forms ;
Nor less think we in Heaven of thee on Earth
Than of our fellow-servant, and inquire
Gladly into the ways of God with Man :
For God, we see, hath honour'd thee, and set
On Man his equal love : say therefore on ;
For I that day was absent, as befel,
Pond on a voyage uncouth and obscure,
On excursion toward the gates of Hell ;
Guard'd in full legion (such command we had)
To see that none thence issued forth a spy,

Or enemy, while God was in his work ;
Lest he, incens'd at such eruption bold,
Destruction with creation might have mix'd.
Not that they durst without his leave attempt ;
But us he sends upon his high behests
For state, as Sovran King ; and to inure
Our prompt obedience. Fast we found, fast shut,
The dismal gates, and barricado'd strong ;
But long ere our approaching heard within
Noise, other than the sound of dance or song,
Torment, and loud lament, and furious rage.
Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light
Ere sabbath-evening : so we had in charge.
But thy relation now ; for I attend, [mine."
Pleas'd with thy words no less than thou with

So spake the godlike power, and thus our sire.
" For Man to tell how human life began
Is hard ; for who himself beginning knew ?
Desire with thee still longer to converse
Induc'd me. As new wak'd from soundest sleep,
Soft on the flowery herb I found me laid,
In balmy sweat ; which with his beams the Sun
Soon dried, and on the reeking moisture fed.
Straight toward Heaven my wondering eyes I
turn'd,

And gaz'd a while the ample sky ; till, rais'd
By quick instinctive motion, up I sprung,
As thitherward endeavouring, and upright
Stood on my feet : about me round I saw
Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,
And liquid lapse of murmuring streams ; by these,
Creatures that liv'd and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew ;
Birds on the branches warbling ; all things smil'd ;
With fragrance and with joy my heart o'overflow'd.
Myself I then perus'd, and limb by limb
Survey'd, and sometimes went, and sometimes ran
With supple joints, as lively vigour led :
But who I was, or where, or from what cause,
Knew not ; to speak I tried, and forthwith spake ;
My tongue obey'd, and readily could name
Whate'er I saw. ' Thou Sun,' said I, ' fair light,
And thou enlighten'd Earth, so fresh and gay,
Ye hills, and dales, ye rivers, woods, and plains,
And ye that live and move, fair creatures, tell,
Tell, if ye saw, how I came thus, how here ? —
Not of myself ; — by some great Maker then,
In goodness and in power pre-eminent :
Tell me, how may I know him, how adore,
From whom I have that thus I move and live,
And feel that I am happier than I know.' —
While thus I call'd, and stray'd I knew not whither,
From where I first drew air, and first beheld
This happy light ; when answer none return'd,
On a green shady bank, profuse of flowers,
Pensive I sat me down ; there gentle sleep
First found me, and with soft oppression seiz'd
My drowsed sense, untroubled, though I thought
I then was passing to my former state
Insensible, and forthwith to dissolve :
When suddenly stood at my head a dream,
Whose inward apparition gently mov'd
My fancy to believe I yet had being,
And liv'd : one came, methought, of shape divine,
And said, ' Thy mansion wants thee, Adam ; rise,
First man, of men innumerable ordain'd
First father ! call'd by thee, I come thy guide
To the Garden of Bliss, thy seat prepar'd.'
So saying, by the hand he took me rais'd,
And over fields and waters, as in air
Smooth-sliding without step, last led me up

A woody mountain ; whose high top was plain,
 A circuit wide, enclos'd, with goodliest trees
 Planted, with walks, and bowers ; that what I saw
 Of Earth before scarce pleasant seem'd. Each tree,
 Loaden with fairest fruit that hung to the eye
 Tempting, stirr'd in me sudden appetite
 To pluck and eat ; whereat I wak'd, and found
 Before mine eyes all real, as the dream
 Had lively shadow'd : here had new begun
 My wandering, had not he, who was my guide
 Up hither, from among the trees appear'd,
 Presence Divine. Rejoicing, but with awe,
 In adoration at his feet I fell [I am,
 Submiss : he rear'd me, and ' Whom thou sought'st
 Said mildly, ' Author of all this thou seest
 Above, or round about thee, or beneath.
 This Paradise I give thee, count it thine
 To till and keep, and of the fruit to eat :
 Of every tree that in the garden grows
 Eat freely with glad heart ; fear here no dearth :
 But of the tree whose operation brings
 Knowledge of good and ill, which I have set
 The pledge of thy obedience and thy faith,
 Amid the garden by the tree of life,
 Remember what I warn thee, shun to taste,
 And shun the bitter consequence : for know,
 The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
 Transgress'd, inevitably thou shalt die,
 From that day mortal ; and this happy state
 Shalt lose, expell'd from hence into a world
 Of woe and sorrow.' Sternly he pronounced
 The rigid interdiction, which resounds
 Yet dreadful in mine ear, though in my choice
 Not to incur ; but soon his clear aspect
 Return'd, and gracious purpose thus renew'd.
 ' Not only these fair bounds, but all the Earth
 To thee and to thy race I give ; as lords
 Possess it, and all things that therein live,
 Or live in sea, or air ; beast, fish, and fowl.
 In sign whereof, each bird and beast behold
 After their kinds ; I bring them to receive
 From thee their names, and pay thee fealty
 With low subjection ; understand the same
 Of fish within their watery residence,
 Not hither summon'd, since they cannot change
 Their element, to draw the thinner air.'
 As thus he spake, each bird and beast behold
 Approaching two and two ; these cowering low
 With blandishment ; each bird stoop'd on his wing.
 I nam'd them as they pass'd, and understood
 Their nature, with such knowledge God endued
 My sudden apprehension : but in these
 I found not what methought I wanted still ;
 And to the heavenly vision thus presum'd.

" ' O, by what name, for thou above all these,
 Above mankind, or aught than mankind higher,
 Surpaskest far my naming ; how may I
 Adore thee, Author of this universe,
 And all this good to Man ? for whose well being
 So amply, and with hands so liberal,
 Thou hast provided all things : but with me
 I see not who partakes. In solitude
 What happiness, who can enjoy alone,
 Or, all enjoying, what contentment find ?
 Thus I presumptuous ; and the vision bright,
 As with a smile more brighten'd, thus replied.

" ' What call'st thou solitude ? Is not the Earth
 With various living creatures, and the air
 Replenish'd, and all these at thy command
 To come and play before thee ? Know'st thou not

Their language and their ways ? They also know,
 And reason not contemptibly : with these
 Find pastime, and bear rule : thy realm is large.
 So spake the Universal Lord, and seem'd
 So ordering : I, with leave of speech implor'd,
 And humble deprecation ; thus replied. [Power

" ' Let not my words offend thee, Heaven
 My Maker, be propitious while I speak.
 Hast thou not made me here thy substitute,
 And these inferior far beneath me set ?
 Among unequals what society
 Can sort, what harmony, or true delight ?
 Which must be mutual, in proportion due
 Given and receiv'd ; but in disparity
 The one intense, the other still remiss
 Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike : of fellowship I speak
 Such as I seek, fit to participate
 All rational delight : wherein the brute
 Cannot be human consort : they rejoice
 Each with their kind, lion with lioness ;
 So fitly them in pairs thou hast combin'd :
 Much less can bird with beast, or fish with fowl
 So well converse, nor with the ox the ape ;
 Worse then can man with beast, and least of all.

" ' Whereto the Almighty answer'd, not displeas'd
 ' A nice and subtle happiness, I see,
 Thou to thyself proposest, in the choice
 Of thy associates, Adam ! and wilt taste
 No pleasure, though in pleasure, solitary.
 What think'st thou then of me, and this my state ?
 Seem I to thee sufficiently possess'd
 Of happiness, or not ? who am alone
 From all eternity ; for none I know
 Second to me or like, equal much less.
 How have I then with whom to hold converse,
 Save with the creatures which I made, and those
 To me inferior, infinite descents
 Beneath what other creatures are to thee ?
 He ceas'd ; I lowly answered. ' To attain
 The height and depth of thy eternal ways
 All human thoughts come short, Supreme of things
 Thou in thyself art perfect, and in thee
 Is no deficiency found : not so is Man,
 But in degree ; the cause of his desire
 By conversation with his like to help,
 Or solace his defects. No need that thou
 Shouldst propagate, already infinite ;
 And through all numbers absolute, though one :
 But Man by number is to manifest
 His single imperfection, and beget
 Like of his like, his image multiplied,
 In unity defective ; which requires
 Collateral love, and dearest amity.
 Thou in thy secrecy although alone,
 Best with thyself accompanied, seek'st not
 Social communication ; yet, so pleas'd,
 Canst raise thy creature to what height thou wilt
 Of union or communion, deified :
 I, by conversing, cannot these erect
 From prone ; nor in their ways complacence find.
 Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom us'd
 Permissive, and acceptance found ; which gain'd
 This answer from the gracious voice divine.

" ' Thus far to try thee, Adam, I was pleas'd
 And find thee knowing, not of beasts alone,
 Which thou hast rightly nam'd, but of thyself ;
 Expressing well the spirit within thee free,
 My image, not imparted to the brute :
 Whose fellowship therefore unmeet for thee

Good reason was thou freely shouldst dislike ;
And he so minded still : I, ere thou spak'st,
Knew it not good for Man to be alone ;
And no such company as then thou saw'st
Intended thee ; for trial only brought,
To see how thou could'st judge of fit and meet :
What next I bring shall please thee, be assur'd,
Thy likeness, thy fit help, thy other self,
Thy wish exactly to thy heart's desire.'

" He ended, or I heard no more ; for now
My earthly by his heavenly overpower'd,
Which it had long stood under, strain'd to the height
In that celestial colloquy sublime,
As with an object that excels the sense
Dazzled and spent, sunk down, and sought repair
Of sleep, which instantly fell on me, call'd
By Nature as in aid, and clos'd mine eyes.
Mine eyes he clos'd, but open left the cell
Of fancy, my internal sight ; by which,
Abstract as in a trance, methought I saw,
Though sleeping, where I lay, and saw the shape
Still glorious before whom awake I stood :
Who stooping open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib, with cordial spirits warm,
And life-blood streaming fresh : wide was the wound,

But suddenly with flesh fill'd up and heal'd :
The rib he form'd and fashion'd with his hands :
Under his forming hands a creature grew,
Man-like, but different sex ; so lovely fair,
That what seem'd fair in all the world, seem'd now
Mean, or in her summ'd up, in her contain'd
And in her looks ; which from that time infus'd
Sweetness into my heart, unfelt before,
And into all things from her air inspir'd
The spirit of love and amorous delight.
She disappear'd, and left me dark ; I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore
Her loss, and other pleasures all abjure :
When out of hope, behold her, not far off,
Such as I saw her in my dream, adorn'd
With what all Earth or Heaven could bestow
To make her amiable : on she came,
Led by her heavenly Maker, though unseen,
And guided by his voice ; nor uninform'd
Of nuptial sanctity, and marriage rites :
Grace was in all her steps, Heaven in her eye,
In every gesture dignity and love.

I overjoy'd, could not forbear aloud. [fill'd
" This turn hath made amends ; thou hast ful-
Thy words, Creator bounteous and benign,
Giver of all things fair ! but fairest this
Of all thy gifts ! nor enviest. I now see
Bone of my bone, flesh of my flesh, myself
Before me : woman is her name ; of man
Extracted : for this cause he shall forego
Father and mother, and to his wife adhere ;
And they shall be one flesh, one heart, one soul.'

" She heard me thus ; and though divinely brought,
Yet innocence, and virgin modesty,
Her virtue, and the conscience of her worth,
That would be woo'd, and not unsought be won,
Not obvious, not obtrusive, but, retir'd,
The more desirable ; or, to say all
Nature herself, though pure of sinful thought,
Wrought in her so, that, seeing me, she turn'd :
I followed her ; she what was honour knew,
And with obsequious majesty approv'd
My pleaded reason. To the nuptial bower

I led her blushing like the morn : all Heaven,
And happy constellations, on that hour
Shed their selectest influence ; the Earth
Gave sign of gratulation, and each hill ;
Joyous the birds ; fresh gales and gentle airs
Whisper'd it to the woods, and from their wings
Flung rose, flung odours from the spicy shrub,
Disporting, till the amorous bird of night
Sung spousal, and bid haste the evening-star
On his hill-top, to light the bridal lamp.
Thus have I told thee all my state, and brought
My story to the sum of earthly bliss,
Which I enjoy ; and must confess to find
In all things else delight indeed, but such
As, us'd or not, works in the mind no change
Nor vehement desire : these delicacies [flowers,
I mean of taste, sight, smell, herbs, fruits, and Walks, and the melody of birds : but here
Far otherwise, transported I behold,
Transported touch ; here passion first I felt,
Commotion strange ! in all enjoyments else
Superior and unmov'd ; here only weak
Against the charm of beauty's powerful glance.
Or Nature fail'd in me, and left some part
Not proof enough such object to sustain ;
Or, from my side subducting, took perhaps
More than enough ; at least on her bestow'd
Too much of ornament, in outward show
Elaborate, of inward less exact.
For well I understand in the prime end
Of Nature her the inferior, in the mind
And inward faculties, which most excel ;
In outward also her resembling less
His image who made both, and less expressing
The character of that dominion given
O'er other creatures : yet when I approach
Her loveliness, so absolute she seems
And in herself complete, so well to know
Her own, that what she wills to do or say
Seems wisest, virtuousest, discreetest, best :
All higher knowledge in her presence falls
Degraded ; Wisdom in discourse with her
Loses discountenanc'd, and like folly shows ;
Authority and reason on her wait,
As one intended first, not after made
Occasionally ; and, to consummate all,
Greatness of mind, and Nobleness, their seat
Build in her loveliest, and create an awe
About her, as a guard angelic plac'd."

To whom the angel with contracted brow.
" Accuse not Nature, she hath done her part ;
Do thou but thine ; and be not diffident
Of Wisdom ; she deserts thee not, if thou
Dismiss not her, when most thou need'st her nigh,
By attributing overmuch to things
Less excellent, as thou thyself perceiv'st.
For, what admir'st thou, what transports thee so,
An outside ? fair, no doubt, and worthy well
Thy cherishing, thy honouring, and thy love ;
Not thy subjection ; weigh with her thyself ;
Then value : oft-times nothing profits more
Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right
Well manag'd ; of that skill the more thou know'st,
The more she will acknowledge thee her head,
And to realities yield all her shows :
Made so adorn for thy delight the more,
So awful, that with honour thou may'st love
Thy mate, who sees when thou art seen least wise.
But if the sense of touch, whereby mankind
Is propagated, seem such dear delight

Beyond all other ; think the same vouchsaf'd
To cattle and each beast ; which would not be.
To them made common and divulg'd, if aught
Therein enjoy'd were worthy to subdue
The soul of man, or passion in him move.
What higher in her society thou find'st
Attractive, human, rational, love still ;
In loving thou dost well, in passion not,
Wherein true love consists not : Love refines
The thoughts, and heart enlarges ; hath his seat
In reason, and is judicious ; is the scale
By which to Heavenly love thou may'st ascend,
Not sunk in carnal pleasure ; for which cause,
Among the beasts no mate for thee was found."

To whom thus, half abash'd, Adam replied.
" Neither her outside form'd so fair, nor aught
In procreation common to all kinds,
(Though higher of the genial bed by far,
And with mysterious reverence I deem,)
So much delights me, as those graceful acts,
Those thousand decencies, that daily flow
From all her words and actions mix'd with love
And sweet compliance, which declare unfeign'd
Union of mind, or in us both one soul ;
Harmony to behold in wedded pair
More grateful than harmonious sound to the ear.
Yet these subject not : I to thee disclose
What inward thence I feel, not therefore foil'd
Who meet with various objects, from the sense
Variously representing : yet, still free,
Approve the best, and follow what I approve.
To love, thou blam'st me not ; for Love, thou say'st,
Leads up to Heaven, is both the way and guide ;
Bear with me then, if lawful what I ask :
Love not the heavenly spirits, and how their love
Express they ? by looks only ? or do they mix
Irradiance, virtual or immediate touch ?"

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, Love's proper hue,
Answered : " Let it suffice thee that thou know'st
Us happy, and without love no happiness.
Whatever pure thou in the body enjoy'st,
(And pure thou wert created) we enjoy
In eminence ; and obstacle find none
Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars ;
Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace,
Total they mix, union of pure with pure
Desiring ; nor restrain'd conveyance need,
As flesh to mix with flesh, or soul with soul.
But I can now no more ; the parting Sun
Beyond the Earth's green cape and verdant isles
Hesperian sets, my signal to depart.
Be strong, live happy, and love ! but, first of all,
Him, whom to love is to obey, and keep
His great command : take heed lest passion sway
Thy judgment to do aught, which else free will
Would not admit : thine, and of all thy sons,
The weal or woe in thee is plac'd ; beware !
I in thy persevering shall rejoice,
And all the blest : stand fast ; to stand or fall
Free in thine own arbitrement it lies.
Perfect within, no outward aid require ;
And all temptation to transgress repel."

So saying, he arose ; whom Adam thus Follow'd with benediction. " Since to part,
Go, heavenly guest, ethereal messenger,
Sent from whose sovran goodness I adore !
Gentle to me and affable hath been
Thy condescension, and shall be honour'd ever

With grateful memory : thou to mankind
Be good and friendly still, and oft return !"

So parted they ; the angel up to Heaven
From the thick shade, and Adam to his bower.

Book IX.

The Argument.

Satan, having compassed the Earth, with meditated guile returns, as a mist, by night into Paradise ; enters into the serpent sleeping. Adam and Eve in the morning go forth to their labours, which Eve proposes to divide in several places, each labouring apart : Adam consents not, alleging the danger, lest that enemy, of whom they were forewarned, should attempt her found alone : Eve, loth to be thought not circumspect or firm enough, urges her going apart, the rather desirous to make trial of her strength ; Adam at last yields : the serpent finds her alone ; his subtle approach, first gazing, then speaking ; with much flattery extolling Eve above all other creatures. Eve, wondering to hear the serpent speak, asks how he attained to human speech, and such understanding, not till now ; the serpent answers, that by tasting of a certain tree in the garden he attained both to speech and reason, till then void of both : Eve requires him to bring her to that tree, and finds it to be the tree of knowledge forbidden : the serpent now grows bolder, with many wiles and arguments, induces her at length to eat ; she, pleased with the taste, deliberates a while whether to impart thereof to Adam or not ; at last brings him of the fruit ; relates what persuaded her to eat thereof : Adam, at first amazed, but perceiving her lost, resolves, through vehemence of love, to perish with her : and, extenuating the trespass, eats also of the fruit : the effects thereof in them both ; they seek to cover their nakedness ; then fall to variance and accusation of one another.

No more of talk where God or angel guest
With Man, as with his friend, familiar us'd
To sit indulgent, and with him partake
Rural repast ; permitting him the while
Venial discourse unblam'd. I now must change
Those notes to tragic ; foul distrust, and breach
Disloyal on the part of Man, revolt
And disobedience : on the part of Heaven
Now alienated, distance and distaste,
Anger and just rebuke, and judgment given,
That brought into this world a world of woe,
Sin and her shadow Death, and Misery
Death's harbinger : sad task, yet argument
Not less but more heroic than the wrath
Of stern Achilles on his foe pursued
Thrice fugitive about Troy wall ; or rage
Of Turnus for Lavinia disespous'd ;
Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long
Perplex'd the Greek, and Cytherea's son ;
If answerable style I can obtain
Of my celestial patroness, who deigns
Her nightly visitation unimplor'd,
And dictates to me slumbering ; or inspires
Easy my unpremeditated verse :
Since first this subject for heroic song
Pleas'd me long choosing, and beginning late ;

Not sedulous by nature to indite
 Wars, hitherto the only argument
 Heroic deem'd ; chief mastery to dissect
 With long and tedious havoc fabled knights
 In battles feign'd ; the better fortitude
 Of patience and heroic martyrdom
 Unsung ; or to describe races and games,
 Or tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields,
 Lapresses quaint, caparisons and steeds,
 Bases and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights
 At joust and tournament ; then marshall'd feast
 Serv'd up in hall with sewers and seneschals ;
 The skill of artifice or office mean,
 Not that which justly gives heroic name
 To person or to poem. Me, of these
 Nor skill'd nor studious, higher argument
 Remains ; sufficient of itself to raise
 That name, unless an age too late, or cold
 Climate, or years, damp my intended wing
 Depress'd ; and much they may, if all be mine,
 Not hers, who brings it nightly to my ear.
 The Sun was sunk, and after him the star
 Of Hesperus, whose office is to bring
 Twilight upon the Earth, short arbiter
 'Twixt day and night, and now from end to end
 Night's hemisphere had veil'd the horizon round :
 When Satan, who late fled before the threats
 Of Gabriel out of Eden, now improv'd
 In meditated fraud and malice, bent
 On Man's destruction, maugre what might hap
 Of heavier on himself, fearless return'd.
 By night he fled, and at midnight return'd
 From compassing the Earth ; cautious of day,
 Since Uriel, regent of the Sun, descried
 His entrance, and forewarn'd the cherubim
 That kept their watch ; thence full of anguish driven,
 The space of seven continued nights he rode
 With darkness, thrice the equinoctial line
 He circled ; four times cross'd the car of night
 From pole to pole traversing each colure ;
 In the eighth return'd ; and on the coast averse
 From entrance or cherubic watch, by stealth
 Found unsuspected way. There was a place,
 Not so, though sin, not time, first wrought the
 change,
 Where Tigris at the foot of Paradise,
 Into a gulf shot under ground, till part
 Rose up a fountain by the tree of life :
 As with the river sunk, and with it rose
 Man, involv'd in rising mist ; then sought
 Where to be hid ; sea he had search'd, and land,
 From Eden over Pontus and the pool
 Euxine, up beyond the river Ob ;
 Downward as far antarctic ; and in length,
 West from Orontes to the ocean barr'd
 At Daren ; thence to the land where flows
 Ganges and Indus : thus the orb he roam'd
 With narrow search ; and with inspection deep
 Consider'd every creature, which of all
 Most opportune might serve his wiles ; and found
 The serpent subtlest beast of all the field.
 In after long debate, irresolute
 His thoughts revolv'd, his final sentence chose
 His jewel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom
 No error, and his dark suggestions hide
 From sharpest sight : for, in the wily snake
 Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark,
 Is from his wit and native subtlety
 Proceeding ; which, in other beasts observ'd,

Doubt might beget of diabolic power
 Active within, beyond the sense of brute.
 Thus he resolv'd, but first from inward grief
 His bursting passion into plaints thus pour'd.
 " O Earth, how like to Heaven, if not preferr'd
 More justly, seat worthier of Gods, as built
 With second thoughts, reforming what was old !
 For what god, after better, worse would build ?
 Terrestrial Heaven, danc'd round by other Heavens
 That shine, yet bear their bright officious lamps,
 Light above light, for thee alone as seems,
 In thee concentrating all their precious beams
 Of sacred influence ! As God in Heaven
 Is centre, yet extends to all ; so thou,
 Centring, receiv'st from all those orbs : in thee,
 Not in themselves, all their known virtue appears
 Productive in herb, plant, and nobler birth
 Of creatures animate with gradual life
 Of growth, sense, reason, all summ'd up in Man.
 With what delight could I have walk'd thee round,
 If I could joy in aught, sweet interchange
 Of hill, and valley, rivers, woods, and plains,
 Now land, now sea, and shores with forest crown'd,
 Rocks, dens, and caves ! But I in none of these Find place or refuge ; and the more I see
 Pleasures about me, so much more I feel
 Torment within me, as from the hateful siege
 Of contraries : all good to me becomes [state.
 Bane, and in Heaven much worse would be my
 But neither here seek I, no nor in Heaven
 To dwell, unless by mastering Heaven's Supreme ;
 Nor hope to be myself less miserable
 By what I seek, but others to make such
 As I, though thereby worse to me redound :
 For only in destroying I find ease
 To my relentless thoughts ; and, him destroyed,
 Or won to what may work his utter loss,
 For whom all this was made, all this will soon
 Follow, as to him link'd in weal or woe ;
 In woe then ; that destruction wide may range :
 To me shall be the glory sole among
 The infernal powers, in one day to have marr'd
 What he, Almighty styl'd, six nights and days
 Continued making ; and who knows how long
 Before had been contriving ? though perhaps
 Not longer than since I, in one night, freed
 From servitude inglorious well nigh half
 The angelic name, and thinner left the throng
 Of his adorers : he, to be aveng'd,
 And to repair his numbers thus impair'd,
 Whether such virtue spent of old now fail'd
 More angels to create, if they at least
 Are his created, or, to spite us more,
 Determin'd to advance into our room
 A creature form'd of earth, and him endow,
 Exalted from so base original,
 With heavenly spoils, our spoils : what he decreed,
 He effected ; Man he made, and for him built
 Magnificent this world, and Earth his seat,
 Him lord pronounc'd ; and, O indignity !
 Subjected to his service angel-wings,
 And flaming ministers to watch and tend
 Their earthy charge : of these the vigilance
 I dread : and, to elude, thus wrapt in mist
 Of midnight vapour glide obscure, and pry
 In every bush and brake, where hap may find
 The serpent sleeping ; in whose mazy folds
 To hide me, and the dark intent I bring.
 O foul descent ! that I, who erst contended
 With Gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
 G

Into a beast ; and, mix'd with bestial slime,
 This essence to incarnate and imbrute,
 That to the height of deity aspir'd !
 But what will not ambition and revenge
 Descend to ? Who aspires, must down as low
 As high he soar'd ; obnoxious, first or last,
 To basest things. Revenge, at first though sweet,
 Bitter ere long, back on itself recoils :
 Let it ; I reckon not, so it light well aim'd,
 Since higher I fall short, on him who next
 Provokes my envy, this new favourite
 Of Heaven, this man of clay, son of despite,
 Whom, us the more to spite, his Maker rais'd
 From dust : spite then with spite is best repaid."

So saying, through each thicket dank or dry,
 Like a black mist low-creeping, he held on
 His midnight-search, where soonest he might find
 The serpent : him fast sleeping soon he found
 In labyrinth of many a round self-roll'd,
 His head the midst, well stor'd with subtle wiles :
 Not yet in horrid shade or dismal den,
 Nor nocent yet ; but, on the grassy herb,
 Fearless unfear'd he slept : in at his mouth
 The Devil enter'd ; and his brutal sense,
 In heart or head, possessing, soon inspir'd
 With act intelligential ; but his sleep
 Disturb'd not, waiting close the approach of morn.
 Now, when as sacred light began to dawn
 In Eden on the humid flowers, that breath'd
 Their morning incense, when all things, that breathe,
 From the Earth's great altar send up silent praise
 To the Creator, and his nostrils fill
 With grateful smell, forth came the human pair,
 And join'd their vocal worship to the quire
 Of creatures wanting voice ; that done, partake
 The season, prime for sweetest scents and airs :
 Then commune, how that day they best may ply
 Their growing work : for much their work outgrew
 The hands' despatch of two gardening so wide,
 And Eve first to her husband thus began.

" Adam, well may we labour still to dress
 This garden, still to tend plant, herb, and flower,
 Our pleasant task enjoin'd ; but till more hands
 Aid us, the work under our labour grows,
 Luxurious by restraint ; what we by day
 Lop overgrown, or prune, or prop, or bind,
 One night or two with wanton growth derides
 Tending to wild. Thou therefore now advise,
 Or bear what to my mind first thoughts present :
 Let us divide our labours ; thou, where choice
 Leads thee, or where most needs, whether to wind
 The woodbine round this arbour, or direct
 The clasping ivy where to climb ; while I,
 In yonder spring of roses intermix'd
 With myrtle, find what to redress till noon :
 For, while so near each other thus all day
 Our task we choose, what wonder if so near Looks intervene and smiles, or object new Casual discourse draw on ; which intermits
 Our day's work, brought to little, though begun
 Early, and the hour of supper comes unearn'd ?"

To whom mild answer Adam thus return'd.
 " Sole Eve, associate sole, to me beyond
 Compare above all living creatures dear !
 Well hast thou motion'd, well thy thoughts employ'd,
 How we might best fulfil the work which here
 God hath assign'd us ; nor of me shalt pass
 Unprais'd : for nothing lovelier can be found
 In woman, than to study household good,
 And good works in her husband to promote.

Yet not so strictly hath our Lord impos'd
 Labour, as to debar us when we need
 Refreshment, whether food, or talk between,
 Food of the mind, or this sweet intercourse
 Of looks and smiles ; for smiles from reason flow.
 To-brute denied, and are of love the food ;
 Love, not the lowest end of human life.
 For not to irksome toil, but to delight,
 He made us, and delight to reason join'd. [hand
 These paths and bowers doubt not but our joint
 Will keep from wilderness with ease, as wide
 As we need walk, till younger hands ere long
 Assist us : but, if much converse perhaps
 Thee satiate, to short absence I could yield :
 For solitude sometimes is best society,
 And short retirement urges sweet return.
 But other doubt possesses me, lest harm
 Befall thee sever'd from me ; for thou know'st
 What hath been warn'd us, what malicious foe
 Envyng our happiness, and of his own
 Despairing, seeks to work us woe and shame
 By sly assault ; and somewhere nigh at hand
 Watches, no doubt, with greedy hope to find
 His wish and best advantage, us asunder ;
 Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each
 To other speedy aid might lend at need :
 Whether his first design be to withdraw
 Our fealty from God, or to disturb
 Conjugal love, than which perhaps no bliss
 Enjoy'd by us excites his envy more ;
 Or this, or worse, leave not the faithful side
 That gave thee being, still shades thee, and protect
 The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks,
 Safest and seemliest by her husband stays,
 Who guards her, or with her the worst endures."

To whom the virgin majesty of Eve,
 As one who loves, and some unkindness meets,
 With sweet austere composure thus replied.

" Offspring of Heaven and Earth, and all Earth
 Lord !

That such an enemy we have, who seeks
 Our ruin, both by thee inform'd I learn,
 And from the parting angel over-heard,
 As in a shady nook I stood behind,
 Just then return'd at shut of evening flowers.
 But that thou shouldst my firmness therefore doubt
 To God or thee, because we have a foe
 May tempt it, I expected not to hear.
 His violence thou fear'st not, being such
 As we, not capable of death or pain,
 Can either not receive, or can repel.
 His fraud is then thy fear ; which plain infers
 Thy equal fear, that my firm faith and love
 Can by his fraud be shaken or seduc'd ; [breas
 Thoughts, which how found they harbour in Adam, mis-thought of her to thee so dear ?"

To whom with healing words Adam replied.
 " Daughter of God and Man, immortal Eve !
 For such thou art ; from sin and blame entire :
 Not diffident of thee do I dissuade
 Thy absence from my sight, but to avoid
 The attempt itself, intended by our foe.
 For he who tempts, though in vain, at least asperses
 The tempted with dishonour foul ; suppos'd
 Not incorruptible of faith, not proof
 Against temptation : thou thyself with scorn
 And anger wouldst resent the offer'd wrong,
 Though ineffectual found : misdeem not then,
 If such affront I labour to avert
 From thee alone, which on us both at once

The enemy, though bold, will hardly dare ;
 Or daring, first on me the assault shall light.
 Nor thou his malice and false guile contemn ;
 Subtle he needs must be, who could seduce
 Angels ; nor think superfluous other's aid.
 I from the influence of thy looks receive
 Access in every virtue ; in thy sight
 More wise, more watchful, stronger, if need were
 Of outward strength ; while shame, thou looking on,
 Sees to be overcome or over-reach'd,
 Would utmost vigour raise, and rais'd unite.
 Why shouldst not thou like sense within thee feel
 When I am present, and thy trial choose
 With me, best witness of thy virtue tried ?"

So spake domestic Adam in his care
 And matrimonial love ; but Eve, who thought
 Less attributed to her faith sincere,
 Thus her reply with accent sweet renew'd.

" If this be our condition, thus to dwell
 In narrow circuit, straiten'd by a foe,
 Able or violent, we not endued
 Single with like defence, wherever met ;
 How are we happy, still in fear of harm ?
 But harm precedes not sin : only our foe,
 Tempting, affronts us with his foul esteem
 Of our integrity : his foul esteem
 Brings no dishonour on our front, but turns
 Foul on himself ; then wherefore shunn'd or fear'd
 By us ? who rather double honour gain
 From his surmise prov'd false ; find peace within,
 Favour from Heaven, our witness, from the event.
 And what is faith, love, virtue, unassay'd
 Alone, without exterior help sustain'd ?
 Let us not then suspect our happy state
 Left so imperfect by the Maker wise,
 As not secure to single or combin'd.
 True is our happiness, if this be so,
 And Eden were no Eden, thus expos'd."

To whom thus Adam fervently replied.
 " O Woman, best are all things as the will
 Of God ordain'd them : his creating hand
 Nothing imperfect or deficient left
 Of all that he created, much less Man,
 Or aught that might his happy state secure,
 Secure from outward force ; within himself
 The danger lies, yet lies within his power :
 Against his will he can receive no harm.
 But God left free the will ; for what obeys
 Reason, is free ; and reason he made right,
 But bid her well beware, and still erect ;
 Lest, by some fair-appearing good surpris'd,
 She dictate false ; and mis-inform the will
 To do what God expressly hath forbid.
 Not then mistrust, but tender love, enjoins,
 That I should mind thee oft : and mind thou me.
 For we subsist, yet possible to swerve ;
 Since reason not impossibly may meet
 Some specious object by the foe suborn'd,
 And fall into deception unaware,
 Not keeping strictest watch, as she was warn'd.
 Fear not temptation then, which to avoid
 Were better, and most likely if from me
 Than ever not : trial will come unsought.
 Wouldst thou approve thy constancy, approve
 First thy obedience ; the other who can know,
 Not seeing thee attempted, who attest ?
 But, if thou think, trial unsought may find
 I both securer than thus warn'd thou seem'st,
 For thy stay, not free, absents thee more ;
 So in thy native innocence, rely

On what thou hast of virtue ; summon all !
 For God towards thee hath done his part, do thine."

So spake the patriarch of mankind ; but Eve
 Persisted ; yet submiss, though last, replied.

" With thy permission then, and thus forewarn'd
 Chiefly by what thy own last reasoning words
 Touch'd only ; that our trial, when least sought,
 May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,
 The willinger I go, nor much expect
 A foe so proud will first the weaker seek ;
 So bent, the more shall shame him his repulse."

Thus saying, from her husband's hand her hand
 Soft she withdrew ; and, like a wood-nymph light,
 Oread or Dryad, or of Delia's train,
 Betook her to the groves ; but Delia's self
 In gait surpass'd, and goddess-like deport,
 Though not as she with bow and quiver arm'd,
 But with such gardening tools as art yet rude,
 Guiltless of fire, had form'd, or angels brought.
 To Pales, or Pomona, thus adorn'd,
 Likest she seem'd, Pomona when she fled
 Vertumnus, or to Ceres in her prime,
 Yet virgin of Proserpina from Jove.
 Her long with ardent look his eye pursued
 Delighted, but desiring more her stay.
 Oft he to her his charge of quick return
 Repeated ; she to him as oft engag'd
 To be return'd by noon amid the bower,
 And all things in best order to invite
 Noontide repast, or afternoon's repose.
 O much deceiv'd, much failing, hapless Eve,
 Of thy presum'd return ! event perverse !
 Thou never from that hour in Paradise
 Found'st either sweet repast, or sound repose ;
 Such ambush, hid among sweet flowers and shades,
 Waited with hellish rancour imminent
 To intercept thy way, or send thee back
 Despoil'd of innocence, of faith, of bliss !
 For now, and since first break of dawn, the fiend,
 Mere serpent in appearance, forth was come ;
 And on his quest, where likeliest he might find
 The only two of mankind, but in them
 The whole included race, his purpos'd prey.
 In bower and field he sought where any tuft
 Of grove or garden-plot more pleasant lay,
 Their tendance, or plantation for delight ;
 By fountain or by shady rivulet
 He sought them both, but wish'd his hap might find
 Eve separate ; he wish'd, but not with hope
 Of what so seldom chanc'd ; when to his wish,
 Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies,
 Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood,
 Half spied, so thick the roses blushing round
 About her glow'd, oft stooping to support
 Each flower of slender stalk, whose head, though gay
 Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold,
 Hung drooping unsustain'd ; them she upstays
 Gently with myrtle band, mindless the while
 Herself, though fairest unsupported flower,
 From her best prop so far, and storm so nigh.
 Nearer he drew, and many a walk travers'd
 Of stateliest covert, cedar, pine, or palm ;
 Then voluble and bold, now hid, now seen,
 Among thick-woven arborets, and flowers
 Imborder'd on each bank, the hand of Eve :
 Spot more delicious than those gardens feign'd
 Or of reviv'd Adonis, or renown'd
 Alcinous, host of old Laertes' son ;
 Or that, not mystic, where the sapient king
 Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse.

Much he the place admir'd, the person more.
 As one who long in populous city pent,
 Where houses thick and sewers annoy the air,
 Forth issuing on a summer's morn, to breathe
 Among the pleasant villages and farms
 Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight;
 The smell of grain, or tedded grass, or kine,
 Or dairy, each rural sight, each rural sound;
 If chance, with nymph-like step, fair virgin pass,
 What pleasing seem'd, for her now pleases more
 She most, and in her look sums all delight:
 Such pleasure took the serpent to behold
 This flowery plat, the sweet recess of Eve
 Thus early, thus alone: her heavenly form
 Angelic, but more soft, and feminine,
 Her graceful innocence, her every air
 Of gesture, or least action, overaw'd
 His malice, and with rapine sweet bereav'd
 His fierceness of the fierce intent it brought:
 'That space the evil-one abstracted stood
 From his own evil, and for the time remain'd
 Stupidly good; of enmity disarm'd,
 Of guile, of hate, of envy, of revenge.
 But the hot Hell that always in him burns,
 'Though in mid Heaven, soon ended his delight,
 And tortures him now more, the more he sees
 Of pleasure, not for him ordain'd: then soon
 Fierce hate he recollects, and all his thoughts
 Of mischief, gratulating, thus excites.

"Thoughts, whither have ye led me! with what sweet

Compulsion thus transported, to forget
 What hither brought us! hate, not love; nor hope
 Of Paradise for Hell, hope here to taste
 Of pleasure; but all pleasure to destroy,
 Save what is in destroying; other joy
 To me is lost. Then, let me not let pass
 Occasion which now smiles; behold alone
 The woman, opportune to all attempts,
 Her husband, for I view far round, not nigh,
 Whose higher intellectual more I shun,
 And strength, of courage haughty, and of limb
 Heroic built, though of terrestrial mould;
 Foe not formidable! exempt from wound,
 I not; so much hath Hell debas'd, and pain
 Enfeebled me, to what I was in Heaven.
 She fair, divinely fair, fit love for gods!
 Not terrible, though terror be in love
 And beauty, not approach'd by stronger hate,
 Hate stronger, under show of love well feign'd;
 The way which to her ruin now I tend."

So spake the enemy of mankind, enclos'd
 In serpent, inmate bad! and toward Eve
 Address'd his way: not with indented wave,
 Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear,
 Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd
 Fold above fold, a surging maze! his head
 Crested aloft, and carbuncle his eyes;
 With burnish'd neck of verdant gold, erect
 Amidst his circling spires, that on the grass
 Floated redundant: pleasing was his shape
 And lovely; never since of serpent-kind
 Lovelier, not those that in Illyria chang'd
 Hermione and Cadmus, or the god
 In Epidaurus; nor to which transform'd
 Ammonian Jove, or Capitoline was seen;
 He with Olympias; this with her who bore
 Scipio, the height of Rome. With tract oblique
 At first, as one who sought access, but fear'd
 To interrupt, side long he works his way.

As when a ship, by skilful steersman wrought
 Nigh river's mouth or foreland, where the wind
 Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sail:
 So varied he, and of his tortuous train
 Curl'd many a wanton wreath in sight of Eve,
 To lure her eye; she, busied, heard the sound
 Of rustling leaves, but minded not, as us'd
 To such disport before her through the field,
 From every beast; more duteous at her call,
 Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd.
 He, bolder now, uncall'd before her stood,
 But as in gaze admiring: oft he bow'd
 His turret crest, and sleek enamell'd neck,
 Fawning; and lick'd the ground whereon she trod
 His gentle dumb expression turn'd at length
 The eye of Eve, to mark his play; he, glad
 Of her attention gain'd, with serpent-tongue
 Organic, or impulse of vocal air,
 His fraudulent temptation thus began.

"Wonder not, sovran mistress, if perhaps
 Thou canst who art sole wonder! much less am
 Thy looks, the Heaven of mildness, with disdain,
 Displeas'd that I approach thee thus, and gaze
 Insatiate; I thus single; nor have fear'd
 Thy awful brow, more awful thus retir'd.
 Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair,
 Thee all things living gaze on, all things thine
 By gift, and thy celestial beauty adore
 With ravishment beheld! there best beheld,
 Where universally admir'd; but here
 In this enclosure wild, these beasts among,
 Beholders rude, and shallow to discern
 Half what in thee is fair, one man except, [see
 Who sees thee? (and what is one?) who should b
 A goddess among gods, ador'd and serv'd
 By angels numberless, thy daily train."

So glaz'd the tempter, and his proem tun'd:
 Into the heart of Eve his words made way,
 Though at the voice much marvelling; at length,
 Not unamaz'd, she thus in answer spake. [nounc'

"What may this mean? language of man pr
 By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd?
 The first, at least, of these I thought denied
 To beasts; whom God, on their creation-day,
 Created mute to all articulate sound:
 The latter I demur; for in their looks
 Much reason, and in their actions, oft appears.
 Thee, serpent, subtlest beast of all the field
 I knew, but not with human voice endued;
 Redouble then this miracle, and say,
 How cam'st thou speakable of mute, and how
 To me so friendly grown above the rest
 Of brutal kind, that daily are in sight?
 Say, for such wonder claims attention due."

To whom the guileful tempter thus replied.
 "Empress of this fair world, resplendent Eve!
 Easy to me it is to tell thee all [be obey
 What thou command'st; and right thou shoul
 I was at first as other beasts that graze
 The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low,
 As was my food; nor aught but food discern'd
 Or sex, and apprehended nothing high:
 Till, on a day roving the field, I chanc'd
 A goodly tree far distant to behold
 Loaden with fruit of fairest colours mix'd,
 Ruddy and gold: I nearer drew to gaze;
 When from the boughs a savoury odour blown,
 Grateful to appetite, more pleas'd my sense
 Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
 Of ewe or goat, dropping with milk at even.

Unsock'd of lamb or kid, that tend their play
To satisfy the sharp desire I had
Of tasting those fair apples, I resolv'd
Not to defer; hunger and thirst at once,
Powerful persuaders, quicken'd at the scent
Of that alluring fruit, urg'd me so keen.
About the mossy trunk I wound me soon;
For, high from ground, the branches would require
Thy utmost reach or Adam's: round the tree
All other beasts that saw, with like desire
Longing and envying stood, but could not reach.
Amid the tree now got, where plenty hung
Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill
I spar'd not; for, such pleasure till that hour,
At feed or fountain, never had I found.
Sated at length, ere long I might perceive
Strange alteration in me, to degree
Of reason in my inward powers; and speech
Wanted not long; though to this shape retain'd.
Thenceforth to speculations high or deep
I turn'd my thoughts, and with capacious mind
Consider'd all things visible in Heaven,
Or Earth, or Middle; all things fair and good:
But all that fair and good in thy divine
Semblance, and in thy beauty's heavenly ray,
United I beheld; no fair to thine
Equivalent or second! which compell'd
Me thus, though importune perhaps, to come
And gaze, and worship thee of right declar'd
Sovran of creatures, universal dame!"

So talk'd the spirited sly snake; and Eve,
Yet more amaz'd, unwary thus replied.

"Serpent, thy overpraising leaves in doubt
The virtue of that fruit, in thee first prov'd:
But say, where grows the tree? from hence how far?
For many are the trees of God that grow
In Paradise, and various, yet unknown
To us; in such abundance lies our choice,
As leaves a greater store of fruit untouch'd,
Still hanging incorruptible, till men
Grow up to their provision, and more hands
Help to disburden Nature of her birth."

To whom the wily adder, blithe and glad.
"Empress, the way is ready, and not long;
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Near by a fountain, one small thicket past
Of blowing myrrh and balm: if thou accept
My conduct, I can bring thee thither soon." [roll'd

"Lead then," said Eve. He, leading, swiftly
In tangles, and made intricate seem straight,
To mischief swift. Hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest; as when a wandering fire,
Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night
Condenses, and the cold environs round,
Kindled through agitation to a flame,
Which oft, they say, some evil spirit attends,
Flourishing and blazing with delusive light,
Misleads the amaz'd night-wanderer from his way
To bogs and mires, and oft through pond or pool;
There swallow'd up and lost, from succour far:
So glister'd the dire snake, and into fraud
Led Eve, our credulous mother, to the tree
Of prohibition, root of all our woe;

Which when she saw, thus to her guide she spake.
"Serpent, we might have spar'd our coming
hither,

Fruitless to me, though fruit be here to excess,
The credit of whose virtue rest with thee;
Wonderous indeed, if cause of such effects.
But of this tree we may not taste nor touch;

God so commanded, and left that command
Sole daughter of his voice; the rest, we live
Law to ourselves; our reason is our law."

To whom the tempter guilefully replied.
"Indeed! hath God then said that of the fruit
Of all these garden-trees ye shall not eat,
Yet lords declar'd of all in Earth or Air?"

To whom thus Eve, yet sinless. "Of the fruit
Of each tree in the garden we may eat;
But of the fruit of this fair tree amidst
The garden, God hath said, 'Ye shall not eat
Thereof, nor shall ye touch it, lest ye die.'"

She scarce had said, though brief, when now more bold

The tempter, but with show of zeal and love
To Man, and indignation at his wrong,
New part puts on; and, as to passion mov'd,
Fluctuates disturb'd, yet comely and in act
Rais'd, as of some great matter to begin.
As when of old some orator renown'd,
In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute! to some great cause ad-
dress'd,

Stood in himself collected; while each part,
Motion, each act, won audience ere the tongue;
Sometimes in height began, as no delay
Of preface brooking, through his zeal of right:
So standing, moving, or to height up grown,
The tempter, all impassion'd, thus began.

"O sacred, wise, and wisdom-giving plant,
Mother of science! now I feel thy power
Within me clear; not only to discern
Things in their causes, but to trace the ways
Of highest agents, deem'd however wise.
Queen of this universe! do not believe
Those rigid threats of death: ye shall not die:
How should you? by the fruit? it gives you life
To knowledge; by the threatener? look on me,
Me, who have touch'd and tasted; yet both live,
And life more perfect have attain'd than Fate
Meant me, by venturing higher than my lot.
Shall that be shut to man, which to the beast
Is open? or will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass? and not praise
Rather your dauntless virtue, whom the pain
Of death denounc'd, whatever thing death be,
Deterr'd not from achieving what might lead
To happier life, knowledge of good and evil;
Of good, how just? of evil, if what is evil
Be real, why not known, since easier shunn'd?
God therefore cannot hurt ye, and be just;
Not just, not God: not fear'd then, nor obey'd:
Your fear itself of death removes the fear.
Why then was this forbid? Why, but to awe;
Why, but to keep ye low and ignorant,
His worshippers? He knows that in the day
Ye eat thereof, your eyes that seem so clear,
Yet are but dim, shall perfectly be then
Open'd and clear'd, and ye shall be as gods,
Knowing both good and evil, as they know.
That ye shall be as gods, since I as Man,
Internal Man, is but proportion meet;
I, of brute, human; ye, of human, gods.
So ye shall die, perhaps, by putting off
Human, to put on gods; death to be wish'd,
Though threaten'd, which no worse than this can bring.

And what are gods, that man may not become
As they, participating god-like food?
The gods are first, and that advantage use

On our belief, that all from them proceeds :
 I question it ; for this fair Earth I see,
 Warm'd by the Sun, producing every kind ;
 Them, nothing : if they all things, who enclos'd
 Knowledge of good and evil in this tree,
 That whoso eats thereof forthwith attains
 Wisdom without their leave ? and wherein lies
 The offence, that man should thus attain to know ?
 What can your knowledge hurt him, or this tree
 Impart against his will, if all be his ?
 Or is it envy ? and can envy dwell [more
 In heavenly breasts ? — These, these, and many Causes import your need of this fair fruit.
 Goddess humane, reach then, and freely taste."

He ended ; and his words, replete with guile
 Into her heart too easy entrance won :
 Fix'd on the fruit she gaz'd, which to behold
 Might tempt alone ; and in her ears the sound
 Yet rung of his persuasive words, impregn'd
 With reason, to her seeming, and with truth :
 Meanwhile the hour of noon drew on, and wak'd
 An eager appetite, rais'd by the smell
 So savoury of that fruit, which with desire,
 Inclenable now grown to touch or taste,
 Solicited her longing eye ; yet first
 Pausing a while, thus to herself she mus'd.

" Great are thy virtues, doubtless, best of fruits,
 Though kept from man, and worthy to be admir'd ;
 Whose taste, too long forborn, at first assay
 Gave elocution to the mute, and taught [praise :
 The tongue not made for speech, to speak thy
 Thy praise he also, who forbids thy use,
 Conceals not from us, naming thee the tree
 Of knowledge, knowledge both of good and evil ;
 Forbids us then to taste ! but his forbidding
 Commends thee more, while it infers the good
 By thee communicated, and our want :
 For good unknown sure is not had ; or, had
 And yet unknown, is as not had at all.
 In plain then, what forbids he but to know,
 Forbids us good, forbids us to be wise ?
 Such prohibitions bind not. But, if death
 Bind us with after-bands, what profits then
 Our inward freedom ? In the day we eat
 Of this fair fruit, our doom is, we shall die !
 How dies the serpent ? he hath eat'n and lives,
 And knows, and speaks, and reasons, and discerns,
 Irrational, till then. For us alone
 Was death invented ? or to us denied
 This intellectual food, for beasts reserv'd ?
 For beasts it seems : yet that one beast which first
 Hath tasted envies not, but brings with joy
 The good befall'n him, author unsuspect,
 Friendly to man, far from deceit or guile.
 What fear I then ? rather, what know to fear
 Under this ignorance of good and evil,
 Of God or death, of law or penalty ?
 Here grows the cure of all, this fruit divine,
 Fair to the eye, inviting to the taste,
 Of virtue to make wise : what hinders then
 To reach, and feed at once both body and mind ?"

So saying, her rash hand in evil hour
 Forth reaching to the fruit, she pluck'd, she eat !
 Earth felt the wound, and Nature from her seat,
 Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe,
 That all was lost. Back to the thicket slunk
 The guilty serpent ; and well might ; for Eve,
 Intent now wholly on her taste, nought else
 Regarded ; such delight till then, as seem'd,
 In fruit she never tasted, whether true

Or fancied so, through expectation high
 Of knowledge ; nor was godhead from her thought.
 Greedily she engorg'd without restraint,
 And knew not eating death : satiate at length,
 And heighten'd as with wine, jocund and boon,
 Thus to herself she pleasingly began.

" O sovran, virtuous, precious of all trees
 In Paradise ! of operation blest
 To sapience, hitherto obscur'd, infam'd,
 And thy fair fruit let hang, as to no end
 Created ; but henceforth my early care,
 Not without song, each morning, and due praise,
 Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease
 Of thy full branches offer'd free to all ;
 Till, dieted by thee, I grow mature
 In knowledge, as the gods, who all things know ;
 Though others envy what they cannot give.
 For, had the gift been theirs, it had not here
 Thus grown. Experience, next, to thee I owe,
 Best guide : not following thee, I had remain'd
 In ignorance ; thou open'st wisdom's way,
 And giv'st access, though secret she retire.
 And I perhaps am secret : Heaven is high,
 High, and remote to see from thence distinct
 Each thing on Earth ; and other care perhaps
 May have diverted from continual watch
 Our great Forbidder, safe with all his spies
 About him. But to Adam in what sort
 Shall I appear ? shall I to him make known
 As yet my change, and give him to partake
 Full happiness with me, or rather not,
 But keep the odds of knowledge in my power
 Without copartner ? so to add what wants
 In female sex, the more to draw his love,
 And render me more equal ; and perhaps,
 A thing not undesirable, sometime
 Superior : for, inferior, who is free ?
 This may be well : but what if God have seen,
 And death ensue ? then I shall be no more !
 And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
 Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct ;
 A death to think ! Confirm'd then I resolve,
 Adam shall share with me in bliss or woe :
 So dear I love him, that with him all deaths
 I could endure, without him live no life."

So saying, from the tree her step she turn'd ;
 But first low reverence done, as to the Power
 That dwelt within, whose presence had infus'd
 Into the plant scintial sap, deriv'd
 From nectar, drink of gods, Adam the while Waiting desirous her return, had wove
 Of choicest flowers a garland, to adorn
 Her tresses, and her rural labours crown ;
 As reapers oft are wont their harvest-queen.
 Great joy he promis'd to his thoughts, and new
 Solace in her return, so long delay'd :
 Yet oft his heart, divine of something ill,
 Misgave him ; he the faltering measure felt ;
 And forth to meet her went, the way she took
 That morn when first they parted : by the tree
 Of knowledge he must pass ; there he her met,
 Scarce from the tree returning ; in her hand
 A bough of fairest fruit, that downy smil'd,
 New gather'd, and ambrosial smell diffus'd.
 To him she hasted ; in her face excuse
 Came prologue, and apology too prompt ;
 Which, with bland words at will, she thus address'd :
 " Hast thou not wonder'd, Adam, at my stay ?
 Thee I have miss'd, and thought it long, depriv'd
 Thy presence ; agony of love till now

Not felt, nor shall be twice ; for never more
Mean I to try, what rash untried I sought,
The pain of abstinence from thy sight. But strange
Hath been the cause, and wonderful to hear :
This tree is not, as we are told, a tree
Of danger tasted, nor to evil unknown
Opening the way, but of divine effect
To open eyes, and make them gods who taste ;
And hath been tasted such : the serpent wise,
(Or not restrain'd as we, or not obeying,
Hath eaten of the fruit ; and is become,
Not dead, as we are threaten'd, but thenceforth
Endued with human voice and human sense,
Reasoning to admiration ; and with me
Persuasively hath so prevail'd, that I
Have also tasted, and have also found
The effects to correspond ; opener mine eyes
Dim erst, dilated spirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead ; which for thee
(Chiefly I sought, without thee can despise.
For bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss ;
Tedious, unshar'd with thee, and odious soon.
Thou therefore also taste, that equal lot
May join us, equal joy, as equal love ;
Lest, thou not tasting, different degree
Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce
Deity for thee when Fate will not permit."

Thus Eve with countenance blithe her story told ;
But in her cheek distemper flushing glow'd.
On the other side, Adam, soon as he heard
The fatal trespass done by Eve, amaz'd,
Astonied stood and blank, while horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd ;
From his slack hand the garland wreath'd for Eve
Down dropt, and all the faded roses shed :
Speechless he stood and pale, till thus at length
First to himself he inward silence broke.

" O fairest of creation, last and best
Of all God's works, creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet !
How art thou lost ! how on a sudden lost,
Defac'd, deflower'd, and now to death devote !
Rather, how hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance, how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden ! Some cursed fraud
Of enemy hath beguill'd thee, yet unknown,
And me with thee hath ruin'd ; for with thee
Certain my resolution is to die :
How can I live without thee ! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forlorn !
Would God create another Eve, and I
Another rib afford, yet loss of thee
Would never from my heart : no, no ! I feel
The link of Nature draw me : flesh of flesh,
Bone of my bone thou art, and from thy state
Mine never shall be parted, bliss or woe."

So having said, as one from sad dismay
Recomforted, and after thoughts disturb'd
Submitting to what seem'd remediless,

Thus in calm mood his words to Eve he turn'd.
" Bold deed thou hast presum'd, adventurous Eve,
And peril great provok'd, who thus hast dar'd,
Had it been only coveting to eye
That sacred fruit, sacred to abstinence,
Much more to taste it under ban to touch.
But past who can recall, or done undo ?
Not God Omnipotent, nor Fate ; yet so
Perhaps thou shalt not die, perhaps the fact

Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first
Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste :
Nor yet on him found deadly ; he yet lives ;
Lives, as thou saidst, and gains to live, as Man,
Higher degree of life : inducement strong
To us, as likely tasting to attain
Proportional ascent ; which cannot be
But to be gods, or angels, demi-gods.
Nor can I think that God, Creator wise,
Though threatening, will in earnest so destroy
Us his prime creatures, dignified so high,
Set over all his works ; which in our fall,
For us created, needs with us must fail,
Dependant made ; so God shall uncreate,
Be frustrate, do, undo, and labour lose ;
Not well conceiv'd of God, who, though his power
Creation could repeat, yet would be loth
Us to abolish, lest the adversary
Triumph, and say ; ' Fickle their state whom God
Most favours ; who can please him long ? Me first
He ruin'd, now Mankind ; whom will he next ?'
Matter of scorn, not to be given the foe.
However I with thee have fix'd my lot,
Certain to undergo like doom : if death
Consort with thee, death is to me as life ;
So forcible within my heart I feel
The bond of Nature draw me to my own ;
My own in thee, for what thou art is mine ;
Our state cannot be sever'd ; we are one,
One flesh ; to lose thee were to lose myself."

So Adam ; and thus Eve to him replied.
" O glorious trial of exceeding love,
Illustrious evidence, example high !
Engaging me to emulate ; but, short
Of thy perfection, how shall I attain,
Adam ? from whose dear side I boast me sprung,
And gladly of our union hear thee speak,
One heart, one soul in both ; whereof good proof
This day affords, declaring thee resolv'd,
Rather than death, or aught than death more dread,
Shall separate us, link'd in love so dear,
To undergo with me one guilt, one crime,
If any be, of tasting this fair fruit ;
Whose virtue, (for of good still good proceeds ;
Direct, or by occasion,) hath presented
This happy trial of thy love, which else
So eminently never had been known.
Were it I thought death menac'd would ensue
This my attempt, I would sustain alone
The worst, and not persuade thee, rather die
Deserted, than oblige thee with a fact
Pernicious to thy peace ; chiefly, assur'd
Remarkably so late of thy so true,
So faithful, love unequal'd : but I feel
Far otherwise the event ; not death, but life
Augmented, open'd eyes, new hopes, new joys,
Taste so divine, that what of sweet before
Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this, and harsh.
On my experience, Adam, freely taste,
And fear of death deliver to the winds."

So saying, she embrac'd him, and for joy
Tenderly wept ; much won, that he his love
Had so ennobled, as of choice to incur
Divine displeasure for her sake, or death.
In recompense (for such compliance had Such recompense best merits) from the bough
She gave him of that fair enticing fruit
With liberal hand : he scrupled not to eat,
Against his better knowledge ; not deceiv'd,

But fondly overcome with female charm.
 Earth trembled from her entrails, as again
 In pangs ; and Nature gave a second groan ;
 Sky lour'd ; and, muttering thunder, some sad drops
 Wept at completing of the mortal sin
 Original : while Adam took no thought,
 Eating his fill : nor Eve to iterate
 Her former trespass fear'd, the more to sooth
 Him with her lov'd society ; that now,
 As with new wine intoxicated both,
 They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel
 Divinity within them breeding wings,
 Wherewith to scorn the Earth : but that false fruit
 Far other operation first display'd,
 Carnal desire inflaming : he on Eve
 Began to cast lascivious eyes ; she him
 As wantonly repaid ; in lust they burn :
 Till Adam thus 'gan Eve to dalliance move.

" Eve, now I see thou art exact of taste,
 And elegant, of sapience no small part ;
 Since to each meaning savour we apply
 And palate call judicious ; I the praise
 Yield thee, so well this day thou hast purvey'd.
 Much pleasure we have lost, while we abstain'd
 From this delightful fruit, nor known till now
 True relish, tasting ; if such pleasure be
 In things to us forbidd'n, it might be wish'd,
 For this one tree had been forbidden ten.
 But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play,
 As meet is, after such delicious fare ;
 For never did thy beauty, since the day
 I saw thee first and wedded thee, adorn'd
 With all perfections, so inflame my sense
 With ardour to enjoy thee, fairer now
 Than ever : bounty of this virtuous tree !"

So said he, and forbore not glance or toy
 Of amorous intent ; well understood
 Of Eve, whose eye darted contagious fire.
 Her hand he seiz'd ; and to a shady bank,
 Thick over-head with verdant roof imbower'd,
 He led her nothing loth ; flowers were the couch,
 Pansies, and violets, and asphodel,
 And hyacinths ; Earth's freshest softest lap.
 There they their fill of love and love's disport
 Took largely, of their mutual guilt the seal,
 The solace of their sin : till dewy sleep
 Oppress'd them, wearied with their amorous play.
 Soon as the force of that fallacious fruit,
 That with exhilarating vapour bland
 About their spirits had play'd, and inmost powers
 Made err, was now exhal'd ; and grosser sleep,
 Bred of unkindly fumes, with conscious dreams
 Encumber'd, now had left them ; up they rose
 As from unrest ; and, each the other viewing,
 Soon found their eyes how open'd, and their minds
 How darken'd : innocence, that as a veil
 Had shadow'd them from knowing ill, was gone ;
 Just confidence, and native righteousness,
 And honour, from about them, naked left
 To guilty shame ; he cover'd, but his robe
 Uncover'd more. So rose the Danite strong,
 Herculean Samson, from the harlot-lap
 Of Philistean Dalilah, and wak'd
 Shorn of his strength, they destitute and bare
 Of all their virtue : silent, and in face
 Confounded, long they sat, as stricken mute :
 Till Adam, though not less than Eve abash'd,
 At length gave utterance to these words constrain'd.

" O Eve, in evil hour thou didst give ear
 To that false worm, of whomsoever taught

To counterfeit man's voice ; true in our fall,
 False in our promis'd rising ; since our eyes
 Open'd we find indeed, and find we know
 Both good and evil ; good lost, and evil got ;
 Bad fruit of knowledge ; if this be to know ;
 Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,
 Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
 Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd.
 And in our faces evident the signs
 Of foul concupiscence ; whence evil store
 Even shame, the last of evils ; of the first
 Be sure then. — How shall I behold the face
 Henceforth of God or angel, erst with joy
 And rapture so oft beheld ? Those heavenly shapes
 Will dazzle now this earthly with their blaze
 Insufferably bright. O ! might I here
 In solitude live savage ; in some glade
 Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
 To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad
 And brown as evening : cover me, ye pines !
 Ye cedars, with innumerable boughs
 Hide me, where I may never see them more ! —
 But let us now, as in bad plight, devise
 What best may for the present serve to hide
 The parts of each from other, that seem most
 To shame obnoxious, and unseemliest seen ;
 Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together sew'd,
 And girded on our loins, may cover round
 Those middle parts ; that this new corner, Shame,
 There sit not, and reproach us as unclean."

So counsell'd he, and both together went Into the thickest wood ; there soon they chose
 The fig-tree ; not that kind for fruit renown'd,
 But such as at this day, to Indians known,
 In Malabar or Decan spreads her arms
 Branching so broad and long, that in the ground
 The bended twigs take root, and daughters grow
 About the mother tree, a pillar'd shade
 High over-arch'd, and echoing walks between :
 There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
 Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds
 At loop-holes cut through thickest shade : those leaves

They gather'd, broad as Amazonian targe ;
 And, with what skill they had, together sew'd,
 To gird their waist ; vain covering, if to hide
 Their guilt and dreaded shame ! O, how unlike
 To that first naked glory ! Such of late
 Columbus found the American, so girt
 With feather'd cincture ; naked else, and wild
 Among the trees on isles and woody shores. [par
 Thus fenc'd, and, as they thought, their shame [stai
 Cover'd, but not at rest or ease of mind,
 They sat them down to weep ; nor only tears
 Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within Began to rise, high passions, anger, hate,
 Mistrust, suspicion, discord ; and shook sore
 Their inward state of mind, calm region once
 And full of peace, now tost and turbulent :
 For Understanding rul'd not, and the Will Heard not her lore ; both in subjection now
 To Sensual Appetite, who from beneath
 Usurping over sovran Reason claim'd
 Superior sway : from thus distemper'd breast,
 Adam, estrang'd in look and alter'd style
 Speech intermitted thus to Eve renew'd. [stai

" Would thou hadst hearkened to my words, and
 With me, as I besought thee, when that strange
 Desire of wandering, this unhappy morn,
 I know not whence possess'd thee ; we had then

Remain'd still happy ; not, as now, despoil'd
Of all our good ; sham'd, naked, miserable !
Let none henceforth seek needless cause to approve
The faith they owe ; when earnestly they seek Such proof, conclude, they then begin to fail."

To whom, soon mov'd with touch of blame, thus Eve.

" What words have pass'd thy lips, Adam severe !
Imput'st thou that to my default, or will
Of wandering, as thou call'st it, which who knows
But might as ill have happen'd thou being by,
Or to thyself perhaps ? Hadst thou been there,
Or here the attempt, thou couldst not have discern'd
Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake ;
No ground of enmity between us known,
Why he should mean me ill, or seek to harm.
Was I to have never parted from thy side ?
As good have grown there still a lifeless rib.
Being as I am, why didst not thou, the head,
Command me absolutely not to go,
Going into such danger, as thou saidst ?
Too facile then, thou didst not much gainsay ;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss.
Hadst thou been firm and fix'd in thy dissent,
Neither had I transgress'd, nor thou with me."

To whom, then first incens'd, Adam replied.

" Is this the love, is this the recompense
Of mine to thee, ingrateful Eve ! Express'd
Immutable, when thou wert lost, not I ;
Who might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,
Yet willingly chose rather death with thee ?
And am I now upbraided as the cause
Of thy transgressing ? Not enough severe,
It seems, in thy restraint : what could I more ?
I warn'd thee, I admonish'd thee, foretold
The danger, and the lurking enemy
That lay in wait ; beyond this had been force ;
And force upon free-will hath here no place.
But confidence then bore thee on ; secure
Ester to meet no danger, or to find
Matter of glorious trial ; and perhaps
I also err'd, in overmuch admiring
What seem'd in thee so perfect, that I thought
No evil durst attempt thee ; but I rue
That error now, which is become my crime,
And thou the accuser. Thus it shall befall
Him, who, to worth in women overtrusting,
Lest her will rule : restraint she will not brook ;
And, left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will accuse."

Thus they in mutual accusation spent
The fruitless hours, but neither self-condemning,
And of their vain contest appear'd no end.

Book X.

The Argument.

Man's transgression known ; the guardian-angels forake Paradise, and return up to Heaven to approve their vigilance, and are approved ; God declaring that the entrance of Satan could not be by them prevented. He sends his Son to judge the transgressors, who descends and gives sentence accordingly ; then in pity clothes them both, and re-ascends. Sin and Death, sitting till then at the gates of Hell, by won-derous sympathy feeling the success of Satan in this new world, and the Sin by Man there committed, resolve to sit no longer confined in Hell, but to follow Satan their sire up to the place of Man : to make the way easier from Hell to this world to and fro, they pave a broad highway or bridge over Chaos, according to the track that Satan first made ; then, preparing for Earth, they meet him, proud of his success, returning to Hell ; their mutual gratulation. Satan arrives at Pandemonium, in full assembly relates with boasting his success against Man ; instead of applause is entertained with a general hiss by all his audience, transformed with himself also suddenly into serpents according to his doom given in Paradise ; then, deluded with a show of the forbidden tree springing up before them, they, greedily reaching to take of the fruit, chew dust and bitter ashes. The proceedings of Sin and Death ; God foretels the final victory of his Son over them, and the renewing of all things ; but for the present, commands his angels to make several alterations in the Heavens and elements.

Adam, more and more perceiving his fallen condition, heavily bewails, rejects the condolment of Eve ; she persists, and at length appeases him :
then, to evade the curse likely to fall on their offspring, proposes to Adam violent ways, which he approves not ; but, conceiving better hope, puts her in mind of the late promise made them,
that her seed should be revenged on the serpent ;
and exhorts her with him to seek peace of the offended Deity, by repentance and supplication.

MEANWHILE the heinous and despiteful act
Of Satan done in Paradise ; and how
He, in the serpent, had perverted Eve,
Her husband she, to taste the fatal fruit,
Was known in Heaven ; for what can 'scape the eye
Of God all-seeing, or deceive his heart
Omniscient ? who, in all things wise and just,
Hinder'd not Satan to attempt the mind
Of Man, with strength entire, and free-will, arm'd ;
Complete to have discover'd and repuls'd
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend.
For still they knew, and ought to have still re-
member'd,

The high injunction, not to taste that fruit,
Whoever tempted ; which they not obeying
Incurr'd (what could they less ?) the penalty ;
And, manifold in sin, deserv'd to fall.
Up into Heaven from Paradise in haste
The angelic guards ascend, mute, and sad,
For Man ; for of his state by this they knew,
Much wondering how the subtle fiend had stol'n
Entrance unseen. Soon as the unwelcome news
From Earth arrived at Heaven-gate, displeas'd
All were who heard ; dim sadness did not spare
That time celestial visages, yet, mix'd
With pity, violated not their bliss.
About the new-arriv'd, in multitudes
The ethereal people ran, to hear and know
How all befell. they towards the throne supreme,
Accountable, made haste, to make appear
With righteous plea their utmost vigilance,
And easily approv'd ; when the Most High
Eternal Father, from his secret cloud
Amidst, in thunder utter'd thus his voice.

" Assembled angels, and ye powers return'd
From unsuccessful charge, be not dismay'd,
Nor troubled at these tidings from the Earth
Which your sincerest care could not prevent,

Foretold so lately what would come to pass,
 When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from Hell.
 I told ye then he should prevail, and speed
 On his bad errand ; Man should be seduc'd,
 And flatter'd out of all, believing lies
 Against his Maker ; no decree of mine
 Concurring to necessitate his fall,
 Or touch with lightest moment of impulse
 His free-will, to her own inclining left
 In even scale. But fall'n he is ; and now
 What rests, but that the mortal sentence pass
 On his transgression, — death denounc'd that day ?
 Which he presumes already vain and void,
 Because not yet inflicted, as he fear'd,
 By some immediate stroke ; but soon shall find
 Forbearance no acquittance, ere day end.
 Justice shall not return as bounty scorn'd.
 But whom send I to judge them ? whom but thee,
 Vicegerent Son ? To thee I have transferr'd
 All judgment, whether in Heaven, or Earth, or Hell.
 Easy it may be seen that I intend
 Mercy colleague with justice, sending thee
 Man's friend, his Mediator, his design'd
 Both ransom and Redeemer voluntary,
 And destin'd Man himself to judge Man fall'n."

So spake the Father ; and, unfolding bright
 Toward the right hand his glory, on the Son
 Blas'd forth unclouded deity : he full
 Resplendent all his Father manifest
 Express'd, and thus divinely answer'd mild.

" Father Eternal, thine is to decree ;
 Mine, both in Heaven and Earth, to do thy will Supreme ; that thou in me, thy Son lov'd,
 May'st ever rest well pleas'd. I go to judge
 On Earth these thy transgressors ; but thou know'st,
 Whoever judg'd, the worst on me must light,
 When time shall be ; for so I undertook
 Before thee ; and, not repenting, this obtain
 Of right, that I may mitigate their doom
 On me deriv'd ; yet I shall temper so
 Justice with mercy, as may illustrate most
 Them fully satisfied, and thee appease.
 Attendance none shall need, nor train, where none
 Are to behold the judgment, but the judg'd,
 Those two ; the third best absent is condemn'd,
 Convict by flight, and rebel to all law :
 Conviction to the serpent none belongs."

Thus saying, from his radiant seat he rose
 Of high collateral glory. Him thrones, and powers,
 Princedoms, and dominations ministrant,
 Accompanied to Heaven-gate ; from whence
 Eden, and all the coast, in prospect lay.
 Down he descended straight ; the speed of gods
 Time counts not, though with swiftest minutes wing'd.

Now was the Sun in western cadence low
 From noon, and gentle airs, due at their hour,
 To fan the Earth now wak'd, and usher in
 The evening cool ; when he, from wrath more cool,
 Came the mild judge, and intercessor both,
 To sentence Man : the voice of God they heard
 Now walking in the garden, by soft winds [heard,
 Brought to their ears, while day declin'd ; they
 And from his presence hid themselves among
 The thickest trees, both man and wife ; till God,
 Approaching, thus to Adam call'd aloud.

" Where art thou, Adam, wont with joy to meet
 My coming seen far off ? I miss thee here,
 Not pleas'd, thus entertain'd with solitude,
 Where obvious duty ere while appear'd unsought :

Or come I less conspicuous, or what change
 Absents thee, or what chance detains ? — Come forth !"

He came ; and with him Eve, more loth, though
 To offend ; discountenanc'd both, and discompos'd ;
 Love was not in their looks, either to God,
 Or to each other ; but apparent guilt,
 And shame, and perturbation, and despair,
 Anger, and obstinacy, and hate, and guile.

Whence Adam, faltering long, thus answer'd brief.

" I heard thee in the garden, and of thy voice Afraid, being naked, hid myself." To whom
 The gracious Judge without revile replied. [fear'd,

" My voice thou oft hast heard, and hast not
 But still rejoic'd ; how is it now become So dreadful to thee ? That thou art naked, who Hath told thee ? Hast thou eaten of the tree,
 Whereof I gave thee charge thou shouldst not eat ?"

To whom thus Adam sore beset replied.

" O Heaven ! in evil strait this day I stand
 Before my judge ; either to undergo
 Myself the total crime, or to accuse
 My other self, the partner of my life ;
 Whose failing, while her faith to me remains,
 I should conceal, and not expose to blame
 By my complaint : but strict necessity
 Subdues me, and calamitous constraint ;
 Lest on my head both sin and punishment,
 However insupportable, be all
 Devolv'd ; though should I hold my peace, yet thou
 Wouldst easily detect what I conceal. —
 This woman, whom thou mad'st to be my help,
 And gav'st me as thy perfect gift, so good,
 So fit, so acceptable, so divine,
 That from her hand I could suspect no ill,
 And what she did, whatever in itself,
 Her doing seem'd to justify the deed ;
 She gave me of the tree, and I did eat."

To whom the Sovran Presence thus replied.

" Was she thy God, that her thou didst obey
 Before his voice ? or was she made thy guide,
 Superior, or but equal, that to her
 Thou didst resign thy manhood, and the place
 Wherein God set thee above her made of thee,
 And for thee, whose perfection far excell'd
 Hers in all real dignity ? Adorn'd
 She was indeed, and lovely, to attract
 Thy love, not thy subjection ; and her gifts
 Were such, as under government well seem'd ;
 Unseemly to bear rule ; which was thy part
 And person, hadst thou known thyself aright."

So having said, he thus to Eve in few.

" Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done ?"

To whom sad Eve, with shame nigh overwhelm'd
 Confessing soon, yet not before her judge
 Bold or loquacious, thus abash'd replied.

" The serpent me beguil'd, and I did eat."

Which when the Lord God heard, without delay
 To judgment he proceeded on the accus'd
 Serpent, though brute ; unable to transfer
 The guilt on him, who made him instrument
 Of mischief, and polluted from the end
 Of his creation ; justly then accurs'd,
 As vitiated in nature : more to know
 Concern'd not Man, (since he no further knew,)
 Nor alter'd his offence ; yet God at last
 To Satan first in sin his doom applied,
 Though in mysterious terms, judg'd as then best :
 And on the serpent thus his curse let fall.

" Because thou hast done this, thou art accurs'd above all cattle, each beast of the field ;

Upon thy belly grovelling thou shalt go,
And dust shall eat all the days of thy life.
Between thee and the woman I will put
Enmity, and between thine and her seed ;
Her seed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel."

So spake this oracle, then verified
When Jesus, son of Mary, second Eve,
Saw Satan fall, like lightning, down from Heaven,
Prince of the air ; then, rising from his grave
Spall'd principalities and powers, triumph'd
In open show ; and, with ascension bright,
Captivity led captive through the air,
The realm itself of Satan, long usurp'd ;
Thence he shall tread at last under our feet ;
Even he, who now foretold his fatal bruise :
And to the woman thus his sentence turn'd.

"Thy sorrow I will greatly multiply
By thy conception ; children thou shalt bring
A sorrow forth ; and to thy husband's will Thine shall submit ; he over thee shall rule."

On Adam last thus judgment he pronounc'd.
Because thou hast hearken'd to the voice of thy wife,

And eaten of the tree, concerning which
I charg'd thee, saying, 'Thou shalt not eat thereof :'
The ground is the ground for thy sake ; thou in sorrow
Shalt eat thereof, all the days of thy life ;
Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth
Unto ; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field ;
In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread,
Till thou return unto the ground ; for thou
Out of the ground wast taken, know thy birth,
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return."

So judg'd he Man, both judge and saviour sent ;
And the instant stroke of death, denounc'd that day,
Remov'd far off ; then, pitying how they stood
Before him naked to the air, that now
Must suffer change, disdain'd not to begin
Thenceforth the form of servant to assume ;
As when he wash'd his servants' feet ; so now,
As father of his family, he clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts, or slain,
Or as the snake with youthful coat repaid ;
And thought not much to clothe his enemies :
For 'twas their outward only with the skins
Different, but inward nakedness, much more
Opportunities, with his robe of righteousness
Arming, cover'd from his Father's sight.
To him, with swift ascent he up return'd,
Into his blissful bosom reassum'd

In glory, as of old ; to him appeas'd,
Al, though all-knowing, what had pass'd with Man
Remounted, mixing intercession sweet. [Earth,

Meanwhile, ere thus was sinn'd and judg'd on
Within the gates of Hell sat Sin and Death,
In counterview within the gates, that now
Stood open wide, belching outrageous flame
Far into Chaos, since the fiend pass'd through,
Sin opening ; who thus now to Death began.

"O son, why sit we here each other viewing
My while Satan, our great author, thrives
In other worlds, and happier seat provides
For us, his offspring dear ? It cannot be
But that success attends him ; if mishap,
Ere this he had return'd, with fury driven
By his avengers ; since no place like this
Can fit his punishment, or their revenge.

Yet think I feel new strength within me rise,
Wings growing, and dominion given me large,

Beyond this deep : whatever draws me on,
Or sympathy, or some connatural force,
Powerful at greatest distance to unite,
With secret amity, things of like kind,
By secretest conveyance. Thou, my shade
Inseparable, must with me along :
For Death from Sin no power can separate.
But, lest the difficulty of passing back
Stay his return perhaps over this gulf
Impassable, impervious ; let us try
Adventurous work, yet to thy power and mine
Not unagreeable, to found a path
Over this main from Hell to that new world,
Where Satan now prevails ; a monument
Of merit high to all the infernal host,
Easing their passage hence, for intercourse,
Or transmigration, as their lot shall lead.
Nor can I miss the way, so strongly drawn
By this new-felt attraction and instinct."

Whom thus the meagre shadow answer'd soon.

"Go whither Fate, and inclination strong,
Leads thee ; I shall not lag behind, nor err
The way, thou leading ; such a scent I draw
Of carnage, prey innumerable, and taste
The savour of death from all things there that live :
Nor shall I to the work thou enterprisest
Be wanting, but afford thee equal aid."

So saying, with delight he snuff'd the smell
Of mortal change on Earth. As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field,
Where armies lie encamp'd, come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcasses design'd
For death, the following day, in bloody fight :
So scented the grim feature, and upturn'd
His nostril wide into the murky air ;
Sagacious of his quarry from so far.
Then both from out Hell-gates, into the waste
Wide anarchy of Chaos, damp and dark, [great] Flew diverse ; and with power (their power was Hovering upon the waters, what they met
Solid or slimy, as in raging sea
Tost up and down, together crouded drove,
From each side shoaling towards the mouth of Hell :
As when two polar winds, blowing adverse
Upon the Cronian sea, together drive
Mountains of ice, that stop the imagin'd way
Beyond Petsora eastward, to the rich
Cathaian coast. The aggregated soil
Death with his mace petrific, cold and dry,
As with a trident smote, and fix'd as firm
As Delos, floating once ; the rest his look
Bound with Gorgonian rigour not to move ;
And with Asphaltic slime, broad as the gate,
Deep to the roots of Hell the gather'd beach
They fasten'd, and the mole immense wrought on
Over the foaming deep high-arch'd, a bridge
Of length prodigious, joining to the wall
Immoveable of this now fenceless world,
Forfeit to Death ; from hence a passage broad,
Smooth, easy, inoffensive, down to Hell.
So, if great things to small may be compar'd,
Xerxes, the liberty of Greece to yoke,
From Susa, his Memnonian palace high,
Came to the sea ; and, over Hellespont
Bridging his way, Europe with Asia join'd,
And scourg'd with many a stroke the indignant
waves.

Now had they brought the work by wondrous art
Pontifical, a ridge of pendant rock,

Over the vex'd abyss, following the track
 Of Satan to the self-same place where he
 First lighted from his wing, and landed safe
 From out of Chaos, to the outside bare
 Of this round world: with pins of adamant
 And chains they made all fast, too fast they made
 And durable! And now in little space
 The confines met of empyréan Heaven,
 And of this world; and, on the left hand, Hell
 With long reach interpos'd; three several ways
 In sight, to each of these three places led.
 And now their way to Earth they had descried,
 To Paradise first tending; when, behold!
 Satan, in likeness of an angel bright,
 Betwixt the Centaur and the Scorpion steering
 His zenith, while the Sun in Aries rose:
 Disguis'd he came; but those his children dear
 Their parent soon discern'd, though in disguise.
 He, after Eve seduc'd, unminded slunk
 Into the wood fast by; and, changing shape,
 To observe the sequel, saw his guileful act
 By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded
 Upon her husband; saw their shame that sought
 Vain covertures; but when he saw descend
 The Son of God to judge them, terrified
 He fled; not hoping to escape, but shun
 The present; fearing, guilty, what his wrath
 Might suddenly inflict; that past, return'd
 By night, and listening where the hapless pair
 Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint,
 Thence gather'd his own doom; which understood
 Not instant, but of future time, with joy
 And tidings fraught, to Hell he now return'd;
 And at the brink of Chaos, near the foot
 Of this new wondrous pontifice, unhop'd
 Met, who to meet him came, his offspring dear
 Great joy was at their meeting, and at sight
 Of that stupendous bridge his joy increas'd.
 Long he admiring stood, till Sin, his fair
 Enchanting daughter, thus the silence broke.

"O parent, these are thy magnificent deeds,
 Thy trophies! which thou view'st as not thine own;
 Thou art their author, and prime architect:
 For I no sooner in my heart divin'd,
 My heart, which by a secret harmony
 Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet,
 That thou on Earth hadst prosper'd, which thy looks
 Now also evidence, but straight I felt,
 Though distant from thee worlds between, yet felt
 That I must after thee, with this thy son;
 Such fatal consequence unites us three;
 Hell could no longer hold us in our bounds,
 Nor this unvoyageable gulf obscure
 Detain from following thy illustrious track:
 Thou hast achiev'd our liberty, confin'd
 Within Hell-gates till now; thou us impower'd
 To fortify thus far, and overlay,
 With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss.
 Thine now is all this world; thy virtue hath won
 What thy hands builded not; thy wisdom gain'd
 With odds what war hath lost, and fully aveng'd
 Our foil in Heaven; here thou shalt monarch reign,
 There didst not; there let him still victor sway,
 As battle hath adjudg'd; from this new world
 Retiring, by his own doom alienated;
 And henceforth monarchy with thee divide
 Of all things, parted by the empyreal bounds,
 His quadrature, from thy orbicular world;
 Or try thee now more dangerous to his throne."

Whom thus the prince of darkness answer'd glad.

"Fair daughter, and thou son and grand-child both;
 High proof ye now have given to be the race
 Of Satan, (for I glory in the name, Antagonist of Heaven's Almighty King,)
 Amply have merited of me, of all
 The infernal empire, that so near Heaven's door
 Triumphant with triumphal act have met,
 Mine, with this glorious work; and made one realm,
 Hell and this world, one realm, one continent
 Of easy thoroughfare. Therefore, while I
 Descend through darkness, on your road with ease,
 To my associate powers, them to acquaint
 With these successes, and with them rejoice;
 You two this way, among these numerous orbs,
 All yours, right down to Paradise descend;
 There dwell, and reign in bliss; thence on the Earth
 Dominion exercise and in the air,
 Chiefly on man, sole lord of all declar'd;
 Him first make sure your thrall, and lastly kill
 My substitutes I send ye, and create
 Plenipotent on Earth, of matchless might
 Issuing from me: on your joint vigour now
 My hold of this new kingdom all depends,
 Through Sin to Death expos'd by my exploit.
 If your joint power prevail, the affairs of Hell
 No detriment need fear; go, and be strong!"

So saying he dismiss'd them; they with speed
 Their course through thickest constellations held,
 Spreading their bane; the blasted stars look'd wan,
 And planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
 Then suffer'd. The other way Satan went down
 The causeway to Hell-gate: on either side
 Disparted Chaos over built exclaim'd,
 And with rebounding surge the bars assail'd,
 That scorn'd his indignation: through the gate,
 Wide open and unguarded, Satan pass'd,
 And all about found desolate; for those,
 Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
 Flown to the upper world; the rest were all
 Far to the inland retir'd, about the walls
 Of Pandemonium; city and proud seat
 Of Lucifer, so by allusion call'd
 Of that bright star to Satan paragon'd;
 There kept their watch the legions, while the grand
 In council sat, solicitous what chance
 Might intercept their emperor sent; so he
 Departing gave command, and they observ'd.
 As when the Tartar from his Russian foe,
 By Astracan, over the snowy plains,
 Retires; or Bactrian Sophi, from the horns
 Of Turkish crescent, leaves all waste beyond
 The realm of Aladule, in his retreat
 To Tauris or Casbeen: so these, the late
 Heaven-banish'd host, left desert utmost Hell
 Many a dark league, reduc'd in careful watch
 Round their metropolis; and now expecting
 Each hour their great adventurer, from the search
 Of foreign worlds; he through the midst unmark'd,
 In show plebeian angel militant
 Of lowest order, pass'd; and from the door
 Of that Plutonian hall, invisible
 Ascended his high throne; which, under state
 Of richest texture spread, at the upper end
 Was plac'd in regal lustre. Down a while
 He sat, and round about him saw, unseen:
 At last, as from a cloud, his fulgent head
 And shape star-bright appear'd, or brighter; clad
 With what permissive glory since his fall
 Was left him, or false glitter: all amaz'd
 At that so sudden blaze, the Stygian throng

Bent their aspect, and whom they wish'd beheld,
 Their mighty chief return'd : loud was the acclaim :
 Forth rush'd in haste the great consulting peers,
 Rais'd from their dark divan, and with like joy
 Congratulant approach'd him ; who with hand
 Silence, and with these words, attention won.

“ Thrones, dominations, princedoms, virtues,
 powers ;

For in possession such, not only of right,
 I call ye, and declare ye now ; return'd
 Successful beyond hope, to lead ye forth
 Triumphant out of this infernal pit
 Abominable, accurs'd, the house of woe,
 And dungeon of our tyrant : now possess,
 As lords, a spacious world, to our native Heaven
 Little inferior, by my adventure hard
 With peril great achiev'd. Long were to tell
 What I have done ; what suffer'd ; with what pain
 Voyag'd th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep
 Of horrible confusion ; over which
 By Sin and Death a broad way now is pav'd
 To expedite your glorious march ; but I
 Told out my uncouth passage, forc'd to ride
 The untractable abyss, plung'd in the womb
 Of unoriginal Night and Chaos wild ;
 That, jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
 My journey strange, with clamorous uproar
 Protesting Fate supreme ; thence how I found
 The new created world, which fame in Heaven
 Long had foretold, a fabric wonderful
 Of absolute perfection ! therein Man
 Plac'd in a Paradise, by our exile
 Made happy : him by fraud I have seduc'd
 From his Creator ; and, the more to increase
 Your wonder, with an apple ; he, thereat
 Offended, worth your laughter ! hath given up
 Both his beloved Man and all his world,
 To Sin and Death a prey, and so to us,
 Without our hazard, labour, or alarm ;
 To range in, and to dwell, and over Man
 To rule, as over all he should have rul'd.
 True is, me also he hath judg'd, or rather
 Me not, but the brute serpent in whose shape
 Man I deceiv'd : that which to me belongs
 In enmity, which he will put between
 Me and mankind ; I am to bruise his heel ;
 His seed, when is not set, shall bruise my head :
 A world who would not purchase with a bruise,
 Or much more grievous pain ? — Ye have the account

Of my performance : what remains, ye gods,
 But up, and enter now into full bliss ?”

So having said, a while he stood, expecting
 Their universal shout and high applause,
 To fill his ear ; when, contrary, he hears
 On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
 A dismal universal hiss, the sound
 Of public scorn ; he wonder'd, but not long
 Had leisure, wondering at himself now more ;
 His visage drawn he felt to sharp and spare ;
 His arms clung to his ribs ; his legs entwining
 Each other, till supplanted down he fell
 A monstrous serpent on his belly prone,
 Reluctant, but in vain ; a greater power
 Now rul'd him, punish'd in the shape he sinn'd,
 According to his doom : he would have spoke,
 But hiss for hiss return'd with forked tongue
 To forked tongue ; for now were all transform'd
 Alike, to serpents all, as accessories
 To his bold riot : dreadful was the din

Of hissing through the hall, thick swarming now
 With complicated monsters head and tail,
 Scorpion, and asp, and amphisbæna dire,
 Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
 And dipsas ; (not so thick swarm'd once the soil
 Bedropt with blood of Gorgon, or the isle
 Ophiusa,) but still greatest he the midst,
 Now dragon grown, larger than whom the Sun
 Engender'd in the Pythian vale or slime,
 Huge Python, and his power no less he seem'd
 Above the rest still to retain ; they all
 Him follow'd, issuing forth to the open field,
 Where all yet left of that revolted rout,
 Heaven-fall'n, in station stood or just array ;
 Sublime with expectation when to see
 In triumph issuing forth their glorious chief ;
 They saw, but other sight instead ! a croud
 Of ugly serpents ; horroun on them fell,
 And horrid sympathy ; for, what they saw, [arms,
 They felt themselves, now changing ; down their Down fell both spear and shield ; down they as fast ;
 And the dire hiss renew'd, and the dire form
 Catch'd, by contagion ; like in punishment, [meant,
 As in their crime. Thus was the applause they Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame [stood
 Cast on themselves from their own mouths. There
 A grove hard by, sprung up with this their change,
 His will who reigns above, to aggravate
 Their penance, laden with fair fruit, like that
 Which grew in Paradise, the bait of Eve
 Us'd by the tempter : on that prospect strange
 Their earnest eyes they fix'd, imagining
 For one forbidden tree a multitude
 Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame ;
 Yet, parch'd with scalding thirst and hunger fierce,
 Though to delude them sent, could not abstain ;
 But on they roll'd in heaps, and, up the trees
 Climbing, sat thicker than the snaky locks
 That curl'd Megæra : greedily they pluck'd
 The fruitage fair to sight, like that which grew
 Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd :
 This more delusive, not the touch, but taste
 Deceiv'd : they, fondly thinking to allay
 Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit
 Chew'd bitter ashes, which the offended taste
 With spattering noise rejected : oft they assay'd,
 Hunger and thirst constraining ; drugg'd as oft,
 With hatefulest disrelish writh'd their jaws,
 With soot and cinders fill'd ; so oft they fell
 Into the same illusion, not as Man [plagu'd
 Whom they triumph'd once laps'd. Thus were they
 And worn with famine, long and ceaseless hiss,
 Till their lost shape, permitted, they resum'd ;
 Yearly enjoin'd, some say, to undergo,
 This annual humbling certain number'd days,
 To dash their pride, and joy, for Man seduc'd.
 However, some tradition they dispers'd
 Among the Heathen, of their purchase got,
 And fabled how the serpent, whom they call'd
 Ophion, with Eurynome, the wide-
 Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule
 Of high Olympus ; thence by Saturn driven
 And Ops, ere yet Dictæar Jove was born.

Meanwhile in Paradise the hellish pair
 Too soon arriv'd ; Sin, there in power before,
 Once actual ; now in body, and to dwell
 Habitual habitant ; behind her Death,
 Close following pace for pace, not mounted yet
 On his pale horse : to whom Sin thus began.
 “ Second of Satan sprung, all-conquering Death !

What think'st thou of our empire now, though earn'd
With travel difficult, not better far [watch,
Than still at Hell's dark threshold to have sat
Unnam'd, undreaded, and thyself half-starv'd?"

Whom thus the Sin-born monster answer'd soon.

"To me, who with eternal famine pine,
Alike is Hell, or Paradise, or Heaven;
There best, where most with ravine I may meet;
Which here, though plenteous, all too little seems
To stuff this maw, this vast unhide-bound corps."

To whom the incestuous mother thus replied.

"Thou therefore on these herbs, and fruits, and flowers,

Feed first; on each beast next, and fish and fowl;
No homely morsels! and whatever thing
The sithe of Time mows down, devour unspar'd;
Till I, in Man residing, through the race,
His thoughts, his looks, words, actions, all infect;
And season him thy last and sweetest prey."

This said, they both betook them several ways,
Both to destroy, or unimmortal make
All kinds, and for destruction to mature
Sooner or later; which the Almighty seeing,
From his transcendent seat the saints among,
To those bright orders uttered thus his voice.

"See, with what heat these dogs of Hell advance
To waste and havoc yonder world, which I
So fair and good created; and had still
Kept in that state, had not the folly of Man
Let in these wasteful furies, who impute
Folly to me; so doth the prince of Hell
And his adherents, that with so much ease
I suffer them to enter and possess
A place so heavenly: and, conniving, seem
To gratify my scornful enemies,
That laugh, as if, transported with some fit
Of passion, I to them had quitted all,
At random yielded up to their misrule;
And know not that I call'd, and drew them thither,
My Hell-hounds, to lick up the draff and filth
Which Man's polluting sin with taint hath shed
On what was pure; till cramm'd and gorg'd, nigh burst

With suck'd and glutted offal, at one sling
Of thy victorious arm, well pleasing Son,
Both Sin, and Death, and yawning Grave, at last,
Through Chaos hurl'd, obstruct the mouth of Hell
For ever, and seal up his ravenous jaws. [pure
Then Heaven and Earth renew'd shall be made
To sanctity, that shall receive no stain:
Till then, the curse pronounc'd on both precedes."

He ended, and the heavenly audience loud
Sung Halleluiah, as the sound of seas,
Through multitude that sung: "Just are thy ways,
Righteous are thy decrees on all thy works;
Who can extenuate thee? Next, to the Son,
Destin'd Restorer of mankind, by whom
New Heaven and Earth shall to the ages rise,
Or down from Heaven descend." — Such was their
song;

While the Creator, calling forth by name
His mighty angels, gave them several charge,
As sorted best with present things. The Sun
Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
As might affect the Earth with cold and heat
Scarce tolerable, and from the north to call
Decrepit winter; from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat. To the blanc Moon
Her office they prescribed; to the other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,

In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy, and when to join
In synod unbenign; and taught the fix'd
Their influence malignant when to shower,
Which of them rising with the Sun, or falling,
Should prove tempestuous; to the winds they set
Their corners, when with bluster to confound
Sea, air, and shore; the thunder when to roll
With terour through the dark æreal hall.
Some say he bid his angels turn ascense
The poles of Earth, twice ten degrees and more,
From the Sun's axle; they with labour push'd
Oblique the centric globe: some say, the Sun
Was bid turn reins from the equinoctial road
Like distant breadth to Taurus with the seven
Atlantic Sisters, and the Spartan Twins,
Up to the tropic Crab: thence down again
By Leo, and the Virgin, and the Scales,
As deep as Capricorn; to bring in change
Of seasons to each clime; else had the spring
Perpetual smil'd on Earth with vernal flow'rs,
Equal in days and nights, except to those
Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbenighted shone, while the low Sun,
To recompense his distance, in their sight
Had rounded still the horizon, and not known
Or east or west; which had forbid the snow
From cold Estotiland, and south as far
Beneath Magellan. At that tasted fruit
The Sun, as from Thyéstean banquet, turn'd
His course intended; else, how had the world
Inhabited, though sinless, more than now,
Avoided pinching cold and scorching heat? [duc'd
These changes in the Heavens, though slow, pro-
Like change on sea and land; sidereal blast,
Vapour, and mist, and exhalation hot,
Corrupt and pestilent: now, from the north
Of Norumbega, and the Samoed shore,
Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust and flaw,
Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argestes loud,
And Thrascias, rend the woods, and seas upturn;
With adverse blast upturns them from the south
Notus, and Afer black with thunderous clouds
From Serralliona; thwart of these, as fierce,
Forth rush the Lévant and the Ponent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr, with their lateral noise,
Sirocco and Libecchio. Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things; but Discord first,
Daughter of Sin, among the irrational
Death introduc'd, through fierce antipathy:
Beast now with beast 'gan war, and fowl with fowl
And fish with fish: to graze the herb all leaving,
Devour'd each other; nor stood much in awe
Of Man, but fled him: or, with countenance grim
Glar'd on him passing. These were from without
The growing miseries, which Adam saw
Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,
To sorrow abandon'd, but worse felt within;
And, in a troubled sea of passion tost,
Thus to disburden sought with sad complaint.
"O miserable of happy! Is this the end
Of this new glorious world, and me so late
The glory of that glory, who now become
Accurs'd, of blessed? hide me from the face
Of God, whom to behold was then my height
Of happiness! — Yet well, if here would end
The misery; I deserv'd it, and would bear
My own deservings; but this will not serve:
All that I eat or drink, or shall beget,

Is propagated curse. O voice, once heard
 Delightfully, Increase and multiply;
 Now death to hear! for what can I increase,
 Or multiply, but curses on my head?
 Who of all ages to succeed, but, feeling
 The evil on him brought by me, will curse
 My head? Ill fare our ancestor impure,
 For this we may thank Adam! but his thanks
 Shall be the execration: so, besides
 The own that bide upon me, all from me
 Shall with a fierce reflux on me rebound;
 On me, as on their natural centre, light
 Heavy, though in their place. O fleeting joys
 Of Paradise, dear bought with lasting woes!
 Did I request thee, Maker, from my clay
 To mould me Man? Did I solicit thee
 From darkness to promote me, or here place
 In this delicious garden? As my will
 Concurr'd not to my being, it were but right
 And equal to reduce me to my dust;
 Desirous to resign and render back
 As I receiv'd; unable to perform
 Thy terms too hard, by which I was to hold
 The good I sought not. To the loss of that, sufficient penalty, why hast thou added
 The sense of endless woes? Inexplicable
 Thy justice seems; yet, to say truth, too late
 I thus contest; then should have been refus'd
 These terms, whatever, when they were propos'd:
 Thou didst accept them: wilt thou enjoy the good,
 Then cavil the conditions? and, though God
 Made thee without thy leave, what if thy son
 Prove disobedient; and, reprov'd, retort,
 'Wherefore didst thou beget me? I sought it not.'
 Wouldst thou admit for his contempt of thee
 That proud excuse? yet him not thy election,
 But natural necessity, begot.
 God made thee of choice his own, and of his own
 To serve him; thy reward was of his grace;
 Thy punishment then justly is at his will.
 Be it so, for I submit; his doom is fair,
 That dust I am, and shall to dust return:
 O welcome hour whenever! Why delays
 His hand to execute what his decree
 Fix'd on this day? Why do I overlive?
 Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
 In deathless pain? How gladly would I meet
 My destiny my sentence, and be earth
 Inevitable! How glad would lay me down
 As in my mother's lap! There I should rest
 And sleep secure; his dreadful voice no more
 Would thunder in my ears; no fear of worse
 To me, and to my offspring, would torment me
 With this cruel expectation. Yet one doubt
 Harrows me still, lest all I cannot die;
 Lest that pure breath of life, the spirit of Man
 Which God inspir'd, cannot together perish
 With this corporeal clod: then, in the grave,
 Or in some other dismal place, who knows
 But I shall die a living death? O thought
 Terrific, if true! Yet why? It was but breath
 Of life that sinn'd; what dies but what had life
 And sin? The body properly hath neither.
 If me then shall die: let this appease
 My doubt, since human reach no further knows.
 Though the Lord of all be infinite,
 His wrath also? Be it, Man is not so,
 His mortal doom'd. How can he exercise
 His wrath without end on Man, whom death must end?
 Can he make deathless death? That were to make

Strange contradiction, which to God himself
 Impossible is held; as argument
 Of weakness, not of power. Will he draw out,
 For anger's sake, finite to infinite,
 In punish'd Man, to satisfy his rigour,
 Satisfied never? That were to extend
 His sentence beyond dust and Nature's law:
 By which all causes else, according still
 To the reception of their matter, act;
 Not to the extent of their own sphere. But say
 That death be not one stroke, as I suppos'd,
 Bereaving sense, but endless misery
 From this day onward; which I feel begun.
 Both in me, and without me; and so last
 To perpetuity: — Ay me! that fear
 Comes thundering back with dreadful revolution
 On my defenceless head; both Death and I
 Are found eternal, and incorporate both;
 Nor I on my part single; in me all
 Posterity stands curs'd: fair patrimony
 That I must leave ye, sons! O, were I able
 To waste it all myself, and leave ye none!
 So disinherited, how would you bless
 Me, now your curse! Ah, why should all mankind
 For one man's fault, thus guiltless be condemn'd,
 If guiltless? But from me what can proceed,
 But all corrupt; both mind and will deprav'd
 Not to do only, but to will the same
 With me? How can they then acquitted stand
 In sight of God? Him, after all disputes,
 Forc'd I absolve: all my evasions vain,
 And reasonings, though through mazes, lead me still
 But to my own conviction: first and last
 On me, me only, as the source and spring
 Of all corruption, all the blame lights due;
 So might the wrath! fond wish! couldst thou support
 That burden, heavier than the Earth to bear;
 Than all the world much heavier, though divided
 With that bad woman? Thus, what thou desir'st,
 And what thou fear'st, alike destroys all hope
 Of refuge, and concludes thee miserable
 Beyond all past example and future;
 To Satan only like both crime and doom.
 O Conscience! into what abyss of fears
 And horrors hast thou driven me; out of which
 I find no way, from deep to deeper plung'd!"

Thus Adam to himself lamented loud,
 Through the still night; not now, as ere Man fell,
 Wholesome, and cool, and mild, but with black air
 Accompanied; with damps, and dreadful gloom;
 Which to his evil conscience represented
 All things with double terror: on the ground
 Outstretch'd he lay, on the cold ground; and oft
 Curs'd his creation; Death as oft accus'd
 Of tardy execution, since denounc'd
 The day of his offence. "Why comes not Death,"
 Said he, "with one thrice-acceptable stroke
 To end me? Shall Truth fail to keep her word,
 Justice Divine not hasten to be just?
 But Death comes not at call; Justice Divine
 Mends not her slowest pace for prayers or cries.
 O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales, and bowers!
 With other echo late I taught your shades
 To answer, and resound far other song." —
 Whom thus afflicted when sad Eve beheld
 Desolate where she sat, approaching nigh,
 Soft words to his fierce passion she assay'd:
 But her with stern regard he thus repell'd.

"Out of my sight, thou serpent! That name best
 Befits thee with him leagu'd, thyself as false

And hateful ; nothing wants, but that thy shape,
 Like his, and colour serpentine, may show
 Thy inward fraud ; to warn all creatures from thee
 Henceforth ; lest that too heavenly form, pretended
 To hellish falsehood, snare them ! But for thee
 I had persisted happy ; had not thy pride
 And wandering vanity, when least was safe,
 Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd
 Not to be trusted ; longing to be seen,
 Though by the Devil himself ; him overweening
 To over-reach ; but, with the serpent meeting,
 Fool'd and beguil'd ; by him thou, I by thee,
 To trust thee from my side ; imagin'd wise,
 Constant, mature, proof against all assaults ;
 And understood not all was but a show,
 Rather than solid virtue ; all but a rib
 Crooked by nature, bent, as now appears,
 More to the part sinister, from me drawn ;
 Well if thrown out, as supernumerary
 To my just number found. O ! why did God,
 Creator wise, that peopled highest Heaven
 With spirits masculine, create at last
 This novelty on Earth, this fair defect
 Of Nature, and not fill the world at once
 With men, as angels, without feminine ;
 Or find some other way to generate
 Mankind ? This mischief had not then befall'n,
 And more that shall befall ; innumerable
 Disturbances on Earth through female snares,
 And straight conjunction with this sex : for either
 He never shall find out fit mate, but such
 As some misfortune brings him, or mistake ;
 Or whom he wishes most shall seldom gain
 Through her perverseness, but shall see her gain'd
 By a far worse ; or, if she love, withheld
 By parents ; or his happiest choice too late
 Shall meet, already link'd and wedlock-bound
 To a fell adversary, his hate or shame ;
 Which infinite calamity shall cause
 To human life, and household peace confound."

He added not, and from her turn'd ; but Eve,
 Not so repuls'd, with tears that ceas'd not flowing
 And tresses all disorder'd, at his feet
 Fell humble ; and, embracing them, besought
 His peace, and thus proceeded in her plaint.

" Forsake me not thus, Adam ! witness Heaven
 What love sincere, and reverence in my heart
 I bear thee, and unweeting have offended,
 Unhappily deceiv'd ! Thy suppliant
 I beg, and clasp thy knees ; bereave me not,
 Whereon I live, thy gentle looks, thy aid,
 Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress,
 My only strength and stay : forlorn of thee,
 Whither shall I betake me, where subsist ?
 While yet we live, scarce one short hour perhaps,
 Between us two let there be peace ; both joining,
 As join'd in injuries, one enmity
 Against a foe by doom express assign'd us,
 That cruel serpent : on me exercise not
 Thy hatred for this misery befall'n ;
 On me already lost, me than thyself
 More miserable ! Both have sinn'd ; but thou
 Against God only ; I against God and thee ;
 And to the place of judgment will return,
 There with my crimes impórtune Heaven ; that all
 The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
 On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe ;
 Me, me only, just object of his ire !"

She ended weeping ; and her lowly plight,
 Immoveable, till peace obtain'd from fault

Acknowledg'd and deplor'd, in Adam wrought
 Commiseration : soon his heart relented
 Towards her, his life so late, and sole delight,
 Now at his feet submissive in distress ;
 Creature so fair his reconciliation seeking,
 His counsel, whom she had displeas'd, his aid :
 As one disarm'd, his anger all he lost,
 And thus with peaceful words uprais'd her soon.

" Unwary, and too desirous, as before,
 So now of what thou know'st not, who desir'st
 The punishment all on thyself ; alas !
 Bear thine own first, ill able to sustain
 His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part,
 And my displeasure bear'st so ill. If prayers
 Could alter high decrees, I to that place
 Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,
 That on my head all might be visited ;
 Thy frailty and infirmer sex forgiven,
 To me committed, and by me expos'd.
 But rise ; — let us no more contend, nor blame
 Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere ; but strive
 In offices of love, how we may lighten
 Each other's burthen, in our share of woe ;
 Since this day's death denounc'd, if aught I see,
 Will prove no sudden, but a slow pac'd, evil ;
 A long day's dying to augment our pain
 And to our seed (O hapless seed !) deriv'd."

To whom thus Eve, recovering heart, replied.
 " Adam, by sad experiment I know
 How little weight my words with thee can find,
 Found so erroneous ; thence by just event
 Found so unfortunate : nevertheless,
 Restor'd by thee, vile as I am, to place
 Of new acceptance, hopeful to regain
 Thy love, the sole contentment of my heart
 Living or dying, from thee I will not hide
 What thoughts in my unquiet breast are risen,
 Tending to some relief of our extremes,
 Or end ; though sharp and sad, yet tolerable,
 As in our evils, and of easier choice.
 If care of our descent perplex us most,
 Which must be born to certain woe, devour'd
 By Death at last ; and miserable it is,
 To be to others cause of misery,
 Our own begotten, and of our loins to bring
 Into this cursed world a woeful race,
 That after wretched life must be at last
 Food for so foul a monster ; in thy power
 It lies, yet ere conception to prevent
 The race unblest, to being yet unbegot.
 Childless thou art, childless remain : so Death
 Shall be deceiv'd his glut, and with us two
 Be forc'd to satisfy his ravenous maw.
 But if thou judge it hard and difficult,
 Conversing, looking, loving, to abstain
 From love's due rites, nuptial embraces sweet ;
 And with desire to languish without hope,
 Before the present object languishing
 With like desire ; which would be misery
 And torment less than none of what we dread :
 Then, both ourselves and seed at once to free
 From what we fear for both, let us make short,
 Let us seek Death ; — or, he not found, supply
 With our own hands his office on ourselves :
 Why stand we longer shivering under fears,
 That show no end but death, and have the power,
 Of many ways to die the shortest choosing,
 Destruction with destruction to destroy ?" —

She ended here, or vehement despair
 Broke off the rest : so much of death her thought

Had entertain'd, as dy'd her cheeks with pale.
But Adam, with such counsel nothing sway'd,
To better hopes his more attentive mind
Labouring had rais'd; and thus to Eve replied.

"Eve, thy contempt of life and pleasure seems
To argue in thee something more sublime
And excellent, than what thy mind contemns;
But self-destruction therefore sought, refutes
That excellence thought in thee; and implies,
Not thy contempt, but anguish and regret
For loss of life and pleasure overlov'd.
Or if thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd; doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd; much more I fear lest death,
So snatch'd, will not exempt us from the pain
We are by doom to pay; rather, such acts
Of contumacy will provoke the Highest
To make death in us live: then let us seek,
Some safer resolution, which methinks
I have in view, calling to mind with heed
Part of our sentence, that thy seed shall bruise
The serpent's head; piteous amends! unless
Be meant, whom I conjecture, our grand foe,
Satan; who, in the serpent, hath contriv'd
Against us this deceit: to crush his head
Would be revenge indeed! which will be lost
By death brought on ourselves, or childless days
Revolv'd, as thou proposest; so our foe
Shall 'scape his punishment ordain'd, and we
Instead shall double ours upon our heads.
No more be mention'd then of violence
Against ourselves; and wilful barrenness,
That cuts us off from hope; and savours only
Rancour and pride, impatience and despite,
Reluctance against God and his just yoke
Laid on our necks. Remember with what mild
And gracious temper he both heard, and judg'd,
Without wrath or reviling; we expected
Immediate dissolution, which we thought
Was meant by death that day; when lo! to thee
Pain only in child-bearing were foretold,
And bringing forth; soon recompens'd with joy,
Fruit of thy womb: on me the curse aslope
Ganc'd on the ground; with labour I must earn
My bread; what harm? Idleness had been worse;
My labour will sustain me; and, lest cold
Or heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath, undesought, provided; and his hands
Cloth'd us unworthy, pitying while he judg'd;
How much more if we pray him, will his ear
Be open, and his heart to pity incline,
And teach us further by what means to shun
The inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail, and snow?
Which now the sky, with various face, begins
To show us in this mountain; while the winds
Blow moist and keen, shattering the graceful locks
Of these fair spreading trees; which bids us seek
Some better shroud, some better warmth to cherish
Our limbs benumm'd, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams
Reflected may with matter sere foment;
Or, by collision of two bodies, grind
The air attrite to fire; as late the clouds
Jostling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,
Toss the slant lightning; whose thwart flame,
driven down,
Kindles the gummy bark of fir or pine;
And sends a comfortable heat from far

Which might supply the Sun: such fire to use,
And what may else be remedy or cure
To evils which our own misdeeds have wrought,
He will instruct us praying, and of grace
Beseeching him; so as we need not fear
To pass commodiously this life, sustain'd
By him with many comforts, till we end
In dust, our final rest and native home.
What better can we do, than, to the place
Repairing where he judg'd us, prostrate fall
Before him reverent; and there confess
Humbly our faults, and pardon beg; with tears
Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek?
Undoubtedly he will relent, and turn
From his displeasure; in whose looks serene,
When angry most he seem'd and most severe,
What else but favour, grace, and mercy, shone?"

So spake our father penitent; nor Eve
Felt less remorse: they, forthwith to the place
Repairing where he judg'd them, prostrate fell
Before him reverent; and both confess'd
Humbly their faults, and pardon begg'd; with tears
Watering the ground, and with their sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek.

Book XI.

The Argument.

The Son of God presents to his Father the prayers of our first parents now repenting, and intercedes for them: God accepts them, but declares that they must no longer abide in Paradise; sends Michael with a band of cherubim to dispossess them; but first to reveal to Adam future things:
Michael's coming down. Adam shows to Eve certain ominous signs; he discerns Michael's approach; goes out to meet him: the angel denounces their departure. Eve's lamentation.
Adam pleads, but submits; the angel leads him up to a high hill; sets before him in vision what shall happen till the Flood.

Thus they, in lowliest plight, repentant stood
Praying; for from the mercy-seat above
Prevenient grace descending had remov'd
The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh
Regenerate grow instead; that sighs now breath'd
Unutterable; which the spirit of prayer
Inspir'd, and wing'd for Heaven with speedier flight
Than loudest oratory: yet their port
Not of mean suitors; nor important less
Seem'd their petition, than when the ancient pair
In fables old, less ancient yet than these,
Deucalion and chaste Pyrrha, to restore
The race of mankind drown'd, before the shrine
Of Themis stood devout. To Heaven their prayers
Flew up, nor miss'd the way, by envious winds
Blown vagabond or frustrate: in they pass'd
Dimensionless through heavenly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd,
By their great Intercessor, came in sight
Before the Father's throne: them the glad Son
Presenting, thus to intercede began. [sprung

"See, Father, what first-fruits on Earth are
From thy implanted grace in Man; these sighs

And prayers, which in this golden censer, mix'd
 With incense, I thy priest before thee bring ;
 Fruits of more pleasing savour, from thy seed
 Sown with contrition in his heart, than those
 Which, his own hand manuring, all the trees
 Of Paradise could have produc'd ere fall'n
 From innocence. Now, therefore, bend thine ear
 To supplication ; hear his sighs, though mute ;
 Unskilful with what words to pray, let me
 Interpret for him ; me, his advocate
 And propitiation ; all his works on me,
 Good, or not good, ingraft ; my merit those
 Shall perfect, and for these my death shall pay.
 Accept me ; and, in me, from these receive
 The smell of peace toward mankind : let him live
 Before thee reconcil'd, at least his days
 Number'd though sad ; till death, his doom, (which I
 To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse,)
 To better life shall yield him : where with me
 All my redeem'd may dwell in joy and bliss ;
 Made one with me, as I with thee am one."

To whom the Father, without cloud, serene.
 " All thy request for Man, accepted Son,
 Obtain ; all thy request was my decree :
 But, longer in that Paradise to dwell,
 The law I gave to Nature him forbids :
 Those pure immortal elements, that know
 No gross, no unharmonious mixture foul,
 Eject him, tainted now ; and purge him off,
 As a distemper, gross, to air as gross,
 And mortal food ; as may dispose him best
 For dissolution wrought by sin, that first
 Distemper'd all things, and of incorrupt
 Corrupted. I, at first, with two fair gifts
 Created him endow'd ; with happiness,
 And immortality : that fondly lost,
 This other serv'd but to eternize woe ;
 Till I provided death : so death becomes
 His final remedy : and, after life,
 Tried in sharp tribulation, and refin'd
 By faith and faithful works, to second life,
 Wak'd in the renovation of the just,
 Resigns him up with Heaven and Earth renew'd.
 But let us call to synod all the blest,
 Through Heaven's wide bounds : from them I will not hide

My judgments ; how with mankind I proceed,
 As how with peccant angels late they saw,
 And in their state, though firm, stood more con-
 firm'd."

He ended, and the Son gave signal high
 To the bright minister that watch'd ; he blew
 His trumpet, heard in Oreb since perhaps
 When God descended, and perhaps once more
 To sound at general doom. The angelic blast
 Fill'd all the regions : from their blissful bowers
 Of amarantine shade, fountain or spring,
 By the waters of life, where'er they sat
 In fellowships of joy, the sons of light
 Hasted, resorting to the summons high :
 And took their seats : till from his throne supreme
 The Almighty thus pronounc'd his sovran will,

" O sons, like one of us Man is become
 To know both good and evil, since his taste
 Of that defended fruit ; but let him boast
 His knowledge of good lost, and evil got ;
 Happier ! had it suffic'd him to have known
 Good by itself, and evil not at all.
 He sorrows now, repents, and prays contrite,
 My motions in him ; longer than they move,

His heart I know, how variable and vain,
 Self-left. Lest therefore his now bolder hand
 Reach also of the tree of life, and eat,
 And live for ever, dream at least to live
 For ever, to remove him I'd decree,
 And send him from the garden forth to till
 The ground whence he was taken, fitter soil.

" Michael, this my behest have thou in charge :
 Take to thee from among the cherubim
 Thy choice of flaming warriors, lest the fiend,
 Or in behalf of Man, or to invade
 Vacant possession, some new trouble raise ;
 Haste thee, and from the Paradise of God
 Without remorse drive out the sinful pair ;
 From hallow'd ground the unholy ; and denounce
 To them, and to their progeny, from thence Perpetual banishment. Yet, lest they faint
 At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,
 (For I behold them soften'd, and with tears
 Bewailing their excess,) all terror hide.
 If patiently thy bidding they obey,
 Dismiss them not disconsolate ; reveal
 To Adam what shall come in future days,
 As I shall thee enlighten ; intermix
 My covenant in the woman's seed renew'd :
 So send them forth, though sorrowing, yet in peace :
 And on the east side of the garden place,
 Where entrance up from Eden easiest climbs,
 Cherubic watch ; and of a sword the flame
 Wide-waving ; all approach far off to fright,
 And guard all passage to the tree of life :
 Lest Paradise a receptacle prove
 To spirits foul, and all my trees their prey ;
 With whose stol'n fruit man once more to delude."

He ceas'd ; and the arch-angelic power prepar'd
 For swift descent ; with him the cohort bright
 Of watchful cherubim : four faces each
 Had, like a double Janus ; all their shape
 Spangled with eyes more numerous than those
 Of Argus, and more wakeful than to drowse,
 Charm'd with Arcadian pipe, the pastoral reed
 Of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Meanwhile,
 To re-salute the world with sacred light,
 Leucothea wak'd ; and with fresh dews embalm'd
 The Earth ; when Adam and first matron Eve
 Had ended now their orisons, and found
 Strength added from above ; new hope to spring
 Out of despair ; joy, but with fear yet link'd ;
 Which thus to Eve his welcome words renew'd.

" Eve, easily may faith admit, that all
 The good which we enjoy, from Heaven descends
 But, that from us aught should ascend to Heaven
 So prevalent as to concern the mind
 Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,
 Hard to belief may seem ; yet this will prayer
 Or one short sigh of human breath, upborne
 Even to the seat of God. For since I sought
 By prayer the offended Deity to appease ;
 Kneel'd, and before him humbled all my heart ;
 Methought I saw him placable and mild,
 Bending his ear ; persuasion in me grew
 That I was heard with favour ; peace return'd
 Home to my breast, and to my memory
 His promise, that thy seed shall bruise our foe ;
 Which, then not minded in dismay, yet now
 Assures me that the bitterness of death
 Is past, and we shall live. Whence hail to thee,
 Eve rightly call'd, mother of all mankind,
 Mother of all things living, since by thee
 Man is to live ; and all things live for Man."

To whom thus Eve with sad demeanour meek.
 " Ill-worthy I such title should belong
 To me transgressor ; who, for thee ordain'd
 A help, became thy snare ; to me reproach
 Rather belongs, distrust, and all dispraise :
 But infinite in pardon was my judge,
 That I, who first brought death on all, am grac'd
 The source of life ; next favourable thou,
 Who highly thus to entitle me vouchsaf'st,
 For other name deserving. But the field
 To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd,
 Though after sleepless night ; for see ! the Morn,
 All unconcern'd with our unrest, begins
 Her rosy progress smiling : let us forth ;
 I never from thy side henceforth to stray,
 Where'er our day's work lies, though now enjoin'd
 Laborious till day droop ; while here we dwell,
 What can be toilsome in these pleasant walks ?
 Here let us live, though in fall'n state, content."

So spake, so wish'd much-humbled Eve ; but Fate
 Subscrib'd not ; Nature first gave signs, impress'd
 On bird, beast, air ; air suddenly eclips'd,
 After short blush of morn : nigh in her sight
 The bird of Jove, stoop'd from his aery tour,
 Two birds of gayest plume before him drove ;
 Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
 First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace
 Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind
 Direct to the eastern gate was bent their flight.
 Adam observ'd, and with his eye the chase
 Pursuing, not unmov'd, to Eve thus spake.

" O Eve, some further change awaits us nigh,
 Which Heaven, by these mute signs in Nature, shows

Forerunners of his purpose ; or to warn
 Us, haply too secure, of our discharge
 From penalty, because from death releas'd
 Some days ; how long, and what till then our life,
 Who knows ? or more than this, that we are dust,
 And thither must return, and be no more ?
 Why else this double object in our sight
 Of flight pursued in the air, and o'er the ground,
 One way the self-same hour ? why in the east
 Darkness ere day's mid-course, and morning-light
 More orient in yon western cloud, that draws
 O'er the blue firmament a radiant white,
 And slow descends with something heavenly freight ?"

He err'd not ; for by this the heavenly bands
 Down from a sky of jasper lighted now
 In Paradise, and on a hill made halt ;
 A glorious apparition, had not doubt
 And carnal fear that day dimm'd Adam's eye.
 Not that more glorious, when the angels met
 Jacob in Mahanaim, where he saw
 The field pavilion'd with his guardians bright ;
 Nor that, which on the flaming mount appear'd
 In Dothan, cover'd with a camp of fire,
 Against the Syrian king, who to surprise
 One man, assassin-like, had levied war,
 War unproclaim'd. The princely hierarch
 In their bright stand there left his powers, to seize Possession of the garden ; he alone,
 To find where Adam shelter'd, took his way,
 Not unperceiv'd of Adam : who to Eve,
 While the great visitant approach'd, thus spake.

" Eve, now expect great tidings, which perhaps
 Of us will soon determine, or impose
 New laws to be observ'd ; for I descry,
 From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,

One of the heavenly host ; and, by his gait,
 None of the meanest ; some great potentate
 Or of the thrones above ; such majesty
 Invests him coming ! yet not terrible,
 That I should fear ; nor sociably mild,
 As Raphaël, that I should much confide ;
 But solemn and sublime ; whom not to offend,
 With reverence I must meet, and thou retire."

He ended ; and the arch-angel soon drew nigh,
 Not in his shape celestial, but as man
 Clad to meet man ; over his lucid arms
 A military vest of purple flow'd,
 Livelier than Melibœan, or the grain
 Of Sarra, worn by kings and heroes old
 In time of truce ; Iris had dipt the woof ;
 His starry helm unbuckled shew'd him prime
 In manhood where youth ended ; by his side,
 As in a glistering zodiac, hung the sword,
 Satan's dire dread ; and in his hand the spear.
 Adam bow'd low ; he, kingly, from his state
 Inclined not, but his coming thus declar'd.

" Adam, Heaven's high behest no preface needs :
 Sufficient that thy prayers are heard ; and Death,
 Then due by sentence when thou didst transgress,
 Defeated of his seizure many days
 Given thee of grace ; wherein thou may'st repent,
 And one bad act with many deeds well done
 May'st cover : well may then thy Lord, pleas'd,
 Redeem thee quite from Death's rapacious claim ;
 But longer in this Paradise to dwell
 Permits not : to remove thee I am come,
 And send thee from the garden forth to till
 The ground whence thou wast taken, fitter soil."

He added not ; for Adam at the news
 Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
 That all his senses bound ; Eve, who unseen
 Yet all had heard, with audible lament
 Discover'd soon the place of her retire.

" O unexpected stroke, worse than of Death :
 Must I thus leave thee, Paradise ? thus leave
 Thee, native soil ! these happy walks and shades,
 Fit haunt of gods ? where I had hope to spend,
 Quiet though sad, the respite of that day
 That must be mortal to us both. O flowers,
 That never will in other climate grow,
 My early visitation, and my last
 At even, which I bred up with tender hand
 From the first opening bud, and gave ye names !
 Who now shall rear ye to the Sun, or rank
 Your tribes, and water from the ambrosial fount ?
 Thee lastly, nuptial bower ! by me adorn'd
 With what to sight or smell was sweet ! from thee
 How shall I part, and whither wander down
 Into a lower world ; to this obscure
 And wild ? how shall we breathe in other air
 Less pure, accusom'd to immortal fruits ?"

Whom thus the angel interrupted mild.
 " Lament not, Eve, but patiently resign
 What justly thou hast lost, nor set thy heart,
 Thus over-fond, on that which is not thine :
 Thy going is not lonely ; with thee goes
 Thy husband ; him to follow thou art bound ;
 Where he abides, think there thy native soil."

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
 Recovering, and his scatter'd spirits return'd,
 To Michael thus his humble words address'd.

" Celestial, whether among the thrones, or nam'd
 Of them the highest ; for such of shape may seem Prince above princes ! gently hast thou told
 Thy message, which might else in telling wound,

And in performing end us ; what besides
 Of sorrow, and dejection, and despair,
 Our frailty can sustain, thy tidings bring,
 Departure from this happy place, our sweet
 Recess, and only consolation left
 Familiar to our eyes ! all places else
 Inhospitable appear, and desolate ;
 Nor knowing us, nor known : and, if by prayer
 Incessant I could hope to change the will
 Of him who all things can, I would not cease
 To weary him with my assiduous cries :
 But prayer against his absolute decree
 No more avails than breath against the wind,
 Blown stifling back on him that breathes it forth :
 Therefore to his great bidding I submit.
 This most afflicts me, that, departing hence,
 As from his face I shall be hid, depriv'd
 His blessed countenance : here I could frequent
 With worship place by place where he vouchsaf'd
 Presence Divine ; and to my sons relate,
 ' On this mount he appear'd ; under this tree
 Stood visible ; among these pines his voice
 I heard ; here with him at this fountain talk'd :
 So many grateful altars I would rear
 Of grassy turf, and pile up every stone
 Of lustre from the brook, in memory
 Or monument to ages ; and thereon
 Offer sweet-smelling gums, and fruits, and flowers :
 In yonder nether world where shall I seek
 His bright appearances, or foot-step trace ?
 For though I fled him angry, yet, recall'd
 To life prolong'd and promis'd race, I now
 Gladly behold though but his utmost skirts
 Of glory ; and far off his steps adore."

To whom thus Michael with regard benign.
 " Adam, thou know'st Heaven his, and all the Earth ;

Not this rock only ; his Omnipresence fills
 Land, sea, and air, and every kind that lives,
 Fomented by his virtual power and warm'd :
 All the Earth he gave thee to possess and rule,
 No despicable gift ; surmise not then
 His presence to these narrow bounds confin'd
 Of Paradise, or Eden : this had been
 Perhaps thy capital seat, from whence had spread
 All generations ; and had hither come
 From all the ends of the Earth, to celebrate
 And reverence thee, their great progenitor.
 But this pre-eminence thou hast lost, brought down
 To dwell on even ground now with thy sons :
 Yet doubt not but in valley, and in plain,
 God is, as here ; and will be found alike
 Present ; and of his presence many a sign
 Still following thee, still compassing thee round
 With goodness and paternal love, his face
 Express, and of his steps the track divine.
 Which that thou may'st believe, and be confirm'd
 Ere thou from hence depart ; know, I am sent
 To show thee what shall come in future days
 To thee, and to thy offspring : good with bad
 Expect to hear ; supernal grace contending
 With sinfulness of men ; thereby to learn
 True patience, and to temper joy with fear
 And pious sorrow ; equally inur'd
 By moderation either state to bear,
 Prosperous or adverse : so shalt thou lead
 Safest thy life, and best prepar'd endure
 Thy mortal passage when it comes. — Ascend
 This hill ; let Eve (for I have drench'd her eyes)
 Here sleep below ; while thou to foresight wak'st ;

As once thou slept'st, while she to life was form'd."

To whom thus Adam gratefully replied.
 " Ascend, I follow thee, safe guide, the path
 Thou lead'st me ; and to the hand of Heaven submit,
 However chastening ; to the evil turn
 My obvious breast ; arming to overcome
 By suffering, and earn rest from labour won,
 If so I may attain." — So both ascend
 In the visions of God. It was a hill,
 Of Paradise the highest ; from whose top
 The hemisphere of Earth, in clearest ken,
 Stretch'd out to the amplest reach of prospect lay.
 Not higher that hill, nor wider looking round,
 Whereon, for different cause, the Tempter set
 Our second Adam, in the wilderness ;
 To show him all Earth's kingdoms, and their glory.
 His eye might there command wherever stood
 City of old or modern fame, the seat
 Of mightiest empire, from the destin'd walls
 Of Cambalu, seat of Cathaian Can,
 And Samarchand by Oxus, Temir's throne,
 To Paquin of Sinæan kings ; and thence
 To Agra and Lahor of great Mogul,
 Down to the golden Chersonese ; or where
 The Persian in Ecbatan sat, or since
 In Hispahan ; or where the Russian kear
 In Mosco ; or the sultan in Bizance,
 Turchestan-born ; nor could his eye not ken
 The empire of Negus to his utmost port
 Ercoco, and the less maritim kings
 Mombaza, and Quiloa, and Melind,
 And Sofala, thought Ophir, to the realm
 Of Congo, and Angola farthest south ;
 Or thence from Niger flood to Atlas mount
 The kingdoms of Almansor, Fex and Sus,
 Morocco, and Algiers, and Tremisen ;
 On Europe thence, and where Rome was to sway
 The world : in spirit perhaps he also saw
 Rich Mexico, the seat of Montezume,
 And Cusco in Peru, the richer seat
 Of Atabalipa ; and yet unspoil'd
 Guiana, whose great city Geryon's sons
 Call El Dorado. But to nobler sights
 Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
 Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
 Had bred ; then purg'd with euphrasy and rue
 The visual nerve, for he had much to see ;
 And from the well of life three drops instill'd.
 So deep the power of these ingredients pierc'd,
 Even to the inmost seat of mental sight,
 That Adam, now enforc'd to close his eyes,
 Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd ;
 But him the gentle angel by the hand
 Soon rais'd, and his attention thus recall'd.

" Adam, now ope thine eyes ; and first behold
 The effects, which thy original crime hath wrought
 In some to spring from thee ; who never touch'd
 The excepted tree ; nor with the snake conspir'd ;
 Nor sinn'd thy sin ; yet from that sin derive Corruption, to bring forth more violent deeds."

His eyes he open'd, and beheld a field,
 Part arable and tilth, whereon were sheaves
 New reap'd ; the other part sheep-walks and folds ;
 I' the midst an altar as the land-mark stood
 Rustic, of grassy sord ; thither anon
 A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
 First fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf,
 Uncull'd, as came to hand ; a shepherd next,
 More meek, came with the firstlings of his flock,

Choicest and best ; then, sacrificing, laid
The inwards and their fat, with incense strow'd,
On the cleft wood, and all due rites perform'd :
His offering soon propitious fire from Heaven
Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam ;
The other's not, for his was not sincere ;
Whereat he inly rag'd, and, as they talk'd,
Snote him into the midriff with a stone
That beat out life ! he fell ; and, deadly pale,
Gross'd out his soul with gushing blood effus'd.
Much at that sight was Adam in his heart
Dismay'd, and thus in haste to the angel cried.

" O teacher, some great mischief hath befall'n
To that meek man, who well had sacrific'd ;
Is piety thus and pure devotion paid ?"

To whom Michael thus, he also mov'd, replied.

" These two are brethren, Adam, and to come
Out of thy loins ; the unjust the just hath slain,
For envy that his brother's offering found
From Heaven acceptance ; but the bloody fact
Will be aveng'd ; and the other's faith, approv'd,
Lose no reward ; though here thou see him die,
Rolling in dust and gore." To which our sire.

" Alas ! both for the deed, and for the cause !
But have I now seen Death ? Is this the way
I must return to native dust ? O sight
Of terror, foul and ugly to behold,
Horrid to think, how horrible to feel !"

To whom thus Michael. " Death thou hast seen
In his first shape on Man ; but many shapes
Of Death, and many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave, all dismal ; yet to sense
More terrible at the entrance, than within.
Some, as thou saw'st, by violent stroke shall die ;
By fire, flood, famine, by intemperance more
In meats and drinks, which on the Earth shall bring Diseases dire, of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear ; that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve
Shall bring on men." Immediately a place
Before his eyes appear'd, sad, noisome, dark ;
A lazar-house it seem'd ; wherein were laid
Numbers of all diseas'd : all maladies
Of ghastly spasm, or racking torture, qualms
Of heart-sick agony, all feverous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs,
Intestine stone and ulcer, colic-pangs,
Demonic phrensy, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness, pining atrophy,
Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence,
Dropsies, and asthmas, and joint-racking rheuma.
Dre was the tossing, deep the groans ; Despair
Tended the sick busiest from couch to couch ;
And over them triumphant Death his dart
Shook, but delay'd to strike, though oft invoc'd
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope.
Sight so deform what heart of rock could long
Dry-ey'd behold ? Adam could not, but wept,
Though not of woman born ; compassion quell'd
His best of man, and gave him up to tears
A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess ;
And, scarce recovering words, his plaint renew'd.

" O miserable mankind, to what fall
Degraded, to what wretched state reserv'd !
Better end here unborn. Why is life given
To be thus wrested from us ? rather, why
Obtruded on us thus ? who, if we knew
What we receive, would either not accept
Life offer'd, or soon beg to lay it down ;
Glad to be so dismiss'd in peace. Can thus

The image of God in Man, created once
So goodly and erect, though faulty since,
To such unsightly sufferings be debas'd
Under inhuman pains ? Why should not Man,
Retaining still divine similitude
In part, from such deformities be free,
And, for his Maker's image sake, exempt ?"

" Their Maker's image," answer'd Michael,
" then

Forsook them, when themselves they vilified
To serve ungovern'd Appetite ; and took
His image whom they serv'd, a brutish vice,
Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve.
Therefore so abject is their punishment,
Disfiguring not God's likeness, but their own ;
Or if his likeness, by themselves defac'd ;
While they pervert pure Nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness ; worthily, since they God's image did not reverence in themselves."

" I yield it just," said Adam, " and submit.
But is there yet no other way, besides
These painful passages, how we may come
To death, and mix with our connatural dust ?"

" There is," said Michael, " if thou well observe
The rule of Not too much ; by temperance taught,
In what thou eat'st and drink'st ; seeking from thence

Due nourishment, not gluttonous delight,
Till many years over thy head return :
So may'st thou live ; till, like ripe fruit, thou drop
Into thy mother's lap ; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd ; for death mature :
This is Old Age ; but then, thou must outlive
Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty ; which will change

To wither'd, weak, and gray ; thy senses then,
Obtuse, all taste of pleasure must forego,
To what thou hast ; and, for the air of youth,
Hopeful and cheerful in thy blood will reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry
To weigh thy spirits down, and last consume
The balm of life." To whom our ancestor.

" Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong
Life much ; bent rather, how I may be quit,
Fairest and easiest of this cumbrous charge ;
Which I must keep till my appointed day
Of rendering up, and patiently attend
My dissolution." Michael replied. [liv'st,

" Nor love thy life, nor hate ; but what thou
Live well ; how long, or short, permit to Heaven :
And now prepare thee for another sight."

He look'd, and saw a spacious plain, whereon
Were tents of various hue ; by some, were herds
Of cattle grazing ; others, whence the sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard, of harp and organ ; and, who mov'd
Their stops and chords, was seen ; his volant touch,
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled and pursued transverse the resonant fugue.
In other part stood one who, at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass
Had melted, (whether found where casual fire
Had wasted woods on mountain or in vale,
Down to the veins of Earth ; thence gliding hot
To some cave's mouth ; or whether wash'd by stream
From underground ;) the liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd ; from which he form'd
First his own tools ; then, what might else be wrought

Fusil or graven in metal. After these,

But on the hither side, a different sort [seat,
From the high neighbouring hills, which was their Down to the plain descended; by their guise
Just men they seem'd, and all their study bent
To worship God aright, and know his works
Not hid; nor those things last, which might preserve
Freedom and peace to men: they on the plain
Long had not walk'd, when from the tents, behold!
A bevy of fair women, richly gay
In gems and wanton dress; to the harp they sung
Soft amorous ditties, and in dance came on:
The men, though grave, ey'd them; and let their eyes

Rove without rein; till, in the amorous net
Fast caught, they lik'd; and each his liking chose;
And now of love they treat, till the evening-star,
Love's harbinger, appear'd; then, all in heat
They light the nuptial torch, and bid invoke
Hymen, then first to marriage rites invok'd:
With feast and music all the tents resound.
Such happy interview, and fair event
Of love and youth not lost, songs, garlands, flowers,
And charming symphonies, attach'd the heart
Of Adam, soon inclin'd to admit delight,
The bent of nature; which he thus express'd.

"True opener of mine eyes, prime angel blest;
Much better seems this vision, and more hope
Of peaceful days portends, than those two past;
Those were of hate and death, or pain much worse;
Here Nature seems fulfill'd in all her ends."

To whom thus Michael. "Judge not what is best
By pleasure, though to nature seeming meet;
Created, as thou art, to nobler end
Holy and pure, conformity divine.
Those tents thou saw'st so pleasant, were the tents
Of wickedness, wherein shall dwell his race
Who slew his brother; studious they appear
Of arts that polish life, inventors rare;
Unmindful of their Maker, though his spirit
Taught them; but they his gifts acknowledg'd none.

Yet they a beauteous offspring shall beget;
For that fair female troop thou saw'st, that seem'd
Of goddesses, so blithe, so smooth, so gay,
Yet empty of all good wherein consists
Woman's domestic honour and chief praise;
Bred only and completed to the taste
Of lustful appetite, to sing, to dance,
To dress, and troll the tongue, and roll the eye.
To these that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly, to the trains and to the smiles
Of these fair atheists; and now swim in joy,
Ere long to swim at large; and laugh, for which
The world ere long a world of tears must weep."

To whom thus Adam, of short joy bereft.
"O pity and shame, that they, who to live well
Enter'd so fair, should turn aside to tread
Paths indirect, or in the mid way faint!
But still I see the tenour of man's woe
Holds on the same, from woman to begin."

"From man's effeminate slackness it begins,"
Said the angel, "who should better hold his place
By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd.
But now prepare thee for another scene."

He look'd, and saw wide territory spread
Before him, towns, and rural works between;
Cities of men with lofty gates and towers,
Concourse in arms, fierce faces threatening war,

Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise;
Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming steed,
Single or in array of battle rang'd
Both horse and foot, nor idly mustering stood
One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes and their bleating lambs over the plain,
Their booty; scarce with life the shepherds fly,
But call in aid, which makes a bloody fray;
With cruel tournament the squadrons join;
Where cattle pastur'd late, now scatter'd lies
With carcasses and arms the ensanguin'd field,
Deserted: others to a city strong
Lay siege; encamp'd; by battery, scale, and mine,
Assaulting; others from the wall defend
With dart and javelin, stones, and sulphurous fire:
On each hand slaughter, and gigantic deeds.
In other part the scepter'd heralds call
To council, in the city-gates; anon
Gray-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd,
Assemble, and harangues are heard; but soon,
In factious opposition; till at last,
Of middle age one rising, eminent
In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace,
And judgment from above: him old and young
Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands;
Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence
Unseen amid the throng: so violence
Proceeded, and oppression, and sword-law,
Through all the plain, and refuge none was found.
Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
Lamenting turn'd full sad: "O! what are these,
Death's ministers, not men? who thus deal death
Inhumanly to men, and multiply
Ten thousandfold the sin of him who slew
His brother: for of whom such massacre
Make they, but of their brethren; men of men?
But who was that just man, whom had not Heaven
Rescued, had in his righteousness been lost?"

To whom thus Michael. "These are the product
Of those ill-mated marriages thou saw'st; [selves
Where good with bad were match'd, who of them-
Abhor to join; and, by imprudence mix'd,
Produce prodigious births of body or mind.
Such were these giants, men of high renown;
For in those days might only shall be admir'd,
And valour and heroic virtue call'd;
To overcome in battle, and subdue
Nations, and bring home spoils with infinite
Man-slaughter, shall be held the highest pitch
Of human glory; and for glory done
Of triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods and sons of gods;
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and plagues of men.
Thus fame shall be achiev'd, renown on Earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence hid.
But he, the seventh from thee, whom thou beheldst
The only righteous in a world perverse,
And therefore hated, therefore so beset
With foes, for daring single to be just,
And utter odious truth, that God would come
To judge them with his saints: him the Most High
Rapt in a balmy cloud with winged steeds
Did, as thou saw'st, receive, to walk with God
High in salvation and the climes of bliss,
Exempt from death; to show thee what reward
Awaits the good: the rest what punishment;
Which now direct thine eyes and soon behold."

He look'd, and saw the face of things quite
chang'd ;

The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance ;
Marrying or prostituting, as befell,
Rape or adultery, where passing fair
Allur'd them ; thence from cups to civil broils.
At length a reverend sire among them came,
And of their doings great dislike declar'd
And testified against their ways ; he oft
Frequented their assemblies, whereso met,
Triumphs or festivals ; and to them preach'd
Conversion and repentance, as to souls
In prison, under judgments imminent :
But all in vain : which when he saw, he ceas'd
Contending, and remov'd his tents far off :
Then, from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk ;
Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height ;
Smear'd round with pitch ; and in the side a door
Contriv'd ; and of provisions laid in large,
For man and beast : when lo, a wonder strange !
Of every beast, and bird, and insect small,
Came sevens and pairs ; and enter'd in as taught
Their order : last the sire and his three sons,
With their four wives ; and God made fast the door.
Meanwhile the south-wind rose, and, with black wings

Wide-hovering, all the clouds together drove
From under Heaven ; the hills to their supply
Vapour, and exhalation dusk and moist,
St up amain ; and now the thicken'd sky
Like a dark ceiling stood ; down rush'd the rain
Impetuous ; and continued, till the Earth
No more was seen : the floating vessel swum
Uplifted, and secure with beaked prow
Rode tilting o'er the waves ; all dwellings else
Flud overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp
Deep under water roll'd ; sea cover'd sea,
Sea without shore ; and in their palaces,
Where luxury late reign'd, sea-monsters whelp'd
And stabled ; of mankind, so numerous late,
All left, in one small bottom swum embark'd.
How didst thou grieve, then, Adam, to behold
The end of all thy offspring, end so sad,
Depopulation ! Thee another flood,
Of tears and sorrow a flood, thee also drown'd,
And sunk thee as thy sons ; till, gently rear'd
By the angel, on thy feet thou stood'st at last ;
Though comfortless ; as when a father mourns
His children, all in view destroy'd at once ;
And scarce to the angel utter'dst thus thy plaint.

" O visions ill foreseen ! better had I
Laid ignorant of future ! so had borne
My part of evil only, each day's lot
Enough to bear ; those now, that were dispens'd
The burden of many ages, on me light
At once, by my foreknowledge gaining birth
Atrave, to torment me ere their being,
Which thought that they must be. Let no man seek Henceforth to be foretold, what shall befall
Him or his children ; evil he may be sure,
Which neither his foreknowing can prevent ;
And he the future evil shall no less
In apprehension than in substance feel,
Gratious to bear : but that care now is past,
More is not whom to warn : those few escap'd
Famine and anguish will at last consume,
Wandering that watery desert : I had hope

When violence was ceas'd, and war on Earth,
All would have then gone well ; peace would have crown'd

With length of happy days the race of Man ;
But I was far deceived ; for now I see
Peace to corrupt no less than war to waste.
How comes it thus ? unfold, celestial guide,
And whether here the race of Man will end."

To whom thus Michael. " Those, whom last thou saw'st

In triumph and luxurious wealth, are they
First seen in acts of prowess eminent
And great exploits, but of true virtue void ;
Who, having spilt much blood, and done much waste
Subduing nations, and achiev'd thereby
Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey ;
Shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth,
Surfeit, and lust ; till wantonness and pride
Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace.
The conquer'd also, and enslav'd by war,
Shall, with their freedom lost, all virtue lose
And fear of God ; from whom their piety feign'd
In sharp contest of battle found no aid
Against invaders ; therefore, cool'd in zeal,
Thenceforth shall practise how to live secure,
Worldly or dissolute, on what their lords
Shall leave them to enjoy ; for the Earth shall bear
More than enough, that temperance may be tried :
So all shall turn degenerate, all deprav'd ;
Justice and temperance, truth and faith, forgot ;
One man except, the only son of light
In a dark age, against example good,
Against allurement, custom, and a world
Offended : fearless of reproach and scorn,
Or violence, he of their wicked ways
Shall them admonish ; and before them set
The paths of righteousness, how much more safe
And full of peace ; denouncing wrath to come
On their impenitence ; and shall return
Of them derided, but of God observ'd
The one just man alive ; by his command
Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou beheldst,
To save himself, and household, from amidst
A world devote to universal wrack.

No sooner he, with them of man and beast
Select for life, shall in the ark be lodg'd,
And shelter'd round ; but all the cataracts
Of Heaven set open on the Earth shall pour
Rain, day and night ; all fountains of the deep,
Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds ; till inundation rise
Above the highest hills : then shall this mount
Of Paradise by might of waves be mov'd
Out of his place, push'd by the horned flood,
With all his verdure spoil'd, and trees adrift,
Down the great river to the opening gulf,
And there take root an island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orcs, and sea-mews' clang :
To teach thee that God attributes to place
No sanctity, if none be thither brought
By men who there frequent, or therein dwell.
And now, what further shall ensue, behold."

He look'd, and saw the ark hull on the flood,
Which now abated ; for the clouds were fled,
Driven by a keen north-wind, that, blowing dry,
Wrinkled the face of deluge, as decay'd ;
And the clear Sun on his wide watery glass
Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst ; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake to tripping ebb, that stole

With soft foot towards the deep ; who now had stopt
 His sluices, as the Heaven his windows shut.
 The ark no more now floats, but seems on ground,
 Fast on the top of some high mountain fix'd.
 And now the tops of hills, as rocks, appear ;
 With clamour thence the rapid currents drive,
 Towards the retreating sea, their furious tide.
 Forthwith from out the ark a raven flies,
 And after him, the surer messenger,
 A dove sent forth once and again to spy
 Green tree or ground, whereon his foot may light :
 The second time returning, in his bill
 An olive-leaf he brings, pacific sign :
 Anon dry ground appears, and from his ark
 The ancient sire descends, with all his train :
 Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout,
 Grateful to Heaven, over his head beholds
 A dewy cloud, and in the cloud a bow
 Conspicuous with three listed colours gay,
 Betokening peace from God, and covenant new.
 Whereat the heart of Adam, erst so sad,
 Greatly rejoic'd ; and thus his joy broke forth.

" O thou, who future things canst represent
 As present, heavenly instructor ! I revive
 At this last sight ; assur'd that Man shall live,
 With all the creatures, and their seed preserve.
 Far less I now lament for one whole world
 Of wicked sons destroy'd, than I rejoice
 For one man found so perfect, and so just,
 That God vouchsafes to raise another world
 From him, and all his anger to forget. [Heaven
 But say, what mean those colour'd streaks in Distended, as the brow of God appeas'd ?
 Or serve they, as a flowery verge, to bind
 The fluid skirts of that same watery cloud,
 Lest it again dissolve, and shower the Earth ?"

To whom the arch-angel. " Dextrously thou
 aim'st ;
 So willingly doth God remit his ire,
 Though late repenting him of Man deprav'd ;
 Griev'd at his heart, when looking down he saw
 The whole Earth fill'd with violence, and all flesh
 Corrupting each their way ; yet, those remov'd,
 Such grace shall one just man find in his sight,
 That he relents, not to blot out mankind ;
 And makes a covenant never to destroy
 The Earth again by flood ; nor let the sea
 Surpass his bounds ; nor rain to drown the world,
 With man therein or beast ; but, when he brings
 Over the Earth a cloud, will therein set
 His triple-colour'd bow, whereon to look,
 And call to mind his covenant : day and night,
 Seed-time and harvest, heat and hoary frost,
 Shall hold their course ; till fire purge all things new,
 Both Heaven and Earth, wherein the just shall dwell."

Book XII.

The Argument.

The angel Michael continues, from the flood, to relate what shall succeed ; then, in the mention of Abraham, comes by degrees to explain, who that seed of the woman shall be, which was promised Adam and Eve in the Fall ; his incarnation, death, resurrection, and ascension ; the state of the church till his second coming. Adam, greatly satisfied and recomforted by these relations and promises, descends the hill with Michael ; wakens Eve, who all this while had slept, but with gentle dreams composed to quietness of mind and submission. Michael in either hand leads them out of Paradise, the fiery sword waving behind them, and the Cherubim taking their stations to guard the place.

As one who in his journey bates at noon,
 Though bent on speed ; so here the arch-angel
 paus'd
 Betwixt the world destroy'd and world restor'd,
 If Adam aught perhaps might interpose ;
 Then, with transition sweet, new speech resumes.
 " Thus thou hast seen one world begin, and end ;
 And Man, as from a second stock, proceed.
 Much thou hast yet to see ; but I perceive
 Thy mortal sight to fail : objects divine
 Must needs impair and weary human sense :
 Henceforth what is to come I will relate ;
 Thou therefore give due audience, and attend.
 " This second source of men, while yet but few,
 And while the dread of judgment past remains
 Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
 With some regard to what is just and right
 Shall lead their lives, and multiply apace ;
 Labouring the soil, and reaping plenteous crop,
 Corn, wine, and oil ; and, from the herd or flock,
 Oft sacrificing bullock, lamb, or kid,
 With large wine-offerings pour'd, and sacred feast,
 Shall spend their days in joy unblam'd ; and dwell
 Long time in peace, by families and tribes,
 Under paternal rule : till one shall rise
 Of proud ambitious heart ; who, not content
 With fair equality, fraternal state,
 Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd
 Over his brethren, and quite dispossess
 Concord and law of nature from the Earth ;
 Hunting (and men not beasts shall be his game)
 With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse
 Subjection to his empire tyrannous :
 A mighty hunter thence he shall be styl'd
 Before the Lord ; as in despite of Heaven,
 Or from Heaven, claiming second sovranity ;
 And from rebellion shall derive his name,
 Though of rebellion others he accuse.
 He with a crew, whom like ambition joins
 With him or under him to tyrannize,
 Marching from Eden towards the west, shall find
 The plain, wherein a black bituminous gurge
 Boils out from under ground, the mouth of Hell :
 Of brick, and of that stuff, they cast to build
 A city and tower, whose top may reach to Heaven ;
 And get themselves a name ; lest, far dispers'd
 In foreign lands, their memory be lost ;
 Regardless whether good or evil fame.
 But God, who oft descends to visit men
 Unseen, and through their habitations walks
 To mark their doings, them beholding soon,
 Comes down to see their city, ere the tower
 Obstruct Heaven-towers ; and in derision sets
 Upon their tongues a various spirit, to rase
 Quite out their native language ; and, instead,
 To sow a jangling noise of words unknown :
 Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud,
 Among the builders ; each to other calls
 Not understood ; till hoarse, and all in rage,
 As mock'd they storm : great laughter was in Heaven,
 And looking down, to see the hubbub strange,

And hear the din : thus was the building left
Ridiculous, and the work Confusion nam'd."

Whereto thus Adam, fatherly displeas'd.
" O execrable son ! so to aspire
Above his brethren ; to himself assuming Authority usurp'd, from God not given :
He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl,
Dominion absolute ; that right we hold
By his donation ; but man over men
He made not lord ; such title to himself
Reserving, human left from human free.
But this usurper his encroachment proud
Says not on man ; to God his tower intends
Siege and defiance : wretched man ! what food
Will he convey up thither, to sustain
Himself and his rash army ; where thin air
Above the clouds will pine his entrails gross,
And furnish him of breath, if not of bread ?"

To whom thus Michael. " Justly thou abhorr'st
That son, who on the quiet state of men
Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue
Rational liberty ; yet know withal,
Since thy original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells
Twinn'd, and from her bath no dividual being :
Reason in man obscur'd, or not obey'd,
Immediately inordinate desires,
And upstart passions, catch the government
From reason ; and to servitude reduce
Man, till then free. Therefore, since he permits
Within himself unworthy powers to reign
Over free reason, God, in judgment just,
Subjects him from without to violent lords ;
Who oft as undeserv'dly enthrall
His outward freedom : tyranny must be ;
Though to the tyrant thereby no excuse.
Yet sometimes nations will decline so low
From virtue, which is reason, that no wrong,
But justice, and some fatal curse annex'd,
Deprives them of their outward liberty ;
Their inward lost : witness the irreverent son
Of him who built the ark ; who, for the shame
Done to his father, heard this heavy curse,
Servant of servants, on his vicious race.
Thus will this latter, as the former world,
Wend from bad to worse ; till God at last,
Wearied with their iniquities, withdraw
His presence from among them, and avert
His holy eyes ; resolving from thenceforth
To leave them to their own polluted ways ;
And one peculiar nation to select
From all the rest, of whom to be invoc'd,
A nation from one faithful man to spring :
Him on this side Euphrates yet residing,
Bred up in idol-worship : O, that men
(Canst thou believe ?) should be so stupid grown,
While yet the patriarch liv'd, who 'scap'd the flood,
As to forsake the living God, and fall
To worship their own work in wood and stone
For gods ! Yet him God the Most High vouchsafes
To call by vision, from his father's house,
His kindred, and false gods, into a land
Which he will show him ; and from him will raise
A mighty nation ; and upon him shower
His benediction so, that in his seed
All nations shall be blest : he straight obeys ;
Not knowing to what land, yet firm believes :
I see him, but thou canst not, with what faith
He leaves his gods, his friends, and native soil,
Of Chaldaea, passing now the ford

To Haran ; after him a cumbrous train
Of herds and flocks, and numerous servitude ;
Not wandering poor, but trusting all his wealth
With God, who call'd him, in a land unknown.
Canaan he now attains ; I see his tents
Pitch'd about Sechem, and the neighbouring plain
Of Moreh ; there by promise he receives
Gift to his progeny of all that land,
From Hamath northward to the desert south ;
(Things by their names I call, though yet unnam'd ;)
From Hermon east to the great western sea ;
Mount Hermon, yonder sea ; each place behold
In prospect, as I point them ; on the shore
Mount Carmel ; here, the double-founted stream,
Jordan, true limit eastward ; but his sons
Shall dwell to Senir, that long ridge of hills.
This ponder, that all nations of the Earth
Shall in his seed be blessed : by that seed
Is meant thy great Deliverer, who shall bruise
The serpent's head ; whereof to thee anon
Plainlier shall be reveal'd. This patriarch blest,
Whom faithful Abraham due time shall call,
A son, and of his son a grand-child, leaves ;
Like him in faith, in wisdom, and renown :
The grand-child, with twelve sons increas'd, departs
From Canaan, to a land hereafter call'd
Egypt, divided by the river Nile ;
See where it flows, disgorging at seven mouths
Into the sea : to sojourn in that land
He comes, invited by a younger son
In time of dearth ; a son, whose worthy deeds
Raise him to be the second in that realm
Of Pharaoh : there he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation ; and, now grown,
Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth, as inmate guests [slaves
Too numerous ; whence of guests he makes them
Inhospitably, and kills their infant males :
Till by two brethren, (these two brethren call Moses and Aaron,) sent from God to claim
His people from enthrallment, they return
With glory, and spoil, back to their promis'd land.
But first, the lawless tyrant, who denies
To know their God, or message to regard,
Must be compell'd by signs and judgments dire ;
To blood unshed the rivers must be turn'd ;
Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill
With loath'd intrusion, and fill all the land ;
His cattle must of rot and murren die ;
Botches and blains must all his flesh emboss,
And all his people ; thunder mix'd with hail,
Hail mix'd with fire, must rend the Egyptian sky,
And wheel on the Earth, devouring where it rolls ;
What it devours not, herb, or fruit, or grain,
A darksome cloud of locusts swarming down
Must eat, and on the ground leave nothing green ;
Darkness must overshadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkness, and blot out three days ;
Last, with one midnight-stroke, all the first-born
Of Egypt must lie dead. Thus with ten wounds
The river-dragon tam'd at length submits
To let his sojourners depart, and oft
Humbles his stubborn heart ; but still, as ice
More harden'd after thaw ; till, in his rage
Pursuing whom he late dismiss'd, the sea
Swallows him with his host ; but them lets pass,
As on dry land, between two crystal walls ;
Aw'd by the rod of Moses so to stand
Divided, till his rescued gain their shore :
Such wondrous power God to his saint will lend,

Though present in his angel ; who shall go
 Before them in a cloud, and pillar of fire ;
 By day a cloud, by night a pillar of fire,
 To guide them in their journey, and remove
 Behind them, while the obdurate king pursues :
 All night he will pursue ; but his approach
 Darkness defends between till morning watch ;
 Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
 God looking forth will trouble all his host,
 And craze their chariot-wheels : when by command
 Moses once more his potent rod extends
 Over the sea ; the sea his rod obeys ;
 On their embattled ranks the waves return,
 And overwhelm their war : the race elect
 Safe towards Canaan from the shore advance
 Through the wild desert, not the readiest way ;
 Lest, entering on the Canaanite alarm'd,
 War terrify them inexpert, and fear
 Return them back to Egypt, choosing rather Inglorious life with servitude ; for life
 To noble and ignoble is more sweet
 Untrain'd in arms, where rashness leads not on.
 This also shall they gain by their delay
 In the wide wilderness ; there they shall found
 Their government, and their great senate choose
 Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd :
 God from the mount of Sinai, whose gray top
 Shall tremble, he descending, will himself
 In thunder, lightning, and loud trumpets' sound,
 Ordain them laws ; part, such as appertain
 To civil justice ; part, religious rites
 Of sacrifice ; informing them, by types
 And shadows, of that destin'd Seed to bruise
 The serpent, by what means he shall achieve
 Mankind's deliverance. But the voice of God
 To mortal ear is dreadful : they beseech
 That Moses might report to them his will,
 And terroure cease ; he grants what they besought,
 Instructed that to God is no access,
 Without mediator, whose high office now
 Moses in figure bears ; to introduce
 One greater, of whose day he shall foretell,
 And all the prophets in their age the times
 Of great Messiah shall sing. Thus, laws and rights
 Establish'd, such delight hath God in men
 Obedient to his will, that he vouchsafes
 Among them to set up his tabernacle ;
 The Holy One with mortal men to dwell :
 By his prescript a sanctuary is fram'd
 Of cedar, overlaid with gold ; therein
 An ark, and in the ark his testimony,
 The records of his covenant ; over these
 A mercy-seat of gold, between the wings
 Of two bright cherubim ; before him burn
 Seven lamps as in a zodiac representing
 The heavenly fires ; over the tent a cloud
 Shall rest by day, a fiery gleam by night ;
 Save when they journey, and at length they come,
 Conducted by his angel, to the land
 Promis'd to Abraham and his seed : — the rest
 Were long to tell ; how many battles fought ;
 How many kings destroy'd ; and kingdoms won ;
 Or how the Sun shall in mid Heaven stand still
 A day entire, and night's due course adjourn,
 Man's voice commanding, ' Sun, in Gibeon stand
 And thou, Moon, in the vale of Aialon,
 Till Israel overcome ! ' so call the third
 From Abraham, son of Isaac ; and from him
 His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win."

Here Adam interpos'd. " O sent from Heaven,

Enlightener of my darkness, gracious things
 Thou hast reveal'd ; those chiefly, which concern
 Just Abraham and his seed : now first I find
 Mine eyes true-opening, and my heart much eas'd.
 Erewhile perplex'd with thoughts, what would become

Of me and all mankind : but now I see
 His day, in whom all nations shall be blest ;
 Favour unmerited by me, who sought
 Forbidden knowledge by forbidden means.
 This yet I apprehend not, why to those Among whom God will deign to dwell on Earth
 So many and so various laws are given
 So many laws argue so many sins
 Among them ; how can God with such reside ?"

To whom thus Michael. " Doubt not but that sin
 Will reign among them, as of thee begot ;
 And therefore was law given them, to evince
 Their natural pravity, by stirring up
 Sin against law to fight : that when they see
 Law can discover sin, but not remove,
 Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
 The blood of bulls and goats, they may conclude
 Some blood more precious must be paid for man ;
 Just for unjust ; that in such righteousness
 To them by faith imputed, they may find
 Justification towards God, and peace
 Of conscience ; which the law by ceremonies
 Cannot appease : nor man the moral part
 Perform ; and, not performing, cannot live.
 So law appears imperfect ; and but given
 With purpose to resign them, in full time,
 Up to a better covenant ; disciplin'd
 From shadowy types to truth ; from flesh to spirit ;
 From imposition of strict laws to free
 Acceptance of large grace ; from servile fear
 To filial : works of law to works of faith.
 And therefore shall not Moses, though of God
 Highly belov'd, being but the minister
 Of law, his people into Canaan lead ;
 But Joshua, whom the Gentiles Jesus call,
 His name and office bearing, who shall quell
 The adversary-serpent, and bring back
 Through the world's wilderness long-wander'd man
 Safe to eternal Paradise of rest.
 Meanwhile they, in their earthly Canaan plac'd,
 Long time shall dwell and prosper, but when sins
 National interrupt their public peace,
 Provoking God to raise them enemies ;
 From whom as oft he saves them penitent
 By judges first, then under kings ; of whom
 The second, both for piety renown'd
 And puissant deeds, a promise shall receive
 Irrevocable, that his regal throne
 For ever shall endure ; the like shall sing
 All prophecy, that of the royal stock
 Of David (so I name this king) shall rise
 A son, the woman's seed to thee foretold,
 Foretold to Abraham, as in whom shall trust
 All nations ; and to kings foretold, of kings
 The last ; for of his reign shall be no end.
 But first, a long succession must ensue ;
 And his next son, for wealth and wisdom fam'd,
 The clouded ark of God, till then in tents
 Wandering, shall in a glorious temple enshrine.
 Such follow him, as shall be register'd
 Part good, part bad ; of bad the longer scroll ;
 Whose foul idolatries, and other faults
 Heap'd to the popular sum, will so incense
 God, as to leave them, and expose their land,

their city, his temple, and his holy ark,
 With all his sacred things, a scorn and prey
 To that proud city, whose high walls thou saw'st
 Left in confusion; Babylon thence call'd.
 Here in captivity he lets them dwell
 The space of seventy years; then brings them back,
 Remembering mercy, and his covenant sworn
 To David, stablish'd as the days of Heaven.
 Let's go from Babylon by leave of kings
 Their lords, whom God dispos'd, the house of God
 They first re-edify; and for a while
 In mean estate live moderate; till grown
 In wealth and multitude, factious they grow:
 But first among the priests dissention springs,
 Who attend the altar, and should most Endeavour peace: their strife pollution brings
 Upon the temple itself: at last they seize
 The sceptre, and regard not David's sons;
 Then lose it to a stranger, that the true
 Anointed king Messiah might be born
 Void of his right; yet at his birth a star,
 Seen before in Heaven, proclaims him come;
 And guides the eastern sages, who inquire
 His place, to offer incense, myrrh, and gold:
 His place of birth a solemn angel tells
 To simple shepherds, keeping watch by night;
 They gladly thither haste, and by a quire
 Of squadron'd angels hear his carol sung.
 His virgin is his mother, but his sire
 The power of the Most High: he shall ascend
 His throne hereditary, and bound his reign
 With Earth's wide bounds, his glory with the Heavens."

He crept, discerning Adam with such joy
 As had like grief been dew'd in tears,
 About the vent of words; which these he breath'd.
 "O prophet of glad tidings, finisher
 Of our hope! now clear I understand [vain;
 How oft my steadiest thoughts have searched in Thy great Expectation should be call'd
 Of woman: virgin mother, hail,
 Born in the love of Heaven; yet from my loins
 Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son
 Of God Most High; so God with man unites.
 Thou shalt the serpent now his capital bruise
 With mortal pain: say where and when
 His light, what stroke shall bruise the victor's
 Heel." [fight,
 To whom thus Michael. "Dream not of their
 A duel, or the local wounds
 Of heel or heel: not therefore joins the Son
 A hand to godhead, with more strength to foil
 His enemy; nor so is overcome
 One, whose fall from Heaven, a deadlier bruise,
 Is laid, not to give thee thy death's wound:
 But he, who comes thy Saviour, shall recure,
 By destroying Satan, but his works
 Shall live, and in thy seed: nor can this be
 But by fulfilling that which thou didst want,
 Hence to the law of God, impos'd
 The penalty of death, and suffering death;
 The penalty to thy transgression due,
 And due to theirs which out of thine will grow:
 Only can high Justice rest appaid.
 By law of God exact he shall fulfil
 By obedience and by love, though love
 Shall fulfil the law; thy punishment
 Shall endure, by coming in the flesh
 To a painful life, and cursed death;
 To raising life to all who shall believe

In his redemption; and that his obedience,
 Imputed, becomes theirs by faith; his merits
 To save them, not their own, though legal, works.
 For this he shall live hated, be blasphem'd,
 Seiz'd on by force, judg'd, and to death condemn'd
 A shameful and accurs'd, nail'd to the cross
 By his own nation; slain for bringing life:
 But to the cross he nails thy enemies,
 The law that is against thee, and the sins
 Of all mankind with him there crucified,
 Never to hurt them more who rightly trust
 In this his satisfaction: so he dies,
 But soon revives; Death over him no power
 Shall long usurp: ere the third dawning light
 Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise
 Out of his grave, fresh as the dawning light,
 Thy ransom paid, which man from death redeems,
 His death for man, as many as offer'd life
 Neglect not, and the benefit embrace
 By faith not void of works: this God-like act
 Annuls thy doom, the death thou should'st have died,

In sin for ever lost from life; this act
 Shall bruise the head of Satan, crush his strength,
 Defeating Sin and Death, his two main arms;
 And fix far deeper in his head their stings
 Than temporal death shall bruise the victor's heel,
 Or theirs whom he redeems; a death, like sleep,
 A gentle wafting to immortal life.
 Nor after resurrection shall he stay
 Longer on Earth, than certain times to appear
 To his disciples, men who in his life
 Still follow'd him; to them shall leave in charge
 To teach all nations what of him they learn'd
 And his salvation; them who shall believe
 Baptizing in the profuent stream, the sign
 Of washing them from guilt of sin to life
 Pure, and in mind prepar'd, if so befall,
 For death, like that which the Redeemer died.
 All nations they shall teach; for, from that day,
 Not only to the sons of Abraham's loins
 Salvation shall be preach'd, but to the sons
 Of Abraham's faith wherever through the world;
 So in his seed all nations shall be blest.
 Then to the Heaven of Heavens he shall ascend
 With victory triumphing through the air
 Over his foes and thine; there shall surprise
 The serpent, prince of air, and drag in chains
 Through all his realm, and there confounded leave;
 Then enter into glory, and resume
 His seat at God's right hand, exalted high
 Above all names in Heaven; and thence shall come,
 When this world's dissolution shall be ripe,
 With glory and power to judge both quick and dead;
 To judge the unfaithful dead, but to reward
 His faithful, and receive them into bliss,
 Whether in Heaven or Earth; for then the Earth
 Shall all be Paradise, far happier place
 Than this of Eden, and far happier days."

So spake the arch-angel Michael; then paus'd,
 As at the world's great period; and our sire,
 Replete with joy and wonder, thus replied.

"O Goodness infinite! Goodness immense!
 That all this good of evil shall produce,
 And evil turn to good; more wonderful
 Than that which by creation first brought forth
 Light out of darkness! Full of doubt I stand,
 Whether I should repent me now of sin
 By me done, and occasion'd; or rejoice [spring;
 Much more, that much more good thereof shall

To God'more glory, more good-will to men
From God, and over wrath grace shall abound.
But say, if our Deliverer up to Heaven
Must re-ascend, what will betide the few
His faithful, left among the unfaithful herd,
The enemies of truth? Who then shall guide
His people, who defend? Will they not deal
Worse with his followers than with him they dealt?"

"Be sure they will," said the angel; "but from
Heaven

He to his own a Comforter will send,
The promise of the Father, who shall dwell
His Spirit within them; and the law of faith,
Working through love, upon their hearts shall write,
To guide them in all truth: and also arm
With spiritual armour, able to resist
Satan's assaults, and quench his fiery darts;
What man can do against them, not afraid,
Though to the death; against such cruelties
With inward consolations recompens'd,
And oft supported so as shall amaze
Their proudest persecutors; for the Spirit,
Pour'd first on his Apostles, whom he sends
To evangelize the nations, then on all
Baptiz'd, shall them with wondrous gifts endue
To speak all tongues, and do all miracles,
As did their Lord before them. Thus they win
Great numbers of each nation to receive [length
With joy the tidings brought from Heaven: at
Their ministry perform'd, and race well run,
Their doctrine and their story written left,
They die; but in their room, as they forewarn,
Wolves shall succeed for teachers, grievous wolves,
Who all the sacred mysteries of Heaven
To their own vile advantages shall turn
Of lucre and ambition; and the truth
With superstitions and traditions taint,
Left only in those written records pure,
Though not but by the Spirit understood.
Then shall they seek to avail themselves of names,
Places, and titles, and with these to join
Secular power; though feigning still to act
By spiritual, to themselves appropriating
The Spirit of God, promis'd alike, and given
To all believers; and, from that pretence,
Spiritual laws by carnal power shall force
On every conscience; laws which none shall find
Left them inroll'd, or what the spirit within Shall on the heart engrave. What will they then
But force the Spirit of grace itself, and bind
His consort Liberty? what, but unbuild
His living temples, built by faith to stand,
Their own faith, not another's? for, on Earth,
Who against faith and conscience can be heard
Infallible? yet many will presume:
Whence heavy persecution shall arise
On all, who in the worship persevere
Of spirit and truth; the rest, far greater part,
Will deem in outward rites and specious forms
Religion satisfied; Truth shall retire
Bestuck with slanderous darts, and works of faith
Rarely be found: so shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign;
Under her own weight groaning; till the day
Appear of respiration to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked, at return
Of him so lately promis'd to thy aid,
The woman's Seed; obscurely then foretold,
Now amplier known thy Saviour and thy Lord;
Last, in the clouds, from Heaven to be reveal'd

In glory of the Father, to dissolve
Satan with his perverted world; then raise
From the conflagrant mass, purg'd and refin'd,
New Heavens, new Earth, ages of endless date,
Founded in righteousness, and peace, and love;
To bring forth fruits, joy, and eternal bliss."

He ended; and thus Adam last replied.
"How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest,
Measur'd this transient world, the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd! Beyond is all abyss,
Eternity, whose end no eye can reach.
Greatly instructed I shall hence depart;
Greatly in peace of thought; and have my fill
Of knowledge what this vessel can contain;
Beyond which was my folly to aspire.
Henceforth I learn, that to obey is best,
And love with fear the only God; to walk
As in his presence; ever to observe
His providence; and on him sole depend,
Merciful over all his works, with good
Still overcoming evil, and by small
Accomplishing great things, by things deem'd weak
Subverting worldly strong, and worldly wise
By simply meek: that suffering for truth's sake
Is fortitude to highest victory,
And, to the faithful, death, the gate of life;
Taught this by his example, whom I now
Acknowledge my Redeemer ever blest."

To whom thus also the angel last replied.
"This having learn'd, thou hast attain'd the sum
Of wisdom; hope no higher, though all the stars
Thou knew'st by name, and all the ethereal powers
All secrets of the deep, all Nature's works,
Or works of God in Heaven, air, earth, or sea,
And all the riches of this world enjoy'dst,
And all the rule, one empire; only add
Deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love,
By name to come call'd charity, the soul
Of all the rest: then wilt thou not be loth
To leave this Paradise, but shalt possess
A paradise within thee, happier far. —
Let us descend now therefore from this top
Of speculation; for the hour precise
Exacts our parting hence; and see! the guards,
By me encamp'd on yonder hill, expect
Their motion; at whose front a flaming sword,
In signal of remove, waves fiercely round:
We may no longer stay: go, waken Eve;
Her also I with gentle dreams have calm'd
Portending good, and all her spirits compos'd
To meek submission: thou, at season fit,
Let her with thee partake what thou hast heard;
Chiefly, what may concern her faith to know,
The great deliverance by her seed to come
(For by the woman's seed) on all mankind:
That ye may live, which will be many days,
Both in one faith unanimous, though sad,
With cause for evils past; yet much more cheer'd
With meditation on the happy end."

He ended, and they both descend the hill;
Descended, Adam to the bower, where Eve
Lay sleeping, ran before: but found her wak'd;
And thus with words not sad she him receiv'd.

"Whence thou return'st, and whither went'st,
know;
For God is also in sleep; and dreams advise,
Which he hath sent propitious, some great good
Presaging, since with sorrow and heart's distress
Wearied I fell asleep: but now lead on;

me is no delay ; with thee to go,
 to stay here ; without thee here to stay,
 to go hence unwilling ; thou to me
 art all things under Heaven, all places thou,
 Who for my wilful crime art banish'd hence.
 His further consolation yet secure carry hence ; though all by me is lost,
 such favour I unworthy am vouchsaf'd,
 By me the promis'd Seed shall all restore."
 So spake our mother Eve ; and Adam heard
 Well pleas'd, but answer'd not : for now, too nigh
 The arch-angel stood ; and from the other hill
 To their fix'd station, all in bright array
 The cherubim descended ; on the ground
 Lying meteorous, as evening-mist
 As from a river o'er the marish glides,
 And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heel
 Homeward returning. High in front advanc'd
 He brandish'd sword of God before them blaz'd,
 Larger as a comet ; which with torrid heat,
 And vapour as the Libyan air adust,
 Began to parch that temperate clime ; whereat
 On either hand the hastening angel caught
 Her lingering parents, and to the eastern gate
 Led them direct, and down the cliff as fast
 To the subjected plain ; then disappear'd.
 They, looking back, all the eastern side beheld
 Of Paradise, so late their happy seat,
 Fov'd over by that flaming brand ; the gate
 With dreadful faces throng'd, and fiery arms :
 Some natural tears they dropt, but wip'd them soon ;
 The world was all before them, where to choose
 Their place of rest, and Providence their guide :
 They, hand in hand, with wandering steps and slow,
 Through Eden took their solitary way.

PARADISE REGAINED.

BOOK I.

The Argument.

The subject proposed. Invocation of the Holy Spirit. — The poem opens with John baptizing at the river Jordan. Jesus coming there is baptized ; and is attested, by the descent of the Holy Ghost, and by a voice from Heaven, to be the Son of God. Satan, who is present, upon this immediately flies up into the regions of the air : where, summoning his infernal council, he acquaints them with his apprehensions that Jesus is that seed of the Woman, destined to destroy all their power, and points out to them the immediate necessity of bringing the matter to proof, and of attempting, by snares and fraud, to counteract and defeat the person, from whom they have so much to dread. This office he offers himself to undertake ; and, his offer being accepted, sets out on his enterprise. — In the meantime God, in the assembly of holy angels, declares that he has given up his Son to be tempted by Satan ; but foretels that the tempter shall be completely defeated by him : — upon which the angels sing a hymn of triumph. Jesus is led up by the Spirit into the wilderness, while he is meditating on the commencement of his great office of Saviour of mankind. Pursuing his meditations he narrates, in a soliloquy, what divine and philanthropic impulses he had felt from his early youth, and how his mother Mary, on perceiving these dispositions in him, had acquainted him with the circumstances of his birth, and informed him that he was no less a person than the Son of God ; to which he adds what his own inquiries and reflections had supplied in confirmation of this great truth, and particularly dwells on the recent attestation of it at the river Jordan. Our Lord passes forty days, fasting, in the wilderness, where the wild beasts become mild and harmless in his presence. Satan now appears under the form of an old peasant ; and enters into discourse with our Lord, wondering what could have brought him alone into so dangerous a place, and at the same time professing to recognize him for the person lately acknowledged by John, at the river Jordan, to be the Son of God. Jesus briefly replies. Satan rejoins with a description of the difficulty of supporting life in the wilderness ; and entreats Jesus, if he be really the Son of God, to manifest his divine power, by changing some of the stones into bread. Jesus reproves him, and at the same time tells him that he knows who he is. Satan instantly avows himself, and offers an artful apology for himself and his conduct. Our blessed Lord severely-reprimands him, and refutes every part of his justification. Satan, with much semblance of humility, still endeavours to justify himself ; and, professing his admiration of Jesus and his regard for virtue, requests to be permitted at a future time to hear more of his conversation ; but is answered, that this must be as he shall find permission from above. Satan then disappears, and the book closes with a short description of night coming on in the desert.

I, who ere while the happy garden sung
 By one man's disobedience lost, now sing
 Recover'd Paradise to all mankind,
 By one man's firm obedience fully tried
 Through all temptation, and the tempter foil'd
 In all his wiles, defeated and repuls'd,
 And Eden rais'd in the waste wilderness.

Thou Spirit, who ledst this glorious eremite
 Into the desert, his victorious field,
 Against the spiritual foe, and brought'st him thence
 By proof the undoubted Son of God, inspire,
 As thou art wont, my prompted song, else mute,
 And bear through height or depth of Nature's bounds,

With prosperous wing full summ'd, to tell of deeds
 Above heroic, though in secret done,
 And unrecorded left through many an age ;
 Worthy to have not remain'd so long unsung.

Now had the great proclaimer, with a voice
 More awful than the sound of trumpet, cried
 Repentance, and Heaven's kingdom nigh at hand
 To all baptiz'd : to his great baptism flock'd
 With awe the regions round, and with them came
 From Nazareth the son of Joseph deem'd
 To the flood Jordan ; came, as then obscure,
 Unmark'd, unknown ; but him the Baptist soon
 Descried, divinely warn'd, and witness bore
 As to his worthier, and would have resign'd
 To him his heavenly office ; nor was long
 His witness unconfirm'd : on him baptiz'd
 Heaven open'd, and in likeness of a dove

The Spirit descended, while the Father's voice
From Heaven pronounc'd him his beloved Son.
That heard the adversary, who, roving still
About the world, at that assembly fam'd
Would not be last, and, with the voice divine
Nigh thunder-struck, the exalted man, to whom
Such high attest was given, a while survey'd
With wonder ; then, with envy fraught and rage,
Flies to his place, nor rests, but in mid air
To council summons all his mighty peers,
Within thick clouds and dark ten-fold involv'd,
A gloomy consistory ; and then amidst,
With looks aghast and sad, he thus bespake.

" O ancient powers of air, and this wide world,
(For much more willingly I mention air,
This our old conquest, than remember Hell,
Our hated habitation,) well ye know
How many ages, as the years of men,
This universe we have possess'd, and rul'd,
In manner at our will, the affairs of Earth,
Since Adam and his facile consort Eve
Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me ; though since
With dread attending when that fatal wound
Shall be inflicted by the seed of Eve
Upon my head. Long the decrees of Heaven
Delay, for longest time to him is short ;
And now, too soon for us, the circling hours
This dreaded time have compass'd, wherein we Must bide the stroke of that long-threaten'd wound,
(At lest if so we can, and by the head
Broken be not intended all our power
To be infring'd, our freedom and our being
In this fair empire won of Earth and air,)
For this ill news I bring, the woman's seed
Destin'd to this, is late of woman born.
His birth to our just fear gave no small cause :
But his growth now to youth's full flower displaying
All virtue, grace, and wisdom to achieve
Things highest, greatest multiplies my fear
Before him a great prophet, to proclaim
His coming, is sent harbinger, who all
Invites, and in the consecrated stream
Pretends to wash off sin, and fit them, so
Purified, to receive him pure, or rather
To do him honour as their king : all come,
And he himself among them was baptiz'd ;
Not thence to be more pure, but to receive
The testimony of Heaven, that who he is Thenceforth the nations may not doubt ; I saw
The prophet do him reverence ; on him, rising
Out of the water, Heaven above the clouds
Unfold her crystal doors : thence on his head
A perfect dove descend, (whate'er it meant,)
And out of Heaven the sovran voice I heard,
' This is my Son belov'd, in him am pleas'd.'
His mother then is mortal, but his Sire
He who obtains the monarchy of Heaven :
And what will he not do to advance his Son ?
His first-begot we know, and sore have felt,
When his fierce thunder drove us to the deep :
Who this is we must learn, for Man he seems
In all his lineaments, though in his face
The glimpses of his father's glory shine.
Ye see our danger on the utmost edge
Of hazard, which admits no long debate,
But must with something sudden be oppos'd,
(Not force, but well-couch'd fraud, well-woven snares,)

Ere in the head of nations he appear,
Their king, their leader, and supreme on Earth.

I, when no other durst, sole undertook
The dismal expedition to find out
And ruin Adam ; and the exploit perform'd
Successfully : a calmer voyage now
Will waft me ; and the way, found prosperous on Induces best to hope of like success."

He ended, and his words impression left
Of much amazement to the infernal crew,
Distracted, and surpris'd with deep dismay
At these sad tidings ; but no time was then
For long indulgence to their fears or grief ;
Unanimous they all commit the care
And management of this main enterprise
To him, their great dictator, whose attempt
At first against mankind so well had thriv'd
In Adam's overthrow, and led their march
From Hell's deep-vaulted den to dwell in light,
Regents, and potentates, and kings, yea gods,
Of many a pleasant realm and province wide.
So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles,
Where he might likeliest find this new-declar'd,
This Man of men, attested Son of God,
Temptation and all guile on him to try ;
So to subvert whom he suspected rais'd
To end his reign on Earth, so long enjoy'd :
But, contrary, unweeting he fulfill'd
The purpos'd council, pre-ordain'd and fix'd,
Of the Most High ; who, in full frequency bright
Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake.

" Gabriel, this day by proof thou shalt behold
Thou and all angels conversant on Earth
With man or men's affairs, how I begin
To verify that solemn message, late
On which I sent thee to the virgin pure
In Galilee, that she should bear a son,
Great in renown, and call'd the Son of God ;
Then told'st her, doubting how these things could
To her a virgin, that on her should come
The Holy Ghost, and the power of the Highest O'ersadow her. This man, born and now grown,

To show him worthy of his birth divine
And high prediction, henceforth I expose
To Satan ; let him tempt, and now assay
His utmost subtlety, because he boasts
And vaunts of his great cunning to the throng
Of his apostacy : he might have learnt
Less overweening, since he fail'd in Job,
Whose constant perseverance overcame
Whate'er his cruel malice could invent.
He now shall know I can produce a man,
Of female seed, far abler to resist
All his solicitations, and at length
All his vast force, and drive him back to Hell ;
Winning, by conquest, what the first man lost,
By fallacy surpris'd. But first I mean
To exercise him in the wilderness ;
There he shall first lay down the rudiments
Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer Sin and Death, the two grand foes,
By humiliation and strong sufferance :
His weakness shall o'ercome Satanic strength
And all the world, and mass of sinful flesh,
That all the angels and ethereal powers,
They now, and men hereafter, may discern,
From what consummate virtue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit call'd my Son,
To earn salvation for the sons of men."

So spake the Eternal Father, and all Heaven

Admiring stood a space, then into hymns
Burst forth, and in celestial measures mov'd,
Circling the throne and singing, while the hand
Jung with the voice, and this the argument.

"Victory and triumph to the Son of God,
Now entering his great duel, not of arms,
But to vanquish by wisdom bellish wiles!
The Father knows the Son; therefore secure
Ventures his filial virtue, though untried,
Against whate'er may tempt, whate'er seduce,
Allure, or terrify, or undermine.
Be frustrate, all ye stratagems of Hell,
And, devilish machinations, come to naught!"
So they in Heaven their odes and vigils tun'd:
Meanwhile the Son of God, who yet some days
Lodg'd in Bethabara, where John baptiz'd,
Musing, and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin
Of Saviour to mankind, and which way first
Publish his God-like office now mature,
One day forth walk'd alone, the Spirit leading
And his deep thoughts, the better to converse
With solitude, till, far from track of men,
Thought following thought, and step by step led on,
He enter'd now the bordering desert wild,
And, with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditations thus pursued.

"O, what a multitude of thoughts at once
Awakened in me swarm, while I consider
What from within I feel myself, and hear
What from without comes often to my ears,
Comparing with my present state compar'd!
When I was yet a child, no childish play
To me was pleasing; all my mind was set
Serious to learn and know, and thence to do
What might be public good; myself I thought
Born to that end, born to promote all truth,
All righteous things: therefore, above my years,
The law of God I read, and found it sweet,
Made it my whole delight, and in it grew
To such perfection, that, ere yet my age
Had measur'd twice six years, at our great feast
I went into the temple, there to hear
The teachers of our law, and to propose
What might improve my knowledge or their own;
And was admir'd by all: yet this not all
To which my spirit aspir'd; victorious deeds
Fanc'd in my heart, heroic acts; one while
To rescue Israel from the Roman yoke,
Then to subdue and quell, o'er all the Earth,
Brute violence and proud tyrannic power,
That truth were freed, and equity restor'd:
Yet held it more humane, more heavenly, first
By winning words to conquer willing hearts,
And make persuasion do the work of fear;
At least to try, and teach the erring soul,
Not wilfully misdoing, but unaware
Mistaken; the stubborn only to subdue.
True growing thoughts my mother soon perceiving,
By words at times cast forth, inly rejoic'd,
And said to me apart, 'High are thy thoughts,
O son, but nourish them, and let them soar
To what bright sacred virtue and true worth
As mine them, though above example high;
By matchless deeds express thy matchless sire,
For know, thou art no son of mortal man;
Though men esteem thee low of parentage,
Thy father is the Eternal King who rules
All Heaven and Earth, angels and sons of men;
A messenger from God foretold thy birth

Conceiv'd in me a virgin; he foretold,
Thou should'st be great, and sit on David's throne,
And of thy kingdom there should be no end.
At thy nativity, a glorious quire
Of angels, in the fields of Bethlehem, sung
To shepherds, watching at their folds by night,
And told them the Messiah now was born,
Where they might see him, and to thee they came,
Directed to the manger where thou lay'st,
For in the inn was left no better room:
A star, not seen before, in Heaven appearing,
Guided the wise men thither from the east,
To honour thee with incense, myrrh, and gold;
By whose bright course led on they found the place,
Affirming it thy star, new-graven in Heaven,
By which they knew the king of Israel born.
Just Simeon and prophetic Anna, warn'd
By vision, found thee in the temple, and spake,
Before the altar and the vested priest,
Like things of thee to all that present stood.'—
This having heard, straight I again revolv'd
The law and prophets, searching what was writ
Concerning the Messiah, to our scribes
Known partly, and soon found, of whom they spake
I am; this chiefly, that my way must lie
Through many a hard assay, even to the death,
Ere I the promis'd kingdom can attain,
Or work redemption for mankind, whose sins
Full weight must be transferr'd upon my head.
Yet, neither thus dishearten'd or dismay'd,
The time prefix'd I waited; when behold
The Baptist, (of whose birth I oft had heard;
Not knew by sight,) now come, who was to come
Before Messiah, and his way prepare!
I, as all others, to his baptism came,
Which I believ'd was from above; but he Straight knew me, and with loudest voice proclaim'd
Me him, (for it was shown him so from Heaven,)
Me him, whose harbinger he was; and first
Refus'd on me his baptism to confer,
As much his greater, and was hardly won:
But, as I rose out of the laving stream,
Heaven opened her eternal doors, from whence
The Spirit descended on me like a dove;
And last, the sum of all, my Father's voice,
Audibly heard from Heaven, pronounc'd me his,
'Me his beloved Son, in whom alone
He was well pleas'd;' by which I knew the time
Now full, that I no more should live obscure,
But openly begin, as best becomes,
The authority which I deriv'd from Heaven.
And now by some strong motion I am led
Into this wilderness, to what intent
I learn not yet; perhaps I need not know,
For what concerns my knowledge God reveals."

So spake our Morning-star, then in his rise,
And, looking round, on every side beheld
A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades;
The way he came not having mark'd, return
Was difficult, by human steps untrod;
And he still on was led, but with such thoughts
Accompanied of things past and to come
Lodg'd in his breast, as well might recommend
Such solitude before choicest society.
Full forty days he pass'd, whether on hill
Sometimes, anon on shady vale, each night
Under the covert of some ancient oak,
Or cedar, to defend him from the dew,
Or harbour'd in one cave, is not reveal'd;
Nor tasted human food, nor hunger felt

Till those days ended ; hunger'd then at last
 Among wild beasts : they at his sight grew mild,
 Nor sleeping him nor waking harm'd ; his walk
 The fiery serpent fled and noxious worm,
 The lion and fierce tiger glar'd aloof.
 But now an aged man in rural weeds,
 Following, as seem'd, the quest of some stray ewe,
 Or wither'd sticks to gather, which might serve
 Against a winter's day, when winds blow keen,
 To warm him wet return'd from field at eve,
 He saw approach, who first with curious eye
 Perus'd him, then with words thus utter'd spake.

“ Sir, what ill chance hath brought thee to this place

So far from path or road of men, who pass
 In troop or caravan ? for single none
 Durst ever, who return'd, and dropt not here
 His carcase, pin'd with hunger and with drought.
 I ask the rather, and the more admire,
 For that to me thou seem'st the Man, whom late
 Our new baptizing prophet at the ford
 Of Jordan honour'd so, and call'd thee Son
 Of God : I saw and heard, for we sometimes
 Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth

To town or village nigh, (nighest is far,)
 Where aught we hear, and curious are to hear,
 What happens new ; fame also finds us out.”

To whom the Son of God. “ Who brought me hither,

Will bring me hence ; no other guide I seek.”

“ By miracle he may,” replied the swain ;

“ What other way I see not ; for we here
 Live on tough roots and stubs, to thirst inur'd
 More than the camel, and to drink go far,
 Men to much misery and hardship born :
 But, if thou be the Son of God, command
 That out of these hard stones be made thee bread,
 So shalt thou save thyself, and us relieve
 With food, whereof we wretched seldom taste.”

He ended, and the Son of God replied.

“ Think'st thou such force in bread ? Is it not written,

(For I discern thee other than thou seem'st)

‘ Man lives not by bread only, but each word
 Proceeding from the mouth of God, who fed
 Our fathers here with manna ?’ in the mount
 Moses was forty days, nor eat, nor drank ;
 And forty days Elijah, without food,
 Wander'd this barren waste : the same I now :
 Why dost thou then suggest to me distrust,
 Knowing who I am, as I know who thou art ?”

Whom thus answer'd the arch-fiend, now undisguis'd.

“ 'Tis true I am that Spirit unfortunate,
 Who, leagu'd with millions more in rash revolt,
 Kept not my happy station, but was driven
 With them from bliss to the bottomless deep,
 Yet to that hideous place not so confin'd
 By rigour unconniving, but that oft,
 Leaving my dolorous prison, I enjoy
 Large liberty to round this globe of earth,
 Or range in the air ; nor from the Heaven of Heavens

Hath he excluded my resort sometimes.
 I came among the sons of God, when he Gave up into my hands Uzzean Job
 To prove him, and illustrate his high worth ;
 And, when to all his angels he propos'd
 To draw the proud king Ahab into fraud

That he might fall in Ramoth, they demurring,
 I undertook that office, and the tongues
 Of all his flattering prophets glibb'd with lies
 To his destruction, as I had in charge ;
 For what he bids I do. Though I have lost
 Much lustre of my native brightness, lost
 To be belov'd of God, I have not lost
 To love, at least contemplate and admire,
 What I see excellent in good, or fair,
 Or virtuous ; I should so have lost all sense :
 What can then be less in me than desire
 To see thee and approach thee, whom I know
 Declar'd the Son of God, to hear attent
 Thy wisdom, and behold thy God-like deeds ?
 Men generally think me much a foe
 To all mankind : why should I ? they to me
 Never did wrong or violence ; by them
 I lost not what I lost, rather by them
 I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell,
 Copartner in these regions of the world,
 If not disposer ; lend them oft my aid,
 Oft my advice by presages and signs,
 And answers, oracles, portents, and dreams,
 Whereby they may direct their future life.
 Envy they say excites me, thus to gain
 Companions of my misery and woe.
 At first it may be ; but, long since with woe
 Nearer acquainted, now I feel, by proof,
 That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
 Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load.
 Small consolation then, were man adjoin'd : [Man
 This wounds me most, (what can it less ?) than Man fall'n shall be restor'd, I never more.”

To whom our Saviour sternly thus replied.

“ Deservedly thou griev'st, compos'd of lies
 From the beginning, and in lies wilt end ;
 Who boast'st release from Hell, and leave to come
 Into the Heaven of Heavens : thou com'st indeed
 As a poor miserable captive thrall
 Comes to the place where he before had sat
 Among the prime in splendour, now depos'd,
 Ejected, emptied, gaz'd, unpitied, shunn'd,
 A spectacle of ruin, or of scorn,
 To all the host of Heaven : the happy place
 Imparts to thee no happiness, no joy,
 Rather inflames thy torment : representing
 Lost bliss, to thee no more communicable,
 So never more in Hell than when in Heaven.
 But thou art serviceable to Heaven's King.
 Wilt thou impute to obedience what thy fear
 Extorts, or pleasure to do ill excites ?
 What but thy malice mov'd thee to misdeem
 Of righteous Job, then cruelly to afflict him
 With all inflictions ? but his patience won.
 The other service was thy chosen task,
 To be a liar in four hundred mouths
 For lying is thy sustenance, thy food.
 Yet thou pretend'st to truth ; all oracles
 By thee are given, and what confess'd more true
 Among the nations ? that hath been thy craft,
 By mixing somewhat true to vent more lies.
 But what have been thy answers, what but dark,
 Ambiguous, and with double sense deluding,
 Which they who ask'd have seldom understood,
 And not well understood as good not known ?
 Who ever by consulting at thy shrine
 Return'd the wiser, or the more instruct,
 To fly or follow what concern'd him most,
 And run not sooner to his fatal snare ?
 For God hath justly given the nations up

To thy delusions ; justly, since they fell
 Idolstrous : but, when his purpose is Among them to declare his providence
 To thee not known, whence hast thou then thy truth,
 But from him, or his angels president
 In every province, who, themselves disdaining
 To approach thy temples, give thee in command
 What, to the smallest tittle, thou shalt say
 To thy adorers ? Thou, with trembling fear,
 Or like a fawning parasite, obey'st :
 Then to thyself ascrib'st the truth foretold.
 But this thy glory shall be soon retrench'd ;
 No more shalt thou by oracling abuse
 The Gentiles ; henceforth oracles are ceas'd,
 And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice
 Shalt be inquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere ;
 At least in vain, for they shall find thee mute.
 God hath now sent his living oracle
 Into the world to teach his final will,
 And sends his Spirit of Truth henceforth to dwell
 In pious hearts, an inward oracle
 To all truth requisite for men to know."
 So spake our Saviour, but the subtle fiend,
 Though inly stung with anger and disdain,
 Dissembled, and this answer smooth return'd.
 " Sharply thou hast insisted on rebuke,
 And urg'd me with hard doings, which not will
 But misery hath wrested from me. Where Easily canst thou find one miserable,
 And not enforc'd oft-times to part from truth,
 If it may stand him more in stead to lie,
 Sly and unssay, feign, flatter, or abjure ?
 But thou art plac'd above me, thou art Lord ;
 From thee I can, and must submit, endure,
 Obed, or reproof, and glad to 'scape so quit.
 Hard are the ways of Truth, and rough to walk,
 Smooth on the tongue discours'd, pleasing to the ear,
 And tuneable as sylvan pipe or song ;
 What wonder then if I delight to hear
 Her dictates from thy mouth ? Most men admire
 Virtue, who follow not her lore : permit me
 To hear thee when I come, (since no man comes,)
 And talk at least, though I despair to attain.
 Thy Father, who is holy, wise, and pure,
 Suffers the hypocrite or atheous priest
 To tread his sacred courts, and minister
 About his altar, handling holy things,
 Praying or vowing : and vouchsaf'd his voice
 To Balaam reprobate, a prophet yet
 Incur'd : disdain not such access to me."
 To whom our Saviour, with unalter'd brow :
 " Thy coming hither, though I know thy scope,
 I bid not, or forbid ; do as thou find'st
 Permission from above ; thou canst not more."
 He added not ; and Satan, bowing low
 In gray dissimulation, disappear'd
 In thin air diffus'd : for now began
 Night with her sullen wings to double-shade
 The desert ; fowls in their clay-nests were couch'd ;
 And now wild beasts came forth the woods to roam.

BOOK II.

The Argument.

The disciples of Jesus, uneasy at his long absence, reason amongst themselves concerning it. Mary now gives vent to her maternal anxiety: in the expression of which she recapitulates many circumstances respecting the birth and early life of her son. — Satan again meets his infernal council, reports the bad success of his first temptation of our blessed Lord, and calls upon them for counsel and assistance. Belial proposes the tempting of Jesus with women. Satan rebukes Belial for his dissoluteness, charging on him all the profligacy of that kind ascribed by the poets to the heathen gods, and rejects his proposal as in no respect likely to succeed. Satan then suggests other modes of temptation, particularly proposing to avail himself of the circumstance of our Lord's hungering ; and, taking a band of chosen spirits with him, returns to resume his enterprise. — Jesus hungers in the desert. — Night comes on ; the manner in which our Saviour passes the night is described. —

 Morning advances. — Satan again appears to Jesus, and, after expressing wonder that he should be so entirely neglected in the wilderness, where others had been miraculously fed, tempts him with a sumptuous banquet of the most luxurious kind. This he rejects, and the banquet vanishes. — Satan, finding our Lord not to be assailed on the ground of appetite, tempts him again by offering him riches, as the means of acquiring power : this Jesus also rejects, producing many instances of great actions performed by persons under virtuous poverty, and specifying the danger of riches, and the cares and pains inseparable from power and greatness.

MEANWHILE the new-baptiz'd, who yet remain'd
 At Jordan with the Baptist, and had seen
 Him whom they heard so late expressly call'd
 Jesus Messiah, Son of God declar'd,
 And on that high authority had believ'd,
 And with him talk'd, and with him lodg'd ; I mean
 Andrew and Simon, famous after known,
 With others, though in Holy Writ not nam'd ;
 Now missing him, their joy so lately found,
 (So lately found, and so abruptly gone,)
 Began to doubt, and doubted many days,
 And, as the days increas'd, increas'd their doubt.
 Sometimes they thought he might be only shown,
 And for a time caught up to God, as once
 Moses was in the mount and missing long,
 And the great Thisbite, who on fiery wheels
 Rode up to Heaven, yet once again to come.
 Therefore, as those young prophets then with care
 Sought lost Elijah, so in each place these Nigh to Bethabara ; in Jericho
 The city of palms, Ænon, and Salem old,
 Machærus, and each town or city wall'd
 On this side the broad lake Genezaret,
 Or in Peræa ; but return'd in vain.
 Then on the bank of Jordan, by a creek
 Where winds with reeds and osiers whispering play,
 Plain fishermen, (no greater men them call,)
 Close in a cottage low together got,
 Their unexpected loss and complaints outbreath'd.
 " Alas, from what high hope to what relapse
 Unlook'd for are we fall'n ! our eyes beheld
 Messiah certainly now come, so long
 Expected of our fathers : we have heard
 His words, his wisdom full of grace and truth ;
 Now, now, for sure, deliverance is at hand,
 The kingdom shall to Israel be restor'd ;
 Thus we rejoic'd, but soon our joy is turn'd
 Into perplexity and new amaze :

For whither is he gone, what accident
 Hath rapt him from us? will he now retire
 After appearance, and again prolong
 Our expectation? God of Israel,
 Send thy Messiah forth, the time is come;
 Behold the kings of the Earth, how they oppress
 Thy chosen; to what height their power unjust
 They have exalted, and behind them cast
 All fear of thee; arise, and vindicate
 Thy glory; free thy people from their yoke.
 But let us wait; thus far he hath perform'd,
 Sent his anointed, and to us reveal'd him,
 By his great prophet, pointed at and shown
 In public, and with him we have convers'd;
 Let us be glad of this, and all our fears
 Lay on his providence; he will not fail,
 Nor will withdraw him now, nor will recall,
 Mock us with his blest sight, then snatch him hence;
 Soon we shall see our hope, our joy, return."

Thus they, out of their complaints, new hope resume
 To find whom at the first they found unsought:
 But, to his mother Mary, when she saw
 Others return'd from baptism, not her son,
 Nor left at Jordan, tidings of him none, [pure,
 Within her breast though calm, her breast though
 Motherly cares and fears got head, and rais'd
 Some troubled thoughts, which she in sighs thus clad.

"O, what avails me now that honour high
 To have conceiv'd of God, or that salute,
 'Hail highly favour'd among women blest!'
 While I to sorrows am no less advanc'd,
 And fears as eminent, above the lot
 Of other women, by the birth I bore;
 In such a season born, when scarce a shed
 Could be obtain'd to shelter him or me
 From the bleak air; a stable was our warmth,
 A manger his; yet soon enforc'd to fly,
 Thence into Egypt, till the murderous king
 Were dead, who sought his life, and missing fill'd
 With infant blood the streets of Bethlehem;
 From Egypt home return'd, in Nazareth
 Hath been our dwelling many years; his life
 Private, unactive, calm, contemplative,
 Little suspicious to any king; but now
 Full grown to man, acknowledg'd, as I hear,
 By John the Baptist, and in public shown,
 Son own'd from Heaven by his Father's voice,
 I look'd for some great change; to honour? no,
 But trouble, as old Simeon plain foretold,
 That to the fall and rising he should be
 Of many in Israel, and to a sign
 Spoken against, that through my very soul
 A sword shall pierce: this is my favour'd lot,
 My exaltation to afflictions high;
 Afflicted I may be, it seems, and blest;
 I will not argue that, nor will repine.
 But where delays he now? some great intent
 Conceals him: when twelve years he scarce had seen,

I lost him, but so found, as well I saw
 He could not lose himself, but went about
 His Father's business; what he meant I mus'd,
 Since understand; much more his absence now
 Thus long to some great purpose he obscures.
 But I to wait with patience am inur'd;
 My heart hath been a store-house long of things
 And sayings laid up, portending strange events."

Thus Mary, pondering oft, and oft to mind
 Recalling what remarkably had pass'd
 Since first her salutation heard, with thoughts

Meekly compos'd awaited the fulfilling:
 The while her son, tracing the desert wild,
 Sole, but with holiest meditations fed,
 Into himself descended, and at once
 All his great work to come before him set;
 How to begin, how to accomplish best
 His end of being on Earth, and mission high:
 For Satan, with sly preface to return,
 Had left him vacant, and with speed was gone
 Up to the middle region of thick air,
 Where all his potentates in council sat;
 There, without sign of boast, or sign of joy,
 Solicitous and blank, he thus began. [thrones;

"Princes, Heaven's ancient sons, ethereal
 Demonian spirits now, from the element
 Each of his reign allotted, rightlier call'd
 Powers of fire, air, water, and earth beneath,
 (So may we hold our place and these mild seats
 Without new trouble,) such an enemy
 Is risen to invade us, who no less
 Threatens than our expulsion down to Hell;
 I, as I undertook, and with the vote
 Consenting in full frequency was impower'd,
 Have found him, view'd him, tasted him; but find
 Far other labour to be undergone
 Than when I dealt with Adam, first of men,
 Though Adam by his wife's allurements fell,
 However to this man inferiour far;
 If he be man by mother's side, at least
 With more than human gifts from Heaven adorn'd
 Perfections absolute, graces divine,
 And amplitude of mind to greatest deeds.
 Therefore I am return'd, lest confidence
 Of my success with Eve in Paradise
 Deceive ye to persuasion over-sure
 Of like succeeding here: I summon all
 Rather to be in readiness, with hand
 Or counsel to assist; lest I, who erst
 Thought none my equal, now be over-match'd."

So spake the old serpent, doubting; and from a
 With clamour was assured their utmost aid
 At his command: when from amidst them rose
 Belial, the dissolutes spirit that fell,
 The sensuallest, and, after Asmodai,
 The fleshliest incubus; and thus advis'd.

"Set women in his eye, and in his walk,
 Among daughters of men the fairest found:
 Many are in each region passing fair
 As the noon sky: more like to goddesses
 Than mortal creatures, graceful and discreet,
 Expert in amorous arts, enchanting tongues
 Persuasive, virgin majesty with mild
 And sweet allay'd, yet terrible to approach,
 Skill'd to retire, and, in retiring, draw
 Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets.
 Such object hath the power to soften and tame
 Severest temper, smooth the rugged'st brow
 Enerve, and with voluptuous hope dissolve,
 Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
 At will the manliest, resolute breast,
 As the magnetic hardest iron draws.
 Women, when nothing else, beguil'd the heart
 Of wisest Solomon, and made him build,
 And made him bow, to the gods of his wives."

To whom quick answer Satan thus return'd.
 "Belial, in much uneven scale thou weigh'st
 All others by thyself; because of old
 Thou thyself doat'st on womankind, admiring
 Their shape, their colour, and attractive grace,
 None are, thou think'st, but taken with such toys

Before the flood thou with thy lusty crew,
 False titled sons of God, roaming the Earth,
 Cast wanton eyes on the daughters of men,
 And coupled with them, and begot a race.
 Have we not seen, or by relation heard,
 In courts and regal chambers how thou lurk'st,
 In wood or grove, by mossy fountain side,
 In valley or green meadow, to way-lay
 Some beauty rare, Calisto, Clymene,
 Daphne, or Semele, Antiopa,
 Or Aymone, Syrinx, many more
 Too long, then lay'st thy scapes on names ador'd,
 Apollo, Neptune, Jupiter, or Pan,
 Satyr, or Faun, or Sylvan? But these haunts
 Delight not all; among the sons of men,
 How many have with a smile made small account
 Of Beauty and her lures, easily scorn'd
 All her assaults, on worthier things intent!
 Remember that Pellean conqueror,
 A youth, how all the beauties of the East
 He slightly view'd, and slightly overpass'd;
 How he, surnam'd of Africa, dismiss'd,
 In his prime youth, the fair Iberian maid.
 For Solomon, he liv'd at ease, and full
 Of honour, wealth, high fare, aim'd not beyond
 Higher design than to enjoy his state;
 Thence to the bait of women lay expos'd:
 But he, whom we attempt, is wiser far
 Than Solomon, of more exalted mind,
 Made and set wholly on the accomplishment
 Of greatest things. What woman will you find,
 Though of this age the wonder and the fame,
 On whom his leisure will vouchsafe an eye
 Of fond desire? Or should she, confident,
 As sitting queen ador'd on Beauty's throne,
 Descend with all her winning charms begirt
 To enamour, as the zone of Venus once
 Wrought that effect on Jove, so fables tell;
 How would one look from his majestic brow,
 Seated as on the top of Virtue's hill,
 Discountenance her despis'd, and put to rout
 All her array; her female pride deject,
 Or turn to reverent awe! for Beauty stands
 In the admiration only of weak minds
 Let captive; cease to admire, and all her plumes
 Fall flat, and shrink into a trivial toy,
 At every sudden slighting quite abash'd.
 Therefore with manlier objects we must try
 His constancy; with such as have more show
 Of worth, of honour, glory, and popular praise,
 Luck, whereon greatest men have ofttest wreck'd;
 Or that which only seems to satisfy
 Lawful desires of nature, not beyond;
 And now I know he hungers, where no food
 Is to be found, in the wide wilderness:
 The rest commit to me; I shall let pass
 No advantage, and his strength as oft assay."
 He ceas'd, and heard their grant in loud acclaim;
 Then forthwith to him takes a chosen band
 Of spirits, likeliest to himself in guile,
 To be at hand, and at his beck appear,
 If cause were to unfold some active scene
 Of various persons, each to know his part:
 Then to the desert takes with these his flight;
 Where, still from shade to shade, the Son of God
 After forty days fasting had remain'd,
 Now hungering first, and to himself thus said.
 "Where will this end? four times ten days I've pass'd
 Wandering this woody maze, and human food

Nor tasted, nor had appetite; that fast
 To virtue I impute not, or count part
 Of what I suffer here; if nature need not,
 Or God support nature without repast
 Though needing, what praise is it to endure?
 But now I feel I hunger, which declares
 Nature hath need of what she asks; yet God
 Can satisfy that need some other way,
 Though hunger still remain: so it remain
 Without this body's wasting, I content me,
 And from the sting of famine fear no harm;
 Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts, that feed
 Me hungering more to do my Father's will."

It was the hour of night, when thus the Son
 Commun'd in silent walk, then laid him down
 Under the hospitable covert nigh
 Of trees thick interwoven; there he slept,
 And dream'd, as appetite is wont to dream,
 Of meats and drinks, nature's refreshment sweet:
 Him thought, he by the brook of Cherith stood,
 And saw the ravens with their horny beaks
 Food to Elijah bringing, even and morn, [brought:
 Though ravenous, taught to abstain from what they
 He saw the prophet also, how he fled
 Into the desert, and how there he slept
 Under a juniper; then how awak'd
 He found his supper on the coals prepar'd,
 And by the angel was bid rise and eat,
 And eat the second time after repose,
 The strength whereof suffic'd him forty days:
 Sometimes that with Elijah he partook,
 Or as a guest with Daniel at his pulse.
 Thus wore out night; and now the herald lark
 Left his ground-nest, high towering to descry
 The Morn's approach, and greet her with his song:
 As lightly from his grassy couch up rose
 Our Saviour, and found all was but a dream;
 Fasting he went to sleep, and fasting wak'd.
 Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd,
 From whose high top to ken the prospect round,
 If cottage were in view, sheep-cote, or herd;
 But cottage, herd, or sheep-cote, none he saw;
 Only in a bottom saw a pleasant grove,
 With chant of tuneful birds resounding loud:
 Thither he bent his way, determin'd there
 To rest at noon, and enter'd soon the shade
 High-roof'd, and walks beneath, and alleys brown,
 That opened in the midst a woody scene;
 Nature's own work it seem'd (Nature taught Art)
 And, to a superstitious eye, the haunt [round,
 Of wood-gods and wood-nymphs: he view'd it
 When suddenly a man before him stood;
 Not rustic as before, but seemlier clad,
 As one in city, or court, or palace bred,
 And with fair speech these words to him address'd.
 "With granted leave officious I return,
 But much more wonder that the Son of God
 In this wild solitude so long should bide,
 Of all things destitute; and, well I know
 Not without hunger. Others of some note,
 As story tells, have trod this wilderness;
 The fugitive bond-woman, with her son
 Out-cast Nebaioth, yet found here relief
 By a providing angel; all the race
 Of Israel here had famish'd, had not God
 Rain'd from Heaven manna; and that prophet bold,
 Native of Thebez, wandering here was fed
 Twice by a voice inviting him to eat:
 Of thee these forty days none hath regard,
 Forty and more deserted here indeed."

To whom thus Jesus. "What conclud'st thou hence?

They all had need; I, as thou seest, have none."

"How hast thou hunger then?" Satan replied.

"Tell me, if food were now before thee set, Would'st thou not eat?" — "Thereafter as I like The giver," answer'd Jesus. "Why should that Cause thy refusal?" said the subtle fiend.

"Hast thou not right to all created things? Owe not all creatures by just right to thee Duty and service, nor to stay till bid, But tender all their power? Nor mention I Meats by the law unclean, or offer'd first To idols, those young Daniel could refuse; Nor proffer'd by an enemy, though who Would scruple that, with want oppress'd? Behold, Nature asham'd, or, better to express, Troubled, that thou should'st hunger, hath purvey'd From all the elements her choicest store, To treat thee, as beseems, and as her Lord, With honour: only deign to sit and eat."

He spake no dream; for, as his words had end, Our Saviour lifting up his eyes beheld, In ample space under the broadest shade, A table richly spread, in regal mode, With dishes pil'd, and meats of noblest sort And savour; beasts of chase, or fowl of game, In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd, Gris-amber-steam'd; all fish, from sea or shore, Freshet or purling brook, of shell or fin, And exquisitest name, for which was drain'd Pontus, and Lucrine bay, and Afric coast. (Alas, how simply, to these cates compar'd, Was that crude apple that diverted Eve!) And at a stately side-board, by the wine That fragrant smell diffus'd, in order stood Tall stripling youths rich clad, of fairer hue Than Ganymed or Hylas; distant more Under the trees now tripp'd, now solemn stood, Nymphs of Diana's train, and Naiades With fruits and flowers from Amalthea's horn, And ladies of the Hesperides, that seem'd Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabled since Of faery damsels, met in forest wide By knights of Logres, or of Lyones, Lancelot, or Pelleas, or Pellenore. And all the while harmonious airs were heard Of chiming strings, or charming pipes; and winds Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells. Such was the splendour; and the tempter now His invitation earnestly renew'd.

"What doubts the Son of God to sit and eat? These are not fruits forbidd'n; no interdict Defends the touching of these viands pure; Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil, But life preserves, destroys life's enemy, Hunger, with sweet restorative delight. All these are spirits of air, and woods, and springs, Thy gentle ministers, who come to pay Thee homage, and acknowledge thee their Lord: What doubt'st thou, Son of God? Sit down and eat."

To whom thus Jesus temperately replied.

"Said'st thou not that to all things I had right? And who withholds my power that right to use? Shall I receive by gift what of my own, When and where likes me best, I can command? I can at will, doubt not, as soon as thou, Command a table in this wilderness, And call swift flights of angels ministrant

Array'd in glory on my cup to attend:

Why should'st thou then obtrude this diligence, In vain, where no acceptance it can find? And with my hunger what hast thou to do? Thy pompous delicacies I contemn, And count thy specious gifts no gifts, but guiles."

To whom thus answer'd Satan malecontent.

"That I have also power to give, thou seest; If of that power I bring thee voluntary What I might have bestow'd on whom I pleas'd, And rather opportunely in this place Chose to impart to thy apparent need, Why should'st thou not accept it? but I see What I can do or offer is suspect: Of these things others quickly will dispose, [that Whose pains have earn'd the far-fet spoil." With Both table and provision vanish'd quite With sound of harpies' wings and talons heard: Only the importune tempter still remain'd, And with these words his temptation pursued.

"By hunger, that each other creature tames, Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd; Thy temperance invincible besides, For no allurement yields to appetite; And all thy heart is set on high designs, High actions: but wherewith to be achiev'd? Great acts require great means of enterprise; Thou art unknown, unfriended, low of birth, A carpenter thy father known, thyself Bred up in poverty and straits at home, Lost in a desert here and hunger-bit: Which way, or from what hope, dost thou aspire To greatness? whence authority deriv'st? What followers, what retinue canst thou gain, Or at thy heels the dizzy multitude, Longer than thou canst feed them on thy cost? Money brings honour, friends, conquest, and realms: What rais'd Antipater the Edomite, And his son Herod plac'd on Judah's throne, Thy throne, but gold that got him puissant friends? Therefore, if at great things thou would'st arrive, Get riches first, get wealth, and treasure heap, Not difficult, if thou hearken to me: Riches are mine, fortune is in my hand; They whom I favour thrive in wealth amain, While virtue, valour, wisdom, sit in want."

To whom thus Jesus patiently replied.

"Yet wealth, without these three, is impotent To gain dominion, or to keep it gain'd. Witness those ancient empires of the Earth, In height of all their flowing wealth dissolv'd: But men endued with these have oft attain'd In lowest poverty to highest deeds; Gideon, and Jephtha, and the shepherd lad, Whose offspring on the throne of Judah sat So many ages, and shall yet regain That seat, and reign in Israel without end. Among the Heathen, (for throughout the world To me is not unknown what hath been done Worthy of memorial,) canst thou not remember Quintius, Fabricius, Curius, Regulus? For I esteem those names of men so poor, Who could do mighty things, and could contemn Riches, though offer'd from the hand of kings. And what in me seems wanting, but that I May also in this poverty as soon Accomplish what they did, perhaps and more? Extol not riches then, the toil of fools, The wise man's cumbrance, if not snare; more apt To slacken Virtue, and abate her edge,

Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise.
 What if with like aversion I reject
 Riches and realms ? yet not for that a crown,
 Golden in show, is but a wreath of thorns,
 Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and sleepless nights,
 To him who wears the regal diadem,
 When on his shoulders each man's burden lies ;
 For therein stands the office of a king,
 His honour, virtue, merit, and chief praise,
 That for the public all this weight he bears.
 Yet he, who reigns within himself, and rules
 Passions, desires, and fears, is more a king ;
 Which every wise and virtuous man attains ;
 And who attains not, ill aspires to rule
 Cities of men, or headstrong multitudes,
 Subject himself to anarchy within,
 Or lawless passions in him, which he serves.
 But to guide nations in the way of truth
 By saving doctrine, and from error lead
 To know, and knowing worship God aright,
 Is yet more kingly ; this attracts the soul,
 Governs the inner man, the nobler part ;
 That other o'er the body only reigns,
 And oft by force, which, to a generous mind,
 So reigning, can be no sincere delight.
 Besides, to give a kingdom hath been thought
 Greater and nobler done, and to lay down
 Far more magnanimous, than to assume.
 Riches are needless then, both for themselves,
 And for thy reason why they should be sought,
 To gain a sceptre, oft best better miss'd."

Book III.

The Argument.

Satan, in a speech of much flattering commendation, endeavours to awaken in Jesus a passion for glory, by particularising various instances of conquests achieved, and great actions performed, by persons at an early period of life. Our Lord replies, by showing the vanity of worldly fame, and the improper means by which it is generally attained ; and contrasts with it the true glory of religious patience and virtuous wisdom, as exemplified in the character of Job. Satan justifies the love of glory from the example of God himself, who requires it from all his creatures. Jesus detects the fallacy of this argument, by showing that, as goodness is the true ground on which glory is due to the great Creator of all things, sinful man can have no right whatever to it. — Satan then urges our Lord respecting his claim to the throne of David ; he tells him that the kingdom of Judea, being at that time a province of Rome, cannot be got possession of without much personal exertion on his part, and presses him to lose no time in beginning to reign. Jesus refers him to the time allotted for this, as for all other things ; and, after intimating somewhat respecting his own previous sufferings, asks Satan, why he should be so solicitous for the exaltation of one, whose rising was destined to be his fall. Satan replies, that his own desperate state, by excluding all hope, leaves little room for fear ; and that, as his own punishment was equally doomed, he is not interested in preventing the reign of one, from whose apparent benevolence he might rather hope for some interference in his favour.

— Satan still pursues his former incitements ; and, supposing that the seeming reluctance of Jesus to be thus advanced might arise from his being unacquainted with the world and its glories, conveys him to the summit of a high mountain, and from thence shows him most of the kingdoms of Asia, particularly pointing out to his notice some extraordinary military preparations of the Parthians to resist the incursions of the Scythians. He then informs our Lord, that he showed him this purposely that he might see how necessary military exertions are to retain the possession of kingdoms, as well as to subdue them at first, and advises him to consider how impossible it was to maintain Judea against two such powerful neighbours as the Romans and Parthians, and how necessary it would be to form an alliance with one or other of them. At the same time he recommends, and engages to secure to him, that of the Parthians ; and tells him that by this means his power will be defended from any thing that Rome or Caesar might attempt against it, and that he will be able to extend his glory wide, and especially to accomplish, what was particularly necessary to make the throne of Judea really the throne of David, the deliverance and restoration of the ten tribes, still in a state of captivity. Jesus, having briefly noticed the vanity of military efforts and the weakness of the arm of flesh, says, that when the time comes for his ascending his allotted throne he shall not be slack : he remarks on Satan's extraordinary zeal for the deliverance of the Israelites, to whom he had always showed himself an enemy, and declares their servitude to be the consequence of their idolatry ; but adds, that at a future time it may perhaps please God to recall them, and restore them to their liberty and native land.

So spake the Son of God ; and Satan stood
 A while, as mute, confounded what to say
 What to reply, confuted, and convinc'd
 Of his weak arguing and fallacious drift ;
 At length, collecting all his serpent wiles,
 With soothing words renew'd, him thus accosts.
 " I see thou know'st what is of use to know,
 What best to say canst say, to do canst do ;
 Thy actions to thy words accord, thy words
 To thy large heart give utterance due, thy heart
 Contains of good, wise, just, the perfect shape.
 Should kings and nations from thy mouth consult,
 Thy counsel would be as the oracle
 Urim and Thummim, those oraculous gems
 On Aaron's breast ; or tongue of seers old,
 Infallible : or wert thou sought to deeds
 That might require the array of war, thy skill
 Of conduct would be such, that all the world
 Could not sustain thy prowess, or subsist
 In battle, though against thy few in arms.
 These God-like virtues, wherefore dost thou hide,
 Affecting private life, or more obscure
 In savage wilderness ? wherefore deprive
 All Earth her wonder at thy acts, thyself
 The fame and glory, glory the reward
 That sole excites to high attempts, the flame
 Of most erected spirits, most temper'd pure
 Ethereal, who all pleasures else despise,
 All treasures and all gain esteem as dross,
 And dignities and powers all but the highest ?
 Thy years are ripe, and over-ripe ; the son
 Of Macedonian Philip had ere these

Won Asia, and the throne of Cyrus held
At his dispose ; young Scipio had brought down
The Carthaginian pride ; young Pompey quell'd
The Pontic king, and in triumph had rode.
Yet years, and to ripe years judgment mature,
Quench not the thirst of glory, but augment.
Great Julius, whom now all the world admires,
The more he grew in years, the more inflam'd
With glory, wept that he had liv'd so long
Inglorious : but thou yet art not too late."

To whom our Saviour calmly thus replied.
" Thou neither dost persuade me to seek wealth
For empire's sake, nor empire to affect
For glory's sake, by all thy argument.
For what is glory but the blaze of fame,
The people's praise, if always praise unmix'd ?
And what the people but a herd confus'd,
A miscellaneous rabble, who extol
Things vulgar, and well weigh'd, scarce worth the praise ?

They praise, and they admire, they know not what,
And know not whom, but as one leads the other ;
And what delight to be by such extoll'd,
To live upon their tongues, and be their talk,
Of whom to be disprais'd were no small praise ?
His lot who dares be singularly good.

The intelligent among them and the wise
Are few, and glory scarce of few is rais'd.
This is true glory and renown, when God,
Looking on the Earth, with approbation marks
The just man, and divulges him through Heaven
To all his angels, who with true applause
Recount his praises : thus he did to Job,
When to extend his fame through Heaven and Earth,
As thou to thy reproach may'st well remember,
He ask'd thee, ' Hast thou seen my servant Job ?'
Famous he was in Heaven, on Earth less known ;
Where glory is false glory, attributed
To things not glorious, men not worthy of fame.
They err, who count it glorious to subdue
By conquest far and wide, to over-run
Large countries, and in field great battles win,
Great cities by assault : what do these worthies,
But rob and spoil, burn, slaughter, and enslave
Peaceable nations, neighbouring, or remote,
Made captive, yet deserving freedom more
Than those their conquerors, who leave behind
Nothing but ruin wheresoe'er they rove,
And all the flourishing works of peace destroy ;
Then swell with pride, and must be titled Gods,
Great Benefactors of mankind, Deliverers,
Worshipt with temple, priest, and sacrifice ?
One is the son of Jove, of Mars the other ;
Till conqueror Death discover them scarce men,
Rolling in brutish vices, and deform'd,
Violent or shameful death their due reward.
But if there be in glory aught of good,
It may by means far different be attain'd,
Without ambition, war, or violence ;
By deeds of peace, by wisdom eminent,
By patience, temperance : I mention still
Him, whom thy wrongs, with saintly patience borne,
Made famous in a land and times obscure ;
Who names not now with honour patient Job ?
Poor Socrates, (who next more memorable ?)
By what he taught, and suffer'd for so doing,
For truth's sake suffering death, unjust, lives now
Equal in fame to proudest conquerors.
Yet if for fame and glory aught be done,
Aught suffer'd ; if young African for fame
His wasted country freed from Punic rage ;

The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least,
And loses, though but verbal, his reward.
Shall I seek glory then, as vain men seek,
Oft not deserv'd ? I seek not mine, but his
Who sent me ; and thereby witness whence I am."

To whom the tempter murmuring thus replied.
" Think not so slight of glory ; therein least
Resembling thy great Father : he seeks glory,
And for his glory all things made, all things
Orders and governs ; nor content in Heaven
By all his angels glorified, requires
Glory from men, from all men, good or bad,
Wise or unwise, no difference, no exemption ;
Above all sacrifice, or hallow'd gift,
Glory he requires, and glory he receives,
Promiscuous from all nations, Jew or Greek,
Or barbarous, nor exception hath declar'd ;
From us, his foes pronounc'd, glory he exacts."

To whom our Saviour fervently replied.
" And reason ; since his word all things produc'd
Though chiefly not for glory as prime end,
But to show forth his goodness, and impart
His good communicable to every soul
Freely ; of whom what could he less expect
Than glory and benediction, that is, thanks,
The slightest, easiest, readiest recompense
From them who could return him nothing else,
And, not returning that, would likeliest render
Contempt instead, dishonour, obloquy ?
Hard recompense, unsuitable return
For so much good, so much beneficence !
But why should man seek glory, who of his own
Hath nothing, and to whom nothing belongs,
But condemnation, ignominy, and shame ?
Who for so many benefits receiv'd,
Turn'd recreant to God, ingrate and false,
And so of all true good himself despoil'd ;
Yet, sacrilegious, to himself would take
That which to God alone of right belongs :
Yet so much bounty is in God, such grace,
That who advance his glory, not their own,
Them he himself to glory will advance."

So spake the Son of God ; and here again
Satan had not to answer, but stood struck
With guilt of his own sin ; for he himself,
Insatiable of glory, had lost all ;
Yet of another plea bethought him soon.

" Of glory, as thou wilt," said he, " so deem ;
Worth or not worth the seeking, let it pass.
But to a kingdom thou art born, ordain'd
To sit upon thy father David's throne,
By mother's side thy father ; though thy right
Be now in powerful hands, that will not part
Easily from possession won with arms :
Judæa now and all the Promis'd Land,
Reduc'd a province under Roman yoke,
Obeys Tiberius ; nor is always rul'd
With temperate sway ; oft have they violated
The temple, oft the law, with foul affronts,
Abominations rather, as did once
Antiochus : and think'st thou to regain
Thy right, by sitting still, or thus retiring ?
So did not Maccabeus : he indeed
Retir'd unto the desert, but with arms ;
And o'er a mighty king so oft prevail'd,
That by strong hand his family obtain'd, [usurp'd
Though priests, the crown, and David's throne
With Modin and her suburbs once content.
If kingdom move thee not, let move thee zeal
And duty ; and zeal and duty are not slow,
But on occasion's forelock watchful wait :

They themselves rather are occasion best ;
Zeal of thy father's house, duty to free
Thy country from her heathen servitude.
So shalt thou best fulfil, best verify
The prophets old, who sung thy endless reign ;
The happier reign, the sooner it begins :
Reign then ; what canst thou better do the while ?"

To whom our Saviour answer thus return'd.
" All things are best fulfill'd in their due time ;
And time there is for all things, Truth hath said.
If of my reign prophetic writ hath told,
That it shall never end, so, when begin,
The Father in his purpose hath decreed ;
He in whose hand all times and seasons roll.
What if he hath decreed that I shall first
Be tried in humble state, and things adverse,
By tribulations, injuries, insults,
Contempts, and scorns, and snares, and violence,
Suffering, abstaining, quietly expecting,
Without distrust or doubt, that he may know
What I can suffer, how obey ? Who best
Can suffer, best can do ; best reign, who first
Well hath obey'd ; just trial, ere I merit
My exaltation without change or end.
But what concerns it thee, when I begin
My everlasting kingdom ? Why art thou
Solicitous ? What moves thy inquisition ?
Know'st thou not that my rising is thy fall,
And my promotion will be thy destruction ?"

To whom the tempter, inly rack'd, replied.
" Let that come when it comes ; all hope is lost
Of my reception into grace : what worse ?
For where no hope is left, is left no fear :
If there be worse, the expectation more
Of worse torments me than the feeling can.
I would be at the worst : worst is my port,
My harbour, and my ultimate repose ;
The end I would attain, my final good.
My error was my error, and my crime
My crime ; whatever, for itself condemn'd ;
And will alike be punish'd, whether thou
Reign, or reign not ; though to that gentle brow
Willingly could I fly, and hope thy reign,
From that placid aspect and meek regard,
Rather than aggravate my evil state,
Would stand between me and thy Father's ire,
(Whose ire I dread more than the fire of Hell,)
A shelter, and a kind of shading cool
Interposition, as a summer's cloud.
If I then to the worst that can be haste,
Why move thy feet so slow to what is best,
Happiest, both to thyself and all the world,
That thou, who worthiest art, should'st be their king ?
Perhaps thou linger'st, in deep thoughts detain'd
Of the enterprise so hazardous and high ;
No wonder ; for, though in thee be united
What of perfection can in man be found,
Or human nature can receive, consider,
Thy life hath yet been private, most part spent
At home, scarce view'd the Galilean towns,
And once a year Jerusalem, few days' [serve ?
Short sojourn ; and what thence could'st thou ob-
The world thou hadst not seen, much less her glory,
Empires, and monarchs, and their radiant courts,
Best school of best experience, quickest insight
In all things that to greatest actions lead
The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Timorous and loth ; with novice modesty,
As he who, seeking asses, found a kingdom,)
Inexperienced, unhardy, unadventurous :

But I will bring thee where thou soon shalt quit
Those rudiments, and see before thine eyes
The monarchies of the Earth, their pomp and state ;
Sufficient introduction to inform
Thee, of thyself so apt, in regal arts,
And regal mysteries ; that thou may'st know
How their best opposition to withstand." [took

With that, (such power was given him then,) he
The Son of God up to a mountain high.
It was a mountain at whose verdant feet
A spacious plain, outstretch'd in circuit wide,
Lay pleasant ; from his side two rivers flow'd,
The one winding, the other straight, and left between
Fair champaign with less rivers interven'd,
Then meeting join'd their tribute to the sea :
Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil, and wine ; [hills ;
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the Huge cities and high-tower'd, that well might seem
The seats of mightiest monarchs ; and so large
The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert, fountainless and dry.
To this high mountain-top the tempter brought
Our Saviour, and new train of words began.

" Well have we speeded, and o'er hill and dale,
Forest and field and flood, temples and towers,
Cut shorter many a league ; here thou behold'st
Assyria, and her empire's ancient bounds,
Araxes and the Caspian lake ; thence on
As far as Indus east, Euphrates west,
And oft beyond : to south the Persian bay,
And, inaccessible, the Arabian drought :
Here Nineveh, of length within her wall
Several days' journey, built by Ninus old,
Of that first golden monarchy the seat,
And seat of Salmanassar, whose success
Israel in long captivity still mourns ;
There Babylon, the wonder of all tongues,
As ancient, but rebuilt by him who twice
Judah and all thy father David's house
Led captive, and Jerusalem laid waste,
Till Cyrus set them free ; Persepolis,
His city, there thou seest, and Bactra there ;
Ecbatana her structure vast there shows,
And Hecatompylos her hundred gates ;
There Susa by Choaspes, amber stream,
The drink of none but kings : of later fame,
Built by Emathian or by Parthian hands,
The great Seleucia, Nisibis, and there
Artaxata, Teredon, Ctesiphon,
Turning with easy eye, thou may'st behold.
All these the Parthian (now some ages past
By great Arsaces led, who founded first
That empire) under his dominion holds,
From the luxurious kings of Antioch won.
And just in time thou com'st to have a view
Of his great power ; for now the Parthian king
In Ctesiphon hath gather'd all his host
Against the Scythian, whose incursions wild
Have wasted Sogdiana ; to her aid
He marches now in haste ; see, though from far,
His thousands, in what martial equipage
They issue forth, steel bows and shafts their arms,
Of equal dread in flight, or in pursuit ;
All horsemen, in which fight they most excel ;
See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs, and wedges, and half-moons, and wings."

He look'd, and saw what numbers numberless
The city gates out-pour'd, light-armed troops,
In coats of mail and military pride ;
In mail their horses clad, yet fleet and strong,

Prancing their riders bore, the flower and choice
Of many provinces from bound to bound ;
From Arachosia, from Candaor east,
And Margiana to the Hyrcanian cliffs
Of Caucasus, and dark Iberian dales ;
From Atropatia and the neighbouring plains
Of Adiabene, Media, and the south
Of Susiana, to Balsara's haven.

He saw them in their forms of battle rang'd, [shot
How quick they wheel'd, and flying behind them
Sharp sleet of arrowy showers against the face
Of their pursuers, and overcame by flight ;
The field all iron cast a gleaming brown :
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn
Cuirassiers all in steel for standing fight,
Chariots, or elephants indors'd with towers
Of archers ; nor of labouring pioneers
A multitude, with spades and axes arm'd
To lay hills plain, fell woods, or valleys fill,
Or where plain was raise hill, or overlay
With bridges rivers proud, as with a yoke ;
Mules after these, camels and dromedaries,
And waggons, fraught with utensils of war.
Such forces met not, nor so wide a camp, :
When Agrican with all his northern powers
Besieg'd Albracca, as romances tell, :
The city of Gallaphrone, from whence to win
The fairest of her sex Angelica,
His daughter, sought by many prowest knights.
Both Paynim, and the peers of Charlemain.
Such and so numerous was their chivalry :
At sight whereof the fiend yet more presum'd,
And to our Saviour thus his words renew'd.

" That thou may'st know I seek not to engage Thy virtue, and not every way secure
On no slight grounds thy safety ; hear and mark,
To what end I have brought thee hither, and shown
All this fair sight : thy kingdom, though foretold
By prophet or by angel, unless thou
Endeavour, as thy father David did,
Thou never shalt obtain ; prediction still
In all things, and all men, supposes means ;
Without means us'd, what it predicts revokes.
But, say thou wert possess'd of David's throne,
By free consent of all, none opposite,
Samaritan or Jew : how could'st thou hope
Long to enjoy it, quiet and secure,
Between two such enclosing enemies,
Roman and Parthian ? Therefore one of these Thou must make sure thy own ; the Parthian first
By my advice, as nearer, and of late
Found able by invasion to annoy
Thy country, and captive lead away her kings,
Antigonus and old Hyrcanus, bound,
Maugre the Roman : it shall be my task
To render thee the Parthian at dispose,
Choose which thou wilt, by conquest or by league :
By him thou shalt regain, without him not,
That which alone can truly re-install thee
In David's royal seat, his true successor,
Deliverance of thy brethren, those ten tribes,
Whose offspring in his territory yet serve,
In Habor, and among the Medes dispers'd :
Ten sons of Jacob, two of Joseph, lost
Thus long from Israel, serving, as of old
Their fathers in the land of Egypt serv'd,
This offer sets before thee to deliver.
These if from servitude thou shalt restore
To their inheritance, then, nor till then,
Thou on the throne of David in full glory,

From Egypt to Euphrates, and beyond,
Shalt reign, and Rome or Caesar not need fear."

To whom our Saviour answer'd thus, unmov'd
" Much ostentation vain of fleshy arm
And fragile arms, much instrument of war,
Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,
Before mine eyes thou hast set ; and in my ear,
Vented much policy, and projects deep
Of enemies, of aids, battles and leagues,
Plausible to the world, to me worth nought.
Means I must use, thou say'st, prediction
Will unpredict, and fail me of the throne :
My time, I told thee, (and that time for thee
Were better farthest off,) is not yet come :
When that comes, think not thou to find me slack
On my part aught endeavouring, or to need
Thy politic maxims, or that cumbersome
Luggage of war there shown me, argument
Of human weakness rather than of strength.
My brethren, as thou call'st them, those ten tribes
I must deliver, if I mean to reign
David's true heir, and his full sceptre sway
To just extent over all Israel's sons.
But whence to thee this zeal ? Where was it then
For Israel, or for David, or his throne,
When thou stood'st up his tempter to the pride
Of numbering Israël, which cost the lives
Of threescore and ten thousand Israelites
By three days' pestilence ? Such was thy zeal
To Israel then ; the same that now to me !
As for those captive tribes, themselves were they
Who wrought their own captivity, fell off
From God to worship calves, the deities
Of Egypt, Baal next and Ashtaroth,
And all the idolatries of heathen round,
Besides their other worse than heathenish crimes ;
Nor in the land of their captivity
Humbled themselves, or penitent besought
The God of their forefathers ; but so died
Impenitent, and left a race behind
Like to themselves, distinguishable scarce
From Gentiles, but by circumcision vain ;
And God with idols in their worship join'd.
Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who, freed, as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumbled, unrepentant, unreform'd,
Headlong would follow ; and to their gods perhaps
Of Bethel and of Dan ? No ; let them serve
Their enemies, who serve idols with God.
Yet he at length, (time to himself best known,)
Remembering Abraham, by some wonderful call
May bring them back, repentant and sincere,
And at their passing cleave the Assyrian flood,
While to their native land with joy they haste ;
As the Red Sea and Jordan once he cleft,
When to the Promis'd Land their fathers pass'd ;
To his due time and providence I leave them."

So spake Israel's true king, and to the fiend
Made answer meet, that made void his wiles.
So fares it, when with truth falsehood contends.

Book IV.

The Argument.

Satan, persisting in the temptation of our Lord shows him imperial Rome in its greatest pomp and splendour, as a power which he probably would prefer before that of the Parthians ; and tells him that he might with the greatest ease expel Tiberius, restore the Romans to their liberty, and make himself master not only of the Roman Empire, but by so doing of the whole world, and inclusively of the throne of David. Our Lord, in reply, expresses his contempt of grandeur and worldly power, notices the luxury, vanity, and profligacy of the Romans, declaring how little they merited to be restored to that liberty, which they had lost by their misconduct, and briefly refers to the greatness of his own future kingdom. Satan, now desperate, to enhance the value of his proffered gifts, professes that the only terms, on which he will bestow them, are our Saviour's falling down and worshipping him. Our Lord expresses a firm but temperate indignation at such a proposition, and rebukes the tempter by the title of "Satan for ever damned." Satan, abashed, attempts to justify himself: he then assumes a new ground of temptation, and proposing to Jesus the intellectual gratifications of wisdom and knowledge, points out to him the celebrated seat of ancient learning, Athens, its schools, and other various resorts of learned teachers and their disciples; accompanying the view with a highly-finished panegyric on the Grecian musicians, poets, orators and philosophers of the different sects. Jesus replies, by showing the vanity and insufficiency of the boasted heathen philosophy; and refers to the music, poetry, eloquence and didactic policy of the Greeks, those of the inspired Hebrew writers. Satan, irritated at the failure of all his attempts, upbraids the indignation of our Saviour in rejecting his offers; and, having in ridicule of his expected kingdom, foretold the sufferings that our Lord was to undergo, carries him back into the wilderness, and leaves him there. Night comes on: Satan raises a tremendous storm, and attempts further to alarm Jesus with frightful thunders, and terrific threatening spectres; which, however, have no effect upon him. A calm, bright, beautiful morning succeeds to the horrors of the night. Satan again presents himself to our blessed Lord, and, from noticing the storm of the preceding night as pointed chiefly at him, takes occasion once more to insult him with an account of the sufferings which he was mainly to undergo. This only draws from our Lord a brief rebuke. Satan, now at the height of his desperation, confesses that he had frequently watched Jesus from his birth, purposely to discover if he was the true Messiah; and, collecting from what passed at the river Jordan that he most probably was so, he had from that time secretly and assiduously followed him, in hopes of gaining some advantage over him, which would most actually prove that he was not really that Divine Person destined to be his "fatal enemy." In this he acknowledges that he has hitherto completely failed; but still determines to make one more trial of him. Accordingly he conveys him to the Temple at Jerusalem, and, placing him on a pointed eminence, requires him to prove his divinity either by standing there, or casting himself down with safety. Our Lord reproves the tempter, and at the same time manifests his own divinity by standing on this dangerous point.

Satan, amazed and terrified, instantly falls; and repairs to his infernal compeers to relate the bad success of his enterprise. Angels in the mean time convey our blessed Lord to a beautiful valley, and, while they minister to him a repast of celestial food, celebrate his victory in a triumphant hymn.

PERPLEX'D and troubled at his bad success
The tempter stood, nor had what to reply,
Discover'd in his fraud, thrown from his hope
So oft, and the persuasive rhetoric
That sleek'd his tongue, and won so much on Eve:
So little here, nay lost; but Eve was Eve:
This far his over-match, who, self-deceiv'd
And rash, before-hand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with, or his own:
But as a man, who had been matchless held
In cunning, over-reach'd where least he thought,
To salve his credit, and for every spite,
Still will be tempting him who foils him still,
And never cease, though to his shame the more;
Or as a swarm of flies in vintage time,
About the wine-press where sweet must is pour'd,
Beat off, returns as oft with humming sound;
Or surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, the assault renew
(Vain battery!) and in froth or bubbles end;
So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse
Met ever, and to shameful silence brought,
Yet gives not o'er, though desperate of success,
And his vain importunity pursues.
He brought our Saviour to the western side
Of that high mountain, whence he might behold
Another plain, long, but in breadth not wide,
Wash'd by the southern sea, and, on the north,
To equal length back'd with a ridge of hills [men,
That screen'd the fruits of the earth, and seats of
From cold Septentrion blast; thence in the midst
Divided by a river, of whose banks
On each side an imperial city stood,
With towers and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills, with palaces adorn'd,
Porches, and theatres, baths, aqueducts,
Statues, and trophies, and triumphal arcs,
Gardens, and groves, presented to his eyes,
Above the height of mountains interpos'd:
(By what strange parallax, or optic skill
Of vision, multiplied through air, or glass
Of telescope, were curious to inquire:)
And now the tempter thus his silence broke.

"The city which thou seest, no other deem
Than great and glorious Rome, queen of the Earth,
So far renown'd, and with the spoils enrich'd
Of nations; there the Capitol thou seest,
Above the rest lifting his stately head
On the Tarpeian rock, her citadel
Impregnable; and there mount Palatine
The imperial palace, compass huge and high
The structure, skill of noblest architects,
With gilded battlements conspicuous far,
Turrets, and terraces, and glittering spires:
Many a fair edifice besides, more like
Houses of gods, (so well I have dispos'd
My aery microscope,) thou may'st behold,
Outside and inside both, pillars and roofs,
Carv'd work, the hand of fam'd artificers,
In cedar, marble, ivory, or gold.
Thence to the gates cast round thine eye, and see
What conflux issuing forth, or entering in;

Pretors, proconsuls to their provinces
 Hasting, or on return, in robes of state,
 Lictors and rods, the ensigns of their power,
 Legions and cohorts, turms of horse and wings :
 Or embassies from regions far remote,
 In various habits, on the Appian road,
 Or on the Emilian ; some from farthest south,
 Syene, and where the shadow both way falls,
 Meroe, Nilotic isle ; and, more to west,
 The realm of Bocchus to the Black-moor sea ;
 From the Asian kings, and Parthian among these ;
 From India and the golden Chersonese,
 And utmost Indian isle Taprobane,
 Dusk faces with white silken turbans wreath'd ;
 From Gallia, Gades, and the British west ;
 Germans, and Scythians, and Sarmatians, north
 Beyond Danubius to the Tauric pool.
 All nations now to Rome obedience pay ;
 To Rome's great emperor, whose wide domain,
 In ample territory, wealth, and power,
 Civility of manners, arts and arms,
 And long renown, thou justly mayst prefer
 Before the Parthian. These two thrones except,
 The rest are barbarous, and scarce worth the sight,
 Shar'd among petty kings too far remov'd ;
 These having shown thee, I have shown thee all
 The kingdoms of the world, and all their glory.
 This emperor hath no son, and now is old,
 Old and lascivious, and from Rome retir'd
 To Capree, an island small, but strong,
 On the Campanian shore, with purpose there
 His horrid lusts in private to enjoy ;
 Committing to a wicked favourite
 All public cares, and yet of him suspicious ;
 Hated of all, and hating. With what ease,
 Endued with regal virtues, as thou art,
 Appearing, and beginning noble deeds,
 Might'st thou expel this monster from his throne,
 Now made a stye, and, in his place ascending,
 A victor people free from servile yoke !
 And with my help thou may'st ; to me the power
 Is given, and by that right I give it thee.
 Aim therefore at no less than all the world ;
 Aim at the highest : without the highest attain'd,
 Will be for thee no sitting, or not long,
 On David's throne, be prophesied what will."

To whom the Son of God, unmov'd, replied.
 " Nor doth this grandeur and majestic show
 Of luxury, though call'd magnificence,
 More than of arms before, allure mine eye,
 Much less my mind ; though thou should'st add to tell

Their sumptuous gluttonies, and gorgeous feasts
 On citron tables or Atlantic stone,
 (For I have also heard, perhaps have read,)
 Their wines of Setia, Cales, and Falerne,
 Chios, and Crete, and how they quaff in gold,
 Crystal, and myrrhine cups, emboss'd with gems
 And studs of pearl ; to me should'st tell, who thirst

And hunger still. Then embassies thou show'st
 From nations far and nigh : what honour that,
 But tedious waste of time, to sit and hear
 So many hollow compliments and lies,
 Outlandish flatteries ? Then proceed'st to talk
 Of the emperor, how easily subdued,
 How gloriously : I shall, thou say'st, expel
 A brutish monster ; what if I withal
 Expel a devil who first made him such ?
 Let his tormenter conscience find him out ;

For him I was not sent ; nor yet to free
 That people, victor once, now vile and base ;
 Deservedly made vassal ; who, once just,
 Frugal, and mild, and temperate, conquer'd well,
 But govern ill the nations under yoke,
 Peeling their provinces, exhausted all
 By lust and rapine ; first ambitious grown
 Of triumph, that insulting vanity ;
 Then cruel, by their sports to blood inur'd
 Of fighting beasts, and men to beasts expos'd ;
 Luxurious by their wealth, and greedier still,
 And from the daily scene effeminate,
 What wise and valiant man would seek to free
 These, thus degenerate, by themselves enslav'd ?
 Or could of inward slaves make outward free ?
 Know therefore, when my season comes to sit
 On David's throne, it shall be like a tree
 Spreading and overshadowing all the Earth ;
 Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash
 All monarchies besides throughout the world ;
 And of my kingdom there shall be no end :
 Means there shall be to this ; but what the means,
 Is not for thee to know, nor me to tell."

To whom the tempter, impudent, replied.
 " I see all offers made by me how slight
 Thou valu'st, because offer'd, and reject'st :
 Nothing will please the difficult and nice,
 Or nothing more than still to contradict :
 On the other side know also thou, that I
 On what I offer set as high esteem,
 Nor what I part with mean to give for nought ;
 All these, which in a moment thou behold'st,
 The kingdoms of the world, to thee I give,
 (For, given to me, I give to whom I please,)
 No trifle ; yet with this reserve, not else,
 On this condition, if thou wilt fall down,
 And worship me as thy superior lord,
 (Easily done,) and hold them all of me ;
 For what can less so great a gift deserve ?"

Whom thus our Saviour answer'd with disdain.
 " I never lik'd thy talk, thy offers less ;
 Now both abhor, since thou hast dar'd to utter
 The abominable terms, impious condition :
 But I endure the time, till which expir'd
 Thou hast permission on me. It is written, [sh]
 The first of all commandments, ' Thou shalt worship
 The Lord thy God, and only him shalt serve ;'
 And dar'st thou to the Son of God propound
 To worship thee accur'd ? now more accur'd
 For this attempt, bolder than that on Eve,
 And more blasphemous ; which expect to rue.
 The kingdoms of the world to thee were given ?
 Permitted rather, and by thee usurp'd ;
 Other donation none thou canst produce.
 If given, by whom but by the King of kings,
 God over all supreme ? If given to thee,
 By thee how fairly is the giver now
 Repaid ! But gratitude in thee is lost
 Long since. Wert thou so void of fear or shame
 As offer them to me, the Son of God ?
 To me my own, on such abhorred pact,
 That I fall down and worship thee as God ?
 Get thee behind me ; plain thou now appear'st
 That Evil-one, Satan for ever damn'd."

To whom the fiend, with fear abash'd, replied.
 " Be not so sore offended, Son of God,
 Though sons of God both angels are and men,
 If I, to try whether in higher sort
 Than these thou bear'st that title, have propos'd
 What both from men and angels I receive,

patriarchs of fire, air, flood, and on the Earth,
 nations beside from all the quarter'd winds,
 god of this world invoc'd, and world beneath :
 Who then thou art, whose coming is foretold
 To me most fatal, me it most concerns ;
 The trial hath indamag'd thee no way,
 Rather more honour left and more esteem ;
 He sought advantag'd, missing what I aim'd.
 Therefore let pass, as they are transitory,
 The kingdoms of this world ; I shall no more
 Advise thee ; gain them as thou canst, or not.
 And thou thyself seem'st otherwise inclin'd
 Than to a worldly crown ; addicted more
 To contemplation and profound dispute,
 As by that early action may be judg'd,
 Then, slipping from thy mother's eye, thou went'st
 Alone into the temple, there wast found
 Among the gravest rabbies, disputant
 In points and questions fitting Moses' chair, [man,
 Teaching, not taught. The childhood shows the
 A morning shows the day : he famous then
 By wisdom ; as thy empire must extend,
 Let extend thy mind o'er all the world
 In knowledge, all things in it comprehend.
 All knowledge is not couch'd in Moses' law,
 The Pentateuch, or what the prophets wrote ;
 The Gentiles also know, and write, and teach
 In admiration, led by Nature's light,
 And with the Gentiles much thou must converse,
 Winning them by persuasion, as thou mean'st ;
 Without their learning, how wilt thou with them,
 Or they with thee, hold conversation meet ?
 How wilt thou reason with them, how refute
 Their idolisms, traditions, paradoxes ?
 Jesus by his own arms is best evinc'd.
 Not once more, ere we leave this specular mount.
 Forward, much nearer by south-west, behold
 There on the Ægean shore a city stands,
 Built nobly, pure the air, and light the soil ;
 Athens, the eye of Greece, mother of arts
 And eloquence, native to famous wits
 In hospitable, in her sweet recess,
 In or suburban, studious walks and shades.
 There the olive grove of Academe,
 Plato's retirement, where the Attic bird
 Tells her thick-warbled notes the summer long ;
 There flowery hill Hymettus, with the sound
 Of bees' industrious murmur, oft invites
 To studious musing ; there Ilissus rolls
 In whispering stream : within the walls, then view
 The schools of ancient sages ; his who bred
 Great Alexander to subdue the world,
 Lyceum there, and painted Stoa next :
 There shalt thou hear and learn the secret power
 Of harmony, in tones and numbers hit
 By voice or hand ; and various-measur'd verse,
 In an charms and Dorian lyric odes
 As Pindar, who gave them breath, but higher sung,
 And Melanigenes, thence Homer call'd,
 Whose poem Phœbus challeng'd for his own :
 Trace what the lofty grave tragedians taught
 In Chorus or Iambic, teachers best
 Of moral prudence, with delight receiv'd
 In brief sententious precepts, while they treat
 Of fate, and chance, and change in human life,
 High actions and high passions best describing :
 Hence to the famous orators repair,
 As ancient, whose resistless eloquence
 Was at will that fierce demagogue,
 As on the arsenal, and fulmin'd over Greece

To Macedon and Artaxerxes' thrones :
 To sage Philosophy next lend thine ear,
 From Heaven descended to the low-roof'd house
 Of Socrates ; see there his tenement,
 Whom well inspir'd the oracle pronounc'd
 Wisest of men ; from whose mouth issued forth
 Mellifluous streams, that water'd all the schools
 Of academics old and new, with those
 Surnamed Peripatetics, and the sect
 Epicurean, and the Stoic severe ;
 These here revolve, or, as thou lik'st, at home,
 Till time mature thee to a kingdom's weight ;
 These rules will render thee a king complete
 Within thyself, much more with empire join'd."

To whom our Saviour sagely thus replied.

" Think not but that I know these things, or think
 I know them not ; not therefore am I short
 Of knowing what I ought : he, who receives
 Light from above, from the fountain of light,
 No other doctrine needs, though granted true ;
 But these are false, or little else but dreams,
 Conjectures, fancies, built on nothing firm.
 The first and wisest of them all profess'd
 To know this only, that he nothing knew ;
 The next to fabling fell, and smooth conceits ;
 A third sort doubted all things, though plain sense ;
 Others in virtue plac'd felicity,
 But virtue joined with riches and long life ;
 In corporal pleasure he, and careless ease ;
 The Stoic last in philosophic pride,
 By him call'd virtue ; and his virtuous man,
 Wise, perfect in himself, and all possessing
 Equal to God, oft shames not to prefer,
 As fearing God nor man, contemning all
 Wealth, pleasure, pain or torment, death and life,
 Which, when he lists, he leaves, or boasts he can,
 For all his tedious talk is but vain boast,
 Or subtle shifts conviction to evade.
 Alas ! what can they teach and not mislead,
 Ignorant of themselves, of God much more,
 And how the world began, and how man fell
 Degraded by himself, on grace depending ?
 Much of the soul they talk, but all awry,
 And in themselves seek virtue ; and to themselves
 All glory arrogate, to God give none ;
 Rather accuse him under usual names,
 Fortune and Fate, as one regardless quite
 Of mortal things. Who therefore seeks in these True wisdom, finds her not ; or, by delusion,
 Far worse, her false resemblance only meets,
 An empty cloud. However, many books,
 Wise men have said, are wearisome ; who reads
 Incessantly, and to his reading brings not
 A spirit and judgment equal or superior,
 (And what he brings what needs he elsewhere seek ?)
 Uncertain and unsettled still remains,
 Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself,
 Crude or intoxicate, collecting toys
 And trifles for choice matters, worth a sponge ;
 As children gathering pebbles on the shore.
 Or, if I would delight my private hours
 With music or with poem, where so soon
 As in our native language, can I find
 That solace ? All our law and story strew'd
 With hymns, our Psalms with artful terms inscrib'd,
 Our Hebrew songs and harps, in Babylon
 That pleas'd so well our victor's ear, declare
 That rather Greece from us these arts deriv'd ;
 Ill imitated, while they loudest sing
 The vices of their deities, and their own,

In fable, hymn, or song, so personating
 Their gods ridiculous, and themselves past shame.
 Remove their swelling epithets, thick laid
 As varnish on a harlot's cheek, the rest,
 Thin sown with aught of profit or delight,
 Will far be found unworthy to compare
 With Sion's songs, to all true tastes excelling,
 Where God is prais'd aright, and God-like men,
 The Holiest of Holies, and his saints,
 (Such are from God inspir'd, not such from thee,)
 Unless where moral virtue is express'd
 By light of Nature, not in all quite lost.
 Their orators thou then extoll'st, as those
 The top of eloquence; statists indeed,
 And lovers of their country, as may seem;
 But herein to our prophets far beneath,
 As men divinely taught, and better teaching
 The solid rules of civil government,
 In their majestic unaffected style,
 Than all the oratory of Greece and Rome.
 In them is plainest taught, and easiest learnt,
 What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so,
 What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat;
 These only with our law best form a king."

So spake the Son of God; but Satan, now
 Quite at a loss, (for all his darts were spent,)
 Thus to our Saviour with stern brow replied.

"Since neither wealth nor honour, arms nor arts,
 Kingdom nor empire pleases thee, nor aught
 By me propos'd in life contemplative
 Or active, tended on by glory or fame,
 What dost thou in this world? The wilderness
 For thee is fittest place; I found thee there,
 And thither will return thee; yet remember
 What I foretel thee, soon thou shalt have cause
 To wish thou never hadst rejected, thus
 Nicely or cautiously, my offer'd aid,
 Which would have set thee in short time with ease
 On David's throne, or throne of all the world,
 Now at full age, fulness of time, thy season
 When prophecies of thee are best fulfill'd.
 Now contrary, if I read aught in Heaven,
 Or Heaven write aught of fate, by what the stars
 Voluminous, or single characters,
 In their conjunction met, give me to spell,
 Sorrows, and labours, opposition, hate
 Attend thee, scorns, reproaches, injuries,
 Violence and stripes, and lastly cruel death;
 A kingdom they portend thee, but what kingdom,
 Real or allegoric, I discern not;
 Nor when; eternal sure, as without end,
 Without beginning; for no date prefix'd
 Directs me in the starry rubric set."

So saying he took, (for still he knew his power
 Not yet expir'd,) and to the wilderness
 Brought back the Son of God, and left him there,
 Feigning to disappear. Darkness now rose,
 As day-light sunk, and brought in lowering night,
 Her shadowy offspring; unsubstantial both,
 Privation mere of light and absent day.
 Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind
 After his aery jaunt, though hurried sore,
 Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest,
 Wherever, under some concourse of shades, [shield
 Whose branching arms thick intertwin'd might
 From dews and damps of night his shelter'd head;
 But, shelter'd, slept in vain; for at his head
 The tempter watch'd, and soon with ugly dreams
 Disturb'd his sleep. And either tropic now
 'Gan thunder, and both ends of Heaven: the clouds,

From many a horrid rift, abortive pour'd
 Fierce rain with lightning mix'd, water with fire
 In ruin reconcil'd: nor slept the winds
 Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad
 From the four hinges of the world, and fell
 On the vex'd wilderness, whose tallest pines,
 Though rooted deep as high, and sturdiest oaks,
 Bow'd their stiff necks, loaden with stormy blasts
 Or torn up sheer. Ill wast thou shrouded then,
 O patient son of God, yet only stood'st
 Unshaken! Nor yet staid the terour there;
 Infernal ghosts and hellish furies round [shriek'd,
 Environ'd thee, some howl'd, some yell'd, some
 Some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou
 Sat'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace!
 Thus pass'd the night so foul, till Morning fair
 Came forth, with pilgrim steps, in amice gray;
 Who with her radiant finger still'd the roar
 Of thunder, chas'd the clouds, and laid the winds,
 And grisly spectres, which the fiend had rais'd
 To tempt the Son of God with terours dire.
 And now the Sun with more effectual beams
 Had cheer'd the face of Earth, and dried the wet
 From drooping plant, or dropping tree; the birds,
 Who all things now behold more fresh and green,
 After a night of storm so ruinous,
 Clear'd up their choicest notes in bush and spray,
 To gratulate the sweet return of morn.
 Nor yet, amidst this joy and brightest morn,
 Was absent, after all his mischief done,
 The prince of darkness; glad would also seem
 Of this fair change, and to our Saviour came;
 Yet with no new device, (they all were spent,)
 Rather by this his last affront resolv'd,
 Desperate of better course, to vent his rage
 And mad despite to be so oft repell'd.
 Him walking on a sunny hill he found,
 Back'd on the north and west by a thick wood;
 Out of the wood he starts in wonted shape,
 And in a careless mood thus to him said.

"Fair morning yet betides thee, Son of God,
 After a dismal night: I heard the wrack,
 As earth and sky would mingle; but myself [thou
 Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals feel
 As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of Heaven,
 Or to the Earth's dark basis underneath,
 Are to the main as inconsiderable
 And harmless, if not wholesome, as a sneeze
 To man's less universe, and soon are gone;
 Yet, as being oft-times noxious where they light
 On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent,
 Like turbulencies in the affairs of men,
 Over whose heads they roar, and seem to point,
 They oft fore-signify and threaten ill:
 This tempest at this desert most was bent;
 Of men at thee, for only thou here dwell'st.
 Did I not tell thee, if thou didst reject
 The perfect season offered with my aid
 To win thy destin'd seat, but wilt prolong
 All to the push of fate, pursue thy way
 Of gaining David's throne, no man knows when,
 For both the when and how is no where told?
 Thou shalt be what thou art ordain'd, no doubt;
 For angels have proclaim'd it, but concealing
 The time and means. Each act is rightliest done
 Not when it must, but when it may be best:
 If thou observe not this, be sure to find,
 What I foretold thee, many a hard assay
 Of dangers, and adversities, and pains,
 Ere thou of Israel's sceptre get fast hold;

Whereof this ominous night, that clos'd thee round,
Is many terrours, voices, prodigies,
May warn thee, as a sure fore-going sign."

So talk'd he, while the Son of God went on
And staid not, but in brief him answer'd thus:

"Me worse than wet thou find'st not; other harm
Those terrours, which thou speak'st of, did me none;
I never fear'd they could, though noising loud
And threatening high: what they can do as signs
Befokning, or ill-boding, I contemn
As false portents, not sent from God, but thee;
Who knowing I shall reign past thy preventing,
Durst thy offer'd aid, that I, accepting,
At least might seem to hold all power of thee,
Ambitious spirit! and wouldst be thought my God;
And storm'st refus'd, thinking to terrify
Me to thy will! desist, (thou art discern'd
And toil'st in vain,) nor me in vain molest."

To whom the fiend, now swoln with rage, replied.

Then hear, O son of David, virgin-born,
Or son of God to me is yet in doubt;
If the Messiah I had heard foretold
By all the prophets; of thy birth at length,
Announc'd by Gabriel, with the first I knew,
And of the angelic song in Bethlehem field,
In thy birth-night that sung thee Saviour born.
From that time seldom have I ceas'd to eye
By infancy, thy childhood, and thy youth,
By manhood last, though yet in private bred;
All at the ford of Jordan, whither all
Look to the Baptist, I, among the rest,
Though not to be baptiz'd,) by voice from Heaven
Hear'd thee pronounc'd the Son of God belov'd.

Henceforth I thought thee worth my nearer view
For narrower scrutiny, that I might learn
At what degree or meaning thou art call'd
The Son of God; which bears no single sense.

The Son of God I also am, or was;
And if I was, I am; relation stands;
All men are sons of God; yet thee I thought
In some respect far higher so declar'd:
Therefore I watch'd thy footsteps from that hour,
And follow'd thee still on to this waste wild;
There, by all best conjectures, I collect
Thou art to be my fatal enemy:

And reason then, if I before-hand seek
To understand my adversary, who
And what he is; his wisdom, power, intent:
By parol or composition, truce or league,
To win him, or win from him what I can:
And opportunity I here have had
To try thee, sift thee, and confess have found thee
True against all temptation, as a rock
Unshakant, and, as a centre, firm:
To the utmost of mere man both wise and good,
In more; for honours, riches, kingdoms, glory,
Have been before contemn'd, and may again.
Therefore, to know what more thou art than man,
Birth naming Son of God by voice from Heaven,
Another method I must now begin."

So saying he caught him up, and, without wing
Or hippogrif, bore through the air sublime,
Over the wilderness and o'er the plain,
All underneath them fair Jerusalem,
The holy city, lifted high her towers,
And higher yet the glorious temple rear'd
Her pile, far off appearing like a mount
Of alabaster, topt with golden spires:
There on the highest pinnacle, he set
The Son of God: and add'd thus in scorn.

"There stand, if thou wilt stand; to stand upright
Will ask thee skill; I to thy Father's house [best:
Have brought thee, and highest plac'd: highest is Now show thy progeny; if not to stand,
Cast thyself down; safely, if Son of God:
For it is written, 'He will give command
Concerning thee to his angels, in their hands
They shall up-lift thee, lest at any time
Thou chance to dash thy foot against a stone.'"

To whom thus Jesus: "Also it is written,
'Tempt not the Lord thy God.' " He said, and stood:

But Satan, smitten with amazement, fell.
As when Earth's son Antæus, (to compare
Small things with greatest,) in Irtassa strove
With Jove's Alcides, and, oft foil'd, still rose,
Receiving from his mother Earth new strength,
Fresh from his fall, and fiercer grapple join'd,
Throttled at length in the air, expir'd and fell;
So, after many a foil, the tempter proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell whence he stood to see his victor fall:
And as that Theban monster, that propos'd
Her riddle, and him who solv'd it not devour'd,
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and spite
Cast herself headlong from the Ismenian steep;
So, struck with dread and anguish, fell the fiend,
And to his crew, that sat consulting, brought (Joyless triumphals of his hop'd success,)
Ruin, and desperation, and dismay,
Who durst so proudly tempt the Son of God.
So Satan fell; and straight a fiery globe
Of angels on full sail of wing flew nigh,
Who on their plumy vans receiv'd him soft
From his uneasy station, and upbore,
As on a floating couch, through the blithe air;
Then, in a flowery valley, set him down
On a green bank, and set before him spread
A table of celestial food, divine
Ambrosial fruits, fetch'd from the tree of life,
And, from the fount of life, ambrosial drink,
That soon refresh'd him wearied, and repair'd
What hunger, if aught hunger, had impair'd,
Or thirst; and, as he fed, angelic quires
Sung heavenly anthems of his victory
Over temptation and the tempter proud.

"True image of the Father; whether thron'd
In the bosom of bliss, and light of light
Conceiving, or, remote from Heaven, enshrin'd
In fleshly tabernacle, and human form,
Wandering the wilderness; whatever place,
Habit, or state, or motion, still expressing
The Son of God, with God-like force endued
Against the attempter of thy Father's throne,
And thief of Paradise! him long of old
Thou didst debel, and down from Heaven cast
With all his army; now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam, and, by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost Paradise,
And frustrated the conquest fraudulent.
He never more henceforth will dare set foot
In Paradise to tempt; his snares are broke:
For, though that seat of earthly bliss be fail'd,
A fairer Paradise is founded now
For Adam and his chosen sons, whom thou,
A Saviour, art come down to re-install,
Where they shall dwell secure, when time shall be,
Of tempter and temptation without fear.
But thou, infernal serpent! shalt not long
Rule in the clouds like an autumnal star,

Or lightning, thou shalt fall from Heaven, trod down
Under his feet : for proof, ere this thou feel'st
Thy wound, (yet not thy last and deadliest wound,)
By this repulse receiv'd, and hold'st in Hell
No triumph : in all her gates Abaddon rues
Thy bold attempt. Hereafter learn with awe
To dread the Son of God : he, all unarm'd,
Shall chase thee, with the terrour of his voice,
From thy demoniac holds, possession foul,
Thee and thy legions : yelling they shall fly,
And beg to hide them in a herd of swine,
Lest he command them down into the deep,
Bound, and to torment sent before their time. —
Hail, Son of the Most High, heir of both worlds,
Queller of Satan ! on thy glorious work
Now enter ; and begin to save mankind."

Thus they the Son of God, our Saviour meek,
Sung victor, and, from heavenly feast refresh'd,
Brought on his way with joy ; he, unobserv'd,
Home to his mother's house private return'd.

SAMSON AGONISTES,

A DRAMATIC POEM.

ARISTOT. Poet. cap. 6.

Τραγῳδία μίμησις πράξεως σπουδαίας, κ. τ. λ.

Tragedia est imitatio actionis seriæ, &c. per misericordiam et metum perficiens talium affectuum lustrationem.

Of that sort of Dramatic Poem which is called Tragedy.

TRAGEDY, as it was anciently composed, hath been ever held the gravest, moralest, and most profitable of all other poems : therefore said by Aristotle to be of power by raising pity and fear, or terrour, to purge the mind of those and such like passions, that is, to temper and reduce them to just measure with a kind of delight, stirred up by reading or seeing those passions well imitated. Nor is Nature wanting in her own effects to make good his assertion : for so, in physic, things of melancholic hue and quality are used against melancholy, sour against sour, salt to remove salt humours. Hence philosophers and other gravest writers, as Cicero, Plutarch, and others, frequently cite out of tragic poets, both to adorn and illustrate their discourse. The Apostle Paul himself thought it not unworthy to insert a verse of Euripides into the text of Holy Scripture, 1 Cor. xv. 33. ; and Paræus, commenting on the Revelation, divides the whole book as a tragedy, into acts distinguished each by a chorus of heavenly harpings and song between. Heretofore men in highest dignity have laboured not a little to be thought able to compose a tragedy. Of that honour Dionysius the elder was no less ambitious, than before of his attaining to the tyranny. Augustus Cæsar also had begun his Ajax, but unable to please his own judgment with what he had begun, left it unfinished. Seneca, the philosopher, is by some thought the author of those tragedies (at least the best of them) that go under that name. Gregory Nazianzen, a father of the church, thought it not unbecoming the sanctity of his person to write a tragedy, which is entitled Christ suffering. This is mentioned to vindicate tragedy from the small esteem, or rather infamy, which in the account of many it undergoes at this day with other common interludes ; happening, through the poet's error of intermixing comic stuff with tragic sadness and gravity ; or introducing trivial and vulgar persons, which by all judicious hath been counted absurd ; and brought in without discretion, corruptly to gratify the people. And though ancient tragedy use no prologue, yet using sometimes, in case of self-defence, or explanation that which Martial calls an epistle ; in behalf of this tragedy coming forth after the ancient manner, much different from what among us passes for best, thus much before-hand may be epistled ; that Chorus is here introduced after the Greek manner, not ancient only but modern and still in use among the Italians. In the modelling therefore of this poem, with good reason the ancients and Italians are rather followed as of much more authority and fame. The measure of verse used in the Chorus is of all sorts, called by the Greeks Monostrophic, or rather Apolelymenon, without regard had to Strophe Antistrophe, or Epode, which were a kind of stanzas framed only for the music, then used with the Chorus that sung ; not essential to the poem, and therefore not material ; or, being divided into stanzas or pauses, they may be called Allæostropha. Division into act and scene referring chiefly to the stage (to which this was never intended) is here omitted.

It suffices if the whole drama be found to be produced beyond the fifth act. Of the style and uniformity, and that commonly called the plot, whether intricate or explicit, which is nothing indeed but such economy, or disposition of the fable as may stand best with versimilitude and decorum ; they only will best judge who are unacquainted with Æschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, the three tragic poets unequalled yet by any, and the best rule to all who endeavour to write tragedy. The circumscription of time wherein the whole drama begins and ends, is according to ancient rule, and best example, within the space of twenty-four hours.

The Argument.

Samson, made captive, blind, and now in prison at Gaza, there to labour as in a common workhouse, on a festival day, in the general cessation from labour, comes forth into the open air, to a place nigh, somewhat retired, there to sit a while and bemoan his condition. Where he happens at length to be visited by certain friends and equals of his tribe, who makes the Chorus, who seek to comfort him with what they can ; then by his old father Manoah who endeavours the like, and withal tells him his purpose to procure his liberty by ransom. Lastly, that this feast was proclaimed by the Philistines as a day of thanksgiving for their deliverance from the hands of Samson, which more troubles him. Manoah then departs.

prosecute his endeavour with the Philistine lords for Samson's redemption; who in the mean while is visited by other persons; and lastly by a public officer to require his coming to the feast before the lords and people, to play or show his strength in their presence; he at first refuses, dismissing the public officer with absolute denial to come; at length, persuaded inwardly that this was from God, he yields to go along with him, who came now the second time with great threatenings to fetch him: the Chorus yet remaining on the place, Manoah returns full of joyful hope, to procure ere long his son's deliverance: in the midst of which discourse an Hebrew comes in haste, confusedly at first, and afterward more distinctly, relating the catastrophe, what Samson had done to the Philistines, and by accident to himself; wherewith the tragedy ends.

THE PERSONS.

MANOAH, the father of Samson.
 DALILA, his wife.
 LARAPHA of Gath.
 Public Officer.
 Messenger.
 Chorus of Danites.

The Scene before the Prison in Gaza.

SAMSON, [Attendant leading him.]

A LITTLE onward lend thy guiding hand
 To these dark steps, a little further on;
 Yonder bank hath choice of sun or shade:
 Here I am wont to sit, when any chance
 Relieves me from my task of servile toil,
 Here in the common prison else enjoin'd me,
 Here I, a prisoner chain'd, scarce freely draw
 The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
 Unwholesome draught: but here I feel amends,
 The breath of Heaven fresh blowing, pure and sweet
 As day-spring born; here leave me to respire. —
 To-day a solemn feast the people hold
 To Dagon their sea-idol, and forbid
 All serious works; unwillingly this rest
 My superstition yields me; hence with leave
 Escaping from the popular noise, I seek
 This unfrequented place to find some ease,
 None to the body some, none to the mind
 But restless thoughts, that, like a deadly swarm
 Of hornets arm'd, no sooner found alone,
 But rush upon me thronging, and present
 Before me past, what once I was, and what am now.
 Wherefore was my birth from Heaven foretold
 By an angel, who at last in sight
 Of both my parents all in flames ascended
 From off the altar, where an offering burn'd,
 To in a fiery column charioting
 In God-like presence, and from some great act
 His benefit reveal'd to Abraham's race?
 Thus was my breeding order'd and prescrib'd
 As of a person separate to God,
 Design'd for great exploits; if I must die
 Brave'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out,
 Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;

To grind in brazen fetters under task [strength,
 With this Heaven-gifted strength? O glorious
 Put to the labour of a beast, debas'd
 Lower than bond-slave! Promise was that I Should Israel from Philistian yoke deliver;
 Ask for this great deliverer now, and find him
 Eyeless in Gaza at the mill with slaves,
 Himself in bonds under Philistian yoke:
 Yet stay, let me not rashly call in doubt
 Divine prediction; what if all foretold
 Had been fulfill'd but through mine own default,
 Whom have I to complain of but myself?
 Who this high gift of strength committed to me,
 In what part lodg'd, how easily bereft me,
 Under the seal of silence could not keep,
 But weakly to a woman must reveal it,
 O'ercome with importunity and tears.
 O impotence of mind, in body strong!
 But what is strength without a double share
 Of wisdom? vast, unwieldy, burdensome,
 Proudly secure, yet liable to fall
 By weakest subtleties, not made to rule,
 But to subserve where wisdom bears command!
 God, when he gave me strength, to show withal
 How slight the gift was, hung it in my hair.
 But peace, I must not quarrel with the will
 Of highest dispensation, which herein
 Haply had ends above my reach to know:
 Suffices that to me strength is my bane,
 And proves the source of all my miseries;
 So many, and so huge, that each apart
 Would ask a life to wail; but chief of all,
 O loss of sight, of thee I most complain!
 Blind among enemies, O worse than chains,
 Dungeon, or beggary, or decrepit age!
 Light, the prime work of God, to me is extinct,
 And all her various objects of delight
 Annull'd, which might in part my grief have eas'd,
 Inferior to the vilest now become
 Of man or worm; the vilest here excel me;
 They creep, yet see; I, dark in light, expos'd
 To daily fraud, contempt, abuse, and wrong,
 Within doors, or without, still as a fool,
 In power of others, never in my own;
 Scarce half I seem to live, dead more than half.
 O dark, dark, dark, amid the blaze of noon,
 Irrecoverably dark, total eclipse
 Without all hope of day!
 O first created Beam, and thou great Word,
 "Let there be light, and light was over all;"
 Why am I thus bereav'd thy prime decree!
 The Sun to me is dark
 And silent as the Moon,
 When she deserts the night,
 Hid in her vacant interlunar cave.
 Since light so necessary is to life,
 And almost life itself, if it be true
 That light is in the soul,
 She all in every part; why was the sight
 To such a tender ball as the eye confin'd,
 So obvious and so easy to be quench'd?
 And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
 That she might look at will through every pore?
 Then had I not been thus exil'd from light,
 As in the land of darkness, yet in light,
 To live a life half dead, a living death,
 And buried; but, O yet more miserable!
 Myself my sepulchre, a moving grave;
 Buried, yet not exempt,
 By privilege of death and burial

From worst of other evils, pains and wrongs ;
 But made hereby obnoxious more
 To all the miseries of life,
 Life in captivity
 Among inhuman foes.
 But who are these ? for with joint pace I hear
 The tread of many feet steering this way ;
 Perhaps my enemies, who come to stare
 At my affliction, and perhaps to insult,
 Their daily practice to afflict me more.

[Enter CHORUS.]

Chor. This, this is he ; softly a while,
 Let us not break in upon him :
 O change beyond report, thought, or belief !
 See how he lies at random, carelessly diffus'd,
 With languish'd head unpropt,
 As one past hope, abandon'd,
 And by himself given over ;
 In slavish habit, ill-fitted weeds
 O'er-worn and soil'd ;
 Or do my eyes misrepresent ? Can this be he,
 That heroic, that renown'd,
 Irresistible Samson ? whom unarm'd [withstand ;
 No strength of man, or fiercest wild beast, could
 Who tore the lion, as the lion tears the kid :
 Ran on embattled armies clad in iron ;
 And, weaponless himself,
 Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
 Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
 Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail
 Adamantéan proof ?
 But safest he who stood aloof,
 When insupportably his foot advanc'd,
 In scorn of their proud arms and warlike tools, Spurn'd them to death by troops. The bold Ascalonite
 Fled from his lion ramp ; old warriors turn'd
 Their plated backs under his heel ;
 Or, groveling, soil'd their crested helmets in the dust.
 Then with what trivial weapon came to hand,
 The jaw of a dead ass, his sword of bone,
 A thousand fore-skins fell, the flower of Palestine,
 In Ramath-lechi, famous to this day. [bore
 Then by main force pull'd up, and on his shoulders
 The gates of Azza, post, and massy bar,
 Up to the hill by Hebron, seat of giants old,
 No journey of a sabbath-day, and loaded so ;
 Like whom the Gentiles feign to bear up Heaven.
 Which shall I first bewail,
 Thy bondage or lost sight,
 Prison within prison
 Inseparably dark ?
 Thou art become (O worst imprisonment !)
 The dungeon of thyself ; thy soul, [plain)
 (Which men enjoying sight oft without cause com-
 Imprison'd now indeed,
 In real darkness of the body dwells,
 Shut up from outward light
 To incorporate with gloomy night ;
 For inward light, alas !
 Puts forth no visual beam.
 O mirror of our fickle state,
 Since man on Earth unparallel'd !
 The rarer thy example stands,
 By how much from the top of wondrous glory,
 Strongest of mortal men,
 To lowest pitch of abject fortune thou art fallen.
 For him I reckon not in high estate
 Whom long descent of birth,

Or the sphere of fortune, raises ;
 But thee whose strength, while virtue was her mate,
 Might have subdued the Earth,
 Universally crown'd with highest praises.

Sams. I hear the sound of words ; their sense the Dissolves unjointed ere it reach my ear.

Chor. He speaks, let us draw nigh — Matchless in might,

The glory late of Israel, now the grief ;
 We come, thy friends and neighbours not unknown
 From Eshtaol and Zora's fruitful vale,
 To visit or bewail thee ; or, if better,
 Counsel or consolation we may bring,
 Salve to thy sores ; apt words have power to swage
 The tumours of a troubled mind,
 And are as balm to fester'd wounds. [learn

Sams. Your coming, friends, revives me ; for Now of my own experience, not by talk,
 How counterfeit a coin they are who friends
 Bear in their superscription, (of the most
 I would be understood ;) in prosperous days
 They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their head
 Not to be found, though sought. Ye see, O friends
 How many evils have enclos'd me round :
 Yet that which was the worst now least afflicts me,
 Blindness ; for had I sight, confus'd with shame,
 How could I once look up or heave the head,
 Who, like a foolish pilot, have shipwreck'd
 My vessel trusted to me from above,
 Gloriously rigg'd ; and for a word, a tear,
 Fool ! have divulg'd the secret gift of God
 To a deceitful woman ? tell me, friends,
 Am I not sung and proverb'd for a fool
 In every street ? do they not say, how well
 Are come upon him his deserts ? yet why ?
 Immeasurable strength they might behold
 In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean ;
 This with the other should, at least, have pair'd,
 These two, proportion'd ill, drove me transverse.

Chor. Tax not divine disposal ; wisest men
 Have err'd, and by bad women been deceiv'd ;
 And shall again, pretend they ne'er so wise.
 Deject not then so overmuch thyself,
 Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides :
 Yet truth to say, I oft have heard men wonder
 Why thou shouldst wed Philistian women rather Than of thine own tribe fairer, or as fair,
 At least of thy own nation, and as noble.

Sams. The first I saw at Timna, and she pleas'd
 Me, not my parents, that I sought to wed
 The daughter of an infidel : they knew not
 That what I motion'd was of God ; I knew
 From intimate impulse, and therefore urg'd
 The marriage on ; that by occasion hence
 I might begin Israel's deliverance,
 The work to which I was divinely call'd.
 She proving false, the next I took to wife
 (O that I never had ! fond wish too late,)
 Was in the vale of Sorec, Dalila,
 That specious monster, my accomplish'd snare.
 I thought it lawful from my former act,
 And the same end ; still watching to oppress
 Israel's oppressors : of what now I suffer
 She was not the prime cause, but I myself, [new
 Who, vanquish'd with a peal of words, (O woe
 Gave up my fort of silence to a woman.

Chor. In seeking just occasion to provoke
 The Philistine, thy country's enemy,
 Thou never wast amiss, I bear thee witness ;
 Yet Israël still serves with all his sons.

Sams. That fault I take not on me, but transfer
 To Israel's governors and heads of tribes,
 Who, seeing those great acts which God had done
 Singly by me against their conquerors
 Acknowledg'd not, or not at all consider'd,
 Deliverance offer'd: I on the other side
 Had no ambition to commend my deeds; [doer:
 He deeds themselves, though mute, spoke loud the
 But they persisted deaf, and would not seem
 To count them things worth notice, till at length
 Your lords, the Philistines, with gather'd powers
 Enter'd Judea seeking me, who then
 Flew to the rock of Etham was retir'd;
 Not flying, but fore-casting in what place
 To set upon them, what advantag'd best:
 Meanwhile the men of Judah, to prevent
 The harass of their land, beset me round;
 Willingly on some conditions came
 To their hands, and they as gladly yield me
 To the uncircumcis'd a welcome prey, [threads
 And with two cords; but cords to me were Such'd with the flame: on their whole host I flew
 Arm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
 My choicest youth; they only liv'd who fled.
 And Judah that day join'd, or one whole tribe,
 Lay had by this possess'd the towers of Gath,
 And lorded over them whom they now serve:
 What more oft, in nations grown corrupt,
 And by their vices brought to servitude,
 Than to love bondage more than liberty,
 And with ease than strenuous liberty;
 And to despise, or envy, or suspect
 Their God hath of his special favour rais'd
 Their deliverer? if he aught begin,
 To frequent to desert him, and at last
 To heap ingratitude on worthiest deeds!
Chor. Thy words to my remembrance bring
 Of Succoth and the fort of Penueel
 Our great deliverer contemn'd,
 The matchless Gideon, in pursuit
 Of Midian and her vanquish'd kings:
 And how ingrateful Ephraim
 He dealt with Jephtha, who by argument,
 Was worse than by his shield and spear
 Defend'd Israel from the Ammonite,
 And yet his prowess quell'd their pride
 In that sore battle, when so many died
 That reprieve, adjudg'd to death,
 He was of well pronouncing Shibboleth.
Sams. Of such examples add me to the roll;
 I surely indeed mine may neglect,
 And God's propos'd deliverance not so.
Chor. Just are the ways of God,
 And justifiable to men;
 How there be, who think not God at all:
 They be, they walk obscure;
 And of such doctrine never was there school,
 Nor the heart of the fool,
 Nor so man therein doctor but himself.
 Yet more there be, who doubt his ways not just,
 And to his own edicts found contradicting,
 And give the reins to wandering thought,
 Professors of his glory's diminution;
 And by their own perplexities involv'd,
 They ravel more, still less resolv'd,
 And never find self-satisfying solution.
 And if they would confine the Interminable,
 And tie him to his own prescript
 He made our laws to bind us, not himself,
 And hath full right to exempt

Whom so it pleases him by choice
 From national obstruction, without taint
 Of sin, or legal debt;
 For with his own laws he can best dispense.
 He would not else, who never wanted means,
 Nor, in respect of the enemy, just cause,
 To set his people free,
 Have prompted this heroic Nazarite,
 Against his vow of strictest purity,
 To seek in marriage that fallacious bride,
 Unclean, unchaste. [down;
 Down, reason, then; at least vain reasonings,
 Though reason here aver,
 That moral verdict quits her of unclean:
 Unchaste was subsequent, her stain not his.
 But see, here comes thy reverend sire
 With careful step, locks white as down,
 Old Manoaah: advise
 Forthwith how thou ought'st to receive him.
Sams. Ay me! another inward grief, awak'd
 With mention of that name, renews the assault.

[Enter MANOAH.]

Man. Brethren and men of Dan, for such ye seem,
 Though in this uncouth place; if old respect,
 As I suppose, towards your once gloried friend,
 My son, now captive, hither hath inform'd
 Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age
 Came lagging after; say if he be here.
Chor. As signal now in low dejected state,
 As erst in highest, behold him where he lies.
Man. O miserable change! is this the man,
 That invincible Samson, far renown'd,
 The dread of Israel's foes, who with a strength
 Equivalent to angels walk'd their streets,
 None offering fight; who single combatant
 Duell'd their armies rank'd in proud array,
 Himself an army, now unequal match
 To save himself against a coward arm'd
 At one spear's length. O ever-failing trust
 In mortal strength! and oh! what not in man
 Deceivable and vain? Nay, what thing good
 Pray'd for, but often proves our bane?
 I pray'd for children, and thought barrenness
 In wedlock a reproach; I gain'd a son,
 And such a son as all men hail'd me happy; —
 Who would be now a father in my stead?
 O wherefore did God grant me my request,
 And as a blessing with such pomp adorn'd?
 Why are his gifts desirable, to tempt
 Our earnest prayers, then, given with solemn hand
 As graces, draw a scorpion's tail behind?
 For this did the angel twice descend? for this
 Ordain'd thy nurture holy, as of a plant
 Select, and sacred, glorious for a while,
 The miracle of men; then in an hour
 Ensnar'd, assaulted, overcome, led bound,
 Thy foe's derision, captive, poor, and blind,
 Into a dungeon thrust, to work with slaves?
 Alas! methinks whom God hath chosen once
 To worthiest deeds, if he through frailty err,
 He should not so o'erwhelm, and as a thrall
 Subject him to so foul indignities,
 Be it but for honour's sake of former deeds.

Sams. Appoint not heavenly disposition, father;
 Nothing of all these evils hath befall'n me
 But justly; I myself have brought them on,
 Sole author I, sole cause: if aught seem vile,
 As vile hath been my folly, who have prophan'd

The mystery of God given me under pledge
Of vow, and have betray'd it to a woman,
A Canaanite, my faithless enemy.
This well I knew, nor was at all surpris'd,
But warn'd by oft experience: did not she
Of Timna first betray me, and reveal
The secret wrested from me in her height
Of nuptial love profess'd, carrying it straight
To them who had corrupted her, my spies,
And rivals? In this other was there found
More faith, who also in her prime of love,
Spousal embraces, violated with gold,
Though offer'd only, by the scent conceiv'd
Her spurious first-born, treason against me?
Thrice she assay'd with flattering prayers and sighs,
And amorous reproaches, to win from me
My capital secret, in what part my strength
Lay stor'd, in what part summ'd, that she might know;
Thrice I deluded her, and turn'd to sport
Her importunity, each time perceiving
How openly, and with what impudence
She purpos'd to betray me, and (which was worse
Than undissembled hate) with what contempt
She sought to make me traitor to myself;
Yet the fourth time, when, mustering all her wiles,
With blandish'd parlies, feminine assaults,
Tongue-batteries, she surceas'd not, day nor night,
To storm me over-watch'd, and wearied out.
At times when men seek most repose and rest,
I yielded, and unlock'd her all my heart,
Who, with a grain of manhood well resolv'd,
Might easily have shook off all her snares:
But foul effeminacy held me yok'd
Her bond-slave; O indignity, O blot
To honour and religion! servile mind
Rewarded well with servile punishment!
The base degree to which I now am fall'n,
These rags, this grinding is not yet so base
As was my former servitude, ignoble,
Unmanly, ignominious, infamous,
True slavery, and that blindness worse than this
That saw not how degenerately I serv'd.

Man. I cannot praise thy marriage-choices, son.
Rather approv'd them not; but thou didst plead
Divine impulsion prompting how thou might'st
Find some occasion to infest our foes.
I state not that; this I am sure, our foes
Found soon occasion thereby to make thee
Their captive, and their triumph; thou the sooner
Temptation found'st, or over-potent charms,
To violate the sacred trust of silence
Deposited within thee; which to have kept
Tacit was in thy power: true; and thou bear'st
Enough, and more the burthen of that fault;
Bitterly hast thou paid, and still art paying,
That rigid score. A worse thing yet remains;
This day the Philistines a popular feast
Here celebrate in Gaza; and proclaim
Great pomp, and sacrifices and praises loud,
To Dagon, as their god who hath deliver'd
Thee, Samson, bound and blind into their hands,
Them out of thine, who slew'st them many a slain.
So Dagon shall be magnified, and God,
Besides whom is no God, compar'd with idols,
Disglorified, blasphem'd, and had in scorn
By the idolatrous rout amidst their wine;
Which to have come to pass by means of thee,
Samson, of all thy sufferings think the heaviest,
(Of all reproach the most with shame that ever
Could have befall'n thee and thy father's house.

Sams. Father, I do acknowledge and confess
That I this honour, I this pomp, have brought
To Dagon, and advanc'd his praises high
Among the heathen round: to God have brought Dishonour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idolists, and atheists; have brought scandal
To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt
In feeble hearts, propense enough before
To waver, or fall off and join with idols;
Which is my chief affliction, shame and sorrow,
The anguish of my soul, that suffers not
Mine eye to harbour sleep, or thoughts to rest.
This only hope relieves me, that the strife
With me hath end: all the contest is now
'Twixt God and Dagon; Dagon hath presum'd
Me overthrown, to enter lists with God,
His deity comparing and preferring
Before the God of Abraham. He, be sure,
Will not connive, or linger, thus provok'd,
But will arise, and his great name assert:
Dagon must stoop, and shall ere long receive
Such a discomfit, as shall quite despoil him
Of all these boasted trophies won on me,
And with confusion blank his worshippers.

Man. With cause this hope relieves thee,
these words
I as a prophecy receive; for God,
Nothing more certain, will not long defer
To vindicate the glory of his name
Against all competition, nor will long
Endure it doubtful whether God be Lord,
Or Dagon. But for thee what shall be done?
Thou must not, in the meanwhile here forgot,
Lie in this miserable loathsome plight,
Neglected. I already have made way
To some Philistian lords, with whom to treat
About thy ransom: well they may by this
Have satisfied their utmost of revenge
By pains and slaveries, worse than death, inflict
On thee, who now no more canst do them harm.

Sams. Spare that proposal, father; spare trouble
Of that solicitation; let me here,
As I deserve, pay on my punishment;
And expiate, if possible, my crime,
Shameful garrulity. To have reveal'd
Secrets of men, the secrets of a friend,
How heinous had the fact been, how deserving Contempt and scorn of all, to be excluded
All friendship, and avoided as a blab,
The mark of fool set on his front? But I
God's counsel have not kept, his holy secret
Presumptuously have published, impiously,
Weakly at least, and shamefully; a sin
That Gentiles in their parables condemn
To their abyss and horrid pains confin'd.

Man. Be penitent, and for thy fault contrite
But act not in thy own affliction, son:
Repent the sin; but, if the punishment
Thou canst avoid, self-preservation bids;
Or the execution leave to high disposal,
And let another hand, not thine, exact
Thy penal forfeit from thyself: perhaps
God will relent, and quit thee all his debt;
Who ever more approves, and more accepts,
(Best pleas'd with humble and filial submission)
Him, who, imploring mercy, sues for life,
Than who, self-rigorous, chooses death as due
Which argues over-just, and self-displeased
For self-offence, more than for God offended.

ject not then what offer'd means ; who knows
 if God hath set before us, to return thee home to thy country and his sacred house, here thou may'st bring thy offerings, to avert his further ire, with prayers and vows renew'd ?
Sams. His pardon I implore ; but as for life,
 what end should I seek it ? when in strength all mortals I excell'd, and great in hopes of youthful courage, and magnanimous thoughts, of birth from Heaven foretold, and high exploits,
 full of divine instinct, after some proof of facts indeed heroic, far beyond
 the sons of Anak, famous now and blas'd, careless of danger, like a petty god
 walk'd about admir'd of all, and dreaded on a hostile ground, none daring my affront.
 I was swoll'n with pride into the snare I fell of fair fallacious looks, venereal trains,
 dress'd with pleasure and voluptuous life.
 I gave length to lay my head and hallow'd pledge of all my strength in the lascivious lap of a deceitful concubine, who shorn me like a tame wether, all my precious fleece,
 and turn'd me out ridiculous, despoil'd,
 disarmed, and disarm'd among mine enemies.
Chr. Desire of wine and all delicious drinks,
 which many a famous warrior overturns,
 thou couldst repress ; nor did the dancing ruby sparkling, out-pour'd, the flavour, or the smell, or taste that cheers the heart of gods or men,
 lure thee from the cool crystalline stream.
Sams. Wherever fountain or fresh current flow'd glist'ning the eastern ray, translucent, pure
 the touch ethereal of Heaven's fiery rod, drank, from the clear milky juice allaying thirst, and refresh'd : nor envied them the grape low heads that turbulent liquor fills with fumes.
Chr. O madness, to think use of strongest wines and strongest drinks our chief support of health, when God with these forbidd'n made choice to rear
 a mighty champion, strong above compare, whose drink was only from the liquid brook.
Sams. But what avail'd this temperance, not complete
 against another object more enticing ?
 he boots it at one gate to make defence,
 and at another to let in the foe,
 ultimately vanquish'd ? by which means,
 I was blind, dishearten'd, sham'd, dishonour'd,
 quell'd,
 what can I be useful, wherein serve my nation, and the work from Heaven impos'd, to sit idle on the household hearth,
 a burdensome drone ; to visitants a gaze,
 a sightless object, these redundant locks useless to no purpose clustering down, a monument of strength ; till length of years and sedentary numbness craze my limbs in contemptible old age obscure ?
 I would rather let me drudge, and earn my bread ;
 or the drudgery, or the druff of servile food,
 spare me, and oft-invoked death
 be the welcome end of all my pains.
Chr. Wilt thou then serve the Philistines with that gift
 which was expressly given thee to annoy them ?
 that at home he bed-ridden, not only idle,
 but unemployed, with age outworn.
 O God, who caus'd a fountain at thy prayer in the dry ground to spring, thy thirst to allay

After the brunt of battle, can as easy
 Cause light again within thy eyes to spring,
 Wherewith to serve him better than thou hast ;
 And I persuade me so ; why else this strength
 Miraculous yet remaining in those locks ?
 His might continues in thee not for nought,
 Nor shall his wonderous gifts be frustrate thus.

Sams. All otherwise to me my thoughts portend,
 That these dark orbs no more shall treat with light,
 Nor the other light of life continue long,
 But yield to double darkness nigh at hand :
 So much I feel my genial spirits droop,
 My hopes all flat, Nature within me seems
 In all her functions weary of herself ;
 My race of glory run, and race of shame,
 And I shall shortly be with them that rest. [ceed

Man. Believe not these suggestions, which pro-
 From anguish of the mind and humours black,
 That mingle with thy fancy. I however
 Must not omit a father's timely care
 To prosecute the means of thy deliverance
 By ransom, or how else : meanwhile be calm,
 And healing words from these thy friends admit.

[Exit.]

Sams. O that torment should not be confin'd
 To the body's wounds and sores,
 With maladies innumerable
 In heart, head, breast, and reins ;
 But must secret passage find
 To the inmost mind,
 There exercise all his fierce accidents,
 And on her purest spirits prey,
 As on entrails, joints, and limbs,
 With answerable pains, but more intense,
 Though void of corporal sense.

My griefs not only pain me
 As a lingering disease,
 But, finding no redress, ferment and rage ;
 Nor less than wounds immedicable
 Rankle, and fester, and gangrene,
 To black mortification.
 Thoughts, my tormentors, arm'd with deadly stings,
 Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
 Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise
 Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb
 Or med'cinal liquor can assuage,
 Nor breath of vernal air from snowy Alp.
 Sleep hath forsook and given me o'er
 To death's benumbing opium as my only cure :
 Thence faintings, swoonings of despair,
 And sense of Heaven's desertion.

I was his nursing once, and choice delight,
 His destin'd from the womb,
 Promis'd by heavenly message twice descending.
 Under his special eye
 Abstemious I grew up, and thriv'd amain ;
 He led me on to mightiest deeds,
 Above the nerve of mortal arm,
 Against the uncircumcis'd, our enemies :
 But now hath cast me off as never known,
 And to those cruel enemies,
 Whom I by his appointment had provok'd,
 Left me all helpless, with the irreparable loss
 Of sight, reserv'd alive to be repeated
 The subject of their cruelty or scorn.
 Nor am I in the list of them that hope ;
 Hopeless are all my evils, all remediless :
 This one prayer yet remains, might I be heard,
 No long petition, speedy death,
 The close of all my miseries, and the balm.

Chor. Many are the sayings of the wise,
In ancient and in modern books inroll'd,
Extolling patience as the truest fortitude;
And to the bearing well of all calamities,
All chances incidents to man's frail life,
Consolatories writ
With studied argument, and much persuasion sought
Lenient of grief and anxious thought:
But with the afflicted in his pangs their sound
Little prevails, or rather seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint;
Unless he feel within
Some source of consolation from above,
Secret refreshings, that repair his strength,
And fainting spirits uphold.

God of our fathers, what is man!
That thou towards him with hand so various,
Or might I say contrarious,
Temper'st thy providence through his short course,
Not evenly, as thou rul'st
The angelic orders, and inferior creatures mute,
Irrational and brute.
Nor do I name of men the common rout,
That, wandering loose about,
Grow up and perish, as the summer-fly,
Heads without name no more remember'd;
But such as thou hast solemnly elected,
With gifts and graces eminently adorn'd,
To some great work, thy glory,
And people's safety, which in part they effect:
Yet toward these thus dignified, thou oft,
Amidst their height of noon,
Changest thy countenance, and thy hand, with no regard

Of highest favours past
From thee on them, or them to thee of service.

Nor only dost degrade them, or remit
To life obscur'd, which were a fair dismissal,
But throw'st them lower than thou didst exalt them high,

Unseemly falls in human eye,
Too grievous for the trespass or omission;
Oft leav'st them to the hostile sword
Of heathen and profane, their carcasses
To dogs and fowls a prey, or else captiv'd;
Or to the unjust tribunals, under change of times,
And condemnation of the ingrateful multitude.
If these they 'scape, perhaps in poverty
With sickness and disease thou bow'st them down,
Painful diseases and deform'd
In crude old age;
Though not disordinate, yet causeless suffering
The punishment of dissolute days: in fine,
Just, or unjust, alike seem miserable,
For oft alike both come to evil end.

So deal not with this once thy glorious champion,
The image of thy strength, and mighty minister.
What do I beg? how hast thou dealt already?
Behold him in this state calamitous, and turn
His labours, for thou canst, to peaceful end. —

But who is this, what thing of sea or land?
Female of sex it seems,
That so bedeck'd, ornate, and gay,
Comes this way sailing
Like a stately ship
Of Tarsus, bound for the isles
Of Javan or Gadire
With all her bravery on, and tackle trim,
Sails fill'd, and streamers waving,
Court'd by all the winds that hold them play,

An amber scent of odorous perfume
Her harbinger, a damsel train behind;
Some rich Philistian matron she may seem;
And now at nearer view, no other certain
Than Dalila thy wife. [near m]

Sams. My wife! my traitress: let her not con

Chor. Yet on she moves, now stands and ey thee fix'd,

About to have spoke; but now, with head declin'
Like a fair flower surcharg'd with dew, she weep
And words address'd seem into tears dissolv'd,
Wetting the borders of her silken veil:
But now again she makes address to speak.

[Enter DALILA.]

Dal. With doubtful feet and wavering resoluti
I came, still dreading thy displeasure, Samson,
Which to have merited, without excuse,
I cannot but acknowledge; yet, if tears
May expiate, (though the fact more evil drew
In the perverse event than I foresaw,)
My penance hath not slacken'd, though my pardon
No way assur'd. But conjugal affection,
Prevailing over fear and timorous doubt,
Hath led me on, desirous to behold
Once more thy face, and know of thy estate,
If aught in my ability may serve
To lighten what thou suffer'st, and appease
Thy mind with what amends is in my power,
Though late, yet in some part to recompense
My rash, but more unfortunate, misdeed.

Sams. Out, out, hyæna! these are thy wonted art
And arts of every woman false like thee,
To break all faith, all vows, deceive, betray,
Then as repentant to submit, beseech,
And reconciliation move with feign'd remorse,
Confess, and promise wonders in her change;
Not truly penitent, but chief to try
Her husband, how far urg'd his patience bears,
His virtue or weakness which way to assail:
Then with more cautious and instructed skill
Again transgresses, and again submits;
That wisest and best men, full oft beguil'd,
With goodness principled not to reject
The penitent, but ever to forgive,
Are drawn to wear out miserable days,
Entangled with a poisonous bosom snake,
If not by quick destruction soon cut off,
As I by thee, to ages an example.

Dal. Yet hear me, Samson; not that I endeavour
To lessen or extenuate my offence,
But that on the other side, if it be weigh'd
By itself, with aggravations not surcharg'd,
Or else with just allowance counterpois'd,
I may, if possible, thy pardon find
The easier towards me, or thy hatred less.
First, granting, as I do, it was a weakness
In me, but incident to all our sex,
Curiosity, inquisitive, impórtune,
Of secrets, then with like infirmity
To publish them, both common female faults:
Was it not weakness also to make known
For importunity, that is, for nought,
Wherein consisted all thy strength and safety?
To what I did thou show'd'st me first the way.
But I to enemies reveal'd, and should not:
Nor should'st thou have trusted that to wom
frailty:

Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel.
Let weakness then with weakness come to parls

o near related, or the same of kind.
 Mine forgive mine ; that men may censure thine
 Be gentler, if severely thou exact not
 More strength from me, than in thyself was found.
 And what if love, which thou interpret'st hate,
 The jealousy of love, powerful of sway
 In human hearts, nor less in mind towards thee,
 Caus'd what I did ? I saw thee mutable
 Of fancy, fear'd lest one day thou would'st leave me
 As her at Timna, sought by all means therefore
 How to endear, and hold thee to me firmest :
 No better way I saw than by importuning
 To learn thy secrets, get into my power
 Thy key of strength and safety : thou wilt say,
 Why then reveal'd ? I was assur'd by those Who tempted me, that nothing was design'd
 Against thee but safe custody, and hold :
 That made for me ; I knew that liberty
 Would draw thee forth to perilous enterprises,
 While I at home sat full of cares and fears,
 Feeling thy absence in my widow'd bed ;
 Here I should still enjoy thee, day and night,
 Free and love's prisoner, not the Philistines',
 Whole to myself, unhazarded abroad,
 Fearless at home of partners in my love.
 These reasons in love's law have past for good,
 Though fond and reasonless to some perhaps :
 And love hath oft, well meaning, wrought much woe,
 Yet always pity or pardon hath obtain'd.
 Be not unlike all others, not austere
 As thou art strong, inflexible as steel.
 If thou in strength all mortals dost exceed,
 Is uncompassionate anger do not so.
Sams. How cunningly the sorceress displays
 Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine !
 That malice, not repentance, brought thee hither,
 By this appears : I gave, thou say'st, the example,
 I led the way : bitter reproach, but true ;
 I to myself was false ere thou to me ;
 Each pardon therefore as I give my folly,
 Take to thy wicked deed ; which when thou seest
 Impartial, self-severe, inexorable,
 Thou wilt renounce thy seeking, and much rather Confess it feign'd : weakness is thy excuse,
 And I believe it ; weakness to resist
 Palistian gold : if weakness may excuse,
 What murderer, what traitor, parricide,
 Larcinious, sacrilegious, but may plead it ?
 All wickedness is weakness : that plea therefore
 With God or man will gain thee no remission.
 But love constrain'd thee ; call it furious rage
 To satisfy thy lust : love seeks to have love ;
 My love how could'st thou hope, who took'st the way
 To raise in me inexorable hate,
 Knowing, as needs I must, by thee betray'd ?
 In vain thou striv'st to cover shame with shame,
 Or by evasions thy crime uncover'st more.
Dal. Since thou determin'st weakness for no plea
 In man or woman, though to thy own condemning,
 Hear what assaults I had, what snares besides,
 What sieges girt me round, ere I consented ;
 Which might have aw'd the best resolv'd of men,
 The constantest, to have yielded without blame
 It was not gold, as to my charge thou lay'st,
 That wrought with me : thou know'st the magistrates
 And princes of my country came in person,
 Excited, commanded, threaten'd, urg'd,
 Adjur'd by all the bonds of civil duty
 And of religion, press'd how just it was,
 How honourable, how glorious, to entrap

A common enemy, who had destroy'd
 Such numbers of our nation : and the priest
 Was not behind, but ever at my ear,
 Preaching how meritorious with the gods
 It would be to ensnare an irreligious
 Dishonourer of Dagon : what had I
 To oppose against such powerful arguments ?
 Only my love of thee held long debate,
 And combated in silence all these reasons
 With hard contest : at length that grounded maxim,
 So ripe and celebrated in the mouths
 Of wisest men, that to the public good
 Private respects must yield, with grave authority
 Took full possession of me, and prevail'd ;
 Virtue, as I thought, truth, duty, so enjoining.

Sams. I thought where all thy circling wiles would end ;
 In feign'd religion, smooth hypocrisy !
 But had thy love, still odiously pretended, [thee
 Been, as it ought, sincere, it would have taught
 Far other reasonings, brought forth other deeds.
 I, before all the daughters of my tribe
 And of my nation, chose thee from among
 My enemies, lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st ;
 Too well ; unbosom'd all my secrets to thee,
 Not out of levity, but overpower'd
 By thy request, who could deny thee nothing :
 Yet now am judg'd an enemy. Why then
 Did'st thou at first receive me for thy husband,
 Then, as since then, thy country's foe profess'd ?
 Being once a wife, for me thou wast to leave
 Parents and country ; nor was I their subject,
 Nor under their protection but my own,
 Thou mine, not theirs ; if aught against my life
 Thy country sought of thee, it sought unjustly,
 Against the law of nature, law of nations ;
 No more thy country, but an impious crew
 Of men conspiring to uphold their state
 By worse than hostile deeds, violating the ends
 For which our country is a name so dear ;
 Not therefore to be obey'd. But zeal moved thee ;
 To please thy gods thou didst it ; gods, unable
 To acquit themselves and prosecute their foes
 But by ungodly deeds, the contradiction
 Of their own deity, gods cannot be ;
 Less therefore to be pleas'd, obey'd or fear'd.
 These false pretexts, and varnish'd colours failing,
 Bare in thy guilt, how foul must thou appear ?

Dal. In argument with men a woman ever
 Goes by the worse whatever be her cause. [breath ;
Sams. For want of words no doubt, or lack of Witness when I was worried with thy peals.

Dal. I was a fool, too rash, and quite mistaken
 In what I thought would have succeeded best.
 Let me obtain forgiveness of thee, Samson ;
 Afford me place to show what recompense
 Towards thee I intend for what I have misdone,
 Misguided ; only what remains past cure
 Bear not too sensibly, nor still insist
 To afflict thyself in vain : though sight be lost,
 Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
 Where other senses want not their delights
 At home in leisure and domestic ease,
 Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eye-sight exposes daily men abroad.
 I to the lords will intercede, not doubting
 Their favourable ear, that I may fetch thee
 From forth this loathsome prison-house to abide
 With me, where my redoubled love and care
 With nursing diligence, to me glad office,

May ever tend about thee to old age,
With all things grateful cheer'd, and so supplied,
That, what by me thou hast lost, thou least shalt miss.

Sams. No, no; of my condition take no care;
It fits not; thou and I long since are twain;
Nor think me so unwary or accurs'd,
To bring my feet again into the snare [trains,
Where once I have been caught: I know thy
Though dearly to my cost, thy gins, and toils;
Thy fair enchanted cup, and warbling charms,
No more on me have power; their force is null'd;
So much of adder's wisdom I have learn'd,
To fence my ear against thy sorceries.
If in my flower of youth and strength, when all men
Lov'd, honour'd, fear'd me, thou alone could'st hate me

Thy husband, slight me, sell me, and forego me;
How wouldst thou use me now, blind, and thereby
Deceivable, in most things as a child
Helpless, thence easily contemn'd and scorn'd,
And last neglected? How would'st thou insult,
When I must live uxurious to thy will
In perfect thralldom, how again betray me,
Bearing my words and doings to the lords
To gloss upon, and, censuring, frown or smile?
This jail I count the house of liberty
To thine, whose doors my feet shall never enter.

Dal. Let me approach at least, and touch thy hand. [wake

Sams. Not for thy life, lest fierce remembrance
My sudden rage to tear thee joint by joint.
At distance I forgive thee; go with that;
Bewail thy falsehood, and the pious works
It hath brought forth to make thee memorable
Among illustrious women, faithful wives!
Cherish thy hasten'd widowhood with the gold
Of matrimonial treason! so farewell.

Dal. I see thou art implacable, more deaf
To prayers, than winds and seas; yet winds to seas
Are reconcil'd at length, and sea to shore:
Thy anger, unappeasable, still rages,
Eternal tempest, never to be calm'd.
Why do I humble thus myself, and, suing
For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate?
Bid go with evil omen, and the brand
Of infamy upon my name denounc'd?
To mix with thy concerns I desist
Henceforth, nor too much disapprove my own.
Fame, if not double-fac'd, is double-mouth'd,
And with contrary blast proclaims most deeds;
On both his wings, one black, the other white,
Bears greatest names in his wild airy flight.
My name perhaps among the circumcis'd
In Dan, in Judah, and the bordering tribes,
To all posterity may stand defam'd,
With malediction mention'd, and the blot
Of falsehood most unconjugal traduc'd.
But in my country, where I most desire,
In Ecron, Gaza, Asdod, and in Gath,
I shall be nam'd among the famoussest
Of women, sung at solemn festivals,
Living and dead recorded, who, to save
Her country from a fierce destroyer, chose
Above the faith of wedlock-bands; my tomb
With odours visited and annual flowers;
Not less renown'd than in mount Ephraim
Jael, who with hospitable guile
Smote Sisera sleeping, through the temples nail'd.
Nor shall I count it heinous to enjoy

The public marks of honour and reward,
Conferr'd upon me, for the piety
Which to my country I was judg'd to have shown.
At this whoever envies or repines,
I leave him to his lot, and like my own. [Exit]

Chor. She's gone, a manifest serpent by her sting
Discover'd in the end, till now conceal'd.

Sams. So let her go; God sent her to debase me
And aggravate my folly, who committed
To such a viper his most sacred trust
Of secrecy, my safety, and my life. [power]

Chor. Yet beauty, though injurious, hath strange
After offence returning, to regain
Love once possess'd, nor can be easily
Repuls'd, without much inward passion felt
And secret sting of amorous remorse.

Sams. Love-quarrels oft in pleasing concord end
Not wedlock-treachery endangering life.

Chor. It is not virtue, wisdom, valour, wit,
Strength, comeliness of shape, or amplest merit,
That woman's love can win, or long inherit;
But what it is, hard is to say,
Harder to hit,

(Which way soever men refer it,)
Much like thy riddle, Samson, in one day
Or seven, though one should musing sit.

If any of these, or all, the Timnian bride
Had not so soon preferr'd
Thy paranymp, worthless to thee compar'd,
Successor in thy bed,
Nor both so loosely disallied
Their nuptials, nor this last so treacherous
Had shorn the fatal harvest of thy head.
Is it for that such outward ornament
Was lavish'd on their sex, that inward gifts
Were left for haste unfinish'd, judgment scant,
Capacity not rais'd to apprehend
Or value what is best

In choice, but ofttest to affect the wrong?
Or was too much of self-love mix'd,
Of constancy no root infix'd,
That either they love nothing, or not long?

Whate'er it be, to wisest men and best
Seeming at first all heavenly under virgin veil,
Soft, modest, meek, demure,
Once join'd, the contrary she proves, a thorn
Intestine, far within defensive arms
A cleaving mischief, in his way to virtue
Adverse and turbulent, or by her charms
Draws him awry enslav'd
With dotage, and his sense deprav'd
To folly and shameful deeds which ruin ends.
What pilot so expert but needs must wreck
Imbark'd with such a steers-mate at the helm?

Favour'd of Heaven, who finds
One virtuous, rarely found,
That in domestic good combines:
Happy that house! his way to peace is smooth:
But virtue, which breaks through all opposition,
And all temptation can remove,
Most shines, and most is acceptable above.

Therefore God's universal law
Gave to the man despotic power
Over his female in due awe,
Nor from that right to part an hour,
Smile she or lour:
So shall he least confusion draw
On his whole life, not sway'd
By female usurpation, or dismay'd.
But had we best retire? I see a storm.

Sams. Fair days have oft contracted wind and rain.

Chr. But this another kind of tempest brings.

Sams. Be less abstruse, my riddling days are past.

Chr. Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honied words ; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward ; I know him by his stride,
The giant Harapha of Gath, his look
Haughty, as is his pile high-built and proud.
Comes he in peace ? what wind hath blown him
hither

I less conjecture than when first I saw
The sumptuous Dalila floating this way :
His habit carries peace, his brow defiance.

Sams. Or peace, or not, alike to me he comes.

Chr. His fraught we soon shall know, he now arrives.

[Enter HARAPHA.]

Har. I come not, Samson, to condole thy chance,
As these perhaps, yet wish it had not been,
Though for no friendly intent. I am of Gath ;
Men call me Harapha, of stock renown'd
As Oz, or Anak, and the Emims old
That Kiriathaim held ; thou know'st me now
If thou at all art known. Much I have heard
Of thy prodigious might and feats perform'd,
Incredible to me, in this displeas'd,
That I was never present on the place
Of those encounters, where we might have tried
Each other's force in camp or listed field ;
And now am come to see of whom such noise
Hath walk'd about, and each limb to survey,
If thy appearance answer loud report.

Sams. The way to know were not to see but taste.

Har. Dost thou already single me ? I thought
Gyres and the mill had tamed thee. O that fortune
Had brought me to the field, where thou art fam'd
To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw !
I could have forc'd thee soon with other arms,
Or left thy carcass where the ass lay thrown :
So had the glory of prowess been recover'd
To Palestine, won by a Philistine,
From the unforeskinn'd race, of whom thou bear'st
The highest name for valiant acts ; that honour,
Certain to have won by mortal duel from thee,
I see, prevented by thy eyes put out.

Sams. Boast not of what thou would'st have done,
but do

What then thou would'st ; thou seest it in thy hand.

Har. To combat with a blind man I disdain,
And thou hast need much washing to be touch'd.

Sams. Such usage as your honourable lords
Afford me, assassinated and betray'd,
Who durst not with their whole united powers
In fight withstand me single and unarm'd,
Nor in the house with chamber-ambushes
Un-banded durst attack me, no, not sleeping,
Till they had hir'd a woman with their gold
Breaking her marriage-faith to circumvent me.
Therefore, without feign'd shifts, let be assign'd
Some narrow place enclos'd, where sight may give thee,

Or rather flight, no great advantage on me ;
Then put on all thy gorgeous arms, thy helmet
And brigandine of brass, thy broad habergeon,
Vambrace and greaves, and gauntlet, add thy spear,
A weaver's beam, and seven-times-folded shield ;
I only with an oaken staff will meet thee,

And raise such outcries on thy clatter'd iron,
Which long shall not withhold me from thy head,
That in a little time, while breath remains thee,
Thou oft shalt wish thyself at Gath to boast
Again in safety what thou would'st have done
To Samson, but shalt never see Gath more.

Har. Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms,

Which greatest heroes have in battle worn,
Their ornament and safety, had not spells
And black enchantments, some magician's art,
Arm'd thee or charm'd thee strong, which thou from Heaven

Feign'dst at thy birth, was given thee in thy hair,
Where strength can least abide, though all thy hairs
Were bristles rang'd like those that ridge the back
Of chaf'd wild boars, or ruffled porcupines.

Sams. I know no spells, use no forbidden arts ;
My trust is in the living God, who gave me
At my nativity this strength, diffus'd
No less through all my sinews, joints, and bones,
Than thine, while I preserv'd these locks unshorn,
The pledge of my unviolated vow.
For proof hereof, if Dagon be thy god,
Go to his temple, invoke his aid
With solemnest devotion, spread before him
How highly it concerns his glory now
To frustrate and dissolve these magic spells,
Which I to be the power of Israel's God
Avow, and challenge Dagon to the test,
Offering to combat thee his champion bold,
With the utmost of his Godhead seconded :
Then thou shalt see, or rather, to thy sorrow,
Soon feel, whose God is strongest, thine or mine.

Har. Presume not on thy God, whate'er he be ;
Thee he regards not, owns not, hath cut off
Quite from his people, and deliver'd up
Into thy enemies' hand, permitted them
To put out both thine eyes, and fetter'd send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses thy comrades,
As good for nothing else ; no better service
With those thy boisterous locks, no worthy match
For valour to assail, nor by the sword
Of noble warrior, so to stain his honour,
But by the barber's razor best subdued.

Sams. All these indignities, for such they are
From thine, these evils I deserve, and more,
Acknowledge them from God inflicted on me
Justly, yet despair not of his final pardon,
Whose ear is ever open, and his eye
Gracious to re-admit the suppliant :
In confidence whereof I once again
Defy thee to the trial of mortal fight,
By combat to decide whose God is God,
Thine, or whom I with Israel's sons adore.

Har. Fair honour that thou dost thy God, in trusting

He will accept thee to defend this cause,
A murderer, a revolter, and a robber !

Sams. Tongue-doughty giant, how dost thou prove me these ?

Har. Is not thy nation subject to our lords ?
Their magistrates confess'd it when they took thee
As a league-breaker, and deliver'd bound
Into our hands : for hadst thou not committed
Notorious murder on those thirty men
At Ascalon, who never did thee harm,
Then like a robber stripp'dst them of their robes ?
The Philistines, when thou hadst broke the league,

Went up with armed powers thee only seeking,
To others did no violence nor spoil.

Sams. Among the daughters of the Philistines
I chose a wife, which argued me no foe ;
And in your city held my nuptial feast :
But your ill-meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies,
Who, threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wring from me, and tell to them, my secret,
That solv'd the riddle which I had propos'd.
When I perceiv'd all set on enmity,
As on my enemies, wherever chanc'd,
I us'd hostility, and took their spoil,
To pay my underminers in their coin.
My nation was subjected to your lords ;
It was the force of conquest : force with force
Is well ejected when the conquer'd can.
But I a private person, whom my country
As a league-breaker gave up bound, presum'd
Single rebellion, and did hostile acts.
I was no private, but a person rais'd [Heaven,
With strength sufficient, and command from
To free my country ; if their servile minds
Me, their deliverer sent, would not receive,
But to their masters gave me up for nought,
The unworthier they ; whence to this day they serve.
I was to do my part from Heaven assign'd,
And had perform'd it, if my known offence
Had not disabled me, not all your force :
These shifts refuted, answer thy appellant, [tempts,
Though by his blindness maim'd for high at-
Who now defies thee thrice to single fight,
As a petty enterprise of small enforce. [roll'd,

Har. With thee ! a man condemn'd, a slave en-
Due by the law to capital punishment !
To fight with thee no man of arms will deign.

Sams. Can'st thou for this, vain boaster, to survey me,

To descant on my strength, and give thy verdict ?
Come nearer ; part not hence so slight inform'd ;
But take good heed my hand survey not thee.

Har. O Baal-zebub ! can my ears unus'd
Hear these dishonours, and not render death ?

Sams. No man withholds thee, nothing from thy hand

Fear I incurable ; bring up thy van,
My heels are fetter'd, but my fist is free.

Har. This insolence other kind of answer fits.

Sams. Go, baffled coward ! lest I run upon thee,
Though in these chains, bulk without spirit vast,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low,
Or swing thee in the air, then dash thee down
To the hazard of thy brains and shatter'd sides.

Har. By Astaroth, ere long thou shalt lament
These braveries, in irons loaden on thee. [Exit.]

Chor. His giantship is gone somewhat crestfallen,
Stalking with less unconscionable strides,
And lower looks, but in a sultry chafe.

Sams. I dread him not, nor all his giant-brood,
Though fame divulge him father of five sons,
All of gigantic size, Goliath chief.

Chor. He will directly to the lords, I fear,
And with malicious counsel stir them up
Some way or other yet further to afflict thee. [fight

Sams. He must allege some cause, and offer'd
Will not dare mention, lest a question rise
Whether he durst accept the offer or not ;
And, that he durst not, plain enough appear'd.
Much more affliction than already felt

They cannot well impose, nor I sustain ;
If they intend advantage of my labours,
The work of many hands, which earns my keeping
With no small profit daily to my owners.
But come what will, my deadliest foe will prove
My speediest friend, by death to rid me hence ;
The worst that he can give to me the best.
Yet so it may fall out, because their end
Is hate, not help to me, it may with mine
Draw their own ruin who attempt the deed.

Chor. Oh how comely it is, and how reviving
To the spirits of just men long oppress'd !
When God into the hands of their deliverer
Puts invincible might
To quell the mighty of the Earth, the oppressor,
The brute and boisterous force of violent men,
Hardy and industrious to support
Tyrannic power, but raging to pursue
The righteous and all such as honour truth ;
He all their ammunition
And feats of war defeats,
With plain heroic magnitude of mind
And celestial vigour arm'd ;
Their armouries and magazines contemns
Renders them useless ; while
With winged expedition,
Swift as the lightning glance, he executes
His errand on the wicked, who, surpris'd,
Lose their defence, distracted and amaz'd.

But patience is more oft the exercise
Of saints, the trial of their fortitude,
Making them each his own deliverer
And victory over all
That tyranny or fortune can inflict.
Either of these is in thy lot,
Samson, with might endued
Above the sons of men ; but sight bereav'd
May chance to number thee with those Whom patience finally must crown.

This idol's day hath been to thee no day of rest
Labouring thy mind
More than the working day thy hands.
And yet perhaps more trouble is behind,
For I descry this way
Some other tending ; in his hand
A sceptre or quaint staff he bears,
Comes on amain, speed in his look.
By his habit I discern him now
A public officer, and now at hand ;
His message will be short and voluble.

[Enter OFFICER.]

Off. Hebrews, the prisoner Samson here I seek.

Chor. His manacles remark him, there he sits.

Off. Samson, to thee our lords thus bid me say
This day to Dagon is a solemn feast,
With sacrifices, triumph, pomp, and games :
Thy strength they know surpassing human rate,
And now some public proof thereof require
To honour this great feast, and great assembly :
Rise therefore with all speed, and come along,
Where I will see thee hearten'd, and fresh clad,
To appear as fits before the illustrious lords.

Sams. Thou know'st I am an Hebrew, therefore tell them,

Our law forbids at their religious rites

My presence ; for that cause I cannot come.

Off. This answer, be assur'd, will not content them.

Sams. Have they not sword-players, and every so

Of gymnastic artists, wrestlers, riders, runners,
Jugglers, and dancers, antics, mummers, mimics,
But they must pick me out, with shackles tir'd,
And over-labour'd at their public mill,
To make them sport with blind activity?
Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels
On my refusal to distress me more,
Or make a game of my calamities?
Returns the way thou cam'st, I will not come.

Off. Regard thyself; this will offend them highly.

Sams. Myself? my conscience, and internal peace.

Can they think me so broken, so debas'd
With corporal servitude, that my mind ever
Will condescend to such absurd commands?
Although their drudge, to be their fool or jester,
And in my midst of sorrow and heart-grief
To show them feats, and play before their god,
The worst of all indignities, yet on me
Join'd with extreme contempt? I will not come.

Off. My message was impos'd on me with speed,
Brooks no delay: is this thy resolution?

Sams. So take it with what speed thy message
needs.

Off. I am sorry what this stoutness will produce.
[Exit.]

Sams. Perhaps thou shalt have cause to sorrow indeed.

Chr. Consider, Samson; matters now are strain'd
Up to the height, whether to hold or break:
He's gone, and who knows how he may report
Thy words by adding fuel to the flame?
Expect another message more imperious,
More lordly thundering than thou wilt bear.

Sams. Shall I abuse this consecrated gift
Of strength, again returning with my hair
After my great transgression, so requite
Favour renew'd, and add a greater sin
By prostituting holy things to idols?
A Nazarite in place abominable
Varying my strength in honour to their Dagon!
Besides, how vile, contemptible, ridiculous,
What act more execrably unclean, prophane?

Chr. Yet with this strength thou serv'st the Philistines,

Moltrous, uncircumcis'd, unclean.

Sams. Not in their idol-worship, but by labour
Honest and lawful to deserve my food
Of those who have me in their civil power.

Chr. Where the heart joins not, outward acts defile not. [tence holds.]

Sams. Where outward force constrains, the sense who constrains me to the temple of Dagon,
Not dragging? the Philistian lords command.
Commands are no constraints. If I obey them,
I do it freely, venturing to displease
God for the fear of man, and man prefer,
Let God behind; which in his jealousy
Shall never, unrepented, find forgiveness.
Yet that he may dispense with me, or thee,
Present in temples at idolatrous rites
For some important cause, thou need'st not doubt.

Chr. How thou wilt here come off surmounts my reach.

Sams. Be of good courage; I begin to feel
Some rousing motions in me, which dispose
To something extraordinary my thoughts.
I with this messenger will go along,
Nothing to do, be sure, that may dishonour
Our law, or stain my vow of Nazarite.
Is there be aught of presage in the mind,

This day will be remarkable in my life
By some great act, or of my days the last.

Chor. In time thou hast resolv'd, the man returns.

Off. Samson, this second message from our lords
To thee I am bid say. Art thou our slave,
Our captive at the public mill, our drudge,
And dar'st thou at our sending and command
Dispute thy coming? come without delay;
Or we shall find such engines to assail
And hamper thee, as thou shalt come of force,
Though thou wert firmler fasten'd than a rock.

Sams. I could be well content to try their art,
Which to no few of them would prove pernicious.
Yet, knowing their advantages too many,
Because they shall not trail me through their streets
Like a wild beast, I am content to go.
Masters' commands come with a power resistless
To such as owe them absolute subjection;
And for a life who will not change his purpose?
(So mutable are all the ways of men;)
Yet this be sure, in nothing to comply
Scandalous or forbidden in our law.

Off. I praise thy resolution: doff these links:
By this compliance thou wilt win the lords
To favour, and perhaps to set thee free.

Sams. Brethren, farewell; your company along
I will not wish, lest it perhaps offend them
To see me girt with friends; and how the sight
Of me, as of a common enemy,
So dreaded once, may now exasperate them,
I know not: lords are lordliest in their wine;
And the well-feasted priest then soonest fir'd
With zeal, if aught religion seem concern'd;
No less the people, on their holy-days,
Impetuous, insolent, unquenchable:
Happen what may, of me expect to hear
Nothing dishonourable, impure, unworthy
Our God, our law, my nation, or myself,
The last of me or no I cannot warrant.

Chor. Go, and the Holy One
Of Israel be thy guide [name
To what may serve his glory best, and spread his Great among the Heathen round;
Send thee the angel of thy birth, to stand
Fast by thy side, who from thy father's field
Rode up in flames after his message told
Of thy conception, and be now a shield
Of fire; that spirit, that first rush'd on thee
In the camp of Dan,
Be efficacious in thee now at need.
For never was from Heaven imparted
Measure of strength so great to mortal seed,
As in thy wondrous actions hath been seen. —
But wherefore comes old Manoah in such haste
With youthful steps? much livelier than ere while
He seems; supposing here to find his son,
Or of him bringing to us some glad news?

[Enter MANOAH.]

Man. Peace with you, brethren; my inducement
hither

Was not at present here to find my son,
By order of the lords now parted hence
To come and play before them at their feast.
I heard all-as I came, the city rings,
And numbers thither flock: I had no will,
Lest I should see him forc'd to things unseemly.
But that, which mov'd my coming now, was chiefly
To give ye part with me what hope I have
With good success to work his liberty.

Chor. That hope would much rejoice us to partake
With thee; say, reverend sire, we thirst to hear.

Man. I have attempted one by one the lords
Either at home, or through the high street passing,
With supplication prone and father's tears,
To accept of ransom for my son their prisoner.
Some much averse I found and wondrous harsh,
Contemptuous, proud, set on revenge and spite;
That part most reverenc'd Dagon and his priests:
Others more moderate seeming, but their aim
Private reward, for which both God and state
They easily would set to sale: a third
More generous far and civil, who confess'd
They had enough reveng'd; having reduc'd
Their foe to misery beneath their fears,
The rest was magnanimity to remit,
If some convenient ransom were propos'd.
What noise or shout was that? it tore the sky.

Chor. Doubtless the people shouting to behold
Their once great dread, captive, and blind before them,

Or at some proof of strength before them shown.

Man. His ransom, if my whole inheritance
May compass it, shall willingly be paid
And number'd down: much rather I shall choose
To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,
And he in that calamitous prison left.
No, I am fix'd not to part hence without him.
For his redemption all my patrimony,
If need be, I am ready to forego
And quit: not wanting him, I shall want nothing.

Chor. Fathers are wont to lay up for their sons,
Thou for thy son art bent to lay out all;
Sons wont to nurse their parents in old age,
Thou in old age car'st how to nurse thy son,
Made older than thy age through eye-sight lost.

Man. It shall be my delight to tend his eyes,
And view him sitting in the house, ennobled
With all those high exploits by him achiev'd,
And on his shoulders waving down those locks
That of a nation arm'd the strength contain'd:
And I persuade me, God had not permitted
His strength again to grow up with his hair,
Garrison'd round about him like a camp
Of faithful soldiery, were not his purpose
To use him further yet in some great service;
Not to sit idle with so great a gift
Useless, and thence ridiculous about him.
And since his strength with eye-sight was not lost,
God will restore him eye-sight to his strength. [vain

Chor. Thy hopes are not ill-founded, nor seem
Of his delivery, and the joy thereon
Conceiv'd, agreeable to a father's love,
In both which we, as next, participate. [noise! —

Man. I know your friendly minds and — O what Mercy of Heaven, what hideous noise was that Horribly loud, unlike the former shout.

Chor. Noise call you it, or universal groan,
As if the whole inhabitation perish'd!
Blood, death, and deathful deeds, are in that noise,
Ruin, destruction at the utmost point.

Man. Of ruin indeed methought I heard the noise:
Oh! it continues, they have slain my son.

Chor. Thy son is rather slaying them: that outcry
From slaughter of one foe could not ascend.

Man. Some dismal accident it needs must be;
What shall we do, stay here or run and see?

Chor. Best keep together here, lest, running thither,
We unawares run into danger's mouth.

This evil on the Philistines is fall'n:
From whom could else a general cry be heard?
The sufferers then will scarce molest us here;
From other hands we need not much to fear.
What if, his eye-sight (for to Israel's God
Nothing is hard) by miracle restor'd,
He now be dealing dole among his foes,
And over heaps of slaughter'd walk his way?

Man. That were a joy presumptuous to be thought.

Chor. Yet God hath wrought things as incredible
For his people of old; what hinders now?

Man. He can, I know, but doubt to think he will,
Yet hope would fain subscribe, and tempts belief.
A little stay will bring some notice hither.

Chor. Of good or bad so great, of bad the sooner;
For evil news rides post, while good news bates.
And to our wish I see one hither speeding,
An Hebrew, as I guess, and of our tribe.

[Enter MESSENGER.]

Mess. O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold
For dire imagination still pursues me.
But providence or instinct of nature seems,
Or reason though disturb'd, and scarce consulted,
To have guided me aright, I know not how,
To thee first, reverend Manoah, and to these
My countrymen, whom here I knew remaining.
As at some distance from the place of horror,
So in the sad event too much concern'd. [thee

Man. The accident was loud, and here before
With rueful cry, yet what it was we hear not;
No preface needs, thou seest we long to know.

Mess. It would burst forth, but I recover breath
And sense distract, to know well what I utter.

Man. Tell us the sum, the circumstance defer.

Mess. Gaza yet stands, but all her sons are fall'n,
All in a moment overwhelm'd and fall'n. [saddles

Man. Sad, but thou know'st to Israelites not
The desolation of a hostile city. [surfel

Mess. Feed on that first: there may in grief be

Man. Relate by whom.

Mess. By Samson.

Man. That still lessens
The sorrow, and converts it nigh to joy.

Mess. Ah! Manoah, I refrain too suddenly
To utter what will come at last too soon;
Lest evil tidings with too rude irruption
Hitting thy aged ear should pierce too deep. [out

Man. Suspense in news is torture, speak then

Mess. Take then the worst in brief, Samson dead. [seate

Man. The worst indeed, O all my hopes do
To free him hence! but death, who sets all free,
Hath paid his ransom now and full discharge.
What windy joy this day had I conceiv'd
Hopeful of his delivery, which now proves
Abortive as the first-born bloom of spring
Nipt with the lagging rear of winter's frost!
Yet ere I give the reins to grief, say first,
How died he; death to life is crown or shame.
All by him fell, thou say'st: by whom fell he?
What glorious hand gave Samson his death's wound?

Mess. Unwounded of his enemies he fell. [plain

Man. Wearied with slaughter then, or how? c

Mess. By his own hands.

Man. Self-violence? what cause
Brought him so soon at variance with himself
Among his foes?

Men. Inevitable cause,
At once both to destroy, and be destroy'd ;
The edifice, where all were met to see him,
Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd.

Man. O lastly over-strong against thyself !
A dreadful way thou took'st to thy revenge.
More than enough we know ; but while things yet
Are in confusion, give us, if thou canst,
Eye-witness of what first or last was done,
Relation more particular and distinct.

Men. Occasions drew me early to this city ;
And, as the gates I enter'd with sun-rise,
The morning trumpets festival proclaim'd
Through each high street : little I had despatch'd,
When all abroad was rumour'd that this day
Samson should be brought forth, to show the people
Proof of his mighty strength in feats and games ;
I sorrow'd at his captive state, but minded
Not to be absent at that spectacle.

The building was a spacious theatre
Half-round, on two main pillars vaulted high,
With seats where all the lords, and each degree
Of sort, might sit in order to behold !
The other side was open, where the throng
On banks and scaffolds under sky might stand ;
I among these aloof obscurely stood.
The feast and noon grew high, and sacrifice [wine,
Had fill'd their hearts with mirth, high cheer, and
When to their sports they turn'd. Immediately
Was Samson as a public servant brought,
In their state livery clad ; before him pipes,
And timbrels, on each side went armed guards,
Both horse and foot, before him and behind
Archers, and slingers, cataphracts and spears.
At sight of him the people with a shout
Rifted the air, clamouring their God with praise,
Who had made their dreadful enemy their thrall.
He patient, but undaunted, where they led him,
Came to the place ; and what was set before him,
Which without help of eye might be assay'd,
To heave, pull, draw, or break, he still perform'd
All with incredible, stupendous force ;
None daring to appear antagonist.

At length for intermission's sake they led him
Between the pillars ; he his guide requested
(For so from such as nearer stood we heard)
As over-tir'd to let him lean a while
With both his arms on those two massy pillars,
That to the arched roof gave main support.
He, unsuspecting, led him ; which when Samson
Felt in his arms, with head a while inclin'd,
And eyes fast fix'd he stood, as one who pray'd,
Of some great matter in his mind revolv'd :
At last with head erect thus cried aloud,
" Hitherto, lords, what your commands impos'd
I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying,
Not without wonder or delight beheld :
Now of my own accord such other trial
I mean to show you of my strength, yet greater,
As with amaze shall strike all who behold."
He utter'd, straining all his nerves he bow'd,
As with the force of winds and waters pent,
When mountains tremble, those two massy pillars
With horrible convulsion to and fro
He tugg'd, he shook, till down they came and drew
The whole roof after them, with burst of thunder
Upon the heads of all who sat beneath,
Lords, ladies, captains, counsellors, or priests,
Their choice nobility and flower, not only
Of this but each Philistian city round,

Met from all parts to solemnize this feast.
Samson, with these immix'd, inevitably
Pull'd down the same destruction on himself ;
The vulgar only 'scap'd who stood without.

Chor. O dearly-bought revenge, yet glorious !
Living or dying thou hast fulfill'd
The work for which thou wast foretold
To Israel, and now ly'st victorious
Among thy slain self-kill'd,
Not willingly, but tangled in the fold
Of dire necessity, whose law in death conjoin'd
Thee with thy slaughter'd foes, in number more
Than all thy life hath slain before. [sublime,

1. Semichor. While their hearts were jocund and Drunk with idolatry, drunk with wine,
And fat regorg'd of bulls and goats,
Chanting their idol, and preferring
Before our living Dread who dwells
In Silo, his bright sanctuary :
Among them he a spirit of phrenzy sent,
Who hurt their minds,
And urg'd them on with mad desire
To call in haste for their destroyer ;
They, only set on sport and play,
Unweetingly importun'd
Their own destruction to come speedy upon them.
So fond are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine.

As their own ruin on themselves to invite,
Insensate left, or to sense reprobate,
And with blindness internal struck.
2. Semichor. But he, though blind of sight,
Despis'd and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under ashes into sudden flame,
And as an evening dragon came,
Assailant on the perched roosts
And nests in order rang'd
Of tame villatic fowl ; but as an eagle
His cloudless thunder bolted on their heads.
So virtue, given for lost,
Depress'd, and overthrown, as seem'd,
Like that self-begotten bird
In the Arabian woods embost,
That no second knows nor third,
And lay ere while a holocaust,
From out her ashy womb now teem'd,
Revives, reflowerishes, then vigorous most
When most unactive deem'd ;
And, though her body die, her fame survives
A secular bird ages of lives.

Man. Come, come ; no time for lamentation now
Nor much more cause ; Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
A life heroic, on his enemies
Fully reveng'd, hath left them years of mourning,
And lamentation to the sons of Caphtor
Through all Philistian bounds, to Israel
Honour hath left, and freedom, let but them
Find courage to lay hold on this occasion ;
To himself and father's house eternal fame ;
And, which is best and happiest yet, all this
With God not parted from him, as was fear'd,
But favouring and assisting to the end.
Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wail
Or knock the breast ; no weakness, no contempt,
Dispraise, or blame ; nothing but well and fair,
And what may quiet us in a death so noble.
Let us go find the body where it lies

Soak'd in his enemies' blood ; and from the stream
 With lavers pure, and cleansing herbs, wash off
 The clotted gore. I, with what speed the while,
 (Gaza is not in plight to say us nay,)
 Will send for all my kindred, all my friends,
 To fetch him hence, and solemnly attend
 With silent obsequy, and funeral train,
 Home to his father's house : there will I build him
 A monument, and plant it round with shade
 Of laurel ever green, and branching palm,
 With all his trophies hung, and acts inroll'd
 In copious legend, or sweet lyric song.
 Thither shall all the valiant youth resort,
 And from his memory inflame their breasts
 To matchless valour, and adventures high :
 The virgins also shall, on feastful days,
 Visit his tomb with flowers ; only bewailing
 His lot unfortunate in nuptial choice,
 From whence captivity and loss of eyes.

Chor. All is best, though we oft doubt.
 What the unsearchable dispose
 Of highest Wisdom brings about,
 And ever best found in the close.
 Oft he seems to hide his face,
 But unexpectedly returns,
 And to his faithful champion hath in place
 Bore witness gloriously ; whence Gaza mourns,
 And all that band them to resist
 His uncontrollable intent ;
 His servants he, with new acquist
 Of true experience, from this great event
 With peace and consolation hath dismiss'd,
 And calm of mind, all passion spent.

CHRISTMAS HYMN.

It was the winter wild,
 While the Heaven-born child.

All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies ;
 Nature in awe to him,
 Had doff'd her gaudy trim,

With her great Master so to sympathize :
 It was no season then for her
 To wanton with the Sun, her lusty paramour.

Only with speeches fair
 She woos the gentle air
 To hide her guilty front with innocent snow ;
 And on her naked shame,
 Pollute with sinful blame,

The saintly veil of maiden white to throw ;
 Confounded, that her Maker's eyes
 Should look so near upon her foul deformities.

But he, her fears to cease,
 Sent down the meek-ey'd Peace ;

She, crown'd with olive green, came softly sliding
 Down through the turning sphere,
 His ready barbing,

With turtle wing the amorous clouds dividing ;
 And, waving wide her myrtle wand,
 She strikes an universal peace through sea and land.

No war, or battle's sound,
 Was heard the world around :

The idle spear and shield were high up hung,
 The hooked chariot stood
 Unstain'd with hostile blood ;

The trumpet spake not to the armed throng ;
 And kings sat still with awful eye,
 As if they surely knew their sovran Lord was by

But peaceful was the night,
 Wherein the Prince of light

His reign of peace upon the Earth began :
 The winds, with wonder whist,
 Smoothly the waters kist,

Whispering new joys to the mild ocean,
 Who now hath quite forgot to rave, [wave.
 While birds of calm sit brooding on the charmed

The stars, with deep amaze,
 Stand fix'd in stedfast gaze,

Bending one way their precious influence ;
 And will not take their flight,
 For all the morning light,

Or Lucifer that often warn'd them thence ;
 But in their glimmering orbs did glow,
 Until their Lord himself bespake, and bid them go

And, though the shady gloom
 Had given day her room,

The Sun himself withheld his wonted speed,
 And hid his head for shame,
 As his inferior flame

The new-enlighten'd world no more should need :
 He saw a greater Sun appear [bear.
 Than his bright throne, or burning axletree, could

The shepherds on the lawn,
 Or e'er the point of dawn,

Sat simply chatting in a rustic row ;
 Full little thought they then,
 That the mighty Pan

Was kindly come to live with them below ;
 Perhaps their loves, or else their sheep,
 Was all that did their silly thoughts so busy keep.

When such music sweet

Their hearts and ears did greet,
 As never was by mortal finger strook ;
 Divinely-warbled voice

Answering the stringed noise,
 As all their souls in blissful rapture took :
 The air, such pleasure loth to lose, [close
 With thousand echoes still prolongs each heaven

Nature that heard such sound,
 Beneath the hollow round

Of Cynthia's seat, the aery region thrilling,
 Now was almost won
 To think her part was done,

And that her reign had here its last fulfilling ;
 She knew such harmony alone
 Could hold all Heaven and Earth in happier union

At last surrounds their sight

A globe of circular light, [array'd
 That with long beams the shamefac'd nig
 The helmed Cherubim,
 And sworded Seraphim,

Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd
 Harping in loud and solemn quire, [He
 With unexpressive notes, to Heaven's new-bo

Such music (as 'tis said)
 Before was never made,
 But when of old the sons of morning sung,
 While the Creator great
 His constellations set,
 And the well-balanc'd world on hinges hung ;
 And cast the dark foundations deep, [keep.
 And bid the weltering waves their oozy channel

Ring out, ye crystal spheres,
 Once bless our human ears,
 If ye have power to touch our senses so ;
 And let your silver chime
 Move in melodious time ;
 And let the base of Heaven's deep organ blow ;
 And with your ninefold harmony,
 Make up full consort to the angelic symphony.

For, if such holy song
 Enwrap our fancy long,
 Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold ;
 And speckled Vanity
 Will sicken soon and die,
 And leprous Sin will melt from earthly mould ;
 And Hell itself will pass away,
 And leave her dolorous mansions to the peering day.

Yea, Truth and Justice then
 Will down return to men,
 Orb'd in a rainbow ; and, like glories wearing,
 Mercy will sit between,
 Thron'd in celestial sheen,
 With radiant feet the tissued clouds down steering ;
 And Heaven, as at some festival,
 Will open wide the gates of her high palace hall.

But wisest Fate says no,
 This must not yet be so,
 The babe yet lies in smiling infancy,
 That on the bitter cross
 Must redeem our loss ;
 So both himself and us to glorify :
 Yet first, to those ychain'd in sleep, [the deep ;
 The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through

With such a horrid clang
 As on mount Sinai rang, [brake :
 While the red fire and smouldering clouds out-
 The aged Earth aghast
 With terror of that blast,
 Shall from the surface to the centre shake ;
 When, at the world's last session, [throne.
 The dreadful Judge in middle air shall spread his

And then at last our bliss
 Full and perfect is,
 But now begins ; for, from this happy day,
 The old Dragon, under ground
 In wretched limits bound,
 Not half so far casts his usurped sway ;
 And, wroth to see his kingdom fail,
 Swindges the scaly horror of his folded tail.

The oracles are dumb,
 No voice or hideous hum
 Runs through the arched roof in words deceiving.
 Apollo from his shrine
 Can no more divine,
 With hollow shriek the steep of Delphos leaving.
 No nightly trance, or breathed spell,
 Inspires the pale-ey'd priests from the prophetic cell.

The lonely mountains o'er,
 And the resounding shore,
 A voice of weeping heard and loud lament ;
 From haunted spring and dale,
 Edg'd with poplar pale,
 The parting genius is with sighing sent ;
 With flower-inwoven tresses torn [mourn.
 The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets

In consecrated earth,
 And on the holy hearth, [plaint ;
 The Lars, and Lemures, moan with midnight
 In urns, and altars round,
 A drear and dying sound
 Affrights the Flamens at their service quaint ;
 And the chill marble seems to sweat,
 While each peculiar Power foregoes his wonted seat.

Peor and Baälím
 Forsake their temples dim,
 With that twice-batter'd god of Palestine ;
 And mooned Ashtaroth,
 Heaven's queen and mother both,
 Now sits not girt with taper's holy shine ;
 The Libyc Hammon shrinks his horn, [mourn.
 In vain the Tyrian maids their wounded Thammuz

And sullen Moloch, fled,
 Hath left in shadows dread
 His burning idol all of blackest hue ;
 In vain with cymbals' ring
 They call the grisly king,
 In dismal dance about the furnace blue :
 The brutish gods of Nile as fast,
 Isis, and Orus, and the dog Anubis, haste.

Nor is Osiris seen
 In Memphian grove or green, [loud :
 Trampling the unshower'd grass with lowings
 Nor can he be at rest
 Within his sacred chest ;
 Nought but profoundest Hell can be his shroud ;
 In vain with timbrell'd anthems dark
 The sable-stoled sorcerers bear his worshippt ark.

He feels from Judah's land
 The dreaded infant's hand,
 The rays of Bethlehem blind his dusky eyn ;
 Nor all the gods beside Longer dare abide,
 Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine :
 Our babe, to show his Godhead true, [crew.
 Can in his swaddling bands contröll the damned

So, when the Sun in bed,
 Curtain'd with cloudy red,
 Pillows his chin upon an orient wave,
 The flocking shadows pale
 Troop to the infernal jail,
 Each fetter'd ghost slips to his several grave ;
 And the yellow-skirted Fayses [maze.
 Fly after the night-steeds, leaving their moon-lov'd

But see, the Virgin blest
 Hath laid her babe to rest ;
 Time is, our tedious song should here have ending:
 Heaven's youngest-teemed star
 Hath fix'd her polish'd car,
 Her sleeping Lord with handmaid lamp attending.
 And all about the courtly stable
 Bright-harness'd angels sit in order serviceable.

EDMUND WALLER.

---

EDMUND WALLER, born at Coleshill, Hertfordshire, in March, 1605, was the son of Robert Waller, Esq. a gentleman of an ancient family and good fortune, who married a sister of the celebrated John Hampden. The death of his father during his infancy left him heir to an estate of 3500*l.* a year, at that period an ample fortune. He was educated first at Eton, whence he was removed to King's College in Cambridge. His election to parliament was as early as between his sixteenth or seventeenth year; and it was not much later that he made his appearance as a poet: and it is remarkable that a copy of verses which he addressed to Prince Charles, in his eighteenth year, exhibits a style and character of versification as perfectly formed as those of his maturest productions. He again served in parliament before he was of age; and he continued his services to a later period. Not insensible of the value of wealth, he augmented his paternal fortune by marriage with a rich city heiress. In the long intermissions of parliament which occurred after 1628, he retired to his mansion of Beaconsfield, where he continued his classical studies, under the direction of his kinsman Morley, afterwards bishop of Winchester; and he obtained admission to a society of able men and polite scholars, of whom Lord Falkland was the connecting medium.

Waller became a widower at the age of twenty-five; he did not, however, spend much time in mourning, but declared himself the suitor of Lady Dorothea Sydney, eldest daughter of the Earl of Leicester, whom he has immortalized under the poetical name of Saccharissa. She is described by him as a majestic and scornful beauty; and he seems to delight more in her contrast, the gentler Amoret, who is supposed to have been a Lady Sophia Murray. Neither of these ladies, however, was won by his poetic strains; and, like another man, he consoled himself in a second marriage.

When the king's necessities compelled him, in 1640, once more to apply to the representatives of the people, Waller, who was returned for Agmondesham, decidedly took part with the members who thought that the redress of grievances should precede a vote for supplies; and he made an energetic speech on the occasion. He continued during three years to vote in general with the Opposition in the Long Parliament, but did not enter into all their measures. In particular, he employed much cool argument against the proposal for the abolition of Episcopacy; and he spoke with freedom and severity against some other plans of the House. In fact, he was at length become a zealous loyalist in his inclinations; and his conduct under the difficulties into which this attachment involved him became a source of his indelible disgrace. A short narrative will suffice for the elucidation of this matter.

Waller had a brother-in-law, named Tomkyns, who was clerk of the queen's council, and possessed great influence in the city among the warm loyalists. On consulting together, they thought it would be possible to raise a powerful party, which might oblige the parliament to adopt pacific measures, by resisting the payment of the taxes levied for the support of the war. About this time Sir Nicholas Crispe formed a design of more dangerous import, which was that of exciting the king's friends in the city to an open resistance of the authority of parliament; and for that purpose he obtained a commission of array from his majesty. This plan appears to have been originally unconnected with the other; yet the commission was made known to Waller and Tomkyns, and the whole was compounded into a horrid and dreadful plot. Waller and Tomkyns were apprehended, when the pusillanimity of the former disclosed the whole secret. "He was so confounded with fear," (says Lord Clarendon,) "that he confessed whatever he had heard, said, thought, or seen, all that he knew of himself, and all that he suspected of others, without concealing any person, of what degree or quality soever, or any discourse which he had ever upon any occasion entertained with them." The conclusion of this business was, that Tomkyns, and Chaloner, another conspirator, were hanged, and that Waller was expelled the House, tried, and condemned; but after a year's imprisonment, and a fine of ten thousand pounds, was suffered to go into exile. He chose Rouen for his first place of foreign exile, where he lived with his wife till his removal to Paris. In that capital he maintained the appearance of a man of fortune, and entertained hospitably, supporting this style of living chiefly by the sale of his wife's jewels. At length, after the lapse of ten years, being reduced to what he called his rump jewel, he thought it time to apply for permission to return to his own country. He obtained this licence, and was also restored to his estate, though now diminished to half its former rental. Here he fixed his abode, at a house built by himself, at Beaconsfield; and he renewed his courtly strains by adulation to Cromwell, now Protector, to whom his mother was related. To this usurper the noblest tribute of his muse was paid.

When Charles II. was restored to the crown, and past character was lightly regarded, the stains of that of Waller were forgotten, and his wit and poetry procured him notice at court, and admission to the highest circles. He had also sufficient interest to obtain a seat in the House of Commons, in all the parliaments of that reign. The king's gracious manners emboldened him to ask for the vacant place of provost of Eton college, which was granted him; but Lord Clarendon, then Lord

Chancellor, refused to set the seal to the grant, alledging that by the statutes laymen were excluded from that provostship. This was thought the reason why Waller joined the Duke of Buckingham, in his hostility against Clarendon.

On the accession of James II., Waller, then in his 80th year, was chosen representative for Saltash. Having now considerably passed the usual limit of human life, he turned his thoughts to devotion, and composed some divine poems, the usual task in which men of gaiety terminate their career. He died at Beaconsfield in October, 1687, the 83d year of his age. He left several children by his second wife, of whom, the inheritor of his estate, Edmund, after representing Agmondesham in parliament, became a convert to quakerism.

Waller was one of the earliest poets who obtained reputation by the sweetness and sonorousness of his strains; and there are perhaps few masters at the present day who surpass him in this particular.

TO AMORET.

Fare! that you may truly know,
What you unto Thyrsis owe;
I will tell you how I do
Sacharissa love, and you.

Joy salutes me, when I set
My blest eyes on Amoret:
But with wonder I am strook,
While I on the other look.

If sweet Amoret complains,
I have sense of all her pains:
But for Sacharissa I
Do not only grieve, but die

All that of myself is mine,
Lovely Amoret! is thine,
Sacharissa's captive fain
Would untie his iron chain;
And, those scorching beams to shun
To thy gentle shadow run.

If the soul had free election
To dispose of her affection;
I would not thus long have borne
Haughty Sacharissa's scorn:
But 'tis sure some power above,
Which controls our wills in love!

If not a love, a strong desire
To create and spread that fire
In my breast, solicits me,
Beauteous Amoret! for thee.

'Tis amazement more than love,
Which her radiant eyes do move:
If less splendour wait on thine,
Yet they so benignly shine,
I would turn my dazzled sight
To behold their milder light.
But as hard 'tis to destroy
That high flame, as to enjoy:
Which how eas'ly I may do,
Heaven (as eas'ly scal'd) does know!

Amoret! as sweet and good
As the most delicious food,
Which, but tasted, does impart
Life and gladness to the heart.

Sacharissa's beauty's wine,
Which to madness doth incline:
Such a liquor, as no brain
That is mortal can sustain.

Scarce can I to Heaven excuse
The devotion, which I use

Unto that adored dame:
For 'tis not unlike the same,
Which I thither ought to send.
So that if it could take end,
'Twould to Heaven itself be due,
To succeed her, and not you:
Who already have of me
All that's not idolatry:
Which, though not so fierce a flame,
Is longer like to be the same.

Then smile on me, and I will prove Wonder is shorter-liv'd than love.

TO AMORET.

AMORET, the Milky Way,
Fram'd of many nameless stars!
The smooth stream, where none can say,
He this drop to that prefers!
Amoret, my lovely foe!
Tell me where thy strength does lie?
Where the power that charms us so?
In thy soul, or in thy eye?

By that snowy neck alone,
Or thy grace in motion seen,
No such wonders could be done;
Yet thy waist is straight, and clean,
As Cupid's shaft, or Hermes' rod:
And powerful too, as either god.

OF LOVE.

ANGER, in hasty words, or blows,
Itself discharges on our foes;
And sorrow too finds some relief
In tears, which wait upon our grief:
So every passion but fond love,
Unto its own redress does move:
But that alone the wretch inclines
To what prevents his own designs;
Makes him lament, and sigh, and weep,
Disorder'd, tremble, fawn, and creep;
Postures which render him despis'd,
Where he endeavours to be priz'd:

For women, born to be control'd,
 Stoop to the forward and the bold ;
 Affect the haughty and the proud,
 The gay, the frolic, and the loud.
 Who first the generous steed oppress ;
 Not kneeling did salute the beast ;
 But with high courage, life, and force,
 Approaching, tam'd th' unruly horse.
 Unwisely we the wiser East
 Pity, supposing them oppress,
 With tyrants' force, whose law is will,
 By which they govern, spoil, and kill :
 Each nymph, but moderately fair,
 Commands with no less rigour here.
 Should some brave Turk, that walks among
 His twenty lasses, bright and young,
 And beckons to the willing dame,
 Preferr'd to quench his present flame,
 Behold as many gallants here,
 With modest guise, and silent fear,
 All to one female idol bend,
 While her high pride does scarce descend
 To mark their follies, he would swear,
 That these her guard of eunuchs were ;
 And that a more majestic queen,
 Or humbler slaves, he had not seen.

All this with indignation spoke,
 In vain I struggled with the yoke
 Of mighty love : that conquering look,
 When next beheld, like lightning strook
 My blasted soul, and made me bow
 Lower than those I pity'd now.

So the tall stag, upon the brink
 Of some smooth stream, about to drink,
 Surveying there his armed head,
 With shame remembers that he fled
 The scorned dogs, resolves to try
 The combat next : but, if their cry
 Invades again his trembling ear,
 He strait resumes his wonted care ;
 Leaves the untasted spring behind,
 And, wing'd with fear, outflies the wind.

OF THE ## MARRIAGE OF THE DWARFS.

DESIGN or Chance make others wive,
 But Nature did this match contrive :
 Eve might as well have Adam fled,
 As she deny'd her little bed
 To him, for whom Heav'n seem'd to frame,
 And measure out this only dame.

Thrice happy is that humble pair,
 Beneath the level of all care !
 Over whose heads those arrows fly
 Of sad distrust and jealousy :
 Secured in as high extreme,
 As if the world held none but them.

To him the fairest nymphs do show
 Like moving mountains topp'd with snow ;
 And every man a Polypheme
 Does to his Galatea seem :
 None may presume her faith to prove ;
 He proffers death, that proffers love.

Ah ! Chloris ! that kind Nature thus
 From all the world had sever'd us :
 Creating for ourselves us two,
 As Love has me for only you !

A PANEGYRIC

TO MY LORD PROTECTOR,

Of the Present Greatness, and Joint Interest, of his Highness and this Nation.

WHILE with a strong, and yet a gentle, hand,
 You bridle faction, and our hearts command,
 Protect us from ourselves, and from the foe,
 Make us unite, and make us conquer too :

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
 Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign,
 And own no liberty, but where they may
 Without control upon their fellows prey.

Above the waves as Neptune show'd his face,
 To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race ;
 So has your highness, rais'd above the rest,
 Storms of ambition, tossing us, repress.

Your drooping country, torn with civil hate,
 Restor'd by you, is made a glorious state ;
 The seat of empire, where the Irish come,
 And the unwilling Scots, to fetch their doom.

The sea's our own : and now, all nations greet,
 With bending sails, each vessel of our fleet :
 Your power extends as far as winds can blow,
 Or swelling sails upon the globe may go.

Heaven (that hath plac'd this island to give law,
 To balance Europe, and her states to awe,)
 In this conjunction doth on Britain smile,
 The greatest leader, and the greatest isle !

Whether this portion of the world were rent,
 By the rude ocean, from the continent,
 Or thus created ; it was sure design'd
 To be the sacred refuge of mankind.

Hither th' oppress'd shall henceforth resort,
 Justice to crave, and succour, at your court ;
 And then your highness, not for our's alone,
 But for the world's protector shall be known.

Fame, swifter than your winged navy, flies
 Through every land, that near the ocean lies ;
 Sounding your name, and telling dreadful news
 To all that piracy and rapine use.

With such a chief the meanest nation blest,
 Might hope to lift her head above the rest :
 What may be thought impossible to do
 By us, embraced by the sea and you ?

Lords of the world's great waste, the ocean, we
 Whole forests send to reign upon the sea ;
 And every coast may trouble, or relieve :
 But none can visit us without your leave.

Angels and we have this prerogative,
 That none can at our happy seats arrive :
 While we descend at pleasure, to invade
 The bad with vengeance, and the good to aid.

Our little world, the image of the great,
 Like that, amidst the boundless ocean set,
 Of her own growth hath all that nature craves,
 And all that's rare, as tribute from the waves.

As Egypt does not on the clouds rely,
But to the Nile owes more than to the sky ;
So, what our Earth, and what our Heaven, denies,
Our ever-constant friend, the sea, supplies.

The taste of hot Arabia's spice we know,
Free from the scorching sun that makes it grow :
Without the worm, in Persian silks we shine ;
And, without planting, drink of every vine.

To dig for wealth, we weary not our limbs ;
Gold, though the heaviest metal, hither swims.
Ours is the harvest where the Indians mow,
We plough the deep, and reap what others sow.

Things of the noblest kind our own soil breeds ;
Stout are our men, and warlike are our steeds :
Rome, though her eagle through the world had flown,
Could never make this island all her own.

Here the third Edward, and the Black Prince too,
France-conquering Henry flourish'd, and now you ;
For whom we stay'd, as did the Grecian state,
Till Alexander came to urge their fate.

When for more worlds the Macedonian cry'd,
He wist not Thetis in her lap did hide
Another yet : a world reserv'd for you,
To make more great than that he did subdue.

He safely might old troops to battle lead,
Against th' unwarlike Persian and the Mede,
Whose hasty flight did, from a bloodless field,
More spoils than honour to the victor yield.

A race unconquer'd, by their clime made bold,
The Caledonians, arm'd with want and cold,
Have, by a fate indulgent to your fame,
Been from all ages kept for you to tame.

Whom the old Roman wall, so ill confin'd,
With a new chain of garrisons you bind :
Here foreign gold no more shall make them come ;
Our English iron holds them fast at home.

They, that henceforth must be content to know
No warmer region than their hills of snow,
May blame the sun ; but must extol your grace,
Which in our senate hath allow'd them place.

Prefer'd by conquest, happily o'erthrown,
Falling they rise, to be with us made one :
So kind dictators made, when they came home,
Their vanquish'd foes free citizens of Rome.

Like favour find the Irish, with like fate
Advanc'd to be a portion of our state ;
While by your valour, and your bounteous mind,
Nations divided by the sea are join'd.

Holland, to gain your friendship, is content
To be our out-guard on the continent :
She from her fellow-provinces would go,
Rather than hazard to have you her foe.

In our late fight, when cannons did diffuse,
Preventing posts, the terrour and the news,
Our neighbour princes trembled at their roar :
But our conjunction makes them tremble more.

Your never-falling sword made war to cease,
And now you heal us with the acts of peace ;
Our minds with bounty and with awe engage,
Invite affection, and restrain our rage.

Less pleasure take brave minds in battles won,
Than in restoring such as are undone :
Tigers have courage, and the rugged bear,
But man alone can, whom he conquers, spare.

To pardon, willing, and to punish, loth,
You strike with one hand, but you heal with both ;
Lifting up all that prostrate lie, you grieve
You cannot make the dead again to live.

When Fate or error had our age misled,
And o'er this nation such confusion spread ;
The only cure, which could from Heaven come down,
Was so much power and piety in one.

One ! whose extraction from an ancient line
Gives hope again, that well-born men may shine :
The meanest in your nature, mild and good ;
The noblest rest secured in your blood.

Oft have we wonder'd, how you hid in peace
A mind proportion'd to such things as these ;
How such a ruling sp'rit you could restrain,
And practise first over yourself to reign.

Your private life did a just pattern give,
How fathers, husbands, pious sons, should live ;
Born to command, your princely virtues slept,
Like humble David's, while the flock he kept.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage and your matchless worth,
Dazzling the eyes of all that did pretend,
To fierce contention gave a prosperous end.

Still, as you rise, the state, exalted too,
Finds no distemper while 'tis chang'd by you ;
Chang'd like the world's great scene ! when without noise,
The rising sun night's vulgar lights destroys.

Had you, some ages past, this race of glory
Run, with amazement we should read your story :
But living virtue, all achievements past,
Meets envy still, to grapple with at last.

This Cæsar found ; and that ungrateful age,
With losing him, went back to blood and rage ;
Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
But cut the bond of union with that stroke.

That sun once set, a thousand meaner stars
Gave a dim light to violence and wars ;
To such a tempest as now threatens all,
Did not your mighty arm prevent the fall.

If Rome's great senate could not wield that sword,
Which of the conquer'd world had made them lord ;
What hope had ours, while yet their power was new,
To rule victorious armies, but by you ?

You ! that had taught them to subdue their foes,
Could order teach, and their high spirits compose :
To every duty could their minds engage,
Provoke their courage, and command their rage.

So, when a lion shakes his dreadful mane,
And angry grows, if he that first took pain
To tame his youth, approach the haughty beast,
He bends to him, but frights away the rest.

As the vex'd world, to find repose, at last
Itself into Augustus' arms did cast ;
So England now does, with like toil oppress,
Her weary head upon your bosom rest.

Then let the Muses, with such notes as these,
Instruct us what belongs unto our peace !
Your battles they hereafter shall indite,
And draw the image of our Mars in fight ;

Tell of towns storm'd, of armies over-run,
And mighty kingdoms by your conduct won ;
How, while you thunder'd, clouds of dust did choke
Contending troops, and seas lay hid in smoke.

Illustrious acts high raptures do infuse,
And every conqueror creates a Muse :
Here in low strains your milder deeds we sing :
But there, my lord ! we'll bays and olive bring

To crown your head, while you in triumph ride
O'er vanquish'd nations, and the sea beside ;
While all your neighbour princes unto you,
Like Joseph's sheaves, pay reverence and bow.

OF ENGLISH VERSE.

Poets may boast, as safely vain,
Their works shall with the world remain :
Both bound together, live or die,
The verses and the prophecy.

But who can hope his line should long
Last, in a daily-changing tongue ?
While they are new, envy prevails ;
And as that dies, our language fails.

When architects have done their part,
The matter may betray their art :
Time, if we use ill-chosen stone,
Soon brings a well-built palace down.

Poets, that lasting marble seek,
Must carve in Latin or in Greek :
We write in sand, our language grows,
And, like the tide, our work o'erflows.

Chaucer his sense can only boast,
The glory of his numbers lost !
Years have defac'd his matchless strain,
And yet he did not sing in vain.

The beauties, which adorn'd that age,
The shining subjects of his rage,
Hoping they should immortal prove,
Rewarded with success his love.

This was the gen'rous poet's scope ;
And all an English pen can hope ;
To make the fair approve his flame,
That can so far extend their fame.

Verse, thus design'd, has no ill fate,
If it arrive but at the date
Of fading beauty, if it prove
But as long-liv'd as present love.

THE STORY OF PHŒBUS AND DAPHNE

APPLIED.

Thyrasis, a youth of the inspired train,
Fair Sacharissa lov'd, but lov'd in vain :
Like Phœbus sung the no less amorous boy ;
Like Daphne she, as lovely, and as coy !
With numbers he the flying nymph pursues ;
With numbers, such as Phœbus' self might use !
Such is the chase, when Love and Fancy leads,
O'er craggy mountains, and through flowery meads ;
Invok'd to testify the lover's care,
Or form some image of his cruel fair.
Urg'd with his fury, like a wounded deer,
O'er these he fled ; and now approaching near,
Had reach'd the nymph with his harmonious lay,
Whom all his charms could not incline to stay.
Yet, what he sung in his immortal strain,
Though unsuccessful, was not sung in vain :
All, but the nymph that should redress his wrong,
Attend his passion, and approve his song.
Like Phœbus thus, acquiring unsought praise,
He catch'd at love, and fill'd his arms with bays.

SONG.

Go, lovely Rose !
Tell her, that wastes her time and me,
That now she knows,
When I resemble her to thee,
How sweet, and fair, she seems to be.

Tell her that's young,
And shuns to have her graces spy'd,
That hadst thou sprung
In deserts, where no men abide,
Thou must have uncommended dy'd.

Small is the worth
Of beauty, from the light retir'd :
Bid her come forth,
Suffer herself to be desir'd,
And not blush so to be admir'd.

Then die ! that she
The common fate of all things rare
May read in thee :
How small a part of time they share,
That are so wondrous sweet and fair !

TO PHYLLIS.

PHYLLIS ! why should we delay
Pleasures shorter than the day ?
Could we (which we never can !)
Stretch our lives beyond their span,

Beauty like a shadow flies,
And our youth before us dies.
Or, would youth and beauty stay,
Love hath wings, and will away.
Love hath swifter wings than Time;
Change in love to Heaven does climb
Gods, that never change their state,
Vary oft their love and hate.

Phyllis! to this truth we owe
All the love betwixt us two:
Let not you and I inquire,
What has been our past desire;
On what shepherd you have smil'd,
Or what nymphs I have beguil'd:
Leave it to the planets too,
What we shall hereafter do:
For the joys we now may prove,
Take advice of present love.

ON A GIRDLE.

THAT, which her slender waist confin'd,
Shall now my joyful temples bind:
No monarch but would give his crown,
His arms might do what this has done.

It was my Heaven's extremest sphere,
The pale which held that lovely deer:
My joy, my grief, my hope, my love,
Did all within this circle move!

A narrow compass! and yet there
Dwelt all that's good, and all that's fair:
Give me but what this ribbon bound,
Take all the rest the Sun goes round.

TO ZELINDA.

FARTHER piece of well-form'd earth!
Cry not thus your haughty birth:
The power which you have o'er us, lies
Not in your race, but in your eyes.
None but a prince! — Alas! that voice
Confines you to a narrow choice.
Should you no honey vow to taste,
But what the master-bees have plac'd
In compass of their cells, how small
A portion to your share would fall!

Nor all appear, among those few,
Worthy the stock from whence they grew:
The sap, which at the root is bred,
In trees, through all the boughs is spread:
But virtues, which in parent shine,
Make not like progress through the line.
'Tis not from whom, but where, we live:
The place does oft those graces give.
Great Julius, on the mountains bred,
A flock perhaps, or herd, had led:
He *, that the world subdued, had been
But the best wrestler on the green.
'Tis art, and knowledge, which draw forth
The hidden seeds of native worth:
They blow those sparks, and make them rise
Into such flames as touch the skies.
To the old heroes hence was given
A pedigree, which reach'd to heaven:
Of mortal seed they were not held,
Which other mortals so excell'd.
And beauty too, in such excess
As yours, Zelinda! claims no less.
Smile but on me, and you shall scorn,
Henceforth, to be of princes born.
I can describe the shady grove,
Where your lov'd mother slept with Jove,
And yet excuse the faultless dame,
Caught with her spouse's shape and name:
Thy matchless form will credit bring
To all the wonders I shall sing.

TO A LADY

SINGING A SONG OF HIS COMPOSING.

CHLORIS, yourself you so excel,
When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,
That, like a spirit, with this spell
Of my own teaching, I am caught.

That eagle's fate and mine are one,
Which, on the shaft that made him die,
Espy'd a feather of his own,
Wherewith he went to soar so high.

Had Echo with so sweet a grace
Narcissus' loud complaints return'd
Not for reflection of his face,
But of his voice, the boy had burn'd.

• Alexander.

JOHN DRYDEN.

JOHN DRYDEN was born, probably in 1631, in the parish of Aldwincle-Allsaints, in Northamptonshire. His father possessed a small estate, acted as a justice of the peace during the usurpation, and seems to have been a presbyterian. John, at a proper age, was sent to Westminster school, of which Busby was then master; and was thence elected to a scholarship in Trinity college, Cambridge. He took his degrees of bachelor and master of arts in the university; but though he had written two short copies of verses about the time of his admission, his name does not occur among the academical poets of this period. By his father's death, in 1654, he succeeded to the estate, and, removing to the metropolis, he made his entrance into public life, under the auspices of his kinsman, Sir Gilbert Pickering, one of Cromwell's council and house of lords, and staunch to the principles then predominant. On the death of Cromwell, Dryden wrote some "Heroic Stanzas," strongly marked by the loftiness of expression and variety of imagery which characterised his more mature efforts. They were, however, criticised with some severity.

At the Restoration, Dryden lost no time in obliterating former stains; and, as far as it was possible, rendered himself peculiarly distinguished for the base servility of his strains. He greeted the king's return by a poem, entitled "Astræa Redux," which was followed by "A Panegyric on the Coronation:" nor did Lord Chancellor Clarendon escape his encomiastic lines. His marriage with Lady Elizabeth Howard, daughter of the Earl of Berkshire, is supposed to have taken place in 1665. About this time he first appears as a writer for the stage, in which quality he composed several pieces; and though he did not display himself as a prime favourite of the dramatic muse, his facility of harmonious versification, and his splendour of poetic diction, gained him admirers. In 1667 he published a singular poem, entitled "Annus Mirabilis," the subjects of which were, the naval war with the Dutch, and the fire of London. It was written in four-line stanzas, a form which has since gone into disuse in heroic subjects; but the piece abounded in images of genuine poetry, though intermixed with many extravagances.

At this period of his life Dryden became professionally a writer for the stage, having entered into a contract with the patentees of the King's Theatre, to supply them with three plays in a year, upon the condition of being allowed the profit of one share and a quarter out of twelve shares and three quarters, into which the theatrical stock was divided. Of the plays written upon the above contract, a small proportion have kept their place on the stage, or in the closet. On the death of Sir W. Davenant, in 1668, Dryden obtained the post of poet-laureat, to which was added the sinecure place of historiographer royal; the joint salaries of which amounted to 200 l.

The tragedies composed by Dryden were written in his earlier periods, in rhyme, which circumstance probably contributed to the poetical rant by which they were too much characterised. For the correction of this fault, Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, in conjunction with other wits, wrote the celebrated burlesque drama, entitled "The Rehearsal," of which Dryden, under the name of Bayes, was made the hero; and, in order to point the ridicule, his dress, phraseology, and mode of recitation, were exactly imitated by the actor. It does not, however, appear that his solid reputation as a poet was injured by this attack. He had the candour to acknowledge that several of the strokes were just, and he wisely refrained from making any direct reply.

In 1681, and, as it is asserted, at the king's express desire, he wrote his famous political poem, entitled "Absalom and Achitophel;" in which the incidents in the life of David were adapted to those of Charles II. in relation to the Duke of Monmouth and the Earl of Shaftesbury. Its poetry and its severity caused it to be read with great eagerness; and as it raised the author to high favour with the court party, so it involved him in irreconcilable enmity with its opponents. These feelings were rendered more acute by his "Medal, a Satire on Sedition," written in the same year, on occasion of a medal struck by the whigs, when a grand jury returned Ignoramus to an indictment preferred against Lord Shaftesbury, for high treason. The rancour of this piece is not easily to be paralleled among party poems. In 1682, he published "Mac-Flecknoe," a short piece, throwing ridicule upon his very unequal rival, Shadwell. In the same year, one of his most serious poems, the "Religio Laici," made its appearance. Its purpose was to give a compendious view of the arguments for revealed religion, and to ascertain in what the authority of revelation essentially consists.

Soon after this time he ceased to write for the stage. His dramatic vein was probably exhausted, and his circumstances were distressed. To this period Mr. Malone refers a letter written by him to Hyde, Earl of Rochester, in which, with modest dignity, he pleads merit enough not to deserve to starve, and requests some small employment in the customs or excise, or, at least, the payment of half a year's pension for the supply of his present necessities. He never obtained any of the requested places, and was doomed to find the booksellers his best patrons.

Charles II. died in 1685, and was succeeded by his brother James II., who openly declared his attachment to the religion of Rome. It was not long before Dryden conformed to the same religion. This step has been the cause of much obloquy on one side, and has found much excuse on the other ; but if it be considered, from a view of his past life, that, in changing his religious profession, he could have had little difficulty to encounter, it will appear no breach of candour to suppose that his immediate motive was nothing more than personal interest. The reward he obtained from his compliance was an addition to his pension of 100 l. per annum. Some time after he was engaged in a work which was the longest single piece he ever composed. This was his elaborate controversial poem of "The Hind and Panther." When completed, notwithstanding its unpromising subject, and signal absurdity of plan, such was the power of Dryden's verse, that it was read with avidity, and bore every mark of occupying the public attention. The birth of a prince called forth a congratulatory poem from Dryden, entitled "Britannia Rediviva," in which he ventured to use a poet's privilege of prophesy, foretelling a commencing era of prosperity to the nation and the church from this auspicious event ; but in vain ! for the revolution took place within a few months, and the hopes of the party were blasted for ever.

Dryden was a severe sufferer from the change : his posts and pensions were taken away, and the poetical laurel was conferred upon his insignificant rival, Shadwell. He was now, in advanced life, to depend upon his own exertions for a security from absolute indigence. His faculties were equal to the emergency ; and it will surprise some theorists to be told, that the ten concluding years of his life, in which he wrote for bread, and composed at a certain rate per line, were those of many of the pieces which have most contributed to immortalise his name. They were those of his translation of Juvenal and Persius ; of that of Virgil entire, a work which enriches the English language, and has greatly promoted the author's fame ; of his celebrated Alexander's Feast ; and of his Fables, containing some of the richest and most truly poetical pieces which he ever composed. Of these, several will appear in the subsequent collection of his works. Nor ought his prose writings to be neglected, which, chiefly consisting of the critical essays prefixed to his poems, are performances of extraordinary vigour and comprehension of mind, and afford, perhaps, the best specimens of genuine English.

Dryden died of a spreading inflammation in one of his toes, on the first of May, 1700, and was buried in Westminster Abbey, next to the tomb of Chaucer. No monument marked his grave, till a plain one, with his bust, was erected, at the expence of Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham. He left behind him three sons, all brought up to letters. His own character was cold and reserved, backward in personal advances to the great, and rather heavy in conversation. In fact, he was too much engaged in literature to devote much of his time to society. Few writers of his time delighted so much to approach the verge of prophaneness ; whence it may be inferred, that though religion was an interesting topic of discussion to him, he had very little of its spirit in his heart.

ANNUS MIRABILIS:

THE YEAR OF WONDERS, 1666.

In thriving arts long time had Holland grown,
Crushing at home and cruel when abroad :
Scarce leaving us the means to claim our own ;
Our king they courted, and our merchants aw'd.

Trade, which like blood should circularly flow,
Stopp'd in their channels, found its freedom lost :
Rather the wealth of all the world did go,
And seem'd but shipwreck'd on so base a coast.

For them alone the Heavens had kindly heat ;
In eastern quarries ripening precious dew :
For them the Idumæan balm did sweat,
And in hot Ceilon spicy forests grew.

The Sun but seem'd the labourer of the year ;
Each waxing Moon supply'd her watery store,
To swell those tides which from the line did bear
Their brim-full vessels to the Belgian shore.

Thus, mighty in her ships, stood Carthage long,
And swept the riches of the world from far ;
Yet stoop'd to Rome, less wealthy, but more strong :
And this may prove our second Punic war.

What peace can be, where both to one pretend ?
(But they more diligent, and we more strong)
Or if a peace, it soon must have an end ;
For they would grow too powerful were it long.

Behold two nations then, engag'd so far,
That each seven years the fit must shake each land :
Where France will side to weaken us by war,
Who only can his vast designs withstand.

See how he feeds th' Iberian with delays,
To render us his timely friendship vain :
And while his secret soul on Flanders preys,
He rocks the cradle of the babe of Spain.

Such deep designs of empire does he lay
O'er them, whose cause he seems to take in hand ;
And prudently would make them lords at sea,
To whom with case he can give laws by land.

This saw our king ; and long within his breast
His pensive counsels balanc'd to and fro :
He griev'd the land he freed should be oppress'd,
And he less for it than usurpers do.

His generous mind the fair ideas drew
Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay ;
Where wealth, like fruit on precipices, grew,
Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey

The loss and gain each fatally were great ;
And still his subjects call'd aloud for war :
But peaceful kings, o'er martial people set,
Each other's poize and counterbalance are.

He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes,
Which none but mighty monarchs could maintain ;
Yet judg'd, like vapours that from limbecs rise,
It would in richer showers descend again.

At length resolv'd t' assert the watery ball,
He in himself did whole armadoes bring :
Him aged seamen might their master call,
And choose for general, were he not their king.

It seems as every ship their sovereign knows,
His awful summons they so soon obey ;
So hear the scaly herd when Proteus blows,
And so to pasture follow through the sea.

To see this fleet upon the ocean move,
Angels drew wide the curtains of the skies ;
And Heaven, as if there wanted lights above,
For tapers made two glaring comets rise.

Whether they unctuous exhalations are,
Fir'd by the Sun, or seeming so alone ;
Or each, some more remote and slippery star,
Which loses footing when to mortals shown :

Or one, that bright companion of the Sun,
Whose glorious aspect seal'd our new-born king ;
And now, a round of greater years begun,
New influence from his walks of light did bring.

Victorious York did first with fam'd success,
To his known valour make the Dutch give place :
Thus Heaven our monarch's fortune did confess,
Beginning conquest from his royal race.

But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou shouldst wed the main,
Heaven, as a gage, would cast some precious thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain.

Lawson amongst the foremost met his fate,
Whom sea-green Sirens from the rocks lament :
Thus as an offering for the Grecian state,
He first was kill'd who first to battle went.

Their chief blown up in air, not waves, expir'd,
To which his pride presum'd to give the law :
The Dutch confess'd Heaven present, and retir'd,
And all was Britain the wide ocean saw.

To nearest ports their shatter'd ships repair,
Where by our dreadful cannon they lay aw'd :
So reverently men quit the open air,
When thunder speaks the angry gods abroad.

And now approach'd their fleet from India fraught,
With all the riches of the rising Sun :
And precious sand from southern climates brought,
The fatal regions where the war begun.

Like hunted castors, conscious of their store, [bring:
Their way-laid wealth to Norway's coasts they
There first the North's cold bosom spices bore,
And Winter brooded on the eastern Spring.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,
Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lie :
And round about their murdering cannon lay,
At once to threaten and invite the eye.

Fiercer than cannon, and than rocks more hard,
The English undertake th' unequal war :
Seven ships alone, by which the port is barr'd,
Besiege the Indies, and all Denmark dare.

These fight like husbands, but like lovers those :
These fain would keep, and those more fain enjoy :
And to such height their frantic passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy.

Amidst whole heaps of spices lights a hall,
And now their odours arm'd against them fly :
Some precious by shatter'd porcelain fall,
And some by aromatic splinters die.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
In Heaven's inclemency some ease we find :
Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left,
And only yielded to the seas and wind.

Nor wholly lost we so deserv'd a prey ;
For storms, repenting, part of it restor'd :
Which, as a tribute from the Baltic sea,
The British ocean sent her mighty lord.

Go, mortals, now and vex yourselves in vain
For wealth, which so uncertainly must come :
When what was brought so far, and with such pain,
Was only kept to lose it nearer home.

The son, who twice three months on th' ocean tost,
Prepar'd to tell what he had pass'd before,
Now sees in English ships the Holland coast,
And parents' arms, in vain, stretch'd from the shore.

This careful husband had been long away,
Whom his chaste wife and little children mourn :
Who on their fingers learn'd to tell the day
On which their father promis'd to return.

Such are the proud designs of human-kind,
And so we suffer shipwreck every where !
Alas, what port can such a pilot find,
Who in the night of Fate must blindly steer !

The undistinguish'd seeds of good and ill,
Heaven in his bosom from our knowledge hides :
And draws them in contempt of human skill,
Which oft for friends mistaken foes provides.

Let Munster's prelate ever be accurst,
In whom we seek the German faith in vain :
Alas, that he should teach the English first,
That fraud and avarice in the church could reign !

Happy, who never trust a stranger's will,
Whose friendship's in his interest understood !
Since money given but tempts him to be ill,
When power is too remote to make him good.

Till now, alone the mighty nations strove ;
The rest, at gaze, without the lists did stand ;
And threatening France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
Kept idle thunder in his lifted hand.

That enuch guardian of rich Holland's trade,
Who envies us what he wants power t' enjoy ;
Whose noiseful valour does no foe invade,
And weak assistance will his friends destroy.

Offended that we fought without his leave,
He takes this time his secret hate to show :
Which Charles does with a mind so calm receive,
As one that neither seeks nor shuns his foe.

With France, to aid the Dutch, the Danes unite :
France as their tyrant, Denmark as their slave.
But when with one three nations join to fight,
They silently confess that one more brave.

Lewis had chas'd the English from his shore ;
But Charles the French as subjects does invite :
Would Heaven for each some Solomon restore,
Who, by their mercy, may decide their right !

Were subjects so but only by their choice,
And not from birth did forc'd dominion take,
Our prince alone would have the public voice ;
And all his neighbours' realms would deserts make.

He without fear a dangerous war pursues,
Which without rashness he began before :
As honour made him first the danger choose,
So still he makes it good on virtue's score.

The doubled charge his subjects' love supplies,
Who in that bounty to themselves are kind :
So glad Egyptians see their Nilus rise,
And in his plenty their abundance find.

With equal power he does two chiefs create,
Two such as each seem'd worthiest when alone ;
Each able to sustain a nation's fate,
Since both had found a greater in their own.

Both great in courage, conduct, and in fame,
Yet neither envious of the other's praise ;
Their duty, faith, and interest too the same,
Like mighty partners equally they raise.

The prince long time had courted Fortune's love,
But once possess'd did absolutely reign :
Thus with their Amazons the heroes strove,
And conquer'd first those beauties they would gain.

The duke beheld, like Scipio, with disdain,
That Carthage, which he ruin'd, rise once more ;
And shook aloft the forces of the main,
To fright those slaves with what they felt before.

Together to the watery camp they haste,
Whom matrons passing to their children show :
Infants' first vows for them to Heaven are cast,
And future people bless them as they go.

With them no riotous pomp, nor Asian train,
To infect a navy with their gaudy fears ;
To make slow fights, and victories but vain :
But war severely like itself appears.

Diffusive of themselves, where'er they pass,
They make that warmth in others they expect :
Their valour works like bodies on a glass,
And does its image on their men project.

Our fleet divides, and straight the Dutch appear,
In number, and a fam'd commander, bold :
The narrow seas can scarce their navy bear,
Or crowded vessels can their soldiers bold.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,
On wings of all the winds to combat flies :
His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,
And bloody crosses on his flag-staffs rise.

Both furl their sails, and strip them for the fight ;
Their folded sheets dismiss the useless air :
Th' Elean plains could boast no nobler sight,
When struggling champions did their bodies bare.

Borne each by other in a distant line,
The sea-built forts in dreadful order move :
So vast the noise, as if not fleets did join,
But lands unfix'd, and floating nations strove.

Now pass'd, on either side they nimbly tack ;
Both strive to intercept and guide the wind :
And, in its eye, more closely they come back,
To finish all the deaths they left behind.

On high-rais'd decks the haughty Belgians ride,
Beneath whose shade our humble frigates go :
Such port the elephant bears, and so defy'd
By the rhinoceros her unequal foe.

And as the built, so different is the fight :
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd ;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.

Our dreaded admiral from far they threat,
Whose batter'd rigging their whole war receives :
All bare, like some old oak which tempests beat,
He stands, and sees below his scatter'd leaves.

Heroes of old, when wounded, shelter sought ;
But he who meets all danger with disdain,
Ev'n in their face his ship to anchor brought,
And steeple-high stood propt upon the main.

At this excess of courage, all amaz'd,
The foremost of his foes awhile withdraw :
With such respect in enter'd Rome they gaz'd,
Who on high chairs the godlike fathers saw.

And now, as where Patroclus' body lay,
Here Trojan chiefs advanc'd, and there the Greek ;
Ours o'er the duke their pious wings display,
And theirs the noblest spoils of Britain seek.

Meantime his busy mariners he hastes,
His shatter'd sails with rigging to restore ;
And willing pines ascend his broken masts,
Whose lofty heads rise higher than before.

Straight to the Dutch he turns his dreadful prow,
More fierce th' important quarrel to decide :
Like swans, in long array his vessels show,
Whose crests advancing do the waves divide.

They charge, recharge, and all along the sea
They drive, and squander the huge Belgian fleet
Berkeley alone, who nearest danger lay,
Did a like fate with lost Creusa meet.

The night comes on, we eager to pursue
The combat still, and they asham'd to leave :
Till the last streaks of dying day withdrew,
And doubtful moonlight did our rage deceive.

In th' English fleet each ship resounds with joy,
And loud applause of their great leader's fame :
In fiery dreams the Dutch they still destroy,
And slumbering smile at the imagin'd flame.

Not so the Holland fleet, who, tir'd and done,
Stretch'd on their decks like weary oxen lie :
Faint sweats all down their mighty members run !
Vast bulks, which little souls but ill supply.

In dreams they fearful precipices tread :
Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore :
Or in dark churches walk among the dead ;
They wake with horror, and dare sleep no more.

The morn they look on with unwilling eyes,
Till from their main-top joyful news they hear
Of ships, which by their mould bring new supplies,
And in their colours Belgian lions bear.

Our watchful general had discern'd from far
This mighty succour, which made glad the foe :
He sigh'd, but like a father of the war,
His face spake hope, while deep his sorrows flow.

His wounded men he first sends off to shore,
Never till now unwilling to obey ;
They, not their wounds, but want of strength, deplore,
And think them happy who with him can stay.

Then to the rest, " Rejoice," said he, " to-day ;
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies :
Among so brave a people, you are they
Whom Heaven has chose to fight for such a prize.

" If number English courages could quell,
We should at first have shunn'd, not met our foes :
Whose numerous sails the fearful only tell : [grows."
Courage from hearts, and not from numbers

He said, nor needed more to say : with haste
To their known stations cheerfully they go ;
And all at once, disdaining to be last,
Solicit every gale to meet the foe.

Nor did th' encourag'd Belgians long delay,
But bold in others, not themselves, they stood :
So thick, our navy scarce could steer their way,
But seem'd to wander in a moving wood.

Our little fleet was now engag'd so far,
That like the sword-fish in the whale they fought :
The combat only seem'd a civil war, [wrought :
Till through their bowels we our passage

Never had valour, no not ours, before
Done aught like this upon the land or main,
Where not to be o'ercome was to do more
Than all the conquests former kings did gain.

The mighty ghosts of our great Harries rose,
And armed Edwards look'd with anxious eyes,
To see this fleet among unequal foes, [should rise.
By which Fate promis'd them their Charles

Meantime the Belgians tack upon our rear, [send.
And raking chase-guns through our sterns they
Close by, their fire-ships, like jackals, appear,
Who on their lions for the prey attend.

Silent, in smoke of cannon they come on :
Such vapours once did fiery Cacus hide :
In these the height of pleas'd revenge is shown,
Who burn contented by another's side.

Sometimes from fighting squadrons of each fleet,
Deceiv'd themselves, or to preserve some friend,
Two grappling Etnas on the ocean meet,
And English fires with Belgian flames contend.

Now at each tack our little fleet grows less ; [main :
And, like maim'd fowl, swim lagging on the
Their greater loss their numbers scarce confess,
While they lose cheaper than the English gain.

Have you not seen, when, whistled from the fist,
Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness the quarry miss'd
Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind?

The dastard crow, that to the wood made wing,
And sees the groves no shelter can afford,
With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring,
Who safe in numbers cuff the noble bird.

Among the Dutch thus Albemarle did fare :
He could not conquer, and disdain'd to fly ;
Past hope of safety, 'twas his latest care,
Like falling Cæsar, decently to die.

Yet pity did his manly spirit move,
To see those perish who so well had fought :
And generously with his despair he strove,
Resolv'd to live till he their safety wrought.

Let other Muses write his prosperous fate,
Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings restor'd :
But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,
Which, like the Sun's, more wonders does afford.

He drew his mighty frigates all before,
On which the foe his fruitless force employs :
His weak ones deep into his rear he bore
Remote from guns, as sick men from the noise.

His fiery cannon did their passage guide,
And following smoke obscur'd them from the foe ;
Thus Israel, safe from the Egyptian's pride,
By flaming pillars and by clouds did go.

Elsewhere the Belgian force we did defeat,
But here our courages did theirs subdue :
So Xenophon once led that fam'd retreat,
Which first the Asian empire overthrew.

The foe approach'd ; and one for his bold sin
Was sunk ; as he that touch'd the ark was slain ;
The wild waves master'd him and suck'd him in,
And smiling eddies dimpled on the main.

This seen, the rest at awful distance stood :
As if they had been there as servants set
To stay, or to go on, as he thought good,
And not pursue but wait on his retreat.

So Libyan hunters, on some sandy plain,
From shady coverts rous'd, the lion chase :
The kingly beast roars out with loud disdain,
And slowly moves, unknowing to give place.

But if some one approach to dare his force,
He swings his tail, and swiftly turns him round :
With one paw seizes on his trembling horse,
And with the other tears him to the ground.

Amidst these toils succeds the balmy night ;
Now hissing waters the quench'd guns restore ;
And weary waves withdrawing from the fight,
Lie lull'd and panting on the silent shore.

The Moon shone clear on the becalmed flood,
Where, while her beams like glittering silver play,
Upon the deck our careful general stood,
And deeply mus'd on the succeeding day.

" That happy Sun," said he, " will rise again,
Who twice victorious did our navy see :
And I alone must view him rise in vain,
Without one ray of all his star for me.

" Yet, like an English general will I die,
And all the ocean make my spacious grave :
Women and cowards on the land may lie ;
The sea 's a tomb that 's proper for the brave."

Restless he pass'd the remnant of the night,
Till the fresh air proclaim'd the morning nigh :
And burning ships, the martyrs of the fight,
With paler fires beheld the eastern sky.

But now, his stores of ammunition spent,
His naked valour is his only guard :
But thunders are from his dumb cannon sent,
And solitary guns are scarcely heard.

Now far had Fortune power, he forc'd to stay,
Nor longer durst with Virtue be at strife :
This is a ransom Albemarle did pay,
For all the glories of so great a life.

Now brave Rupert from afar appears,
Whose waving streamers the glad general knows :
With full-spread sails his eager navy steers,
And every ship in swift proportion grows.

The anxious prince had heard the cannon long,
And from that length of time dire omens drew
Of English overmatch'd, and Dutch too strong,
Who never fought three days, but to pursue.

Now, as an eagle, who with pious care
Was beating widely on the wing for prey,
Is her now silent airy does repair,
And finds her callow infants forc'd away :

Long with her love, she stoops upon the plain,
The broken air loud whistling as she flies :
He stops and listens, and shoots forth again,
And guides her pinions by her young ones' cries.

With such kind passion hastes the prince to fight,
And spreads his flying canvass to the sound :
For whom no danger, were he there, could fright,
Now absent every little noise can wound.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain :
And first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train :

With such glad hearts did our despairing men
Salute th' appearance of the prince's fleet ;
And each ambitiously would claim the ken,
That with first eyes did distant safety meet.

The Dutch, who came like greedy hinds before,
To reap the harvest their ripe ears did yield,
Now look like those, when rolling thunders roar,
And sheets of lightning blast the standing field.

Full in the prince's passage, hills of sand,
And dangerous flats in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray.

The wily Dutch, who like fall'n angels fear'd
This new Messiah's coming, there did wait,
And round the verge their braving vessels steer'd,
To tempt his courage with so fair a bait.

But he unmov'd contemns their idle threat,
Secure of fame when'er he please to fight :
His cold experience tempers all his heat,
And inbred worth doth boasting valour slight.

Heroic virtue did his actions guide,
And he the substance, not th' appearance, chose :
To rescue one such friend, he took more pride,
Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes.

But when approach'd, in strict embraces bound,
Rupert and Albemarle together grow :
He joys to have his friend in safety found,
Which he to none but to that friend would owe.

The cheerful soldiers, with new stores supply'd,
Now long to execute their spleenful will :
And, in revenge for those three days they try'd,
Wish one, like Joshua's, when the Sun stood still.

Thus reinforc'd, against the adverse fleet,
Still doubling ours, brave Rupert leads the way :
With the first blushes of the morn they meet,
And bring night back upon the new-born day.

His presence soon blows up the kindling fight,
And his loud guns speak thick like angry men :
It seem'd as slaughter had been breath'd all night,
And Death new pointed his dull dart again.

The Dutch too well his mighty conduct knew,
And matchless courage, since the former fight :
Whose navy like a stiff-stretch'd cord did show,
Till he bore in and bent them into flight.

The wind he shares, while half their fleet offends
His open side, and high above him shows :
Upon the rest at pleasure he descends,
And doubly harm'd he double harms bestows.

Behind the general mends his weary pace,
And sullenly to his revenge he sails :
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails.

Th' increasing sound is borne to either shore,
 And for their stakes the throwing nations fear :
 Their passions double with the cannons' roar,
 And with warm wishes each man combats there.

Ply'd thick and close as when the fight begun,
 Their huge unwieldy navy wastes away :
 So sicken waneing Moons too near the Sun,
 And blunt their crescents on the edge of day.

And now reduc'd on equal terms to fight,
 Their ships like wasted patrimonies show ;
 Where the thin scattering trees admit the light,
 And shun each other's shadows as they grow.

The warlike prince had sever'd from the rest
 Two giant ships, the pride of all the main ;
 Which with his one so vigorously he press'd,
 And flew so home they could not rise again.

Already batter'd, by his lee they lay,
 In vain upon the passing winds they call :
 The passing winds through their torn canvass play,
 And flagging sails on heartless sailors fall.

Their open'd sides receive a gloomy light,
 Dreadful as day let into shades below ;
 Without grim Death rides barefac'd in their sight,
 And urges entering billows as they flow.

When one dire shot, the last they could supply,
 Close by the board the prince's main-mast bore :
 All three now helpless by each other lie,
 And this offends not, and those fear no more.

So have I seen some fearful hare maintain
 A course, till tir'd before the dog she lay :
 Who stretch'd behind her pants upon the plain,
 Past power to kill, as she to get away.

With his loll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey ;
 His warm breath blows her flix up as she lies ;
 She, trembling, creeps upon the ground away,
 And looks back to him with beseeching eyes.

The prince unjustly does his stars accuse,
 Which hinder'd him to push his fortune on ;
 For what they to his courage did refuse,
 By mortal valour never must be done.

This lucky hour the wise Batavian takes,
 And warns his tatter'd fleet to follow home :
 Proud to have so got off with equal stakes,
 Where 'twas a triumph not to be o'ercome.

The general's force, as kept alive by fight,
 Now, not oppos'd, no longer can pursue :
 Lasting till Heaven had done his courage right ;
 When he had conquer'd he his weakness knew.

He casts a frown on the departing foe,
 And sighs to see him quit the watery field :
 His stern fix'd eyes no satisfaction show,
 For all the glories which the fight did yield.

Though, as when fiends did miracles avow,
 He stands confess'd ev'n by the boastful Dutch :
 He only does his conquest disavow,
 And thinks too little what they found too much.

Return'd, he with the fleet resolv'd to stay ;
 No tender thoughts of home his heart divide ;
 Domestic joys and cares he puts away ; [guide.
 For realms are households which the great man

As those who unripe veins in mines explore,
 On the rich bed again the warm turf lay,
 Till time digests the yet imperfect ore,
 And know it will be gold another day :

So looks our monarch on this early fight,
 Th' essay and rudiments of great success :
 Which all-maturing Time must bring to light,
 While he like Heaven does each day's labour bless

Heaven ended not the first or second day,
 Yet each was perfect to the work design'd :
 God and kings work, when they their work survey
 A passive aptness in all subjects find.

In burthen'd vessels first, with speedy care,
 His plenteous stores do season'd timber send :
 Thither the brawny carpenters repair,
 And as the surgeons of maim'd ships attend.

With cord and canvass, from rich Hamburg sent,
 His navy's molted wings he imps once more :
 Tall Norway fir, their masts in battle spent,
 And English oak, sprung leaks and planks, restore

All hands employ'd the royal work grows warm :
 Like labouring bees on a long summer's day,
 Some sound the trumpet for the rest to swarm,
 And some on bells of tasted lilies play.

With glewy wax some new foundations lay
 Of virgin-combs, which from the roof are hung
 Some arm'd within doors upon duty stay,
 Or tend the sick, or educate the young.

So here some pick out bullets from the sides,
 Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift
 Their left hand does the caulking iron guide,
 The rattling mallet with the right they lift.

With boiling pitch another near at hand,
 From friendly Sweden brought, the seams instop
 Which, well paid o'er, the salt sea waves withstand
 And shakes them from the rising beak in drops

Some the gall'd ropes with dawby marline bind,
 Or sear-cloth masts with strong tarpawling coat
 To try new shrouds one mounts into the wind,
 And one below their ease or stiffness notes.

Our careful monarch stands in person by,
 His new-cast cannons' firmness to explore :
 The strength of big-corn'd powder loves to try,
 And ball and cartridge sorts for every bore.

Each day brings fresh supplies of arms and men,
 And ships which all last winter were abroad ;
 And such as fitted since the fight had been,
 Or new from stocks, were fall'n into the road.

The goodly London in her gallant trim,
 The Phenix, daughter of the vanish'd old,
 Like a rich bride does to the ocean swim,
 And on her shadow rides in floating gold.

Her flag aloft spread ruffling to the wind,
 And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire :
 The weaver, charm'd with what his loom design'd,
 Goes on to sea, and knows not to retire.

With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
 Whose low-laid mouths each mounting billow
 laves :
 Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length,
 She seems a sea-wasp flying on the waves.

This martial present, piously design'd,
 The loyal city give their best-lov'd king :
 And with a bounty ample as the wind,
 Built, fitted, and maintain'd, to aid him bring.

By viewing Nature, Nature's handmaid, Art,
 Makes mighty things from small beginnings grow :
 Her fishes first to shipping did impart,
 Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow.

One log perhaps upon the waters swam,
 An useless drift, which, rudely cut within,
 And hollow'd first, a floating trough became,
 And cross some rivulet passage did begin.

Shipping such as this, the Irish kern,
 And untaught Indian on the stream did glide :
 Or sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
 Or fin-like oars did spread from either side.

Not but a sail, and Saturn so appear'd,
 When from lost empire he to exile went,
 And with the golden age to Tyber steer'd,
 Where coin and commerce first he did invent.

Not as their ships was navigation then ;
 No useful compass or meridian known ;
 Sailing, they kept the land within their ken,
 And knew no north but when the Pole-star shone.

Not all who since have us'd the open sea,
 Than the bold English none more fame have won :
 Beyond the year, and out of Heaven's high way,
 They make discoveries where they see no Sun.

Not what so long in vain, and yet unknown,
 By poor mankind's benighted wit is sought,
 Till in this age to Britain first be shown,
 And hence be to admiring nations taught.

Not the ebb of tides and their mysterious flow,
 We, as Art's clements, shall understand,
 And as by line upon the ocean go,
 Whose paths shall be familiar as the land.

Not straggling ships shall sail to quick commerce,
 By which remotest regions are ally'd ;
 Not when makes one city of the universe,
 Where some may gain, and all may be supply'd.

Not when we upon our globe's last verge shall go,
 And view the ocean leaning on the sky :
 Not when thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
 And on the lunar world securely pry.

Not when I foretell from your auspicious care,
 Who great in search of God and Nature grow ;
 Not when your wise Creator's praise declare,
 Since best to praise his works is best to know.

O truly royal ! who behold the law
 And rule of beings in your Maker's mind :
 And thence, like limbecs, rich ideas draw,
 To fit the levell'd use of human kind.

But first the toils of war we must endure,
 And from th' injurious Dutch redeem the seas :
 War makes the valiant of his right secure,
 And gives up fraud to be chastis'd with ease.

Already were the Belgians on our coast,
 Whose fleet more mighty every day became
 By late success, which they did falsely boast,
 And now by first appearing seem'd to claim.

Designing, subtle, diligent, and close,
 They knew to manage war with wise delay :
 Yet all those arts their vanity did cross,
 And by their pride their prudence did betray.

Nor staid the English long ; but well supply'd,
 Appear as numerous as th' insulting foe :
 The combat now by courage must be try'd,
 And the success the braver nation show.

There was the Plymouth squadron now come in,
 Which in the Straits last winter was abroad ;
 Which twice on Biscay's working bay had been,
 And on the midland sea the French had aw'd.

Old expert Allen, loyal all along,
 Fam'd for his action on the Smyrna fleet :
 And Holmes, whose name shall live in epic song,
 While music numbers, or while verse has feet.

Holmes, the Achates of the general's fight ;
 Who first bewitch'd our eyes with Guinea gold :
 As once old Cato in the Roman sight
 The tempting fruits of Afric did unfold.

With him went Sprag, as bountiful as brave,
 Whom his high courage to command had brought :
 Harman, who did the twice-fir'd Harry save,
 And in his burning ship undaunted fought.

Young Hollis on a Muse by Mars begot,
 Born, Cæsar like, to write and act great deeds :
 Impatient to revenge his fatal shot,
 His right hand doubly to his left succeeds.

Thousands were there in darker fame that dwell,
 Whose deeds some nobler poem shall adorn :
 And though to me unknown, they sure fought well,
 Whom Rupert led, and who were British born.

Of every size an hundred fighting sail :
 So vast the navy now at anchor rides,
 That underneath it the press'd waters fail,
 And with its weight it shoulders off the tides.

Now, anchors weigh'd, the seamen shout so shrill,
 That Heaven and Earth and the wide Ocean rings :
 A breeze from westward waits their sails to fill,
 And rests in those high beds his downy wings.

The wary Dutch this gathering storm foresaw,
 And durst not bide it on the English coast :
 Behind their treacherous shallows they withdraw,
 And there lay snares to catch the British host.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
 Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie :
 And feels far off the trembling of her thread,
 Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly.

Then if at last she find him fast beset,
 She issues forth, and runs along her loom :
 She joys to touch the captive in her net,
 And drags the little wretch in triumph home.

The Belgians hop'd that, with disorder'd haste,
 Our deep-cut keels upon the sands might run :
 Or if with caution leisurely were past, [one.
 Their numerous gross might charge us one by

But with a fore-wind pushing them above,
 And swelling tide that heav'd them from below,
 O'er the blind flats our warlike squadrons move,
 And with spread sails to welcome battle go.

It seem'd as there the British Neptune stood,
 With all his hosts of waters at command,
 Beneath them to submit th' officious flood ;
 And with his trident shov'd them off the sand.

To the pale foes they suddenly draw near,
 And summon them to unexpected fight :
 They start like murderers when ghosts appear,
 And draw their curtains in the dead of night.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
 The midmost battles hastening up behind,
 Who view far off the storm of falling sleet,
 And hear their thunder rattling in the wind.

At length the adverse admirals appear :
 The two bold champions of each country's right :
 Their eyes describe the lists as they come near,
 And draw the lines of death before they fight.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
 The linstocks touch, the ponderous ball expires :
 The vigorous seaman every port-hole plies,
 And adds his heart to every gun he fires !

Fierce was the fight on the proud Belgians' side,
 For honour, which they seldom sought before :
 But now they by their own vain boasts were ty'd,
 And forc'd at least in show to prize it more.

But sharp remembrance on the English part,
 And shame of being match'd by such a foe,
 Rouze conscious virtue up in every heart,
 And seeming to be stronger makes them so.

Nor long the Belgians could that fleet sustain,
 Which did two generals' fates, and Cæsar's bear :
 Each several ship a victory did gain,
 As Rupert or as Albemarle were there.

Their batter'd admiral too soon withdrew,
 Unthank'd by ours for his unfinish'd fight :
 But he the minds of his Dutch masters knew,
 Who call'd that providence which we call'd flight.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
 Or sooner understood the sign to fly :
 With such alacrity they bore away,
 As if, to praise them, all the States stood by.

O famous leader of the Belgian fleet,
 Thy monument inscrib'd such praise shall war,
 As Varro timely flying once did meet,
 Because he did not of his Rome despair.

Behold that navy, which a while before
 Provok'd the tardy English close to fight ;
 Now draw their beaten vessels close to shore,
 As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight.

Whoe'er would English monuments survey,
 In other records may our courage know :
 But let them hide the story of this day,
 Whose fame was blemish'd by too base a foe.

Or if too busily they will inquire
 Into a victory, which we disdain ;
 Then let them know the Belgians did retire
 Before the patron saint of injur'd Spain.

Repenting England this revengeful day
 To Philip's manes did an offering bring :
 England, which first, by leading them astray,
 Hatch'd up rebellion to destroy her king.

Our fathers bent their baneful industry,
 To check a monarchy that slowly grew ;
 But did not France or Holland's fate foresee,
 Whose rising power to swift dominion flew.

In Fortune's empire blindly thus we go,
 And wander after pathless Destiny ;
 Whose dark resorts since Prudence cannot know,
 In vain it would provide for what shall be.

But whate'er English to the blessed shall go,
 And the fourth Harry or first Orange meet ;
 Find him disowning of a Bourbon foe,
 And him detesting a Batavian fleet.

Now on their coasts our conquering navy rides,
 Waylays their merchants, and their land beset
 Each day new wealth without their care provides
 They lie asleep with prizes in their nets.

So close behind some promontory lie
 The huge leviathans t' attend their prey ;
 And give no chace, but swallow in the fry, [w
 Which through their gaping jaws mistake

Nor was this all : in ports and roads remote,
 Destructive fires among whole fleets we send ;
 Triumphant flames upon the water float,
 And out-bound ships at home their voyage end

Those various squadrons variously design'd,
 Each vessel freighted with a several load,
 Each squadron waiting for a several wind,
 All find but one, to burn them in the road.

Some bound for Guinea, golden sand to find,
 Bore all the gauds the simple natives wear :
 Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
 For folded turbans finest Holland bear.

Some English wool vex'd in a Belgian loom,
 And into cloth of spungy softness made,
 Did into France or colder Denmark doom,
 To ruin with worse ware our staple trade.

Our greedy seamen rummage every hold,
Smile on the booty of each wealthier chest,
And, as the priests who with their gods make bold,
Take what they like, and sacrifice the rest.

But ah! how insincere are all our joys! [no stay :
Which, sent from Heaven, like lightning make
Their palling taste the journey's length destroys,
Or grief sent post o'ertakes them on the way.

Swell'd with our late successes on the foe,
Which France and Holland wanted power to cross,
We urge an unseen fate to lay us low,
And feed their envious eyes with English loss.

Each element his dread command obeys,
Who makes or ruins with a smile or frown ;
Who, as by one he did our nation raise,
So now he with another pulls us down.

Yet, London, empress of the northern clime,
By an high fate thou greatly didst expire ;
Great as the world's, which, at the death of Time,
Must fall, and rise a nobler frame by Fire.

As when some dire usurper Heaven provides,
To scourge his country with a lawless sway ;
His birth, perhaps, some petty village hides,
And sets his cradle out of Fortune's way :

Till, fully ripe, his swelling fate breaks out,
And hurries him to mighty mischiefs on :
His prince, surpris'd at first, no ill could doubt,
And wants the power to meet it when 'tis known.

Such was the rise of this prodigious Fire,
Which in mean buildings first obscurely bred,
From thence did soon to open streets aspire,
And straight to palaces and temples spread.

The diligence of trades and noiseful gain,
And luxury more late, asleep were laid :
All was the Night's ; and in her silent reign
No sound the rest of Nature did invade.

In this deep quiet, from what source unknown,
Those seeds of Fire their fatal birth disclose ;
And first few scattering sparks about were blown,
Beg with the flames that to our ruin rose.

Then in some close-pent room it crept along,
And, smouldering as it went, in silence fed ;
Till th' infant monster, with devouring strong,
Walk'd boldly upright with exalted head.

Now like some rich or mighty murderer,
Too great for prison, which he breaks with gold ;
Who fresher for new mischiefs does appear,
And dares the world to tax him with the old :

So escapes th' insulting Fire his narrow jail,
And makes small outlets into open air :
There the fierce winds his tender force assail,
And beat him downward to his first repair.

The winds, like crafty courtezans, withheld
His flames from burning, but to blow them more :
And every fresh attempt he is repell'd
With faint denials weaker than before.

And now no longer letted of his prey,
He leaps up at it with enrag'd desire :
O'erlooks the neighbours with a wide survey,
And nods at every house his threatening fire.

The ghosts of traitors from the bridge descend,
With bold fanatic spectres to rejoice :
About the fire into a dance they bend,
And sing their sabbath notes with feeble voice.

Our guardian angel saw them where they sate
Above the palace of our slumbering king :
He sigh'd, abandoning his charge to Fate,
And drooping, oft look'd back upon the wing.

At length the crackling noise and dreadful blaze
Call'd up some waking lover to the sight ;
And long it was ere he the rest could raise,
Whose heavy eyelids yet were full of night.

The next to danger, hot pursued by Fate,
Half-cloth'd, half-naked, hastily retire :
And frighted mothers strike their breasts too late,
For helpless infants left amidst the fire.

Their cries soon waken all the dwellers near ;
Now murmuring noises rise in every street :
The more remote run stumbling with their fear,
And in the dark men jostle as they meet.

So weary bees in little cells repose ;
But if night-robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxen city grows,
And out upon each other's wings they drive.

Now streets grow throng'd and busy as by day :
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire :
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play ;
And some more bold mount ladders to the fire.

In vain : for from the east a Belgian wind
His hostile breath through the dry rafters sent ;
The flames impell'd soon left their foes behind,
And forward with a wanton fury went.

A key of fire ran all along the shore,
And lighten'd all the river with a blaze :
The waken'd tides began again to roar,
And wondering fish in shining waters gaze.

Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head,
But fear'd the fate of Simois would return :
Deep in his ooze he sought his sedgy bed,
And shrunk his waters back into his urn.

The Fire, meantime, walks in a broader gross ;
To either hand his wings he opens wide :
He wades the streets, and straight he reaches cross,
And plays his longing flames on th' other side.

At first they warm, then scorch, and then they take ;
Now with long necks from side to side they feed ;
At length grown strong their mother Fire forsake,
And a new colony of Flames succeed.

To every nobler portion of the town
The curling billows roll their restless tide :
In parties now they straggle up and down,
As armies unoppos'd for prey divide.

One mighty squadron with a side-wind sped,
Through narrow lanes his cumber'd fire does haste,
By powerful charms of gold and silver led,
The Lombard bankers and the 'Change to waste.

Another backward to the Tower would go,
And slowly eats his way against the wind :
But the main body of the marching foe
Against th' imperial palace is design'd.

Now day appears, and with the day the king,
Whose early care had robb'd him of his rest :
Far off the cracks of falling houses ring,
And shrieks of subjects pierce his tender breast.

Near as he draws, thick harbingers of smoke
With gloomy pillars cover all the place ;
Whose little intervals of night are broke
By sparks, that drive against his sacred face.

More than his guards his sorrows made him known,
And pious tears which down his cheeks did shower :
The wretched in his grief forgot their own ;
So much the pity of a king has power.

He wept the flames of what he lov'd so well,
And what so well had merited his love :
For never prince in grace did more excel,
Or royal city more in duty strove.

Nor with an idle care did he behold :
Subjects may grieve, but monarchs must redress ;
He cheers the fearful, and commends the bold,
And makes despairers hope for good success.

Himself directs what first is to be done,
And orders all the succours which they bring :
The helpful and the good about him run,
And form an army worthy such a king.

He sees the dire contagion spread so fast,
That where it seizes all relief is vain :
And therefore must unwillingly lay waste
That country, which would else the foe maintain.

The powder blows up all before the Fire :
Th' amazed Flames stand gather'd on a heap ;
And from the precipice's brink retire,
Afraid to venture on so large a leap.

Thus fighting Fires awhile themselves consume,
But straight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly

Part stay for passage, till a gust of wind
Ships o'er their forces in a shining sheet :
Part creeping under ground their journey blind,
And climbing from below their fellows meet.

Thus to some desert plain, or old wood side,
Dire night-hags come from far to dance their round ;
And o'er broad rivers on their fiends they ride,
Or sweep in clouds above the blasted ground.

No help avails : for, hydra-like, the Fire
Lifts up his hundred heads to aim his way :
And scarce the wealthy can one half retire,
Before he rushes in to share the prey.

The rich grow suppliant, and the poor grow proud :
Those offer mighty gain, and these ask more :
So void of pity is th' ignoble crowd,
When others' ruin may increase their store.

As those who live by shores with joy behold
Some wealthy vessel split or stranded nigh,
And from the rocks leap down for shipwreck'd gold,
And seek the tempests which the others fly :

So these but wait the owners' last despair,
And what's permitted to the flames invade ;
Ev'n from their jaws they hungry morsels tear
And on their backs the spoils of Vulcan lade

The days were all in this lost labour spent ;
And when the weary king gave place to night,
His beams he to his royal brother lent,
And so shone still in his reflective light.

Night came, but without darkness or repose,
A dismal picture of the general doom ;
Where souls distracted when the trumpet blows,
And half unready with their bodies come.

Those who have homes, when home they do repair,
To a last lodging call their wandering friends :
Their short uneasy sleeps are broke with care,
To look how near their own destruction tends.

Those who have none, sit round where once it was
And with full eyes each wonted room require :
Haunting the yet warm ashes of the place,
As murder'd men walk where they did expire.

Some stir up coals and watch the vestal fire,
Others in vain from sight of ruin run ;
And while through burning labyrinths they retire,
With loathing eyes repeat what they would shun

The most in fields like herded beasts lie down,
To dews obnoxious on the grassy floor ;
And while their babes in sleep their sorrows drown
Sad parents watch the remnants of their store.

While by the motion of the flames they guess
What streets are burning now, and what are new
An infant waking to the paps would press,
And meets, instead of milk, a falling tear.

No thought can ease them but their sovereign's care
Whose praise th' afflicted as their comfort sing :
Ev'n those, whom want might drive to just despair
Think life a blessing under such a king.

Meantime he sadly suffers in their grief,
Outweeps an hermit, and outprays a saint :
All the long night he studies their relief,
How they may be supply'd and he may want.

" O God," said he, " thou patron of my days,
Guide of my youth in exile and distress !
Who me unfriended brought'st, by wondrous ways
The kingdom of my fathers to possess :

" Be thou my judge, with what unwearied care
I since have labour'd for my people's good ;
To bind the bruises of a civil war,
And stop the issues of their wasting blood.

Thou who hast taught me to forgive the ill,
And recompense as friends the good misdeed ;
Mercy be a precept of thy will,
Return that mercy on thy servant's head.

Or if my heedless youth has stepp'd astray,
Too soon forgetful of thy gracious hand ;
On me alone thy just displeasure lay,
But take thy judgments from this mourning land.

We all have sinn'd, and thou hast laid us low,
As humble earth from whence at first we came :
Like flying shades before the clouds we show,
And shrink like parchment in consuming flame.

O let it be enough what thou hast done ; [street,
When spotted Deaths ran arm'd through every
With poison'd darts which not the good could shun,
The speedy could outfly, or valiant meet.

The living few, and frequent funerals then,
Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place
And now those few who are return'd again,
Thy searching judgments to their dwellings trace.

O pass not, Lord, an absolute decree,
Or bind thy sentence unconditional :
It is in thy sentence our remorse foresee,
And in that foresight this thy doom recall.

By threatenings, Lord, as thine thou may'st revoke :

But if immutable and fix'd they stand,
Nimble still thyself to give the stroke,
And let not foreign foes oppress thy land."

Eternal heard, and from the heavenly quire
Came out the cherub with the flaming sword ;
And bade him swiftly drive th' approaching Fire
From where our naval magazines were stor'd.

The blessed minister his wings display'd,
And like a shooting star he cleft the night :
He clarg'd the flames, and those that disobey'd
He lash'd to duty with his sword of light.

The fugitive Flames, chastis'd, went forth to prey
On pious structures, by our fathers rear'd ;
Which to Heaven they did affect the way,
For faith in churchmen without works was heard.

The wailing orphans saw, with watery eyes,
Their founders' charity in dust laid low ;
And wot to God their ever-answer'd cries, . .
For he protects the poor, who made them so.

Could thy fabric, Paul's, defend thee long,
Though thou wert sacred to thy Maker's praise :
Nought made immortal by a poet's song ;
And poets' songs the Theban walls could raise.

The daring flames peep'd in, and saw from far
The awful beauties of the sacred quire :
Since it was profan'd by civil war,
Heav'n thought it fit to have it purg'd by fire.

And down the narrow streets it swiftly came,
And widely opening did on both sides prey :
A benefit we sadly owe the flame,
If only ruin must enlarge our way.

And now four days the Sun had seen our woes :
Four nights the Moon beheld th' incessant fire :
It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
And further from the feverish North retire.

In th' empyrean Heaven, the bless'd abode,
The thrones and the dominions prostrate lie,
Not daring to behold their angry God ;
And an hush'd silence damps the tuneful sky.

At length th' Almighty cast a pitying eye,
And mercy softly touch'd his melting breast :
He saw the town's one-half in rubbish lie,
And eager flames drive on to storm the rest.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above :
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames that to their quarry drove.

The vanquish'd Fires withdraw from every place,
Or full with feeding sink into a sleep :
Each household genius shows again his face,
And from the hearths the little Lares creep.

Our king this more than natural change beholds ;
With sober joy his heart and eyes abound
To the All-good his lifted hands he folds,
And thanks him low on his redeemed ground.

As when sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,
A kindly thaw unlocks it with cold rain ;
And first the tender blade peeps up to birth [grain :
And straight the green fields laugh with promis'd

By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
In every heart which fear had froze before :
The standing streets with so much joy they view,
That with less grief the perish'd they deplore.

The father of the people open'd wide
His stores, and all the poor with plenty fed :
Thus God's anointed God's own place supply'd,
And fill'd the empty with his daily bread.

This royal bounty brought its own reward,
And in their minds so deep did print the sense ;
That if their ruins sadly they regard,
'Tis but with fear the sight might drive him thence.

But so may he live long, that town to sway,
Which by his auspice they will nobler make,
As he will hatch their ashes by his stay,
And not their humble ruins now forsake.

They have not lost their loyalty by fire ;
Nor is their courage or their wealth so low,
That from his wars they poorly would retire,
Or beg the pity of a vanquish'd foe.

Not with more constancy the Jews, of old
By Cyrus from rewarded exile sent,
Their royal city did in dust behold,
Or with more vigour to rebuild it went.

The utmost malice of the stars is past, [town,
And two dire comets, which have scourg'd the
In their own plague and fire have breath'd the last,
Or dimly in their sinking sockets frown.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
 And high raised Jove from his dark prison freed,
 Those weights took off that on his planet hung,
 Will gloriously the new-laid work succeed.

Methinks already from this chymic flame,
 I see a city of more precious mold :
 Rich as the town which gives the Indies name,
 With silver pav'd, and all divine with gold.

Already labouring with a mighty fate,
 She shakes the rubbish from her mounting brow,
 And seems to have renew'd her charter's date,
 Which Heaven will to the death of Time allow.

More great than human now, and more august,
 Now deify'd she from her fires does rise :
 Her widening streets on new foundations trust,
 And opening into larger parts she flies.

Before she like some shepherdess did show,
 Who sat to bathe her by a river's side ;
 Not answering to her fame, but rude and low,
 Nor taught the beauteous arts of modern pride.

Now like a maiden queen she will behold,
 From her high turrets, hourly suitors come :
 The East with incense, and the West with gold,
 Will stand like suppliants to receive her doom.

The silver Thames, her own domestic flood,
 Shall bear her vessels like a sweeping train ;
 And often wind, as of his mistress proud,
 With longing eyes to meet her face again.

The wealthy Tagus, and the wealthier Rhine,
 The glory of their towns no more shall boast,
 And Seyne, that would with Belgian rivers join,
 Shall find her lustre stain'd, and traffic lost.

The venturous merchant, who design'd more far,
 And touches on our hospitable shore,
 Charm'd with the splendour of this northern star,
 Shall here unlade him and depart no more.

Our powerful navy shall no longer meet,
 The wealth of France or Holland to invade ;
 The beauty of this town without a fleet,
 From all the world shall vindicate her trade.

And while this fam'd emporium we prepare,
 The British ocean shall such triumphs boast,
 That those, who now disdain our trade to share,
 Shall rob like pirates on our wealthy coast.

Already we have conquer'd half the war,
 And the less dangerous part is left behind :
 Our trouble now is but to make them dare,
 And not so great to vanquish as to find.

Thus to the eastern wealth through storms we go,
 But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more ;
 A constant trade-wind will securely blow,
 And gently lay us on the spicy shore.

ALEXANDER'S FEAST :

OR, THE POWER OF MUSIC.

An Ode in Honour of St. Cecilia's Day.

'Twas at the royal feast for Persia won
 By Philip's warlike son :
 Aloft in awful state
 The godlike hero sate
 On his imperial throne :
 His valiant peers were plac'd around ;
 Their brows with roses and with myrtles bound :
 (So should desert in arms be crown'd)
 The lovely Thais, by his side,
 Sate, like a blooming eastern bride,
 In flower of youth and beauty's pride.
 Happy, happy, happy pair !
 None but the brave,
 None but the brave,
 None but the brave deserves the fair.

CHORUS.

Happy, happy, happy pair !
 None but the brave,
 None but the brave,
 None but the brave deserves the fair.

Timotheus, plac'd on high
 Amid the tuneful quire,
 With flying fingers touch'd the lyre :
 The trembling notes ascend the sky,
 And heavenly joys inspire.
 The song began from Jove,
 Who left his blissful seats above,
 (Such is the power of mighty love.)
 A dragon's fiery form bely'd the god
 Sublime on radiant spires he rode,
 When he to fair Olympia press'd :
 And while he sought her snowy breast :
 Then, round her slender waist he curl'd, [war
 And stamp'd an image of himself, a sovereign of
 The listening crowd admire the lofty sound,
 A present deity, they shout around :
 A present deity the vaulted roofs rebound :
 With ravish'd ears
 The monarch hears,
 Assumes the god,
 Affects to nod,
 And seems to shake the spheres.

CHORUS.

With ravish'd ears
 The monarch hears,
 Assumes the god,
 Affects to nod,
 And seems to shake the spheres.

The praise of Bacchus then, the sweet musician sung
 Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young :
 The jolly god in triumph comes ;
 Sound the trumpets ; beat the drums ;
 Flush'd with a purple grace
 He shows his honest face ;
 Now give the hautboys breath : he comes, he comes Bacchus, ever fair and young,
 Drinking joys did first ordain ;
 Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
 Drinking is the soldier's pleasure :
 Rich the treasure,
 Sweet the pleasure ;
 Sweet is pleasure after pain.

CHORUS.

Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
 Drinking is the soldier's pleasure ;
 Rich the treasure,
 Sweet the pleasure ;
 Sweet is pleasure after pain.

Sooth'd with the sound, the king grew vain ;
 Fought all his battles o'er again ; [the slain.
 And thrice he routed all his foes ; and thrice he slew
 The master saw the madness rise ;
 His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes ;
 And, while he Heaven and Earth defy'd,
 Chang'd his hand, and check'd his pride.
 He chose a mournful Muse
 Soft pity to infuse :
 He sung Darius great and good,
 By too severe a fate,
 Fallen, fallen, fallen, fallen,
 Fallen from his high estate,
 And weltring in his blood ;
 Deserted, at his utmost need,
 By those his former bounty fed :
 On the bare earth expos'd he lies,
 With not a friend to close his eyes.
 With downcast looks the joyless victor sate,
 Revolving in his alter'd soul
 The various turns of Chance below ;
 And, now and then, a sigh he stole ;
 And tears began to flow.

CHORUS.

Revolving in his alter'd soul
 The various turns of Chance below ;
 And, now and then, a sigh he stole ;
 And tears began to flow.

The mighty master smil'd, to see
 That love was in the next degree :
 'Twas but a kindred sound to move,
 For pity melts the mind to love.
 Softly sweet, in Lydian measures,
 Soon he sooth'd his soul to pleasures.
 War, he sung, is toil and trouble ;
 Honour but an empty bubble ;
 Never ending, still beginning,
 Fighting still, and still destroying ;
 If the world be worth thy winning,
 Think, O think, it worth enjoying :
 Lovely This sits beside thee,
 Take the good the gods provide thee.
 He many rend the skies with loud applause ;
 Love was crown'd, but Music won the cause.
 The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
 Gas'd on the fair
 Who caus'd his care,
 And sigh'd and look'd, sigh'd and look'd,
 Sigh'd and look'd, and sigh'd again :
 Length, with love and wine at once oppress'd,
 The vanquish'd victor sunk upon her breast.

CHORUS.

The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
 Gas'd on the fair
 Who caus'd his care,
 And sigh'd and look'd, sigh'd and look'd,
 Sigh'd and look'd, and sigh'd again :
 Length, with love and wine at once oppress'd,
 The vanquish'd victor sunk upon her breast.

Now strike the golden lyre again :
 A louder yet, and yet a louder strain.
 Break his bands of sleep asunder,
 And rouse him, like a rattling peal of thunder.
 Hark, hark, the horrid sound
 Has rais'd up his head !
 As awak'd from the dead,
 And amaz'd, he stares around.
 Revenge, revenge, Timotheus cries,
 See the Furies arise :
 See the snakes that they rear,
 How they hiss in their hair,
 And the sparkles that flash from their eyes !
 Behold a ghastly band,
 Each a torch in his hand !
 Those are Grecian ghosts, that in battle were slain
 And unbury'd remain
 Inglorious on the plain :
 Give the vengeance due
 To the valiant crew.
 Behold how they toss their torches on high,
 How they point to the Persian abodes,
 And glittering temples of their hostile gods.
 The princes applaud, with a furious joy ;
 And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy ;
 This led the way,
 To light him to his prey,
 And, like another Helen, fir'd another Troy.

CHORUS.

And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy ;
 This led the way,
 To light him to his prey,
 And, like another Helen, fir'd another Troy.

Thus, long ago,
 Ere heaving bellows learn'd to blow,
 While organs yet were mute ;
 Timotheus, to his breathing flute,
 And sounding lyre,
 Could swell the soul to rage, or kindle soft desire
 At last divine Cecilia came,
 Inventress of the vocal frame ;
 The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
 Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
 And added length to solemn sounds,
 With Nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown before.
 Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
 Or both divide the crown ;
 He rais'd a mortal to the skies ;
 She drew an angel down.

GRAND CHORUS.

At last divine Cecilia came,
 Inventress of the vocal frame ;
 The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
 Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
 And added length to solemn sounds,
 With Nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown before.
 Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
 Or both divide the crown ;
 He rais'd a mortal to the skies ;
 She drew an angel down.

PALAMON AND ARCITE :

OR THE KNIGHT'S TALE.

Book I.

In days of old, there liv'd, of mighty fame,
 A valiant prince, and Theseus was his name :
 A chief, who more in feats of arms excell'd,
 The rising nor the setting Sun beheld.
 Of Athens he was lord ; much land he won,
 And added foreign countries to his crown.
 In Scythia with the warrior queen he strove,
 Whom first by force he conquered, then by love ;
 He brought in triumph back the beauteous dame,
 With whom her sister, fair Emilia, came.
 With honour to his home let Theseus ride,
 With Love to friend, and Fortune for his guide,
 And his victorious army at his side.
 I pass their warlike pomp, their proud array,
 Their shouts, their songs, their welcome on the way.
 But, were it not too long, I would recite
 The feats of Amazons, the fatal fight
 Betwixt the hardy queen and hero knight ;
 The town besieg'd, and how much blood it cost
 The female army and th' Athenian host ;
 The spousals of Hippolita, the queen ;
 What tilts and turneys at the feast were seen ;
 The storm at their return, the ladies' fear :
 But these, and other things, I must forbear.
 The field is spacious I design to sow,
 With oxen far unfit to draw the plow :
 The remnant of my tale is of a length
 To tire your patience, and to waste my strength ;
 And trivial accidents shall be forborn,
 That others may have time to take their turn ;
 As was at first enjoin'd us by mine host,
 That he whose tale is best, and pleases most,
 Should win his supper at our common cost.

And therefore where I left, I will pursue
 This ancient story, whether false or true,
 In hope it may be mended with a new.
 The prince I mentioned, full of high renown,
 In this array drew near th' Athenian town ;
 When, in his pomp and utmost of his pride,
 Marching, he chanc'd to cast his eye aside,
 And saw a choir of mourning dames, who lay
 By two and two across the common way :
 At his approach they rais'd a rueful cry,
 And beat their breasts, and held their hands on high,
 Creeping and crying, till they seiz'd at last
 His courser's bridle, and his feet embrac'd.

" Tell me," said Theseus, " what and whence you are,

And why this funeral pageant you prepare ?
 Is this the welcome of my worthy deeds,
 To meet my triumph in ill-omen'd weeds ?
 Or envy you my praise, and would destroy
 With grief my pleasures, and pollute my joy ?
 Or are you injur'd, and demand relief ?
 Name your request, and I will ease your grief."

The most in years of all the mourning train
 Began (but swooned first away for pain) ;
 Then scarce recover'd spoke : " Nor envy we Thy great renown, nor grudge thy victory ;
 'Tis thine, O king, th' afflicted to redress,
 And Fame has fill'd the world with thy success :
 We, wretched women, sue for that alone,
 Which of thy goodness is refus'd to none ;

Let fall some drops of pity on our grief,
 If what we beg be just, and we deserve relief :
 For none of us, who now thy grace implore,
 But held the rank of sovereign queen before ;
 Till, thanks to giddy Chance, which never bears,
 That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
 She cast us headlong from our high estate,
 And here in hope of thy return we wait :
 And long have waited in the temple nigh,
 Built to the gracious goddess Clemency.
 But reverence thou the power whose name it bears,
 Relieve th' oppress'd, and wipe the widow's tears.
 I, wretched I, have other fortune seen,
 The wife of Capaneus, and once a queen :
 At Thebes he fell, curst be the fatal day !
 And all the rest thou seest in this array
 To make their moan, their lords in battle lost
 Before that town, besieg'd by our confederate host :
 But Creon, old and impious, who commands
 The Theban city, and usurps the lands,
 Denies the rites of funeral fires to those Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his foes.
 Unburn'd, unbury'd, on a heap they lie ;
 Such is their fate, and such his tyranny ;
 No friend has leave to bear away the dead,
 But with their lifeless limbs his hounds are fed."
 At this she shriek'd aloud ; the mournful train
 Echo'd her grief, and, groveling on the plain,
 With groans, and hands upheld, to move his mind,
 Besought his pity to their helpless kind !

The prince was touch'd, his tears began to flow,
 And, as his tender heart would break in two,
 He sigh'd, and could not but their fate deplore,
 So wretched now, so fortunate before.
 Then lightly from his lofty steed he flew,
 And raising, one by one, the suppliant crew,
 To comfort each, full solemnly he swore,
 That by the faith which knights to knighthood bore,
 And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,
 He would not cease, till he reveng'd their wrongs :
 That Greece should see perform'd what he declar'd,
 And cruel Creon find his just reward.
 He said no more, but, shunning all delay,
 Rode on ; nor enter'd Athens on his way :
 But left his sister and his queen behind,
 And wav'd his royal banner in the wind :
 Where in an argent field the god of war
 Was drawn triumphant on his iron car ;
 Red was his sword, and shield, and whole attire,
 And all the godhead seem'd to glow with fire ;
 Ev'n the ground glitter'd where the standard flew,
 And the green grass was dy'd to sanguine hue.
 High on his pointed lance his pennon bore
 His Cretan fight, the conquer'd Minotaur :
 The soldiers shout around with generous rage,
 And in that victory their own presage.
 He prais'd their ardour ; inly pleas'd to see
 His host the flower of Grecian chivalry.
 All day he march'd ; and all th' ensuing night ;
 And saw the city with returning light.
 The process of the war I need not tell,
 How Theseus conquer'd, and how Creon fell :
 Or after, how by storm the walls were won,
 Or how the victor sack'd and burn'd the town :
 How to the ladies he restor'd again
 The bodies of their lords in battle slain :
 And with what ancient rites they were interr'd,
 All these to fitter times shall be deferr'd :
 I spare the widows' tears, their woeful cries,
 And howling at their husbands' obsequies ;

low Theseus at these funerals did assist,
And with what gifts the mourning dames dismiss'd.
Thus when the victor chief had Creon slain,
And conquer'd Thebes, he pitch'd upon the plain
His mighty camp, and, when the day return'd,
The country wasted, and the hamlets burn'd,
And left the pillagers, to rapine bred,
Without control to strip and spoil the dead.

There, in a heap of slain, among the rest
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load
Oppress'd

Whom slaughter'd foes, whom first to death they sent,
The trophies of their strength, a bloody monument.
Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
Then kinsmen to the crown the heralds deem'd;
That day in equal arms they fought for fame;
Their swords, their shields, their surcoats, were the same.

One by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grisly
wound;

Not well alive, nor wholly dead they were,
But some faint signs of feeble life appear:
The wandering breath was on the wing to part,
Faint was the pulse, and hardly heav'd the heart.

These two were sisters' sons; and Arcite one,
Each fam'd in fields, with valiant Palamon.
From these their costly arms the spoilers rent,
And wofully both convey'd to Theseus' tent:

From the known of Creon's line, and cur'd with care,
He to his city sent as prisoners of the war,
For loss of ransom, and condemn'd to lie
In prison, doom'd a lingering death to die.

As done, he march'd away with warlike sound,
And to his Athens turn'd with laurels crown'd,
Where happy long he liv'd, much lov'd, and more renown'd.

But in a tower, and never to be loos'd,
The woful captive kinsmen are enclos'd.

Thus year by year they pass, and day by day,
In silence, 'twas on the morn of cheerful May,
The young Emilia, fairer to be seen
Than the fair lily on the flowery green,

More fresh than May herself in blossoms new,
Her rosy colour strove her hue,
And, as her custom was, before the day,
To do the observance due to sprightly May:

As brightly May commands our youth to keep
The vigils of her night, and breaks their sluggard sleep;

Each gentle breast with kindly warmth she moves;
Inspires new flames, revives extinguish'd loves.

At this remembrance Emily, ere day,
Dress'd and dress'd herself in rich array;

Even as the month, and as the morning fair;
When her shoulders fell her length of hair:

And when did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose, and wanton'd in the wind.

Her hair had but newly chas'd the night,
And purpled o'er the sky with blushing light,

First to the garden walk she took her way,
To sport and trip along in cool of day,

And offer maiden vows in honour of the May.
At every turn, she made a little stand,

And thrust among the thorns her lily hand
To draw the rose; and every rose she drew,
He shook the stalk, and brush'd away the dew:

He shook the stalk, and brush'd away the dew:
He shook the stalk, and brush'd away the dew:
He shook the stalk, and brush'd away the dew:

He shook the stalk, and brush'd away the dew:
He shook the stalk, and brush'd away the dew:
He shook the stalk, and brush'd away the dew:

He shook the stalk, and brush'd away the dew:
He shook the stalk, and brush'd away the dew:
He shook the stalk, and brush'd away the dew:

Ev'n wondering Philomel forgot to sing,
And learn'd from her to welcome-in the Spring.
The tower, of which before was mention made,
Within whose keep the captive knights were laid,
Built of a large extent, and strong withal,
Was one partition of the palace wall:
The garden was enclos'd within the square,
Where young Emilia took the morning air.

It happen'd Palamon, the prisoner knight,
Restless for woe, arose before the light,
And with his gaoler's leave desir'd to breathe
An air more wholesome than the damps beneath:

This granted, to the tower he took his way,
Cheer'd with the promise of a glorious day:
Then cast a languishing regard around,
And saw with hateful eyes the temples crown'd

With golden spires, and all the hostile ground.
He sigh'd, and turn'd his eyes, because he knew
'Twas but a larger gaol he had in view:

Then look'd below, and, from the castle's height,
Beheld a nearer and more pleasing sight,
The garden; which before he had not seen,
In Spring's new livery clad of white and green,

Fresh flowers in wide parterres, and shady walks between.

This view'd, but not enjoy'd, with arms across
He stood, reflecting on his country's loss;

Himself an object of the public scorn,
And often wish'd he never had been born.

At last, for so his destiny requir'd,
With walking giddy, and with thinking tir'd,
He through a little window cast his sight,
Though thick of bars, that gave a scanty light:

But ev'n that glimmering serv'd him to descry
Th' inevitable charms of Emily.

Scarce had he seen, but, seiz'd with sudden smart,
Stung to the quick, he felt it at his heart;

Struck blind with over-powering light he stood,
Then started back amaz'd, and cry'd aloud.

Young Arcite heard; and up he ran with haste,
To help his friend, and in his arms embrac'd;

And ask'd him why he look'd so deadly wan,
And whence and how his change of cheer began,
Or who had done th' offence? "But if," said he,
"Your grief alone is hard captivity,

For love of Heaven, with patience undergo
A cureless ill, since Fate will have it so:

So stood our horoscope in chains to lie,
And Saturn in the dungeon of the sky,

Or other baleful aspect, rul'd our birth,
When all the friendly stars were under Earth:

Whate'er betides, by Destiny 'tis done;
And better bear like men, than vainly seek to shun."

"Nor of my bonds," said Palamon again,
"Nor of unhappy planets I complain;

But when my mortal anguish caus'd me cry,
That moment I was hurt through either eye;

Pierc'd with a random shaft, I faint away,
And perish with insensible decay:

A glance of some new goddess gave the wound,
Whom, like Acteon, unaware I found.

Look how she walks along yon shady space,
Not Juno moves with more majestic grace;

And all the Cyprian queen is in her face.
If thou art Venus (for thy charms confess
That face was form'd in Heaven, nor art thou less;

Disguis'd in habit, undisguis'd in shape)
O help us captives from our chains to escape;

But if our doom be past, in bonds to lie
For life, and in a loathsome dungeon die,

Then be thy wrath appeas'd with our disgrace,
 And show compassion to the Theban race,
 Oppress'd by tyrant power !" While yet he spoke,
 Arcite on Emily had fix'd his look ;
 The fatal dart a ready passage found,
 And deep within his heart infix'd the wound :
 So that if Palamon were wounded sore,
 Arcite was hurt as much as he, or more :
 Then from his inmost soul he sigh'd, and said,
 " The beauty I behold has struck me dead :
 Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance ;
 Poison is in her eyes, and death in every glance.
 O, I must ask, nor ask alone, but move
 Her mind to mercy, or must die for love."

Thus Arcite : and thus Palamon replies,
 (Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes.)
 " Speak'st thou in earnest, or in jesting vein ?"
 " Jestings," said Arcite, " suits but ill with pain."
 " It suits far worse" (said Palamon again,
 And bent his brows) " with men who honour weigh,
 Their faith to break, their friendship to betray ;
 But worst with thee, of noble lineage born,
 My kinsman, and in arms my brother sworn.
 Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
 That one should be the common good of both ;
 One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
 His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love ?
 To this before the Gods we gave our hands,
 And nothing but our death can break the bands.
 This binds thee, then, to further my design :
 As I am bound by vow to further thine :
 Nor canst, nor dar'st thou, traitor, on the plain
 Appeach my honour, or thine own maintain,
 Since thou art of my council, and the friend
 Whose faith I trust, and on whose care depend :
 And would'st thou court my lady's love, which I
 Much rather than release would choose to die ?
 But thou, false Arcite, never shalt obtain
 Thy bad pretence ; I told thee first my pain :
 For first my love began ere thine was born ;
 Thou, as my council, and my brother sworn,
 Art bound t' assist my eldership of right,
 Or justly to be deem'd a perjur'd knight."

Thus Palamon : but Arcite, with disdain,
 In haughty language, thus reply'd again :
 " Forsworn thyself : the traitor's odious name
 I first return, and then disprove thy claim.
 If love be passion, and that passion nurst
 With strong desires, I lov'd the lady first.
 Canst thou pretend desire, whom zeal inflam'd
 To worship, and a power celestial nam'd ?
 Thine was devotion to the blest above,
 I saw the woman, and desir'd her love ;
 First own'd my passion, and to thee commend
 Th' important secret, as my chosen friend.
 Suppose (which yet I grant not) thy desire
 A moment elder than my rival fire ;
 Can chance of seeing first thy title prove ?
 And know'st thou not, no law is made for love ;
 Law is to things, which to free choice relate ;
 Love is not in our choice, but in our fate ;
 Laws are but positive ; love's power, we see,
 Is Nature's sanction, and her first decree.
 Each day we break the bond of human laws
 For love, and vindicate the common cause.
 Laws for defence of civil rights are plac'd,
 Love throws the fences down, and makes a general waste :
 Maids, widows, wives, without distinction fall ;
 The sweeping deluge, love, comes on, and covers
 all.

If then the laws of friendship I transgress,
 I keep the greater, while I break the less ;
 And both are mad alike, since neither can possess
 Both hopeless to be ransom'd, never more
 To see the Sun, but as he passes o'er."

Like Æsop's hounds contending for the bone,
 Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone :
 The fruitless fight continued all the day :
 A cur came by, and snatch'd the prize away.
 " As courtiers therefore juggle for a grant, {was
 And, when they break their friendship, plead the
 So, thou, if Fortune will thy suit advance,
 Love on, nor envy me my equal chance :
 For I must love, and am resolv'd to try
 My fate, or failing in th' adventure, die."

Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd
 Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd :
 Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand ;
 But when they met, they made a surly stand ;
 And glar'd like angry lions as they pass'd,
 And wish'd that every look might be their last.

It chanc'd at length, Pirithous came t' attend
 This worthy Theseus, his familiar friend ;
 Their love in early infancy began,
 And rose as childhood ripen'd into man :
 Companions of the war, and lov'd so well,
 That when one dy'd, as ancient stories tell,
 His fellow to redeem him went to Hell.

But to pursue my tale : to welcome home
 His warlike brother is Pirithous come :
 Arcite of Thebes was known in arms long since,
 And honour'd by this young Thessalian prince.
 Theseus, to gratify his friend and guest,
 Who made our Arcite's freedom his request,
 Restor'd to liberty the captive knight,
 But on these hard conditions I recite :
 That if hereafter Arcite should be found
 Within the compass of Athenian ground,
 By day or night, or on whate'er pretence,
 His head should pay the forfeit of th' offence.
 To this Pirithous for his friend agreed,
 And on his promise was the prisoner freed.

Unpleas'd and pensive hence he takes his way,
 At his own peril ; for his life must pay.
 Who now but Arcite mourns his bitter fate,
 Finds his dear purchase, and repents too late ?
 " What have I gain'd," he said, " in prison pen
 If I but change my bonds for banishment ?
 And banish'd from her sight, I suffer more
 In freedom, than I felt in bonds before :
 Forc'd from her presence, and condemn'd to live :
 Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve :
 Heaven is not, but where Emily abides ;
 And where she's absent, all is Hell besides.
 Next to my day of birth, was that accurst,
 Which bound my friendship to Pirithous first :
 Had I not known that prince, I still had been
 In bondage, and had still Emilia seen :
 For, though I never can her grace deserve,
 'Tis recompense enough to see and serve.
 O Palamon, my kinsman and my friend,
 How much more happy fates thy love attend !
 Thine is th' adventure ; thine the victory :
 Well has thy fortune turn'd the dice for thee :
 Thou on that angel's face may'st feed thine eye
 In prison, no ; but blissful Paradise !
 Thou daily seest that sun of beauty shine,
 And lov'st at least in love's extremest line.
 I mourn in absence, love's eternal night ;
 And who can tell but since thou hast her sight,
 And art a comely, young, and valiant knight,

Fortune (a various power) may cease to frown,
 And by some ways unknown thy wishes crown?
 But I, the most forlorn of human kind,
 For help can hope, nor remedy can find;
 But, doom'd to drag my loathsome life in care,
 For my reward, must end it in despair.
 Fire, water, air, and earth, and force of fates
 That governs all, and Heaven that all creates,
 Nor art, nor Nature's hand can ease my grief;
 Nothing but death, the wretch's last relief:
 Then farewell youth, and all the joys that dwell,
 With youth and life, and life itself farewell.
 But why, alas! do mortal men in vain
 If Fortune, Fate, or Providence complain?
 God gives us what he knows our wants require,
 And better things than those which we desire:
 Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;
 But, watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain;
 Some pray from prison to be freed; and come,
 Then guilty of their vows, to fall at home;
 Murder'd by those they trusted with their life,
 A favour'd servant, or a hosom wife.
 Such dear-bought blessings happen every day,
 Because we know not for what things to pray.
 Like drunken sots about the street we roam:
 None knows the sot he has a certain home;
 Yet knows not how to find th' uncertain place,
 And blunders on, and staggers every pace.
 But all seek happiness; but few can find,
 For far the greater part of men are blind.
 This is my case, who thought our utmost good
 Was in one word of freedom understood:
 The fatal blessing came: from prison free,
 I starve abroad, and lose the sight of Emily."
 Thus Arcite: but if Arcite thus deplore
 His sufferings, Palamon yet suffers more.
 For when he knew his rival freed and gone,
 He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
 He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground;
 He hollow tower with clamours rings around:
 With briny tears he bath'd his fetter'd feet,
 And dropt all o'er with agony of sweat.
 Alas!" he cry'd, "I wretch in prison pine,
 As happy rival, while the fruit is thine:
 Thou liv'st at large, thou draw'st thy native air,
 And liv'st with thy freedom, proud of my despair:
 Thou may'st, since thou hast youth and courage
 Join'd,
 Sweet behaviour, and a solid mind,
 Vindicate ours; and all the Theban race,
 And vindicate on Athens thy disgrace;
 And after, by some treaty made, possess
 For Emily, the pledge of lasting peace.
 No time shall be the beautiful prize, while I
 Lie languish in despair, in prison die.
 But all th' advantage of the strife is thine,
 By portion double joys, and double sorrows
 Mine."
 The rage of jealousy then fir'd his soul,
 And his face kindled like a burning coal:
 How cold Despair, succeeding in her stead,
 How pale his paleness turns the glowing red.
 In blood, scarce liquid, creeps within his veins,
 The water which the freezing wind constrains.
 Then thus he said: "Eternal deities,
 Who rule the world with absolute decrees,
 And write whatever time shall bring to pass,
 With pens of adamant, on plates of brass;
 That, in the race of human kind your care,
 Beyond what all his fellow-creatures are?

He with the rest is liable to pain,
 And like the sheep, his brother-beast, is slain.
 Cold, hunger, prisons, ills without a cure,
 All these he must, and, guiltless, oft endure;
 Or does your justice, power, or prescience fail,
 When the good suffer, and the bad prevail?
 What worse to wretched Virtue could befall,
 If Fate or giddy Fortune govern'd all?
 Nay, worse than other beasts is our estate;
 Them, to pursue their pleasures, you create;
 We, bound by harder laws, must curb our will,
 And your commands, not our desires, fulfil;
 Then when the creature is unjustly slain,
 Yet after death at least he feels no pain;
 But man, in life surcharg'd with woe before,
 Not freed when dead, is doom'd to suffer more.
 A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;
 An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller:
 The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,
 One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake.
 This let divines decide; but well I know,
 Just or unjust, I have my share of woe,
 Through Saturn seated in a luckless place,
 And Juno's wrath, that persecutes my race;
 Or Mars and Venus, in a quartile, move
 My pangs of jealousy for Arcite's love."

Let Palamon, oppress'd in bondage, mourn,
 While to his exil'd rival we return.
 By this, the Sun, declining from his height,
 The day had shorten'd, to prolong the night:
 The lengthened night gave length of misery
 Both to the captive lover and the free;
 For Palamon in endless prison mourns,
 And Arcite forfeits life if he returns:
 The banish'd never hopes his love to see,
 Nor hopes the captive lord his liberty:
 'Tis hard to say who suffers greater pains:
 One sees his love, but cannot break his chains:
 One free, and all his motions uncontrol'd,
 Beholds whate'er he would, but what he would behold.

Judge as you please, for I will haste to tell
 What fortune to the banish'd knight befell.

When Arcite was to Thebes return'd again,
 The loss of her he lov'd renew'd his pain;
 What could be worse, than never more to see
 His life, his soul, his charming Emily?
 He rav'd with all the madness of despair,
 He roar'd, he beat his breast, he tore his hair.
 Dry sorrow in his stupid eyes appears,
 For, wanting nourishment, he wanted tears:
 His eye-balls in their hollow sockets sink:
 Bereft of sleep, he loaths his meat and drink:
 He withers at his heart, and looks as wan
 As the pale spectre of a murder'd man:
 That pale turns yellow, and his face receives
 The faded hue of sapless boxen leaves:
 In solitary groves he makes his moan,
 Walks early out, and ever is alone:
 Nor, mix'd in mirth, in youthful pleasures shares,
 But sighs when songs and instruments he hears:
 His spirits are so low, his voice is drown'd,
 He hears as from afar, or in a swoon,
 Like the deaf murmurs of a distant sound:
 Uncomb'd his locks, and squalid his attire,
 Unlike the trim of Love and gay Desire:
 But full of museful mopings, which presage
 The loss of reason, and conclude in rage.
 This when he had endur'd a year and more,
 Now wholly changed from what he was before,

It happen'd once, that, slumbering as he lay,
 He dream'd (his dream began at break of day)
 That Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
 And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd:
 His hat, adorn'd with wings, disclos'd the god,
 And in his hand he bore the sleep-compelling rod:
 Such as he seem'd, when, at his sire's command,
 On Argus' head he laid the snaky wand.
 "Arise," he said, "to conquering Athens go,
 There Fate appoints an end to all thy woe."
 The fright awaken'd Arcite with a start,
 Against his bosom bounced his heaving heart;
 But soon he said, with scarce recover'd breath,
 "And thither will I go, to meet my death,
 Sure to be slain, but death is my desire,
 Since in Emilia's sight I shall expire."
 By chance he spy'd a mirror while he spoke,
 And gazing there beheld his alter'd look;
 Wondering, he saw his features and his hue
 So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew.

A sudden thought then starting in his mind,
 "Since I in Arcite cannot Arcite find,
 The world may search in vain with all their eyes,
 But never penetrate through this disguise.
 Thanks to the change which grief and sickness
 -give,

In low estate I may securely live,
 And see unknown my mistress day by day."
 He said; and cloth'd himself in coarse array:
 A labouring hind in show, then forth he went,
 And to th' Athenian towers his journey bent:
 One squire attended in the same disguise,
 Made conscious of his master's enterprise.
 Arriv'd at Athens, soon he came to court,
 Unknown, unquestion'd, in that thick resort:
 Proffering for hire his service at the gate,
 To drudge, draw water, and to run or wait.

So fair befell him, that for little gain
 He serv'd at first Emilia's chamberlain:
 And, watchful all advantages to spy,
 Was still at hand, and in his master's eye:
 And as his bones were big, and sinews strong,
 Refus'd no toil, that could to slaves belong;
 But from deep wells with engines water drew,
 And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew.
 He pass'd a year at least attending thus
 On Emily, and call'd Philostratus.
 But never was there man of his degree
 So much esteem'd, so well belov'd as he.
 So gentle of condition was he known,
 That through the court his courtesy was blown:
 All think him worthy of a greater place,
 And recommend him to the royal grace,
 That, exercis'd within a higher sphere,
 His virtues more conspicuous might appear.
 Thus by the general voice was Arcite prais'd,
 And by great Theseus to high favour rais'd:
 Among his menial servants first enroll'd,
 And largely entertain'd with sums of gold:
 Besides what secretly from Thebes was sent,
 Of his own income, and his annual rent:
 This well employ'd, he purchas'd friends and fame,

But cautiously conceal'd from whence it came.
 Thus for three years he liv'd with large increase,
 In arms of honour, and esteem in peace;
 To Theseus' person he was ever near;
 And Theseus for his virtues held him dear.

Book II.

WHILE Arcite lives in bliss, the story turns
 Where hopeless Palamon in prison mourns.
 For six long years immur'd, the captiv'd knight
 Had dragg'd his chains, and scarcely seen the light:
 Lost liberty, and love, at once he bore:
 His prison pain'd him much, his passion more:
 Nor dares he hope his fetters to remove,
 Nor ever wishes to be free from love.

But when the sixth revolving year was run,
 And May within the Twins receiv'd the Sun,
 Were it by Chance, or forceful Destiny,
 Which forms in causes first whate'er shall be,
 Assisted by a friend, one moonless night,
 This Palamon from prison took his flight:
 A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before
 Of wine and honey, mix'd with added store
 Of opium; to his keeper this he brought,
 Who swallow'd unaware the sleepy draught,
 And snor'd secure till morn, his senses bound
 In slumber, and in long oblivion drown'd.
 Short was the night, and careful Palamon
 Sought the next covert ere the rising Sun.
 A thick spread forest near the city lay,
 To this with lengthen'd strides he took his way
 (For far he could not fly, and fear'd the day).
 Safe from pursuit, he meant to shun the light,
 Till the brown shadows of the friendly night
 To Thebes might favour his intended flight.
 When to his country come, his next design
 Was all the Theban race in arms to join,
 And war on Theseus, till he lost his life
 Or won the beauteous Emily to wife.
 Thus while his thoughts the lingering day beguile,
 To gentle Arcite let us turn our style;
 Who little dreamt how nigh he was to care,
 Till treacherous Fortune caught him in the snare.
 The morning-lark, the messenger of Day,
 Saluted in her song the morning gray;
 And soon the Sun arose with beams so bright,
 That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous sight.
 He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
 And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dew.
 When Arcite left his bed, resolv'd to pay
 Observance to the month of merry May:
 Forth on his fiery steed betimes he rode,
 That scarcely prints the turf on which he trod:
 At ease he seem'd, and, prancing o'er the plains,
 Turn'd only to the grove his horse's reins,
 The grove I nam'd before; and, lighted there,
 A woodbine garland sought to crown his hair;
 Then turn'd his face against the rising day,
 And rais'd his voice to welcome in the May. [w]

"For thee, sweet month, the groves green live
 If not the first, the fairest of the year:
 For thee the Graces lead the dancing Hours,
 And Nature's ready pencil paints the flowers:
 When thy short reign is past, the feverish Sun
 The sultry tropic fears, and moves more slowly
 So may thy tender blossoms fear no blight,
 Nor goats with venom'd teeth thy tendrils bite,
 As thou shalt guide my wandering feet to find
 The fragrant greens I seek, my brows to bind."
 His vows address'd, within the grove he stray'd
 Till Fate, or Fortune, near the place convey'd
 His steps where secret Palamon was laid.
 Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
 Who, flying death, had there conceal'd his flight.

In brakes and brambles hid, and shunning mortal sight :

And less he knew him for his hated foe,
But fear'd him as a man he did not know.
But as it has been said of ancient years,
That fields are full of eyes, and woods have ears ;
For this the wise are ever on their guard,
For, unforeseen, they say, is unprepar'd.
Vacant Arcite thought himself alone,
And less than all suspected Palamon, [grove,
Who, listening, heard him, while he search'd the
And loudly sung his roundelay of love :
But on the sudden stopp'd, and silent stood,
As lovers often muse, and change their mood ;
Now high as Heaven, and then as low as Hell ;
Now up, now down, as buckets in a well :
For Venus, like her day, will change her cheer,
And seldom shall we see a Friday clear.
Thus Arcite, having sung, with alter'd hue
Sunk on the ground, and from his bosom drew
A desperate sigh, accusing Heaven and Fate,
And angry Juno's unrelenting hate.
" Curs'd be the day when first I did appear ;
Let it be blotted from the calendar,
Lest it pollute the month, and poison all the year.
Still will the jealous queen pursue our race ?
Cadmus is dead, the Theban city was :
Yet ceases not her hate : for all who come
From Cadmus are involv'd in Cadmus' doom.
I suffer for my blood : unjust decree !
That punishes another's crime on me.
In mean estate I serve my mortal foe,
The man who caus'd my country's overthrow.
This is not all ; for Juno, to my shame,
Has forc'd me to forsake my former name ;
Arcite I was, Philostratus I am.
That side of Heaven is all my enemy :
Mars ruin'd Thebes : his mother ruin'd me.
Of all the royal race remains but one
Besides myself, the unhappy Palamon,
Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free ;
Without a crime, except his kin to me.
Yet these, and all the rest, I could endure ;
But love's a malady without a cure ;
For Love has pierc'd me with his fiery dart,
He tires within, and hisses at my heart.
Your eyes, fair Emily, my fate pursue ;
I suffer for the rest, I die for you.
Of such a goddess no time leaves record,
Who burn'd the temple where she was ador'd :
And let it burn, I never will complain,
Pleas'd with my sufferings, if you knew my pain."

At this a sickly qualm his heart assail'd,
His ears ring inward, and his senses fail'd.
No word miss'd Palamon of all he spoke,
But soon to deadly pale he chang'd his look :
He trembled every limb, and felt a smart,
As if cold steel had glided through his heart :
No longer staid, but starting from his place,
Discover'd stood, and show'd his hostile face :
" I see traitor Arcite, traitor to thy blood,
Bound by thy sacred oath to seek my good,
Now art thou found foresworn, for Emily ;
And dar'st attempt her love, for whom I die.
So hast thou cheated Theseus with a wile,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name : as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free :
But rest assur'd, that either thou shalt die,
Or else renounce thy claim in Emily :

For, though unarm'd I am, and (freed by chance)
Am here without my sword, or pointed lance :
Hope not, base man, unquestion'd hence to go,
For I am Palamon, thy mortal foe."

Arcite, who heard his tale, and knew the man,
His sword unsheath'd, and fiercely thus began :
" Now by the gods who govern Heaven above,
Wert thou not weak with hunger, mad with love,
That word had been thy last, or in this grove
This hand should force thee to renounce thy love.
The surety which I gave thee, I defy :
Fool, not to know, that love endures no tie,
And Jove but laughs at lovers' perjury.
Know I will serve the fair in thy despite ;
But since thou art my kinsman, and a knight,
Here, have my faith, to-morrow in this grove
Our arms shall plead the titles of our love :
And Heaven so help my right, as I alone [known ;
Will come, and keep the cause and quarrel both un-
With arms of proof both for myself and thee ;
Choose thou the best, and leave the worst to me.
And, that a better ease thou may'st abide,
Bedding and clothes I will this night provide,
And needful sustenance, that thou mayst be
A conquest better won, and worthy me."

His promise Palamon accepts ; but pray'd,
To keep it better than the first he made.
Thus fair they parted till the morrow's dawn,
For each had laid his plighted faith to pawn.
O Love ! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign,
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain.
This was in Arcite prov'd, and Palamon ;
Both in despair, yet each would love alone.
Arcite return'd, and, as in honour ty'd,
His foe with bedding and with food supply'd :
Then, ere the day, two suits of armour sought,
Which borne before him on his steed he brought :
Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure.
Now, at the time, and in th' appointed place,
The challenger and challeng'd, face to face,
Approach ; each other from afar they knew,
And from afar their hatred chang'd their hue.
So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear,
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood, and sees
His course at distance by the bending trees,
And thinks, here comes my mortal enemy,
And either he must fall in fight, or I :
This while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart ;
A generous chillness seizes every part ;
The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart.

Thus pale they meet ; their eyes with fury burn ;
None greets ; for none the greeting will return :
But in dumb surliness, each arm'd with care
His foe profest, as brother of the war :
Then both, no moment lost, at once advance
Against each other, arm'd with sword and lance :
They lash, they foin, they pass, they strive to bore
Their corslets, and the thinnest parts explore.
Thus two long hours in equal arms they stood,
And wounded, wound ; till both were bath'd in blood ;
And not a foot of ground had either got,
As if the world depended on the spot.
Fell Arcite like an angry tiger far'd,
And like a lion Palamon appear'd :
Or as two boars whom love to battle draws,
With rising bristles, and with frothy jaws,

Their adverse breasts with tusks oblique they wound,
 With grunts and groans the forest rings around :
 So fought the knights, and fighting must abide,
 Till Fate an umpire sends their difference to decide.
 The power that ministers to God's decrees,
 And executes on Earth what Heaven foresees,
 Call'd Providence, or Chance, or Fatal Sway,
 Comes with resistless force, and finds or makes her way.

Nor kings, nor nations, nor united power,
 One moment can retard th' appointed hour.
 And some one day, some wondrous chance appears,
 Which happen'd not in centuries of years :
 For sure, whate'er we mortals hate, or love,
 Or hope, or fear, depends on powers above ;
 They move our appetites to good or ill,
 And by foresight necessitate the will.
 In Theseus this appears ; whose youthful joy
 Was beasts of chase in forests to destroy.
 This gentle knight, inspir'd by jolly May,
 Forsook his easy couch at early day,
 And to the wood and wilds pursued his way.
 Beside him rode Hippolita the queen,
 And Emily attir'd in lively green,
 With horns, and hounds, and all the tuneful cry,
 To hunt a royal hart within the covert nigh :
 And as he follow'd Mars before, so now
 He serves the goddess of the silver bow.
 The way that Theseus took was to the wood
 Where the two knights in cruel battle stood :
 The lawn on which they fought, th' appointed place
 In which th' uncoupled hounds began the chase.
 Thither forth-right he rode to rouse the prey,
 That, shaded by the fern, in harbour lay ;
 And, thence dislodg'd, was wont to leave the wood,
 For open fields, and cross the crystal flood.
 Approach'd, and looking underneath the Sun,
 He saw proud Arcite, and fierce Palamon,
 In mortal battle doubling blow on blow,
 Like lightning flam'd their faulchions to and fro,
 And shot a dreadful gleam : so strong they strook,
 There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak :
 He gaz'd with wonder on their equal might,
 Look'd eager on, but knew not either knight :
 Resolv'd to learn, he spurr'd his fiery steed
 With goring rowels to provoke his speed.
 The minute ended that began the race,
 So soon he was betwixt them on the place ;
 And with his sword unsheath'd, on pain of life
 Commands both combatants to cease their strife :
 Then with imperious tone pursues his threat :
 " What are you ? why in arms together met ?
 How dares your pride presume against my laws,
 As in a listed field to fight your cause ?
 Unask'd the royal grant ; no marshal by,
 As knightly rites require ; nor judge to try ?"
 Then Palamon, with scarce recover'd breath,
 Thus hasty spoke : " We both deserve the death,
 And both would die ; for look the world around,
 A pair so wretched is not to be found :
 Our life's a load ; encumber'd with the charge,
 We long to set th' imprison'd soul at large.
 Now, as thou art a sovereign judge, decree
 The rightful doom of death to him and me,
 Let neither find thy grace, for grace is cruelty.
 Me first, O kill me first ; and cure my woe ;
 Then sheath the sword of Justice on my foe :
 Or kill him first ; for when his name is heard,
 He foremost will receive his due reward.
 Arcite of Thebes is he ; thy mortal foe :
 On whom thy grace did liberty bestow ;

But first contracted, that if ever found
 By day or night upon th' Athenian ground,
 His head should pay the forfeit ; see return'd
 The perjur'd knight, his oath and honour scorn'd
 For this is he, who, with a borrow'd name
 And proffer'd service, to thy palace came,
 Now call'd Philostratus : retain'd by thee,
 A traitor trusted, and in high degree,
 Aspiring to the bed of beauteous Emily.
 My part remains ; from Thebes my birth I own,
 And call myself th' unhappy Palamon.
 Think me not like that man ; since no disgrace
 Can force me to renounce the honour of my race.
 Know me for what I am : I broke my chain,
 Nor promis'd I thy prisoner to remain :
 The love of liberty with life is given,
 And life itself th' inferior gift of Heaven.
 Thus without crime I fled ; but farther know,
 I with this Arcite am thy mortal foe :
 Then give me death, since I thy life pursue ;
 For safeguard of thyself, death is my due.
 More wouldst thou know ? I love bright Emily,
 And for her sake and in her sight will die :
 But kill my rival too ; for he no less
 Deserves ; and I thy righteous doom will bless,
 Assur'd that what I lose, he never shall possess.
 To this reply'd the stern Athenian prince,
 And sourly smil'd : " In owning your offence,
 You judge yourself ; and I but keep record
 In place of law, while you pronounce the word.
 Take your desert, the death you have decreed ;
 I seal your doom, and ratify the deed :
 By Mars, the patron of my arms, you die."
 He said ; dumb Sorrow seiz'd the standers-by.
 The queen above the rest, by nature good,
 (The pattern form'd of perfect womanhood)
 For tender pity wept : when she began,
 Through the bright quire th' infectious virtue ran
 All dropt their tears, ev'n the contended maid,
 And thus among themselves they softly said :
 " What eyes can suffer this unworthy sight !
 Two youths of royal blood, renown'd in fight,
 The mastership of Heaven in face and mind,
 And lovers, far beyond their faithless kind :
 See their wide streaming wounds ; they neither care
 For pride of empire, nor desire of fame :
 Kings for kingdoms, madmen for applause ;
 But love for love alone ; that crowns the low
 cause."

This thought, which ever bribes the beauteous kind,
 Such pity wrought in every lady's mind,
 They left their steeds, and prostrate on the place
 From the fierce king, implor'd th' offenders' grace.

He paus'd awhile, stood silent in his mood
 (For yet his rage was boiling in his blood) ;
 But soon his tender mind th' impression felt,
 (As softest metals are not slow to melt
 And pity soonest runs in softest minds) :
 Then reasons with himself ; and first he finds
 His passion cast a mist before his sense.
 And either made, or magnify'd th' offence.
 " Offence ! of what ? to whom ? who judg'd
 cause ?

The prisoner freed himself by Nature's laws :
 Born free, he sought his right : the man he free
 Was perjur'd, but his love excus'd the deed."
 Thus pondering, he look'd under with his eyes,
 And saw the women's tears, and heard their cries
 Which mov'd compassion more ; he shook his head
 And softly sighing to himself he said :

"Curse on th' unpardoning prince, whom tears can draw

To no remorse ; who rules by lions' law ;
And deaf to prayers, by no submission bow'd,
Rends all alike ; the penitent, and proud."
At this, with look serene, he rais'd his head ;
Reason resum'd her place, and Passion fled :
Then thus aloud he spoke : " The power of Love,
In Earth, and seas, and air, and Heaven above,
Rules, unresisted, with an awful nod ;
By duly miracles declar'd a god :
He blinds the wise, gives eye-sight to the blind ;
And moulds and stamps anew the lover's mind.
Behold that Arcite, and this Palamon,
Freed from my fetters, and in safety gone,
What hinder'd either in their native soil
At ease to reap the harvest of their toil ;
But Love, their lord, did otherwise ordain,
And brought them in their own despite again,
To suffer death deserv'd ; for well they know,
Tis in my power, and I their deadly foe ;
The proverb holds, that to be wise and love,
Is hardly granted to the gods above.
See how the madmen bleed ; behold the gains
Which their master, Love, rewards their pains ;
For seven long years, on duty every day,
For their obedience, and their monarch's pay :
Yet, as in duty bound, they serve him on ;
And, ask the fools, they think it wisely done ;
For ease, nor wealth, nor life itself regard,
For 'tis their maxim, love is love's reward.
This is not all ; the fair for whom they strove
Nor knew before, nor could suspect their love,
Nor thought, when she beheld the fight from far,
Her beauty was th' occasion of the war.
How sure a general doom on man is past,
And all are fools and lovers, first or last :
This both by others and myself I know,
For I have serv'd their sovereign long ago ;
It have been caught within the winding train
Of female snares, and felt the lover's pain,
And learn'd how far the god can human hearts constrain.

For this remembrance, and the prayers of those
Who for th' offending warriors interpose,
Give their forfeit lives ; on this accord,
I do me homage as their sovereign lord ;
And as my vassals, to their utmost might,
Protect my person, and assert my right."
He freely sworn, the knights their grace obtain'd.
Then thus the king his secret thoughts explain'd :
If wealth, or honour, or a royal race,
Or each, or all, may win a lady's grace,
Then either of you knights may well deserve
A princess born ; and such is she you serve :
For Emily is sister to the crown,
And but too well to both her beauty known :
You should you combat till you both were dead,
For lovers cannot share a single bed :
Therefore both are equal in degree,
The lot of both be left to Destiny.
Now hear th' award, and happy may it prove
To her, and him who best deserves her love !
Depart from hence in peace, and free as air,
Search the wide world, and where you please repair ;
But on the day when this returning Sun
Shall on the same point through every sign has run,
When each of you his hundred knights shall bring,
In royal lists, to fight before the king ;
And then the knight, whom Fate or happy Chance
Shall lead with his friends to victory advance,

And grace his arms so far in equal fight,
From out the bars to force his opposite,
Or kill, or make him recreant on the plain,
The prize of valour and of love shall gain ;
The vanquish'd party shall their claim release,
And the long jars conclude in lasting peace.
The charge be mine t' adorn the chosen ground,
The theatre of war, for champions so renown'd ;
And take the patron's place of either knight,
With eyes impartial to behold the fight ;
And Heaven of me so judge, as I shall judge aright.
If both are satisfied with this accord,
Swear by the laws of knighthood on my sword."
Who now but Palamon exults with joy ?
And ravish'd Arcite seems to touch the sky :
The whole assembled troop was pleas'd as well,
Extol th' award, and on their knees they fell
To bless the gracious king. The knights, with leave
Departing from the place, his last commands receive ;
On Emily with equal ardour look,
And from her eyes their inspiration took :
From thence to Thebes' old walls pursue their way,
Each to provide his champions for the day.

It might be deem'd, on our historian's part,
Or too much negligence or want of art,
If he forgot the vast magnificence
Of royal Theseus, and his large expense.
He first enclos'd for lists a level ground,
The whole circumference a mile around ;
The form was circular ; and all without
A trench was sunk, to moat the place about.
Within, an amphitheatre appear'd,
Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd ;
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to see.
Eastward was built a gate of marble white ;
The like adorn'd the western opposite.
A nobler object than this fabric was,
Rome never saw : nor of so vast a space :
For, rich with spoils of many a conquer'd land,
All arts and artists Theseus could command :
Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame,
The master-painters, and the carvers, came.
So rose within the compass of the year
An age's work, a glorious theatre.
Then o'er its eastern gate was rais'd, above,
A temple, sacred to the queen of love ;
An altar stood below ; on either hand
A priest with roses crown'd, who held a myrtle wand.

The dome of Mars was on the gate oppos'd,
And on the north a turret was enclos'd,
Within the wall, of alabaster white,
And crimson coral, for the queen of night,
Who takes in sylvan sports her chaste delight.

Within these oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraitures, and imagery :
Where every figure to the life express'd
The godhead's power to whom it was address'd.
In Venus' temple on the sides were seen
The broken slumbers of enamour'd men,
Prayers, that even spoke, and pity seem'd to call,
And issuing sighs, that smok'd along the wall,
Complaints, and hot desires, the lover's Hell,
And scalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell :

And all around were nuptial bonds, the ties,
Of love's assurance, and a train of lies,
That, made in lust, conclude in perjuries.
Beauty, and Youth, and Wealth, and Luxury,
And sprightly Hope, and short-enduring Joy ;

And sorceries to raise th' infernal powers,
 And sigils, fram'd in planetary hours :
 Expense, and Afterthought, and idle Care,
 And Doubts of motley hue, and dark Despair ;
 Suspicions, and fantastical Surmise,
 And Jealousy suffus'd, with jaundice in her eyes,
 Discolouring all she view'd, in tawny dress'd,
 Down-look'd, and with a cuckoo on her fist.
 Oppos'd to her, on t' other side advance
 The costly feast, the carol, and the dance,
 Minstrels, and music, poetry, and play,
 And balls by nights, and tournaments by day.
 All these were painted on the wall, and more :
 With acts and monuments of times before :
 And others added by prophetic doom,
 And lovers yet unborn, and loves to come :
 For there th' Idalian mount, and Citheron,
 The court of Venus was in colours drawn :
 Before the palace-gate, in careless dress,
 And loose array, sat portress Idleness :
 There, by the fount, Narcissus pin'd alone :
 There Samson was ; with wiser Solomon,
 And all the mighty names by love undone.
 Medea's charms were there, Circean feasts,
 With bowls that turn'd enamour'd youth to beasts.
 Here might be seen, that beauty, wealth, and wit,
 And prowess, to the power of love submit :
 The spreading snare for all mankind is laid ;
 And lovers all betray, and are betray'd.
 The goddess' self some noble hand had wrought ;
 Smiling she seem'd, and full of pleasing thought :
 From ocean as she first began to rise,
 And smooth'd the ruffled seas and clear'd the skies,
 She trod the brine, all bare below the breast,
 And the green waves but ill conceal'd the rest ;
 A lute she held ; and on her head was seen
 A wreath of roses red, and myrtles green ;
 Her turtles fann'd the buxom air above ;
 And, by his mother, stood an infant Love,
 With wings unfledg'd ; his eyes were banded
 o'er ;

His hands a bow, his back a quiver bore,
 Supply'd with arrows bright and keen, a deadly store.
 But in the dome of mighty Mars the red
 With different figures all the sides were spread ;
 This temple, less in form, with equal grace,
 Was imitative of the first in Thrace :
 For that cold region was the lov'd abode,
 And sovereign mansion of the warrior god.
 The landscape was a forest wide and bare ;
 Where neither beast, nor human kind repair ;
 The fowl, that scent afar, the borders fly,
 And shun the bitter blast, and wheel about the sky.
 A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground,
 And prickly stubs, instead of trees, are found ;
 Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old ;
 Headless the most, and hideous to behold :
 A rattling tempest through the branches went,
 That stripp'd them bare, and one sole way they bent.
 Heaven froze above, severe, the clouds congeal,
 And through the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail.

Such was the face without ; a mountain stood
 Threatening from high, and overlook'd the wood :
 Beneath the lowering brow, and on a bent,
 The temple stood of Mars armipotent :
 The frame of burnish'd steel, that cast a glare
 From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air.
 A straight long entry to the temple led,
 Blind with high walls, and Horror over head :

Thence issued such a blast, and hollow roar,
 As threaten'd from the hinge to heave the door ;
 In through that door, a northern light there shone ;
 'Twas all it had, for windows there were none ;
 The gate was adamant, eternal frame !
 Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,

The labour of a god ; and all along
 Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong.
 A tun about was every pillar there ;
 A polish'd mirror shone not half so clear.
 There saw I how the secret felon wrought,
 And Treason labouring in the traitor's thought :
 And midwife Time the ripen'd plot to murder
 brought.

There the red Anger dar'd the pallid Fear ;
 Next stood Hypocrisy, with holy leer,
 Soft smiling, and demurely looking down,
 But hid the dagger underneath the gown :
 Th' assassinating wife, the household fiend,
 And, far the blackest there, the traitor-friend.
 On t' other side there stood Destruction bare,
 Unpunished Rapine, and a waste of war.
 Contest, with sharpen'd knives, in cloisters drawn,
 And all with blood bespread the holy lawn.
 Loud menaces were heard, and foul Disgrace,
 And bawling Infamy, in language base : [plac
 Till sense was lost in sound, and Silence fled th
 The slayer of himself yet saw I there,
 The gore congeal'd was clotted in his hair :
 With eyes half clos'd, and gaping mouth he lay,
 And grim, as when he breath'd his sudden an away.

In midst of all the dome, Misfortune sate,
 And gloomy Discontent, and fell Debate,
 And Madness laughing in his ireful mood ;
 And arm'd Complaint on Theft ; and cries of Blood
 There was the murder'd corpse, in covert laid,
 And violent Death in thousand shapes display'd.
 The city to the soldiers' rage resign'd ;
 Successless wars, and Poverty behind ;
 Ships burnt in fight, or forc'd on rocky shores,
 And the rash hunter strangled by the boars :
 The new-born babe by nurses overlaid ;
 And the cook caught within the raging fire he m
 All ills of Mars's nature, flame and steel ;
 The gasping charioteer, beneath the wheel
 Of his own car ; the ruin'd house, that falls
 And intercepts her lord betwixt the walls :
 The whole division, that to Mars pertains,
 All trades of death, that deal in steel for gains,
 Were there : the butcher, armourer, and smith,
 Who forges sharpen'd faulchions, or the scythe.
 The scarlet Conquest on a tower was plac'd,
 With shouts, and soldiers' acclamations grac'd :
 A pointed sword hung threatening o'er his head
 Sustain'd but by a slender twine of thread.
 There saw I Mars's ides, the Capitol,
 The seer in vain foretelling Cæsar's fall ;
 The last triumvirs, and the wars they move,
 And Antony, who lost the world for love.
 These, and a thousand more, the fane adorn ;
 Their fates were painted ere the men were born
 All copied from the Heavens, and ruling force
 Of the red star, in his revolving course.
 The form of Mars high on a chariot stood,
 All sheath'd in arms, and gruffly look'd the go
 Two geomantic figures were display'd
 Above his head, a warrior and a maid ;
 One when direct, and one when retrograde.

Tir'd with deformities of death, I haste
 To the third temple of Diana chaste.
 Aylvan scene with various greens was drawn,
 Shades on the sides, and on the midst a lawn :
 The silver Cynthia, with her nymphs around,
 Turned the flying deer, the woods with horns resound :
 Calisto there stood manifest of shame,
 And, turn'd a bear, the northern star became :
 Her son was next, and, by peculiar grace,
 In the cold circle held the second place :
 The stag Acteon in the stream had spy'd
 The naked huntress, and, for seeing, dy'd :
 His bounds, unknowing of his change, pursue
 The chase, and their mistaken master slew.
 Theocian Daphne too was there to see,
 Apollo's love before, and now his tree :
 By adjoining fane th' assembled Greeks express'd,
 The hunting of the Caledonian beast.
 Menides' valour, and his envy'd prize ;
 The fatal power of Atalanta's eyes ;
 Diana's vengeance on the victor shown,
 The murderess mother, and consuming son ;
 The Volscian queen extended on the plain :
 The treason punish'd, and the traitor slain.
 The rest were various huntings, well design'd,
 And savage beasts destroy'd, of every kind.
 The graceful goddess was array'd in green ;
 About her feet were little beagles seen, [queen.
 That watch'd with upward eyes the motions of their
 Her legs were buskin'd, and the left before ;
 In act to shoot, a silver bow she bore,
 And at her back a painted quiver wore.
 He trod a waxing moon, that soon would wane,
 And drinking borrow'd light, he fill'd again ;
 With downcast eyes, as seeming to survey
 The dark dominions, her alternate sway.
 Before her stood a woman in her throes,
 As if call'd Lucina's aid, her burden to disclose.
 All these the painter drew with such command,
 That Nature snatch'd the pencil from his hand,
 Astonish'd and angry that his art could feign
 As if mend the tortures of a mother's pain.
 Theseus beheld the fanes of every god,
 And thought his mighty cost was well bestow'd.
 To princes now their poets should regard ;
 But few can write, and fewer can reward.
 The theatre thus rais'd, the lists enclos'd,
 And all with vast magnificence dispos'd,
 We leave the monarch pleas'd, and haste to bring
 The knights to combat ; and their arms to sing.

BOOK III.

The day approach'd when Fortune should decide
 The important enterprize, and give the bride ;
 For now, the rivals round the world had sought,
 And each his rival, well appointed, brought.
 The nations, far and near, contend in choice,
 And send the flower of war by public voice ;
 That after, or before, were never known
 Such chiefs, as each an army seem'd alone :
 Beside the champions, all of high degree,
 Who knighthood lov'd, and deeds of chivalry,
 Throng'd to the lists, and envy'd to behold
 The names of others, not their own, enroll'd.
 Nor seems it strange ; for every noble knight
 Who loves the fair, and is endu'd with might,
 In such a quarrel would be proud to fight.

There breathes not scarce a man on British ground
 (An isle for love and arms of old renown'd)
 But would have sold his life to purchase fame,
 To Palamon or Arcite sent his name :
 And had the land selected of the best, [rest.
 Half had come hence, and let the world provide the
 A hundred knights with Palamon there came,
 Approv'd in fight, and men of mighty name ;
 Their arms were several, as their nations were,
 But furnish'd all alike with sword and spear.
 Some wore coat armour, imitating scale ;
 And next their skins were stubborn shirts of mail.
 Some wore a breast-plate and a light juppon,
 Their horses cloth'd with rich caparison :
 Some for defence would leathern bucklers use,
 Of folded hides ; and others shields of pruce.
 One hung a pole-axe at his saddle-bow,
 And one a heavy mace to shun the foe.
 One for his legs and knees provided well,
 With jambeaux arm'd, and double plates of steel.
 This on his helmet wore a lady's glove,
 And that a sleeve embroider'd by his love.
 With Palamon, above the rest in place,
 Lycurgus came, the surly king of Thrace ;
 Black was his beard, and manly was his face ;
 The balls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head,
 And glar'd betwixt a yellow and a red :
 He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
 And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair :
 Big-bon'd, and large of limbs, with sinews strong,
 Broad-shoulder'd, and his arms were round and long.

Four milkwhite bulls (the Thracian use of old)
 Were yok'd to draw his car of burnish'd gold.
 Upright he stood, and bore aloft his shield,
 Conspicuous from afar, and overlook'd the field.
 His surcoat was a bear-skin on his back ;
 His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black.
 His ample forehead bore a coronet,
 With sparkling diamonds and with rubies set :
 Ten brace, and more, of greyhounds, snowy fair,
 And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair,
 A match for pards in flight, in grappling for the bear :
 With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound,
 And collars of the same their necks surround.
 Thus through the fields Lycurgus took his way :
 His hundred knights attend in pomp and proud array.

To match this monarch, with strong Arcite came
 Emetrius, king of Inde, a mighty name,
 On a bay courser, goodly to behold, [gold.
 The trappings of his horse adorn'd with barbarous
 Not Mars bestrode a steed with greater grace ;
 His surcoat o'er his arms was cloth of Thrace,
 Adorn'd with pearls, all orient, round, and great ;
 His saddle was of gold, with emeralds set.
 His shoulders large, a mantle did attire,
 With rubies thick, and sparkling as the fire :
 His amber-colour'd locks in ringlets run,
 With graceful negligence, and shone against the Sun,

His nose was aquiline, his eyes were blue,
 Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue :
 Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
 Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin :
 His awful presence did the crowd surprise,
 Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes,
 Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,
 So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day.

His age in Nature's youthful prime appear'd,
And just began to bloom his yellow beard.
Whene'er he spoke, his voice was heard around,
Loud as a trumpet, with a silver sound :
A laurel wreath'd his temples, fresh and green ;
And myrtle sprigs, the marks of love, were mix'd
between.

Upon his fist he bore, for his delight,
An eagle well reclaim'd, and lily white.

His hundred knights attend him to the war,
All arm'd for battle ; save their heads were bare.
Words and devices blaz'd on every shield,
And pleasing was the terrour of the field.
For kings, and dukes, and barons you might see,
Like sparkling stars, though different in degree,
All for th' increase of arms, and love of chivalry.
Before the king tame leopards led the way,
And troops of lions innocently play.
So Bacchus through the conquer'd Indics rode,
And beasts in gambols frisk'd before the honest god.

In this array the war of either side
Through Athens pass'd with military pride.
At prime, they enter'd on the Sunday morn ;
Rich tapestry spread the streets, and flowers the posts adorn.

The town was all a jubilee of feasts ;
So Theseus will'd, in honour of his guests ;
Himself with open arms the king embrac'd,
Then all the rest in their degrees were grac'd.
No harbinger was needful for a night,
For every house was proud to lodge a knight.

I pass the royal treat, nor must relate
The gifts bestow'd, nor how the champions sate :
Who first, or last, or how the knights address'd
Their vows, or who was fairest at the feast ; [prise ;
Whose voice, whose graceful dance, did most sur-
Soft amorous sighs, and silent love of eyes.
The rivals call my Muse another way,
To sing their vigils for th' ensuing day.
'Twas ebbing darkness, past the noon of night,
And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the Sun, ere day began to spring ;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing, [sing :
And, flickering on her nest, made short essays to
When wakeful Palamon, preventing day,
Took, to the royal lists, his early way,
To Venus at her fane, in her own house, to pray.
There, falling on his knees before her shrine,
He thus implor'd with prayers her power divine.
" Creator Venus, genial power of love,
The bliss of men below, and gods above !
Beneath the sliding Sun thou runn'st thy race,
Dost fairest shine, and best become thy place.
For thee the winds their eastern blasts forbear,
Thy month reveals the spring, and opens all the year.
Thee, Goddess, thee the storms of winter fly,
Earth smiles with flowers renewing, laughs the sky,
And birds to lays of love their tuneful notes apply.
For thee the lion loaths the taste of blood,
And roaring hunts his female through the wood :
For thee the bulls rebellow through the groves,
And tempt the stream, and snuff their absent loves.
'Tis thine, whate'er is pleasant, good, or fair :
All nature is thy province, life thy care :
Thou mad'st the world, and dost the world repair.
Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron,
Increase of Jove, companion of the Sun ;
If e'er Adonis touch'd thy tender heart,
Have pity, goddess, for thou know'st the smart.
Alas ! I have not words to tell my grief ;
To vent my sorrow, would be some relief ;

Light sufferings give us leisure to complain ;
We groan, but cannot speak, in greater pain.
O goddess, tell thyself what I would say,
Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray.
So grant my suit, as I enforce my might,
In love to be thy champion, and thy knight ;
A servant to thy sex, a slave to thee,
A foe profest to barren chastity.
Nor ask I fame or honour of the field,
Nor choose I more to vanquish than to yield :
In my divine Emilia make me blest,
Let Fate, or partial Chance, dispose the rest :
Find thou the manner, and the means prepare ;
Possession, more than conquest, is my care.
Mars is the warrior's god ; in him it lies,
On whom he favours to confer the prize ;
With smiling aspect you serenely move
In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love.
The Fates but only spin the coarser clue,
The finest of the wool is left for you.
Spare me but one small portion of the twine,
And let the sisters cut below your line :
The rest among the rubbish may they sweep,
Or add it to the yarn of some old miser's heap.
But, if you this ambitious prayer deny,
(A wish, I grant, beyond mortality)
Then let me sink beneath proud Arcite's arms,
And, I once dead, let him possess her charms."
Thus ended he ; then, with observance due,
The sacred incense on her altar threw :
The curling smoke mounts heavy from the fires ;
At length it catches flame, and in a blaze expires :
At once the gracious goddess gave the sign,
Her statue shook, and trembled all the shrine :
Pleas'd Palamon the tardy omen took :
For, since the flames pursu'd the trailing smoke,
He knew his boon was granted ; but the day [he
To distance driven, and joy adjourn'd with long d
Now Morn with rosy light had streak'd the sky
Up rose the Sun, and up rose Emily ;
Address'd her early steps to Cynthia's fane,
In state attended by her maiden train,
Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
Incense, and odorous gums, and cover'd fire.
The plenteous horns with pleasant mead they crow
Nor wanted aught besides in honour of the Moon
Now while the temple smok'd with hallow'd steam
They wash the virgin in a living stream :
The secret ceremonies I conceal,
Uncouth, perhaps unlawful, to reveal :
But such they were as pagan use requir'd,
Perform'd by women when the men retir'd,
Whose eyes prophane their chaste mysterious rites
Might turn to scandal, or obscene delights.
Well-meaners think no harm ; but for the rest,
Things sacred they pervert, and silence is the best.
Her shining hair, uncomb'd, was loosely spread,
A crown of mastless oak adorn'd her head :
When to the shrine approach'd, the spotless maid
Had kindling fires on either altar laid,
(The rites were such as were observ'd of old,
By Statius in his Theban story told,)
Then kneeling with her hands across her breast,
Thus lowly she preferr'd her chaste request.
" O goddess, haunter of the woodland green,
To whom both Heaven and Earth and seas are seen
Queen of the nether skies, where half the year
Thy silver beams descend, and light the gloom sphere ;
Goddess of maids, and conscious of our hearts,
So keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,

Which Niobe's devoted issue felt, [were dealt,
 When hissing through the skies the feather'd deaths
 As I desire to live a virgin life,
 Nor know the name of mother or of wife.
 Thy votress from my tender years I am,
 And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game.
 Like death, thou know'st, I loath the nuptial state,
 And man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate,
 A lowly servant, but a lofty mate :
 Where love is duty on the female side, [pride.
 On theirs mere sensual gust, and sought with surly
 Now by thy triple shape, as thou art seen
 In Heaven, Earth, Hell, and every where a queen,
 Grant this my first desire : let discord cease,
 And make betwixt the rivals lasting peace :
 Quench their hot fire, or far from me remove
 The flame, and turn it on some other love :
 Or, if my frowning stars have so decreed,
 That one must be rejected, one succeed,
 Make him my lord, within whose faithful breast
 Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best.
 But, oh ! ev'n that avert ! I choose it not,
 But take it as the least unhappy lot.
 A maid I am, and of thy virgin train ;
 Oh, let me still that spotless name retain !
 Frequent the forests, thy chaste will obey,
 And only make the beasts of chase my prey !"

The flames ascend on either altar clear,
 While thus the blameless maid address'd her prayer.
 When lo ! the burning fire that shone so bright,
 Faw off, all sudden, with extinguish'd light,
 And left one altar dark, a little space,
 Which turn'd self-kindled, and renew'd the blaze ;
 The other victor-flame a moment stood,
 Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood ;
 For ever lost, th' irrevocable light
 Forsook the blackening coals, and sunk to night :
 At either end it whistled as it flew,
 And as the brands were green, so dropp'd the dew,
 Affected as it fell with sweat of sanguine hue.

The maid from that ill omen turn'd her eyes,
 And with loud shrieks and clamours rent the skies,
 For knew what signified the boding sign, [divine.
 But found the powers displeas'd, and fear'd the wrath
 Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light
 Sprang through the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright.

The power, behold ! the power in glory shone,
 By her bent bow and her keen arrows known ;
 The rest, a huntress issuing from the wood,
 Reclining on her cornel spear she stood.
 Then gracious thus began : " Dismiss thy fear,
 And Heaven's unchang'd decrees attentive hear :
 For powerful gods have torn thee from my side,
 Willing to resign, and doom'd a bride :
 The two contending knights are weigh'd above ;
 The Mars protects, and one the queen of love :
 Let which the man, is in the Thunderer's breast ;
 His he pronounc'd, 'tis he who loves thee best.
 The fire, that once extinct reviv'd again,
 Shows the love allotted to remain :
 Farewell !" she said, and vanish'd from the place ;
 The sheaf of arrows shook, and rattled in the case.
 Alight at this, the royal virgin stood
 Inclaim'd, and now no more a sister of the wood :
 But to the parting goddess thus she pray'd ;
 Propitious still be present to my aid,
 For quite abandon your once favour'd maid."
 Then sighing she return'd ; but smil'd betwixt,
 With hopes and fears, and joys with sorrows mixt.

The next returning planetary hour
 Of Mars, who shar'd the heptarchy of power.
 His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent,
 To adore with pagan rites the power omnipotent :
 Then prostrate, low before his altar lay,
 And rais'd his manly voice, and thus began to pray :
 " Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
 The freezing north, and Hyperborean seas,
 And Scythian colds, and Thracia's winter coast,
 Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most :
 There most, but every where thy power is known,
 The fortune of the fight is all thy own :
 Terror is thine, and wild amazement, flung
 From out thy chariot, withers ev'n the strong :
 And disarray and shameful rout ensue,
 And force is added to the fainting crew.
 Acknowledg'd as thou art, accept my prayer,
 If aught I have achiev'd deserve thy care :
 If to my utmost power with sword and shield
 I dar'd the death, unknowing how to yield,
 And, falling in my rank, still kept the field :
 Then let my arms prevail, by thee sustain'd,
 That Emily by conquest may be gain'd.
 Have pity on my pains ; nor those unknown
 To Mars, which, when a lover, were his own.
 Venus, the public care of all above,
 Thy stubborn heart has softened into love :
 Now by her blandishments and powerful charms,
 When yielded she lay curling in thy arms,
 Ev'n by thy shame, if shame it may be call'd,
 When Vulcan had thee in his net enthrall'd :
 O envy'd ignominy, sweet disgrace,
 When every God that saw thee wish'd thy place !
 By those dear pleasures, aid my arms in fight,
 And make me conquer in my patron's right :
 For I am young, a novice in the trade,
 The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade :
 And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
 But, caught myself, lie struggling in the snare :
 And she I love, or laughs at all my pain, [dain.
 Or knows her worth too well ; and pays me with dis-
 For sure I am, unless I win in arms,
 To stand excluded from Emilia's charms :
 Nor can my strength avail, unless by thee
 Endued by force I gain the victory ;
 Then for the fire which warm'd thy gen'rous heart,
 Pity thy subject's pains, and equal smart.
 So be the morrow's sweat and labour mine,
 The palm and honour of the conquest thine :
 Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
 Immortal, be the business of my life ;
 And in thy fane, the dusty spoils among, [hung,
 High on the burnish'd roof, my banner shall be
 Rank'd with my champion's bucklers, and below,
 With arms revers'd, th' achievements of my foe :
 And while these limbs the vital spirit feeds,
 While day to night, and night to day succeeds,
 Thy smoking altar shall be fat with food
 Of incense, and the grateful steam of blood ;
 Burnt-offerings morn and evening shall be thine ;
 And fires eternal in thy temple shine.
 The bush of yellow beard, this length of hair,
 Which from my birth inviolate I bear,
 Guiltless of steel, and from the razor free,
 Shall fall a plenteous crop, reserv'd for thee.
 So may my arms with victory be blest,
 I ask no more ; let Fate dispose the rest."

The champion ceas'd ; there follow'd in the close
 A hollow groan : a murmuring wind arose ;
 The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
 Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung :

The belted gates flew open at the blast,
 The storm rushed in, and Arcite stood aghast :
 The flames were blown aside, yet shone they bright,
 Fann'd by the wind, and gave a ruffled light.
 Then from the ground a scent began to rise,
 Sweet-smelling as accepted sacrifice :
 This omen pleas'd, and as the flames aspire
 With odorous incense Arcite heaps the fire :
 Nor wanted hymns to Mars, or heathen charms :
 At length the nodding statue clash'd his arms,
 And with a sullen sound and feeble cry,
 Half sunk, and half pronounc'd, the word of victory.
 For this, with soul devout, he thank'd the god,
 And, of success secure, return'd to his abode.

These vows thus granted, raised a strife above,
 Betwixt the god of war, and queen of love.
 She granting first, had right of time to plead :
 But he had granted too, nor would recede.
 Jove was for Venus ; but he fear'd his wife,
 And seem'd unwilling to decide the strife :
 Till Saturn from his leaden throne arose,
 And found a way the difference to compose :
 Though sparing of his grace, to mischief bent,
 He seldom does a good with good intent.
 Wayward, but wise ; by long experience taught
 To please both parties, for ill ends, he sought :
 For this advantage age from youth has won,
 As not to be outridden, though outrun.
 By Fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
 And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd :
 Of him disposing in his own abode,
 He sooth'd the goddess while he gull'd the god :
 " Cease, daughter, to complain, and stint the strife ;
 Thy Palamon shall have his promis'd wife :
 And Mars, the lord of conquest, in the fight
 With palm and laurel shall adorn his knight.
 Wide is my course, nor turn I to my place
 Till length of time, and move with tardy pace.
 Man feels me, when I press th' etherial plains,
 My hand is heavy, and the wound remains.
 Mine is the shipwreck, in a watery sign ;
 And in an earthy, the dark dungeon mine.
 Cold shivering agues, melancholy care,
 And bitter blasting winds, and poison'd air,
 Are mine, and wilful death, resulting from despair.
 The throttling quinsey 'tis my star appoints,
 And rheumatism ascend to rack the joints :
 When churls rebel against their native prince,
 I arm their hands, and furnish the pretence ;
 And, housing in the lion's hateful sign,
 Bought senates and deserting troops are mine.
 Mine is the privy poisoning ; I command
 Unkindly seasons, and ungrateful land.
 By me kings' palaces are push'd to ground,
 And miners crush'd beneath their mines are found.
 'Twas I slew Samson, when the pillar'd hall
 Fell down, and crush'd the many with the fall.
 My looking is the fire of pestilence,
 That sweeps at once the people and the prince.
 Now weep no more, but trust thy grandsire's art.
 Mars shall be pleas'd, and thou perform thy part.
 'Tis ill, though different your complexions are,
 The family of Heaven for men should war."
 Th' expedient pleas'd, where neither lost his right ;
 Mars had the day, and Venus had the night.
 The management they left to Chronos' care ;
 Now turn we to th' effect, and sing the war.

In Athens all was pleasure, mirth, and play,
 All proper to the spring, and sprightly May,
 Which every soul inspir'd with such delight,
 'Twas jesting all the day, and love at night.

Heaven smil'd, and gladdened was the heart of man ;
 And Venus had the world as when it first began.
 At length in sleep their bodies they compose,
 And dreamt the future fight, and early rose.

Now scarce the dawning day began to spring,
 As at a signal given, the streets with clamours ring :
 At once the crowd arose ; confus'd and high
 Ev'n from the Heaven was heard a shouting cry ;
 For Mars was early up, and rous'd the sky.
 The gods came downward to behold the wars,
 Sharpening their sights, and leaning from their stars.
 The neighing of the generous horse was heard,
 For battle by the busy groom prepar'd,
 Rustling of harness, rattling of the shield,
 Clattering of armour, furbish'd for the field.
 Crowds to the castle mounted up the street,
 Battering the pavement with their coursers' feet :
 The greedy sight might there devour the gold
 Of glittering arms, too dazzling to behold :
 And polish'd steel that cast the view aside,
 And crested morions, with their plummy pride.
 Knights, with a long retinue of their squires,
 In gaudy liveries march, and quaint attires.
 One lac'd the helm, another held the lance,
 A third the shining buckler did advance.
 The courser paw'd the ground with restless feet,
 And snorting foam'd, and champ'd the golden bit.
 The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,
 Files in their hands, and hammers at their side,
 And nails for loosen'd spears, and thongs for shields provide.

The yeomen guard the streets, in seemly bands,
 And clowns come crowding on, with cudgels in their hands.

The trumpets, next the gate, in order plac'd,
 Attend the sign to sound the martial blast ;
 The palace-yard is fill'd with floating tides,
 And the last comers bear the former to the sides.
 The throng is in the midst ; the common crew
 Shut out, the hall admits the better few ;
 In knots they stand, or in a rank they walk,
 Serious in aspect, earnest in their talk :
 Factionous, and favouring this or t' other side,
 As their strong fancy or weak reason guide :
 Their wagers back their wishes ; numbers hold
 With the fair freckled king, and beard of gold :
 So vigorous are his eyes, such rays they cast,
 So prominent his eagle's beak is plac'd.
 But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
 His rising muscles and his brawn commend ;
 His double-biting axe and beaming spear,
 Each asking a gigantic force to rear.
 All spoke as partial favour mov'd the mind :
 And, safe themselves, at others' cost divin'd.

Wak'd by the cries, th' Athenian chief arose,
 The knightly forms of combat to dispose ;
 And passing through th' obsequious guards, he sat
 Conspicuous on a throne, sublime in state ;
 There, for the two contending knights he sent :
 Arm'd cap-a-pec, with reverence low they bent :
 He smil'd on both, and with superior look
 Alike their offer'd adoration took.

The people press on every side, to see
 Their awful prince, and hear his high decree.
 Then signing to their heralds with his hand,
 They gave his orders from their lofty stand.
 Silence is thrice enjoin'd ; then thus aloud
 The king at arms bespeaks the knights and listening crowd.

" Our sovereign lord has ponder'd in his mind
 The means to spare the blood of gentle kind ;

and of his grace, and inborn clemency,
 He modifies his first severe decree,
 He keener edge of battle to rebate,
 He troops for honour fighting, not for hate.
 He wills, not death should terminate their strife;
 And wounds, if wounds ensue, be short of life:
 Let issues ere the fight, his dread command,
 Be slings afar, and poinards hand to hand,
 Be dash'd from the field; that none shall dare
 A shortened sword to stab in closer war;
 But in fair combat fight with manly strength,
 With biting point, but strike at length.
 No journey is allow'd but one career,
 With the tough ash, with the sharp-grinded spear,
 Let knights unhors'd may rise from off the plain,
 To fight on foot their honour to regain;
 Or, if at mischief taken, on the ground
 Lie down, but prisoners to the pillar bound,
 At either barrier plac'd; nor (captives made)
 Be freed, or arm'd anew the fight invade.
 He chief of either side, bereft of life,
 Yielded to his foe, concludes the strife. [young has dooms the lord: now valiant knights and fight each his fill with swords and maces long."
 The herald ends: the vaulted firmament
 With loud acclaims and vast applause is rent:
 Heaven guard a prince so gracious and so good,
 Just, and yet so provident of blood!"
 This was the general cry. The trumpets sound,
 A warlike symphony is heard around.
 The marching troops through Athens take their way,
 The great earl-marshal orders their array.
 He fair from high the passing pomp behold;
 A rain of flowers is from the windows roll'd.
 The casements are with golden tissue spread,
 And horses' hoofs, for earth, on silken tapestry tread;
 The king goes midmost, and the rivals ride
 In equal rank, and close his either side.
 After these, there rode the royal wife,
 And Emily, the cause and the reward of strife.
 The following cavalcade, by three and three,
 Accorded by titles marshall'd in degree.
 As through the southern gate they take their way,
 And at the list arriv'd ere prime of day.
 Here, parting from the king, the chiefs divide,
 And wheeling east and west, before their many ride.
 The Athenian monarch mounts his throne on high,
 And after him the queen and Emily:
 But these the kindred of the crown are grac'd
 In nearer seats, and lords by ladies plac'd:
 Here were they seated, when, with clamours loud,
 Rushed at once a rude promiscuous crowd;
 He guards and then each other overbear,
 And in a moment throng the spacious theatre.
 As chang'd the jarring noise to whispers low,
 As if forsaking seas more softly blow;
 Then at the western gate, on which the car
 Was roll'd aloft, that bears the god of war,
 Came Arcite entering arm'd before his train,
 He stands at the barrier, and divides the plain.
 And was his banner, and display'd abroad,
 The bloody colours of his patron god.
 At that self moment enters Palamon
 The son of Venus, and the rising-sun;
 And by the wanton winds, his banner flies,
 A maiden white, and shares the people's eyes.
 He cast to west, look all the world around,
 No troops so match'd were never to be found;
 No bodies built for strength, of equal age,
 In stature siz'd; so proud an equipage:

The nicest eye could no distinction make,
 Where lay th' advantage, or what side to take.

Thus rang'd, the herald for the last proclaims
 A silence, while they answer'd to their names:
 For so the king decreed, to shun the care,
 The fraud of musters false, the common ban of war.
 The tale was just, and then the gates were clos'd;
 And chief to chief, and troop to troop oppos'd.
 The heralds last retir'd, and loudly cry'd,
 The fortune of the field be fairly try'd.

At this, the challenger with fierce defy
 His trumpet sounds; the challeng'd makes reply:
 With clangor rings the field, resounds the vaulted sky.

Their vizors closed, their lances in the rest,
 Or at the helmet pointed, or the crest;
 They vanish from the barrier, speed the race,
 And spurring see decrease the middle space.
 A cloud of smoke envelops either host,
 And all at once the combatants are lost:
 Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen,
 Coursers with coursers justling, men with men:
 As labouring in eclipse, awhile they stay,
 'Till the next blast of wind restores the day.
 They look anew: the beauteous form of fight
 Is chang'd, and war appears a grisly sight.
 Two troops in fair array one moment show'd,
 The next, a field with fallen bodies strow'd:
 Not half the number in their seats are found;
 But men and steeds lie groveling on the ground.
 The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
 The steeds without their riders scour the field.
 The knights unhors'd, on foot renew the fight;
 The glittering faulchions cast a gleaming light:
 Hauberks and helms are hew'd with many a wound.
 Out spins the streaming blood, and dyes the ground.
 The mighty maces with such haste descend, [bend.
 They break the bones, and make the solid armour
 This thrusts amid the throng with furious force;
 Down goes, at once, the horseman and the horse:
 That courser stumbles on the fallen steed,
 And, floundering, throws the rider o'er his head.
 One rolls along, a foot-ball to his foes;
 One with a broken truncheon deals his blows.
 This halting, this disabled with his wound,
 In triumph led, is to the pillar bound,
 Where by the king's award he must abide:
 There goes a captive led on t' other side.
 By fits they cease; and, leaning on the lance,
 Take breath awhile, and to new fight advance.
 Full oft the rivals met, and neither spar'd
 His utmost force, and each forgot to ward.
 The head of this was to the saddle bent,
 The other backward to the crupper sent:
 Both were by turns unhors'd; the jealous blows
 Fall thick and heavy, when on foot they close.
 So deep their faulchions bite, that every stroke
 Pierc'd to the quick; and equal wounds they gave and took.

Borne far asunder by the tides of men,
 Like adamant and steel they meet again.

So when a tiger sucks the bullock's blood,
 A famish'd lion, issuing from the wood,
 Roars lordly fierce, and challenges the food.
 Each claims possession, neither will obey,
 But both their paws are fasten'd on the prey;
 They bite, they tear; and while in vain they strive,
 The swains come arm'd between, and both to distance drive.

At length, as Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
 By course of time to their appointed end;

So when the Sun to west was far declin'd,
 And both afresh in mortal battle join'd,
 The strong Emetrius came in Arcite's aid,
 And Palamon with odds was overlaid:
 For, turning short, he struck with all his might
 Full on the helmet of th' unwary knight.
 Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow,
 And turn'd him to his unexpected foe;
 Whom with such force he struck, he fell'd him down,
 And cleft the circle of his golden crown.
 But Arcite's men, who now prevail'd in fight,
 Twice ten at once surround the single knight:
 O'erpower'd, at length, they force him to the ground,
 Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound;
 And king Lycurgus, while he fought in vain
 His friend to free, was tumbled on the plain.

Who now laments but Palamon, compell'd
 No more to try the fortune of the field!
 And, worse than death, to view with hateful eyes
 His rival's conquest, and renounce the prize!

The royal judge, on his tribunal plac'd,
 Who had beheld the fight from first to last,
 Bad cease the war; pronouncing from on high,
 Arcite of Thebes had won the beauteous Emily.
 The sound of trumpets to the voice reply'd,
 And round the royal lists the heralds cry'd,
 "Arcite of Thebes has won the beauteous bride."

The people rend the skies with vast applause;
 All own the chief, when Fortune owns the cause.
 Arcite is own'd ev'n by the gods above,
 And conquering Mars insults the queen of love.
 So laugh'd he, when the rightful Titan fail'd,
 And Jove's usurping arms in Heaven prevail'd:
 Laugh'd all the powers who favour tyranny;
 And all the standing army of the sky.
 But Venus with dejected eyes appears,
 And, weeping, on the lists distill'd her tears;
 Her will refus'd, which grieves a woman most,
 And, in her champion foil'd, the cause of Love is lost.

Till Saturn said, "Fair daughter, now be still,
 The blustering fool has satisfy'd his will;
 His boon is given; his knight has gain'd the day,
 But lost the prize, th' arrears are yet to pay.
 Thy hour is come, and mine the care shall be
 To please thy knight, and set thy promise free."

Now while the heralds run the lists around,
 And Arcite, Arcite, Heaven and Earth resound;
 A miracle (nor less it could be call'd)
 Their joy with unexpected sorrow pall'd.
 The victor knight had laid his helm aside,
 Part for his ease, the greater part for pride:
 Bare-headed, popularly low he bow'd,
 And paid the salutations of the crowd.
 Then, spurring at full speed, ran endlong on Where Theseus sate on his imperial throne;
 Furious he drove, and upward cast his eye,
 Where next the queen was plac'd his Emily;
 Then passing to the saddle-bow he bent:
 A sweet regard the gracious virgin lent
 (For women, to the brave an easy prey,
 Still follow Fortune where she leads the way):
 Just then, from earth sprung out a flashing fire,
 By Pluto sent, at Saturn's bad desire:
 The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
 And bounding, o'er the pummel cast the knight:
 Forward he flew, and, pitching on his head,
 He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead.
 Black was his count'nance in a little space,
 For all the blood was gather'd in his face.

Help was at hand: they rear'd him from the ground,
 And from his cumbrous arms his limbs unbound;
 Then lanc'd a vein, and watch'd returning breath;
 It came, but clogg'd with symptoms of his death.
 The saddle-bow, the noble parts had prest,
 All bruis'd and mortify'd his manly breast.
 Him still entranc'd, and in a litter laid,
 They bore from field, and to his bed convey'd.
 At length he wak'd, and, with a feeble cry,
 The word he first pronounc'd was Emily.

Meantime the king, though inwardly he mourn'd,
 In pomp triumphant to the town return'd.
 Attended by the chiefs who fought the field
 (Now friendly mix'd, and in one troop compell'd),
 Compos'd his looks to counterfeited cheer,
 And bade them not for Arcite's life to fear.
 But that which gladdened all the warrior-train,
 Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain.
 The surgeons soon despoil'd them of their arms,
 And some with salves they cure, and some with charms;

Foment the bruises, and the pains assuage, [of sage
 And heal their inward hurts with sovereign draught
 The king in person visits all around,
 Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound;
 Honours the princely chiefs, rewards the rest,
 And holds for thrice three days a royal feast.
 None was disgrac'd; for falling is no shame;
 And cowardice alone is loss of fame.
 The venturous knight is from the saddle thrown;
 But 'tis the fault of Fortune, not his own:
 If crowds and palms the conquering side adorn,
 The victor under better stars was born:
 The brave man seeks not popular applause,
 Nor, overpower'd with arms, deserts his cause;
 Unsham'd, though foil'd, he does the best he can;
 Force is of brutes, but honour is of man.
 Thus Theseus smil'd on all with equal grace;
 And each was set according to his place.
 With ease were reconcil'd the differing parts,
 For envy never dwells in noble hearts.

At length they took their leave, the time expir'd,
 Well pleas'd, and to their several homes retir'd.
 Meanwhile the health of Arcite still impairs;
 From bad proceeds to worse, and mocks the leech's cares;

Swoln is his breast; his inward pains increase,
 All means are us'd, and all without success.
 The clotted blood lies heavy on his heart,
 Corrupts, and there remains in spite of art:
 Nor breathing veins, nor cupping, will prevail;
 All outward remedies and inward fail:
 The mold of Nature's fabric is destroy'd,
 Her vessels discompos'd, her virtue void:
 The bellows of his lungs begin to swell,
 All out of frame is every secret cell,
 Nor can the good receive, nor bad expel.
 Those breathing organs, thus within oppress'd,
 With venom soon distend the sinews of his breast.
 Nought profits him to save abandon'd life,
 Nor vomit's upward aid, nor downward laxative.
 The midmost region batter'd and destroy'd,
 When Nature cannot work, th' effect of Art is void.
 For physic can but mend our crazy state,
 Patch an old building, not a new create.
 Arcite is doom'd to die in all his pride,
 Must leave his youth, and yield his beauteous brow
 Gain'd hardly, against right, and unenjoy'd.
 When 'twas declar'd all hope of life was past,
 Conscience (that of all physic works the last)
 Caus'd him to send for Emily in haste.

With her, at his desire, came Palamon ;
 Then on his pillow rais'd, he thus begun.
 No language can express the smallest part
 Of what I feel, and suffer in my heart,
 For you, whom best I love and value most ;
 But to your service I bequeath my ghost ;
 Which, from this mortal body when untied,
 Hence, unheard, shall hover at your side ;
 Nor fright you waking, nor your sleep offend,
 But wait officious, and your steps attend :
 Now I have lov'd, excuse my faltering tongue,
 My spirits feeble, and my pains are strong :
 As I may say, I only grieve to die
 Because I lose my charming Emily :
 To die, when Heaven had put you in my power,
 It could not choose a more malicious hour !
 What greater curse could envious Fortune give,
 Than just to die, when I began to live !
 As men, how vanishing a bliss we crave,
 Now warm in love, now withering in the grave !
 Never, O never more to see the Sun !
 All dark, in a damp vault, and still alone !
 His fate is common ; but I lose my breath
 For bliss, and yet not bless'd before my death.
 I weep ; but take me dying in your arms,
 As all I can enjoy of all your charms :
 In hand I cannot but in death resign ;
 As could I live ! but while I live 'tis mine.
 Let my end approach, and, thus embrac'd,
 I pleas'd to die ; but hear me speak my last.
 O my sweet foe, for you, and you alone,
 I broke my faith with injur'd Palamon.
 O Love the sense of right and wrong confounds,
 O Love and proud Ambition have no bounds.
 How much I doubt, should Heaven my life prolong,
 Should return to justify my wrong :
 For, while my former flames remain within,
 Repentance is, but want of power to sin.
 In mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
 For he, nor you, were guilty of the strife :
 For I, but as I lov'd ; yet all combin'd,
 Your beauty, and my impotence of mind,
 And his concurrent flame, that blew my fire ;
 For still our kindred souls had one desire.
 I had a moment's right in point of time ;
 And I seen first, then his had been the crime.
 He made it mine, and justify'd his right ;
 He holds this Earth a more deserving knight,
 For virtue, valour, and for noble blood,
 Honour, all that is compris'd in good ;
 Help me Heaven, in all the world is none
 Worthy to be lov'd as Palamon.
 I love you too, with such an holy fire,
 I will not, cannot, but with life expire :
 For your vows both have often try'd,
 For any love but yours could ours divide.
 O, by my love's inviolable band,
 My long suffering, and my short command,
 E'er you plight your vows when I am gone,
 Be pity on the faithful Palamon."
 This was his last ; for Death came on amain,
 And exercis'd below his iron reign ;
 Then upward to the seat of life he goes :
 He fled before him, what he touch'd he froze :
 He could be not his closing eyes withdraw,
 Though less and less of Emily he saw ;
 As speechless, for a little space he lay ; [away.
 He grasp'd the hand he held, and sigh'd his soul
 But whither went his soul, let such relate
 Who watch the secrets of the future state :

Divines can say but what themselves believe ;
 Strong proofs they have, but not demonstrative :
 For, were all plain, then all sides must agree,
 And faith itself be lost in certainty.
 To live uprightly then is sure the best,
 To save ourselves, and not to damn the rest.
 The soul of Arcite went where heathens go,
 Who better live than we, though less they know.
 In Palamon a manly grief appears ;
 Silent he wept, asham'd to show his tears :
 Emilia shriek'd but once, and then, oppress'd
 With sorrow, sunk upon her lover's breast :
 Till Theseus in his arms convey'd with care,
 Far from so sad a sight, the swooning fair.
 'Twere loss of time her sorrow to relate ;
 Ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate,
 When just approaching to the nuptial state :
 But, like a low-hung cloud, it rains so fast,
 That all at once it falls, and cannot last.
 The face of things is chang'd, and Athens now,
 That laugh'd so late, becomes the scene of woe :
 Matrons and maids, both sexes, every state,
 With tears lament the knight's untimely fate.
 Nor greater grief in falling Troy was seen
 For Hector's death ; but Hector was not then.
 Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair,
 The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tare.
 " Why would'st thou go," with one consent they cry,
 " When thou had'st gold enough, and Emily ?"
 Theseus himself, who should have cheer'd the grief
 Of others, wanted now the same relief.
 Old Egeus only could revive his son,
 Who various changes of the world had known,
 And strange vicissitudes of human fate,
 Still altering, never in a steady state ;
 Good after ill, and after pain delight ;
 Alternate like the scenes of day and night :
 " Since every man who lives is born to die,
 And none can boast sincere felicity,
 With equal mind what happens let us bear, [care.
 Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our
 Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend ;
 The world's an inn, and death the journey's end.
 Ev'n kings but play ; and when their part is done,
 Some other, worse or better, mount the throne."
 With words like these the crowd was satisfy'd,
 And so they would have been had Theseus dy'd.
 But he, their king, was labouring in his mind,
 A fitting place for funeral pomps to find,
 Which were in honour of the dead design'd.
 And, after long debate, at last he found
 (As Love itself had mark'd the spot of ground)
 That grove for ever green, that conscious land,
 Where he with Palamon fought hand to hand :
 That where he fed his amorous desires
 With soft complaints, and felt his hottest fires,
 There other flames might waste his earthly part,
 And burn his limbs, where love had burn'd his heart.
 This once resolv'd, the peasants were enjoin'd
 Sere-wood, and firs, and dodder'd oaks to find.
 With sounding axes to the grove they go,
 Fell, split, and lay the fuel on a row,
 Vulcanian food : a bier is next prepar'd,
 On which the lifeless body should be rear'd,
 Cover'd with cloth of gold, on which was laid
 The corpse of Arcite, in like robes array'd.
 White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
 A wreath of laurel, mix'd with myrtle spread.
 A sword keen-edg'd within his right he held,
 The warlike emblem of the conquer'd field :
 N

Bare was his manly visage on the bier :
 Menac'd his countenance ; ev'n in death severe.
 Then to the palace-hall they bore the knight,
 To lie in solemn state, a public sight.
 Groans, cries, and howlings, fill the crowded place,
 And unaffected sorrow sat on every face.
 Sad Palamon above the rest appears,
 In sable garments, dew'd with gushing tears :
 His auburn locks on either shoulder flow'd,
 Which to the funeral of his friend he vow'd :
 But Emily, as chief, was next his side,
 A virgin-widow, and a mourning bride.
 And, that the princely obsequies might be
 Perform'd according to his high degree,
 The steed, that bore him living to the fight,
 Was trapp'd with polish'd steel, all shining bright,
 And cover'd with th' achievements of the knight.
 The riders rode abreast, and one his shield,
 His lance of cornel-wood another held ;
 The third his bow, and, glorious to behold,
 The costly quiver, all of burnish'd gold.
 The noblest of the Grecians next appear,
 And, weeping, on their shoulders bore the bier ;
 With sober pace they march'd, and often staid,
 And through the master-street the corpse convey'd.
 The houses to their tops with black were spread,
 And ev'n the pavements were with mourning hid.
 The right side of the pall old Egeus kept,
 And on the left the royal Theseus wept ;
 Each bore a golden bowl, of work divine, [wine.
 With honey fill'd, and milk, and mix'd with ruddy
 Then Palamon, the kinsman of the slain,
 And after him appear'd the illustrious train.
 To grace the pomp, came Emily the bright
 With cover'd fire, the funeral pile to light.
 With high devotion was the service made,
 And all the rites of pagan-honour paid :
 So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow,
 With vigour drawn, must send the shaft below.
 The bottom was full twenty fathom broad,
 With crackling straw beneath in due proportion strow'd.

The fabric seem'd a wood of rising green,
 With sulphur and bitumen cast between,
 To feed the flames : the trees were unctuous fir,
 And mountain ash, the mother of the spear ;
 The mourner yew and builder oak were there :
 The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane,
 Hard box, and linden of a softer grain, [ordain.
 And laurels, which the gods for conquering chiefs
 How they were rank'd, shall rest untold by me,
 With nameless nymphs that liv'd in every tree ;
 Nor how the Dryads, or the woodland train,
 Disherited, ran howling o'er the plain :
 Nor how the birds to foreign seats repair'd,
 Or beasts, that bolted out, and saw the forest bar'd :
 Nor how the ground, now clear'd, with ghastly fright
 Beheld the sudden Sun, a stranger to the light.

The straw, as first I said, was laid below :
 Of chips and sere-wood was the second row ;
 The third of greens, and timber newly fell'd ;
 The fourth high stage the fragrant odours held,
 And pearls, and precious stones, and rich array,
 In midst of which, embalm'd, the body lay.
 The service sung, the maid with mourning eyes
 The stubble fir'd ; the smouldering flames arise :
 This office done, she sunk upon the ground ;
 But what she spoke, recover'd from her swoon,
 I want the wit in moving words to dress ;
 But by themselves the tender sex may guess.

While the devouring fire was burning fast,
 Rich jewels in the flame the wealthy cast ;
 And some their shields, and some their lances threw,
 And gave their warrior's ghost, a warrior's due.
 Full bowls of wine, of honey, milk, and blood,
 Were pour'd upon the pile of burning wood,
 And hissing flames receive, and hungry lick the food.
 Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around
 The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice resound ;
 Hail, and farewell, they shouted thrice amain,
 Thrice facing to the left, and thrice they turn'd again :
 Still as they turn'd, they beat their clattering shields ;
 The women mix their cries ; and Clamour fills the fields.

The warlike wakes continued all the night, [light.
 And funeral games were play'd at new returning
 Who, naked, wrestled best, besmear'd with oil,
 Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil,
 I will not tell you, nor would you attend ;
 But briefly haste to my long story's end.

I pass the rest ; the year was fully mourn'd,
 And Palamon long since to Thebes return'd :
 When, by the Grecians' general consent,
 At Athens Theseus held his parliament :
 Among the laws that pass'd, it was decreed,
 That conquer'd Thebes from bondage should be freed ;

Reserving homage to th' Athenian throne,
 To which the sovereign summon'd Palamon.
 Unknowing of the cause, he took his way,
 Mournful in mind, and still in black array. [light

The monarch mounts the throne, and, plac'd on Commands into the court the beauteous Emily :
 So call'd, she came ; the senate rose, and paid
 Becoming reverence to the royal maid.

And first soft whispers through th' assembly went
 With silent wonder then they watch'd th' event :
 All hush'd, the king arose with awful grace, [face
 Deep thought was in his breast, and counsel in
 At length he sigh'd ; and, having first prepar'd
 Th' attentive audience, thus his will declar'd.

“ The Cause and Spring of Motion, from above
 Hung down on Earth the golden chain of love :
 Great was th' effect, and high was his intent,
 When peace among the jarring seeds he sent,
 Fire, flood, and earth, and air, by this were bound
 And love, the common link, the new creation
 crown'd.

The chain still holds ; for, though the forms decay
 Eternal matter never wears away :

The same first Mover certain bounds has plac'd,
 How long those perishable forms shall last :
 Nor can they last beyond the time assign'd
 By that all-seeing and all-making Mind :
 Shorten their hours they may ; for will is free ;
 But never pass th' appointed destiny.

So men oppress'd, when weary of their breath,
 Throw off the burthen, and suborn their death.
 Then, since those forms begin, and have their end
 On some unalter'd cause they sure depend :
 Parts of the whole are we ; but God the whole ;
 Who gives us life and animating soul :
 For Nature cannot from a part derive
 That being, which the whole can only give :
 He perfect, stable ; but imperfect we,
 Subject to change, and different in degree ;
 Plants, beasts, and man ; and, as our organs are
 We more or less of his perfection share.
 But by a long descent, th' ethereal fire
 Corrupts ; and forms, the mortal part, expire

As he withdraws his virtue, so they pass,
 And the same matter makes another mass :
 His law th' Omniscent Power was pleas'd to give,
 That every kind should by succession live !
 That individuals die, his will ordains,
 The propagated species still remains.
 The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
 Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees ;
 Three centuries he grows, and three he stays,
 Supreme in state, and in three more decays ;
 So wears the paving pebble in the street,
 And towns and towers their fatal periods meet :
 The rivers, rapid once, now naked lie, [dry.
 Worn of their springs ; and leave their channels
 To man, at first a drop, dilates with heat,
 Then, form'd, the little heart begins to beat ;
 Secret he feeds, unknowing in the cell ;
 At length, for hatching ripe, he breaks the shell,
 And struggles into breath, and cries for aid ;
 Then, helpless, in his mother's lap is laid.
 He creeps, he walks, and, issuing into man,
 Judges their life, from whence his own began :
 ardless of laws, affects to rule alone,
 Anxious to reign, and restless on the throne :
 First vegetive, then feels, and reasons last ;
 Each of three souls, and lives all three to waste.
 Some thus ; but thousands more in flower of age :
 A few arrive to run the latter stage.
 Some in the first, in battle some are slain,
 And others whelm'd beneath the stormy main.
 But makes all this, but Jupiter the king,
 Whose command we perish, and we spring ?
 'Tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,
 To make a virtue of necessity.
 As what he gives, since to rebel is vain ;
 As bad grows better, which we well sustain ;
 And could we choose the time, and choose aright,
 'Tis best to die, our honour at the height.
 When we have done our ancestors no shame,
 As serv'd our friends, and well secur'd our fame ;
 When should we wish our happy life to close,
 And leave no more for Fortune to dispose :
 Should we make our death a glad relief
 From future shame, from sickness, and from grief :
 Enjoying while we live the present hour,
 And dying in our excellence and flower,
 When round our death-bed every friend should run,
 And joyous of our conquest early won :
 While the malicious world with envious tears
 Would grudge our happy end, and wish it theirs.
 Yet then our Arcite is with honour dead,
 Why should we mourn, that he so soon is freed,
 To call untimely what the gods decreed ?
 'Tis grief as just, a friend may be deplor'd,
 When a foul prison to free air restor'd.
 Would he to thank his kinsman or his wife,
 And tears recall him into wretched life ?
 Her sorrow hurts themselves ; on him is lost ;
 And, worse than both, offends his happy ghost.
 What then remains, but, after past annoy,
 To take the good vicissitude of joy ?
 To thank the gracious gods for what they give,
 And save our souls, and, while we live, to live ?
 When we then two sorrows to combine,
 And in one point th' extremes of grief to join ;
 But thence resulting joy may be renew'd,
 As jarring notes in harmony conclude.
 When I propose that Palamon shall be
 In marriage join'd with beautiful Emily ;
 At which already I have gain'd th' assent
 Of my free people in full parliament.

Long love to her has borne the faithful knight,
 And well deserv'd, had Fortune done him right :
 'Tis time to mend her fault ; since Emily
 By Arcite's death from former vows is free :
 If you, fair sister, ratify th' accord,
 And take him for your husband and your lord,
 'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace
 On one descended from a royal race :
 And were he less, yet years of service past
 From grateful souls exact reward at last :
 Pity is Heaven's and yours ; nor can she find
 A throne so soft as in a woman's mind."
 He said ; she blush'd ; and, as o'eraw'd by might,
 Seem'd to give Theseus what she gave the knight.
 Then turning to the Theban thus he said ;
 " Small arguments are needful to persuade
 Your temper to comply with my command ;"
 And speaking thus, he gave Emilia's hand.
 Smil'd Venus, to behold her own true knight
 Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight ;
 And bless'd with nuptial bliss the sweet laborious
 night.

Eros, and Anteros, on either side,
 One fir'd the bridegroom, and one warm'd the bride ;
 And long-attending Hymen, from above,
 Shower'd on the bed the whole Idalian grove.
 All of a tenour was their after-life,
 No day discolour'd with domestic strife ;
 No jealousy, but mutual truth believ'd,
 Secure repose, and kindness undeceiv'd.
 Thus Heaven, beyond the compass of his thought,
 Sent him the blessing he so dearly bought.

So may the queen of love long duty bless,
 And all true lovers find the same success.

THE WIFE OF BATH.

HER TALE.

In days of old, when Arthur fill'd the throne,
 Whose acts and fame to foreign lands were blown ;
 The king of elfs and little fairy queen
 Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on every green ;
 And where the jolly troop had led the round,
 The grass unbidden rose, and mark'd the ground :
 Nor darkling did they glance, the silver light
 Of Phoebe serv'd to guide their steps aright,
 And, with their tripping pleas'd, prolong the night.
 Her beams they follow'd, where at full she play'd,
 Nor longer than she shed her horns they stay'd,
 From thence with airy flight to foreign lands convey'd.
 Above the rest our Britain held they dear,
 More solemnly they kept their sabbaths here, [year.
 And made more spacious rings, and revel'd half the
 I speak of ancient times, for now the swain
 Returning late may pass the woods in vain,
 And never hope to see the nightly train :
 In vain the dairy now with mint is dress'd,
 The dairy-maid expects no fairy guest
 To skim the bowls, and after pay the feast.
 She sighs, and shakes her empty shoes in vain,
 No silver penny to reward her pain :
 For priests with prayers and other goodly gear,
 Have made the merry goblins disappear :
 And where they play'd their merry pranks before,
 Have sprinkled holy water on the floor :
 And friars that through the wealthy regions run,
 Thuck as the motes that twinkle in the sun,

Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,
 And exorcise the beds, and cross the walls :
 This makes the fairy quires forsake the place,
 When once 'tis hallow'd with the rites of grace :
 But in the walks where wicked elves have been,
 The learning of the parish now is seen,
 The midnight parson posting o'er the green,
 With gown tuck'd up, to wakes, for Sunday next ;
 With humming ale encouraging his text ;
 Nor wants the holy leech to country-girl betwixt.
 From fiends and imps he sets the village free,
 There haunts not any incubus but he.
 The maids and women need no danger fear
 To walk by night, and sanctity so near :
 For by some haycock, or some shady thorn,
 He bids his beads both even song and morn.

It so befell in this king Arthur's reign,
 A lusty knight was pricking o'er the plain ;
 A bachelor he was, and of the courtly train.
 It happen'd, as he rode, a damsel gay
 In russet robes to market took her way :
 Soon on the girl he cast an amorous eye,
 So straight she walk'd, and on her pasterns high :
 If seeing her behind he lik'd her pace,
 Now turning short, he better likes her face.
 He lights in haste, and, full of youthful fire,
 By force accomplish'd his obscene desire :
 This done, away he rode, not unespied,
 For swarming at his back the country cry'd :
 And once in view they never lost the sight,
 But seiz'd, and pinion'd, brought to court the knight.

Then courts of kings were held in high renown,
 Ere made the common brothels of the town :
 There, virgins honourable vows receiv'd,
 But chaste as maids in monasteries liv'd :
 The king himself, to nuptial ties a slave,
 No bad example to his poets gave :
 And they, not bad, but in a vicious age,
 Had not, to please the prince, debauch'd the stage.

Now what should Arthur do? He lov'd the knight,

But sovereign monarchs are the source of right :
 Mov'd by the damsel's tears and common cry,
 He doom'd the brutal ravisher to die.
 But fair Geneura rose in his defence,
 And pray'd so hard for mercy from the prince,
 That to his queen the king th' offender gave,
 And left it in her power to kill or save :
 This gracious act the ladies all approve,
 Who thought it much a man should die for love ;
 And with their mistress join'd in close debate
 (Covering their kindness with dissembled hate)
 If not to free him, to prolong his fate.
 At last agreed they call'd him by consent
 Before the queen and female parliament.
 And the fair speaker rising from the chair,
 Did thus the judgment of the house declare.

" Sir knight, though I have ask'd thy life, yet still Thy destiny depends upon my will :
 Nor hast thou other surety than the grace
 Not due to thee from our offended race.
 But as our kind is of a softer mold,
 And cannot blood without a sigh behold,
 I grant thee life : reserving still the power
 To take the forfeit when I see my hour :
 Unless thy answer to my next demand
 Shall set thee free from our avenging hand.
 The question, whose solution I require,
 Is, What the sex of women most desire?
 In this dispute thy judges are at strife ;
 Beware ; for on thy wit depends thy life.

Yet (lest, surpris'd, unknowing what to say,
 Thou damn thyself) we give thee farther day :
 A year is thine to wander at thy will ;
 And learn from others, if thou want'st the skill
 But, not to hold our proffer turn'd in scorn,
 Good sureties will we have for thy return ;
 That at the time prefix'd thou shalt obey,
 And at thy pledge's peril keep thy day."

Woe was the knight at this severe command :
 But well he knew 'twas bootless to withstand :
 The terms accepted as the fair ordain,
 He put in bail for his return again,
 And promis'd answer at the day assign'd,
 The best, with Heaven's assistance, he could find.

His leave thus taken, on his way he went
 With heavy heart, and full of discontent,
 Misdoubting much, and fearful of th' event.
 'Twas hard the truth of such a point to find,
 As was not yet agreed among the kind.
 Thus on he went ; still anxious more and more,
 Ask'd all he met, and knock'd at every door ;
 Enquir'd of men ; but made his chief request
 To learn from women what they lov'd the best.
 They answer'd each according to her mind
 To please herself, not all the female kind.
 One was for wealth, another was for place :
 Crones, old and ugly, wish'd a better face.
 The widow's wish was oftentimes to wed ;
 The wanton maids were all for sport a-bed.
 Some said the sex were pleas'd with handsome lies,
 And some gross flattery lov'd without disguise :
 " Truth is," says one, " he seldom fails to win
 Who flatters well ; for that's our darling sin :
 But long attendance, and a duteous mind,
 Will work ev'n with the wisest of the kind."
 One thought the sex's prime felicity
 Was from the bonds of wedlock to be free :
 Their pleasures, hours, and actions, all their own,
 And uncontrol'd to give account to none.
 Some wish a husband-fool : but such are curs,
 For fools perverse of husbands are the worst :
 All women would be counted chaste and wise,
 Nor should our spouses see, but with our eyes ;
 For fools will prate ; and though they want the wit
 To find close faults, yet open blots will hit :
 Though better for their ease to hold their tongue,
 For woman-kind was never in the wrong.
 So noise ensues, and quarrels last for life ;
 The wife abhors the fool, the fool the wife.
 And some men say that great delight have we,
 To be for truth extoll'd, and secrecy :
 And constant in one purpose still to dwell ;
 And not our husbands' counsels to reveal.
 But that's a fable : for our sex is frail,
 Inventing rather than not tell a tale.
 Like leaky sieves no secrets we can hold :
 Witness the famous tale that Ovid told.

Midas the king, as in his book appears,
 By Phoebus was endow'd with ass's ears,
 Which under his long locks he well conceal'd,
 As monarchs' vices must not be reveal'd,
 For fear the people have them in the wind,
 Who long ago were neither dumb nor blind :
 Nor apt to think from Heaven their title spring
 Since Jove and Mars left off begetting kings.
 This Midas knew : and durst communicate
 To none but to his wife his ears of state :
 One must be trusted, and he thought her fit,
 As passing prudent, and a parlous wit.
 To this sagacious confessor he went,
 And told her what a gift the gods had sent :

But told it under matrimonial seal,
 With strict injunction never to reveal.
 The secret heard, she plighted him her troth,
 (And sacred sure is every woman's oath)
 The royal malady should rest unknown,
 Both for her husband's honour and her own ;
 But ne'ertheless she pin'd with discontent ;
 The counsel rumbled till it found a vent.
 The thing she knew she was obliged to hide ;
 By interest and by oath the wife was ty'd ;
 But if she told it not, the woman dy'd.
 Loth to betray a husband and a prince,
 But she must burst, or blab : and no pretence
 Of honour ty'd her tongue from self-defence.
 A marshy ground commodiously was near,
 Thither she ran, and held her breath for fear,
 Lest if a word she spoke of any thing,
 That word might be the secret of the king.
 Thus full of counsel to the fen she went,
 Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent ;
 Arriv'd, by pure necessity compell'd,
 On her majestic marrow-bones she kneel'd :
 Then to the water's brink she laid her head
 And, as a bittour bumps within a reed,
 "To thee alone, O Lake," she said, "I tell,
 (And, as thy queen, command thee to conceal):
 Beneath his locks the king my husband wears
 A goodly royal pair of ass's ears.
 Now I have eas'd my bosom of the pain,
 Till the next longing fit return again."

Thus through a woman was the secret known ;
 Tell us, and in effect you tell the town.
 But to my tale : The knight with heavy cheer,
 Wandering in vain, had now consum'd the year :
 One day was only left to solve the doubt,
 Yet knew no more than when he first set out.
 But home he must, and, as th' award had been,
 Yield up his body captive to the queen.
 In this despairing state he hapt to ride,
 As Fortune led him, by a forest side :
 Loosely the vale, and full of horror stood,
 Brown with the shade of a religious wood :
 When full before him at the noon of night,
 (The Moon was up, and shot a gleamy light)
 He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
 That feebly footing seem'd to skim the ground :
 Thus dancing hand in hand, so light they were,
 He knew not where they trod, on earth or air.
 At speed he drove, and came a sudden guest,
 In hope where many women were, at least,
 Some one by chance might answer his request.
 But faster than his horse the ladies flew,
 And in a trice were vanish'd out of view.

One only hag remain'd : but fouler far
 Than grandame apes in Indian forests are ;
 Against a wither'd oak she lean'd her weight,
 Propp'd on her trusty staff, not half upright,
 And dropp'd an aukward court'sy to the knight.
 Then said, "What makes you, sir, so late abroad
 Without a guide, and this no beaten road ?
 Or want you aught that here you hope to find,
 Or travel for some trouble in your mind ?
 The last I guess ; and if I read aright,
 Those of our sex are bound to serve a knight ;
 Perhaps good counsel may your grief assuage,
 Then tell your pain : for wisdom is in age." [know
 To this the knight : "Good mother, would you
 The secret cause and spring of all my woe ?
 My life must with to-morrow's light expire,
 Unless I tell what women most desire.

Now could you help me at this hard essay,
 Or for your inborn goodness, or for pay ;
 Yours is my life, redeem'd by your advice,
 Ask what you please, and I will pay the price :
 The proudest kerchief of the court shall rest
 Well satisfy'd of what they love the best."
 "Plight me thy faith," quoth she, "That what I ask,
 Thy danger over, and perform'd thy task,
 That thou shalt give for hire of thy demand ;
 Here take thy oath, and seal it on my hand ;
 I warrant thee, on peril of my life,
 Thy words shall please both widow, maid, and wife."

More words there needed not to move the knight,
 To take her offer, and his truth to plight.
 With that she spread a mantle on the ground,
 And, first inquiring whither he was bound,
 Bade him not fear, though long and rough the way,
 At court he should arrive ere break of day ;
 His horse should find the way without a guide,
 She said : with fury they began to ride,
 He on the midst, the beldam at his side.
 The horse, what devil drove I cannot tell,
 But only this, they sped their journey well :
 And all the way the crone inform'd the knight,
 How he should answer the demand aright. [spread
 To court they came ; the news was quickly
 Of his returning to redeem his head.

The female senate was assembled soon,
 With all the mob of women of the town :
 The queen sate lord chief justice of the hall,
 And bade the crier cite the criminal.
 The knight appear'd ; and silence they proclaim :
 Then first the culprit answer'd to his name :
 And, after forms of law, was last requir'd
 To name the thing that women most desir'd.
 Th' offender, taught his lesson by the way,
 And by his counsel order'd what to say,
 Thus bold began : "My lady liege," said he,
 "What all your sex desire is sovereignty.
 The wife affects her husband to command :
 All must be hers, both money, house, and land.
 The maids are mistresses ev'n in their name ;
 And of their servants full dominion claim.
 This, at the peril of my head, I say,
 A blunt plain truth, the sex aspires to sway,
 You to rule all, while we, like slaves, obey."
 There was not one, or widow, maid, or wife,
 But said the knight had well deserv'd his life,
 Ev'n fair Geneura, with a blush, confess'd
 The man had found what women love the best.

Up starts the beldam, who was there unseen :
 And, reverence made, accosted thus the queen.
 "My liege," said she, "before the court arise,
 May I, poor wretch, find favour in your eyes,
 To grant my just request : 'twas I who taught
 The knight this answer, and inspir'd his thought.
 None but a woman could a man direct
 To tell us women, what we most affect.
 But first I swore him on his knightly troth,
 (And here demand performance of his oath)
 To grant the boon that next I should desire ;
 He gave his faith, and I expect my hire :
 My promise is fulfill'd : I sav'd his life,
 And claim his debt, to take me for his wife."
 The knight was ask'd, nor could his oath deny,
 But hoped they would not force him to comply.
 The women, who would rather wrest the laws,
 Thau let a sister-plaintiff lose the cause,
 (As judges on the bench more gracious are,
 And more attent, to brothers of the bar,)

Cry'd one and all, the suppliant should have right,
 And to the grandame hag adjudg'd the knight.
 In vain he sigh'd, and oft with tears desir'd,
 Some reasonable suit might be requir'd.
 But still the crone was constant to her note:
 The more he spoke, the more she stretch'd her throat.
 In vain he proffer'd all his goods, to save
 His body destin'd to that living grave.
 The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn;
 And nothing but the man would serve her turn.
 "Not all the wealth of eastern kings," said she,
 "Have power to part my plighted love and me:
 And, old and ugly as I am, and poor,
 Yet never will I break the faith I swore;
 For mine thou art by promise, during life,
 And I thy loving and obedient wife."

"My love! nay rather my damnation thou,"
 Said he: "nor am I bound to keep my vow;
 The fiend thy sire hath sent thee from below,
 Else how could'st thou my secret sorrows know?
 Avant, old witch, for I renounce thy bed:
 The queen may take the forfeit of my head,
 Ere any of my race so foul a crone shall wed."
 Both heard, the judge pronounc'd against the knight;

So was he marry'd in his own despite:
 And all day after hid him as an owl,
 Not able to sustain a sight so foul.
 Perhaps the reader thinks I do him wrong,
 To pass the marriage feast and nuptial song:
 Mirth there was none, the man was à-la-mort,
 And little courage had to make his court.
 To bed they went, the bridegroom and the bride:
 Was never such an ill-pair'd couple ty'd:
 Restless he toss'd, and tumbled to and fro,
 And roll'd and wriggled further off for woe.
 The good old wife lay smiling by his side,
 And caught him in her quivering arms, and cry'd,
 "When you my ravish'd predecessor saw,
 You were not then become this man of straw;
 Had you been such, you might have 'scap'd the law.
 Is this the custom of king Arthur's court?
 Are all round-table knights of such a sort?
 Remember I am she who sav'd your life,
 Your loving, lawful, and complying wife:
 Not thus you swore in your unhappy hour,
 Nor I for this return employ'd my power.
 In time of need, I was your faithful friend;
 Nor did I since, nor ever will offend.
 Believe me, my lov'd lord, 'tis much unkind;
 What Fury has possess'd your alter'd mind?
 Thus on my wedding-night without pretence—
 Come turn this way, or tell me my offence.
 If not your wife, let reason's rule persuade;
 Name but my fault, amends shall soon be made."
 "Amends! nay that's impossible," said he;
 "What change of age or ugliness can be?
 Or, could Medea's magic mend thy face,
 Thou art descended from so mean a race,
 That never knight was match'd with such disgrace.
 What wonder, madam, if I move my side,
 When, if I turn, I turn to such a bride?"
 "And is this all that troubles you so sore?"
 "And what the devil could'st thou wish me more?"
 "Ah, Benedicite," reply'd the crone:
 "Then cause of just complaining have you none.
 The remedy to this were soon apply'd,
 Would you be like the bridegroom to the bride:
 But, for you say a long descended race,
 And wealth, and dignity, and power, and place,

Make gentlemen, and that your high degree
 Is much disparag'd to be match'd with me;
 Know this, my lord, nobility of blood
 Is but a glittering and fallacious good:
 The nobleman is he whose noble mind
 Is fill'd with inborn worth, unborrow'd from his kind.
 The King of Heaven was in a manger laid;
 And took his earth but from an humble maid;
 Then what can birth, or mortal men, bestow?
 Since floods no higher than their fountains flow.
 We, who for name and empty honour strive,
 Our true nobility from him derive.
 Your ancestors, who puff your mind with pride,
 And vast estates to mighty titles ty'd,
 Did not your honour, but their own, advance;
 For virtue comes not by inheritance.
 If you tralineate from your father's mind,
 What are you else but of a bastard-kind?
 Do, as your great progenitors have done,
 And by their virtues prove yourself their son.
 No father can infuse or wit or grace;
 A mother comes across, and mars the race.
 A grandsire or a grandame taints the blood;
 And seldom three descents continue good.
 Were virtue by descent, a noble name
 Could never villanize his father's fame:
 But, as the first, the last of all the line
 Would like the Sun even in descending shine;
 Take fire, and bear it to the darkest house,
 Betwixt king Arthur's court and Caucasus;
 If you depart, the flame shall still remain,
 And the bright blaze enlighten all the plain:
 Nor, till the fuel perish, can decay,
 By Nature form'd on things combustible to prey.
 Such is not man, who, mixing better seed
 With worse, begets a base degenerate breed:
 The bad corrupts the good, and leaves behind
 No trace of all the great begetter's mind.
 The father sinks within his son, we see,
 And often rises in the third degree;
 If better luck a better mother give,
 Chance gave us being, and by chance we live.
 Such as our atoms were, even such are we,
 Or call it chance, or strong necessity:
 Thus loaded with dead weight, the will is free.
 And thus it needs must be: for seed conjoin'd
 Lets into nature's work th' imperfect kind;
 But fire, th' enlivener of the general frame,
 Is one, its operation still the same.
 Its principle is in itself: while ours
 Works, as confederates war, with mingled powers;
 Or man or woman, whichever fails:
 And, oft, the vigour of the worse prevails.
 Ether with sulphur blended alters hue,
 And casts a dusky gleam of Sodom blue.
 Thus, in a brute, their ancient honour ends,
 And the fair mermaid in a fish descends:
 The line is gone; no longer duke or earl;
 But, by himself degraded, turns a churl.
 Nobility of blood is but renown
 Of thy great fathers by their virtue known,
 And a long trail of light, to thee descending down.
 If in thy smoke it ends, their glories shine;
 But infamy and villanage are thine.
 Then what I said before is plainly show'd,
 The true nobility proceeds from God:
 Nor left us by inheritance, but given
 By bounty of our stars, and grace of Heaven.
 Thus from a captive Servius Tullius rose,
 Whom for his virtues the first Romans chose:

bricins from their walls repell'd the foe,
 Those noble hands had exercis'd the plough.
 From hence, my lord and love, I thus conclude,
 That though my homely ancestors were rude,
 Clean as I am, yet I may have the grace
 To make you father of a generous race:
 And noble then am I, when I begin,
 A Virtue cloath'd, to cast the rags of Sin.
 If poverty be my upbraided crime,
 And you believe in Heaven, there was a time
 When He, the great controller of our fate,
 Sign'd to be man, and liv'd in low estate:
 Which he, who had the world at his dispose,
 If poverty were vice, would never choose.
 Philosophers have said, and poets sing,
 That a glad poverty's an honest thing.
 Content is wealth, the riches of the mind;
 And happy he who can that treasure find.
 But the base miser starves amidst his store,
 Rooks on his gold, and, griping still at more,
 Is sadly pining, and believes he's poor.
 He ragged beggar, though he want relief,
 Is not to lose, and sings before the thief.
 Want is a bitter and a hateful good,
 Because its virtues are not understood:
 'Tis many things, impossible to thought,
 Have been by need to full perfection brought:
 The daring of the soul proceeds from thence,
 Harpness of wit, and active diligence;
 Prudence at once, and fortitude, it gives,
 And, if in patience taken, mends our lives;
 For ev'n that indigence, that brings me low,
 Makes me myself, and Him above, to know.
 A good which none would challenge, few would choose,

A fair possession, which mankind refuse.
 If we from wealth to poverty descend,
 Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend.
 If I am old and ugly, well for you,
 No lewd adulterer will my love pursue;
 Nor jealousy, the bane of marry'd life,
 Shall haunt you for a wither'd homely wife;
 For age and ugliness, as all agree,
 Are the best guards of female chastity.

"Yet since I see your mind is worldly bent,
 I'll do my best to further your content.
 And therefore of two gifts in my dispose,
 Thank ere you speak, I grant you leave to choose;
 Would you I should be still deform'd and old,
 Repulsive to touch, and loathsome to behold;
 On this condition to remain for life
 A careful, tender, and obedient wife,
 Is all I can, contribute to your ease,
 And not in deed, or word, or thought, displease?
 Or would you rather have me young and fair,
 And take the chance that happens to your share?
 Temptations are in beauty, and in youth,
 And how can you depend upon my truth?
 Now weigh the danger with the doubtful bliss,
 And thank yourself if aught should fall amiss."

Sore sigh'd the knight, who this long sermon heard;
 At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd;
 And thus reply'd: "My lady and my wife,
 To your wise conduct I resign my life:
 Choose you for me, for well you understand
 The future good and ill, on either hand:
 But if an humble husband may request,
 Provide, and order all things for the best;
 Yours be the care to profit, and to please:
 And let your subject servant take his ease."

"Then thus in peace," quoth she, "concludes the strife,
 Since I am turn'd the husband, you the wife:
 The matrimonial victory is mine,
 Which, having fairly gain'd, I will resign;
 Forgive if I have said or done amiss,
 And seal the bargain with a friendly kiss:
 I promis'd you but one content to share,
 But now I will become both good and fair,
 No nuptial quarrel shall disturb your ease;
 The business of my life shall be to please:
 And for my beauty, that, as time shall try;
 But draw the curtain first, and cast your eye."
 He look'd, and saw a creature heavenly fair,
 In bloom of youth, and of a charming air.
 With joy he turn'd, and seiz'd her ivory arm;
 And like Pygmalion found the statue warm.
 Small arguments there needed to prevail,
 A storm of kisses pour'd as thick as hail.
 Thus long in mutual bliss they lay embrac'd,
 And their first love continued to the last:
 One sunshine was their life, no cloud between;
 Nor ever was a kinder couple seen.

And so may all our lives like theirs be led;
 Heaven send the maids young husbands fresh in bed;

May widows wed as often as they can,
 And ever for the better change their man;
 And some devouring plague pursue their lives,
 Who will not well be govern'd by their wives.

THE

CHARACTER OF A GOOD PARSON.

A PARISH priest was of the pilgrim-train;
 An awful, reverend, and religious man.
 His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
 And charity itself was in his face.
 Rich was his soul, though his attire was poor,
 As God had cloth'd his own ambassador,
 For such, on Earth, his bless'd Redeemer bore.
 Of sixty years he seem'd; and well might last
 To sixty more, but that he liv'd too fast;
 Refin'd himself to soul, to curb the sense;
 And made almost a sin of abstinence.
 Yet, had his aspect nothing of severe,
 But such a face as promis'd him sincere.
 Nothing reserv'd or sullen was to see:
 But sweet regards, and pleasing sanctity:
 Mild was his accent, and his action free.
 With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
 Though harsh the precept, yet the people charm'd
 For, letting down the golden chain from high,
 He drew his audience upward to the sky:
 And oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears,
 (A music more melodious than the spheres.)
 For David left him, when he went to rest,
 His lyre; and after him he sung the best.
 He bore his great commission in his look:
 But sweetly temper'd awe; and soften'd all he spoke.
 He preach'd the joys of Heaven, and pains of Hell,
 And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal;
 But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwell.
 He taught the gospel rather than the law;
 And forc'd himself to drive; but lov'd to draw.
 For Fear but freezes minds: but Love, like heat,
 Exhales the soul sublime, to seek her native seat.

To threats the stubborn sinner oft is hard,
 Wrapp'd in his crimes, against the storm prepar'd ;
 But when the milder beams of Mercy play,
 He melts, and throws his cumbrous cloak away.
 Lightning and thunder (Heaven's artillery)
 As harbingers before th' Almighty fly :
 Those but proclaim his style, and disappear ;
 The stiller sound succeeds, and God is there.

The tithes, his parish freely paid, he took ;
 But never sued, or curs'd with bell and book.
 With patience bearing wrong ; but offering none :
 Since every man is free to lose his own.
 The country churls, according to their kind,
 (Who grudge their dues, and love to be behind,)
 The less he sought his offerings, pinch'd the more,
 And prais'd a priest contented to be poor.

Yet of his little he had some to spare,
 To feed the famish'd, and to clothe the bare :
 For mortify'd he was to that degree,
 A poorer than himself he would not see.
 True priests, he said, and preachers of the word,
 Were only stewards of their sovereign lord ;
 Nothing was theirs ; but all the public store :
 Intrusted riches, to relieve the poor.

Who, should they steal, for want of his relief,
 He judg'd himself accomplice with the thief.
 Wide was his parish ; not contracted close
 In streets, but here and there a straggling house ;
 Yet still he was at hand, without request,
 To serve the sick ; to succour the distress'd :
 Tempting, on foot, alone, without affright,
 The dangers of a dark tempestuous night.

All this, the good old man perform'd alone,
 Nor spar'd his pains ; for curate he had none.
 Nor durst he trust another with his care ;
 Nor rode himself to Paul's, the public fair,
 To chaffer for preferment with his gold,
 Where bishoprics and sinecures are sold.
 But duly watch'd his flock, by night and day ;
 And from the prowling wolf redeem'd the prey :
 And hungry sent the wily fox away.

The proud he tam'd, the penitent he cheer'd :
 Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd.
 His preaching much, but more his practice wrought,
 (A living sermon of the truths he taught,)
 For this by rules severe his life he squar'd :
 That all might see the doctrine which they heard.
 For priests, he said, are patterns for the rest
 (The gold of Heaven, who bear the God impress'd) :
 But when the precious coin is kept unclean,
 The sovereign's image is no longer seen.
 If they be foul on whom the people trust,
 Well may the baser brass contract a rust.

The prelate, for his holy life he priz'd ;
 The worldly pomp of prelacy despis'd.
 His Saviour came not with a gaudy show ;
 Nor was his kingdom of the world below.
 Patience in want, and poverty of mind,
 These marks of church and churchmen he design'd,
 And living taught, and dying left behind.
 The crown he wore was of the pointed thorn :
 In purple he was crucified, not born.
 They who contend for place and high degree,
 Are not his sons, but those of Zebedee.

Not but he knew the signs of earthly power
 Might well become Saint Peter's successor ;
 The holy father holds a double reign, {plain.
 'The prince may keep his pomp, the fisher must be Such was the saint ; who shone with every grace,
 Reflecting, Moses like, his Maker's face.

God saw his image lively was express'd ;
 And his own work, as in creation, bless'd.

The tempter saw him too with envious eye ;
 And, as on Job, demanded leave to try.
 He took the time when Richard was depos'd,
 And high and low with happy Harry clos'd.
 This prince, though great in arms, the priest
 withstood :

Near though he was, yet not the next of blood.
 Had Richard, unconstrain'd, resign'd the throne,
 A king can give no more than is his own :
 The title stood entail'd, had Richard had a son.

Conquest, an odious name, was laid aside,
 Where all submitted, none the battle try'd.
 The senseless plea of right by Providence
 Was, by a flattering priest, invented since ;
 And lasts no longer than the present sway ;
 But justifies the next who comes in play.

The people's right remains ; let those who dare
 Dispute their power, when they the judges are.

He join'd not in their choice, because he knew
 Worse might, and often did, from change ensue.
 Much to himself he thought ; but little spoke ;
 And, undpriv'd, his benefice forsook. {stretch'd:

Now, through the land, his cure of souls he
 And like a primitive apostle preach'd.

Still cheerful ; ever constant to his call ;
 By many follow'd ; lov'd by most, admir'd by all
 With what he begg'd, his brethren he reliev'd ;
 And gave the charities himself receiv'd.

Gave, while he taught ; and edify'd the more,
 Because he show'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor.

He went not with the crowd to see a shrine ;
 But fed us, by the way, with food divine.

In deference to his virtues, I forbear
 To show you what the rest in orders were :
 This brilliant is so spotless, and so bright,
 He needs no foil, but shines by his own proper light.

THEODORE AND HONORIA.

Of all the cities in Romanian lands,
 The chief, and most renown'd, Ravenna stands,
 Adorn'd in ancient times with arms and arts,
 And rich inhabitants, with generous hearts.
 But Theodore the brave, above the rest,
 With gifts of Fortune and of Nature bless'd,
 The foremost place for wealth and honour held,
 And all in feats of chivalry excell'd.

This noble youth to madness lov'd a dame
 Of high degree, Honoria was her name ;
 Fair as the fairest, but of haughty mind,
 And fiercer than became so soft a kind.
 Proud of her birth (for equal she had none) ;
 The rest she scorn'd, but hated him alone ;
 His gifts, his constant courtship, nothing gain'd ;
 For she, the more he lov'd, the more disdain'd.
 He liv'd with all the pomp he could devise,
 At tilts and tournaments obtain'd the prize ;
 But found no favour in his lady's eyes :
 Relentless as a rock, the lofty maid,
 Turn'd all to poison, that he did or said : {move
 Nor prayers, nor tears, nor offer'd vows, could
 The work went backward ; and the more he strove
 T' advance his suit, the farther from her love.
 Weary'd at length, and wanting remedy,
 He doubted oft, and oft resolv'd to die.

But Pride stood ready to prevent the blow,
 For who would die to gratify a foe?
 His generous mind disdain'd so mean a fate;
 That pass'd, his next endeavour was to hate.
 But rarer that relief than all the rest,
 The less he hop'd, with more desire possess'd;
 Love stood the siege, and would not yield his breast.
 Change was the next, but change deceiv'd his care;
 He sought a fairer, but found none so fair.
 He would have worn her out by slow degrees,
 As men by fasting starve th' untam'd disease:
 But present love requir'd a present ease.
 Looking he feeds alone his famish'd eyes,
 Feels lingering Death, but looking not he dies.
 Yet still he chose the longest way to Fate,
 Wasting at once his life and his estate.

His friends beheld, and pity'd him in vain,
 For what advice can ease a lover's pain!
 Absence, the best expedient they could find,
 Might save the fortune, if not cure the mind:
 This means they long propos'd, but little gain'd,
 Yet, after much pursuit, at length obtain'd.

Hard you may think it was to give consent,
 But struggling with his own desires he went,
 With large expense, and with a pompous train,
 Provided as to visit France and Spain,
 For some distant voyage o'er the main.
 But Love had clipp'd his wings, and cut him short,
 Confin'd within the purlieus of the court.

Three miles he went, nor farther could retreat;
 His travels ended at his country seat:
 The Chassis' pleasing plains he took his way,
 There pitch'd his tents, and there resolv'd to stay.
 The spring was in the prime; the neighbouring grove

Supply'd with birds, the choristers of Love:
 Music unbought, that minister'd delight
 To morning walks, and lull'd his cares by night:
 There he discharg'd his friends: but not th' expense
 Of frequent treats, and proud magnificence.
 He liv'd as kings retire, though more at large
 From public business, yet with equal charge;
 With house and heart still open to receive:
 As well content as Love would give him leave:
 He would have liv'd more free; but many a guest,
 Who could forsake the friend, pursued the feast.

It chanc'd one morning, as his fancy led,
 Before his usual hour he left his bed;
 To walk within a lonely lawn, that stood
 On every side surrounded by a wood:
 Alone he walk'd, to please his pensive mind,
 And sought the deepest solitude to find;
 'Twas in a grove of spreading pines he stray'd;
 The winds within the quivering branches play'd,
 And dancing trees a mournful music made.

The place itself was suiting to his care,
 Smooth and savage, as the cruel fair.
 He wander'd on, unknowing where he went
 Or in the wood, and all on love intent:
 The Day already half his race had run,
 And summon'd him to due repast at noon,
 As Love could feel no hunger but his own.

Whilst listening to the murmuring leaves he stood,
 More than a mile immers'd within the wood,
 At once the wind was laid; the whispering sound
 Was dumb; a rising earthquake rock'd the ground;
 With deeper brown the grove was overspread;
 A sudden horror seized his giddy head,
 And his ears tinkled, and his colour fled.
 Nature was in alarm; some danger nigh
 Remind'd threaten'd, though unseen to mortal eye.

Unus'd to fear, he summon'd all his soul,
 And stood collected in himself, and whole;
 Not long: for soon a whirlwind rose around,
 And from afar he heard a screaming sound,
 As of a dame distress'd, who cry'd for aid,
 And fill'd with loud laments the secret shade.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
 With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish
 wood;

From thence the noise, which now, approaching near,
 With more distinguish'd notes invades his ear;
 He rais'd his head, and saw a beauteous maid,
 With hair dishevell'd, issuing through the shade;
 Stripp'd of her clothes, and ev'n those parts reveal'd,
 Which modest Nature keeps from sight conceal'd.
 Her face, her hands, her naked limbs were torn,
 With passing through the brakes, and prickly thorn;
 Two mastiffs gaunt and grim her flight pursu'd,
 And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embru'd;
 Oft they came up, and pinch'd her tender side,
 "Mercy, O mercy Heaven!" she ran, and cry'd.
 When Heaven was nam'd, they loos'd their hold
 again,

Then sprang she forth, they follow'd her amain.

Not far behind, a knight of swarthy face,
 High on a coal-black steed pursu'd the chase:
 With flashing flames his ardent eyes were fill'd,
 And in his hand a naked sword he held:
 He cheer'd the dogs to follow her who fled,
 And vow'd revenge on her devoted head.

As Theodore was born of noble kind,
 The brutal action rous'd his manly mind;
 Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
 He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid,
 A saplin pine he wrench'd from out the ground,
 The readiest weapon that his fury found.
 Thus furnish'd for offence, he cross'd the way
 Betwixt the graceless villain and his prey.

The knight came thundering on, but, from afar,
 Thus in imperious tone forbade the war:
 "Cease, Theodore, to proffer vain relief,
 Nor stop the vengeance of so just a grief;
 But give me leave to seize my destin'd prey,
 And let Eternal Justice take the way:
 I but revenge my fate, disdain'd, betray'd,
 And suffering death for this ungrateful maid."

He said, at once dismounting from the steed;
 For now the hell-hounds with superior speed
 Had reach'd the dame, and, fastening on her side,
 The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd,
 Stood Theodore surpris'd in deadly fright,
 With chattering teeth, and bristling hair upright;
 Yet arm'd with inborn worth, "Whate'er," said he,
 "Thou art, who know'st me better than I thee;
 Or prove thy rightful cause, or be defy'd;"

The spectre, fiercely staring, thus reply'd:
 "Know, Theodore, thy ancestry I claim,
 And Guido Cavalcanti was my name.

One common sire our fathers did beget,
 My name and story some remember yet:
 Thee, then a boy, within my arms I laid,
 When for my sins I lov'd this haughty maid;
 Not less ador'd in life, nor serv'd by me,
 Than proud Honoria now is loved by thee.
 What did I not her stubborn heart to gain?
 But all my vows were answer'd with disdain:
 She scorn'd my sorrows, and despis'd my pain.
 Long time I dragg'd my days in fruitless care;
 Then, loathing life, and plung'd in deep despair,
 To finish my unhappy life, I fell
 On this sharp sword, and now am damn'd in Hell.

"Short was her joy; for soon th' insulting maid
By Heaven's decree in this cold grave was laid.
And as in unrepented sin she dy'd, [pride:
Doom'd to the same bad place is punish'd for her
Because she deemed I well deserv'd to die,
And made a merit of her cruelty. [cast,
There, then, we met; both try'd, and both were
And this irrevocable sentence pass'd;
That she, whom I so long pursu'd in vain,
Should suffer from my hands a lingering pain:
Renew'd to life that she might daily die,
I daily doom'd to follow, she to fly;
No more a lover, but a mortal foe,
I seek her life (for love is none below);
As often as my dogs with better speed
Arrest her flight, is she to death decreed:
Then with this fatal sword, on which I dy'd,
I pierce her open back, or tender side,
And tear that harden'd heart from out her breast,
Which, with her entrails, makes my hungry hounds
a feast.

Nor lies she long, but, as her Fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain,
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain."

This, vers'd in death, th' infernal knight relates,
And then for proof fulfill'd the common fates;
Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,
And fed the hounds that help'd him to pursue,
Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will,
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill.
And now the soul, expiring through the wound,
Had left the body breathless on the ground,
When thus the grisly spectre spoke again:
"Behold the fruit of ill-rewarded pain:
As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemned by Fate
To daily death; and every several place,
Conscious of her disdain and my disgrace,
Must witness her just punishment; and be
A scene of triumph and revenge to me!
As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,
As Friday saw me die, so she my prey
Becomes ev'n here, on this revolving day."

Thus while he spoke the virgin from the ground
Upstart'd fresh, already clos'd the wound,
And, unconcern'd for all she felt before,
Precipitates her flight along the shore:
The hell-hounds, as ungorg'd with flesh and blood,
Pursue their prey, and seek their wonted food:
The fiend remounts his courser, mends his pace;
And all the vision vanish'd from the place.

Long stood the noble youth oppress'd with awe
And stupid at the wondrous things he saw, [law.
Surpassing common faith, transgressing Nature's
He would have been asleep, and wish'd to wake,
But dreams, he knew, no long impression make,
Though strong at first; if vision, to what end,
But such as must his future state portend?
His love the damsel, and himself the fiend,
But yet, reflecting that it could not be
From Heaven, which cannot impious acts decree,
Resolv'd within himself to shun the snare,
Which Hell for his destruction did prepare;
And, as his better genius should direct,
From an ill cause to draw a good effect.

Inspir'd from Heaven he homeward took his way,
Nor pall'd his new design with long delay:
But of his train a trusty servant sent,
To call his friends together at his tent.

They came, and, usual salutations paid,
With words premeditated thus he said:
"What you have often counsell'd, to remove
My vain pursuit of unregarded love;
By thrift my sinking fortune to repair,
Though late yet is at last become my care:
My heart shall be my own; my vast expense
Reduc'd to bounds, by timely providence:
This only I require; invite for me
Honor, with her father's family,
Her friends, and mine; the cause I shall display,
On Friday next; for that's th' appointed day."
Well pleas'd were all his friends, the task was light,
The father, mother, daughter, they invite;
Hardly the dame was drawn to this repast;
But yet resolv'd, because it was the last.
The day was come, the guests invited came,
And, with the rest, th' inexorable dame:
A feast prepar'd with riotous expense,
Much cost, more care, and most magnificence.
The place ordain'd was in that haunted grove,
Where the revenging ghost pursu'd his love:
The tables in a proud pavilion spread,
With flowers below, and tissue overhead:
The rest in rank, Honor, chief in place,
Was artfully contriv'd to set her face
To front the thicket, and behold the chase.
The feast was serv'd, the time so well forecast,
That just when the desert and fruits were plac'd,
The fiend's alarm began; the hollow sound
Sung in the leaves, the forest shook around.
Air blacken'd, roll'd the thunder, groan'd the
ground.

Nor long before the loud laments arise,
Of one distress'd, and mastiffs' mingled cries;
And first the dame came rushing through the wood,
And next the famish'd hounds that sought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood.

Last came the felon, on his sable steed, [speed.
Arm'd with his naked sword, and urg'd his dogs to
She ran, and cry'd, her flight directly bent
(A guest unbidden) to the fatal tent, [ment.
The scene of death, and place ordain'd for punish-
Loud was the noise, aghast was every guest,
The women shriek'd, the men forsook the feast;
The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid, [aid
She rent the Heaven with loud laments, imploring

The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their faulchions brandish'd at the grisly sprite;
High on his stirrups he provok'd the fight.
Then on the crowd he cast a furious look,
And wither'd all their strength before he spoke:
"Back on your lives; let be," said he, "my prey
And let my vengeance take the destin'd way:
Vain are your arms, and vainer your defence,
Against th' eternal doom of Providence:
Mine is th' ungrateful maid by Heaven design'd:
Mercy she would not give, nor mercy shall she find.
At this the former tale again he told
With thundering tone, and dreadful to behold:
Sunk were their hearts with horror of the crime,
Nor needed to be warn'd a second time,
But bore each other back: some knew the face,
And all had heard the much-lamented case
Of him who fell for love, and this the fatal place.

And now th' infernal minister advanc'd,
Seiz'd the due victim, and with fury lanc'd
Her back, and, piercing through her inmost heart,
Drew backward as before th' offending part;

The reeking entrails next he tore away,
And to his meagre mastiffs made a prey.
The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd ;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the faltering tongue.
The fright was general ; but the female band
(A helpless train) in more confusion stand :
With horror shuddering, on a heap they run,
Sick at the sight of hateful justice done ; [their own.
For conscience rung th' alarm, and made the case
So, spread upon a lake with upward eye,
A plump of fowl behold their foe on high ;
They close their trembling troop ; and all attend
On whom the sowing eagle will descend.

But most the proud Honoria fear'd th' event,
And thought to her alone the vision sent.
Her guilt presents to her distracted mind
Heaven's justice, Theodore's revengeful kind,
And the same fate to the same sin assign'd.
Already sees herself the monster's prey,
And feels her heart and entrails torn away.
Twas a mute scene of sorrow, mix'd with fear ;
Still on the table lay th' unfinished cheer :
The knight and hungry mastiffs stood around,
The mangled dame lay breathless on the ground ;
Then on a sudden, re-inspir'd with breath,
Again she rose, again to suffer death ;
Nor staid the hell-hounds, nor the hunter staid,
Nor follow'd, as before, the flying maid :
The avenger took from earth th' avenging sword,
And mounting light as air his sable steed he spurr'd :
The clouds dispell'd, the sky resum'd her light,
And Nature stood recover'd of her fright.
But fear, the last of ills, remain'd behind,
And horror heavy sat on every mind.
Nor Theodore encourag'd more the feast,
Nor sternly look'd, as hatching in his breast
Some deep designs ; which when Honoria view'd,
The fresh impulse her former fright renew'd ;
He thought herself the trembling dame who fled,
And him the grisly ghost that spurr'd th' infernal
steed :

He more dismay'd, for when the guests withdrew,
His courteous host, saluting all the crew, [adieu ;
Unperturb'd pass'd her o'er ; nor grac'd with kind
The sting infix'd within her haughty mind
The downfall of her empire she divin'd ;
And her proud heart with secret sorrow pin'd.
Some as they went, the sad discourse renew'd
Of the relentless dame to death pursu'd,
And of the sight obscene so lately view'd.
One durst arraign the righteous doom she bore,
As they who pity'd most, yet blam'd her more :
He parallel they needed not to name,
But in the dead they damn'd the living dame.

At every little noise she look'd behind,
Nor still the knight was present to her mind :
And anxious oft she started on the way,
And thought the horseman-ghost came thundering for his prey.

Turn'd, she took her bed with little rest,
But in short slumbers dreamt the funeral feast :
Awak'd, she turn'd her side, and slept again ;
The same black vapours mounted in her brain,
And the same dreams return'd with double pain.
Now forc'd to wake, because afraid to sleep,
Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap
She sprang from bed, distracted in her mind,
And fear'd, at every step, a twitching sprite behind.

Darkling and desperate, with a staggering pace,
Of death afraid, and conscious of disgrace ;
Fear, Pride, Remorse, at once her heart assail'd,
Pride put Remorse to flight, but Fear prevail'd.
Friday, the fatal day, when next it came, [game,
Her soul forethought the fiend would change his
And her pursue, or Theodore be slain, [plain.
And two ghosts join their packs to hunt her o'er the
This dreadful image so possess'd her mind,
That, desperate any succour else to find,
She ceas'd all farther hope ; and now began
To make reflection on th' unhappy man.
Rich, brave, and young, who past expression lov'd,
Proof to disdain, and not to be remov'd :
Of all the men respected and admir'd,
Of all the dames, except herself, desir'd :
Why not of her ? preferr'd above the rest
By him with knightly deeds, and open love profess'd ?
So had another been, where he his vows address'd.
This quell'd her pride, yet other doubts remain'd,
That, once disdaining, she might be disdain'd.
The fear was just, but greater fear prevail'd,
Fear of her life by hellish bounds assail'd :
He took a lowering leave ; but who can tell,
What outward hate might inward love conceal ?
Her sex's arts she knew ; and why not, then,
Might deep dissembling have a place in men ?
Here hope began to dawn ; resolv'd to try,
She fix'd on this her utmost remedy :
Death was behind, but hard it was to die.
'Twas time enough at last on Death to call,
The precipice in sight : a shrub was all,
That kindly stood betwixt to break the fatal fall.

One maid she had, belov'd above the rest ;
Secure of her, the secret she confess'd ;
And now the cheerful light her fears dispell'd,
She with no winding turns the truth conceal'd,
But put the woman off, and stood reveal'd :
With faults confess'd commission'd her to go,
If pity yet had place, and reconcile her foe.
The welcome message made, was soon receiv'd ;
'Twas to be wish'd, and hop'd, but scarce believ'd ;
Fate seem'd a fair occasion to present ;
He knew the sex, and fear'd she might repent,
Shou'd he delay the moment of consent.
There yet remain'd to gain her friends (a care
The modesty of maidens well might spare) ;
But she with such a zeal the cause embrac'd,
(As women, where they will, are all in haste)
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overborne by fury of the tide ;
With full consent of all she chang'd her state ;
Resistless in her love, as in her hate.
By her example warn'd, the rest beware :
More easy, less imperious, were the fair ;
And that one hunting, which the Devil design'd,
For one fair female, lost him half the kind.

RELIGIO LAICI.

AN EPISTLE.

DIM as the borrow'd beams of Moon and stars
To lonely, weary, wandering travellers,
Is reason to the soul : and as on high,
Those rolling fires discover but the sky,
Not light us here ; so Reason's glimmering ray
Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,
But guide us upward to a better day.

And as those nightly tapers disappear
 When day's bright lord ascends our hemisphere;
 So pale grows Reason at Religion's sight;
 So dies, and so dissolves in supernatural light.
 Some few, whose lamp shone brighter, have been led
 From cause to cause, to Nature's secret head;
 And found, that one first principle must be:
 But what, or who, that universal He;
 Whether some soul encompassing this ball
 Unmade, unmov'd; yet making, moving all;
 Or various atoms, interfering dance,
 Leap'd into form, the noble work of chance;
 Or this great all was from eternity;
 Not ev'n the Stagirite himself could see;
 And Epicurus guess'd as well as he;
 As blindly grop'd they for a future state;
 As rashly judg'd of providence and fate:
 But least of all could their endeavours find
 What most concern'd the good of human kind:
 For happiness was never to be found;
 But vanish'd from them like enchanted ground.
 One thought content the good to be enjoy'd;
 This every little accident destroy'd:
 The wiser madmen did for virtue toil;
 A thorny, or at best a barren soil:
 In pleasure some their glutton souls would steep;
 But found their line too short, the well too deep;
 And leaky vessels which no bliss could keep.
 Thus anxious thoughts in endless circles roll,
 Without a centre where to fix the soul:
 In this wild maze their vain endeavours end:
 How can the less the greater comprehend?
 Or finite reason reach Infinity?

For what could fathom God were more than He.

The deist thinks he stands on firmer ground;
 Cries suprema, the mighty secret's found:
 God is that spring of good; supreme, and best;
 We made to serve, and in that service blest.
 If so, some rules of worship must be given,
 Distributed alike to all by Heaven:
 Else God were partial, and to some deny'd
 The means his justice should for all provide.
 This general worship is to praise and pray:
 One part to borrow blessings, one to pay:
 And when frail Nature slides into offence,
 The sacrifice for crimes is penitence.
 Yet, since the effects of providence, we find,
 Are variously dispens'd to human kind;
 That Vice triumphs, and Virtue suffers here,
 A brand that sovereign justice cannot bear;
 Our reason prompts us to a future state:
 The last appeal from fortune and from fate:
 Where God's all-righteous ways will be declar'd;
 The bad meet punishment, the good reward.

Thus man by his own strength to Heaven would soar:

And would not be oblig'd to God for more.
 Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled
 To think thy wit these god-like notions bred!
 These truths are not the product of thy mind,
 But dropt from Heaven, and of a nobler kind.
 Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
 And reason saw not till faith sprung the light.
 Hence all thy natural worship takes the source:
 'Tis revelation what thou think'st discourse.
 Else how com'st thou to see these truths so clear,
 Which so obscure to heathens did appear?
 Not Plato these, nor Aristotle found:
 Nor he whose wisdom oracles renown'd.
 Hast thou a wit so deep, or so sublime,
 Or canst thou lower dive, or higher climb?

Canst thou by reason more of godhead know
 Than Plutarch, Seneca, or Cicero?

Those giant wits in happier ages born,
 When arms and arts did Greece and Rome adorn,
 Knew no such system: no such piles could raise
 Of natural worship, built on prayer and praise
 To one sole God.

Nor did remorse to expiate sin prescribe:
 But slew their fellow-creatures for a bribe:
 The guiltless victim groan'd for their offence:
 And cruelty and blood was penitence.

If sheep and oxen could stone for men,
 Ah! at how cheap a rate the rich might sin!
 And great oppressors might Heaven's wrath beguile,
 By offering his own creatures for a spoil!

Dar'st thou, poor worm, offend Infinity?
 And must the terms of peace be given by thee?
 Then thou art Justice in the last appeal;
 Thy easy God instructs thee to rebel:
 And, like a king remote and weak, must take
 What satisfaction thou art pleas'd to make.

But if there be a power too just and strong,
 To wink at crimes, and bear unpunish'd wrong;
 Look humbly upward, see his will disclose
 The forfeit first, and then the fine impose:
 A mulct thy poverty could never pay,
 Had not Eternal Wisdom found the way:
 And with celestial wealth supply'd thy store:
 His justice makes the fine, his mercy quits the score.
 See God descending in thy human frame;
 Th' offended suffering in th' offender's name:
 All thy misdeeds to him imputed see,
 And all his righteousness devolv'd on thee.

For, granting we have sinn'd, and that th' offence
 Of man is made against Omnipotence,
 Some price that bears proportion must be paid;
 And infinite with infinite be weigh'd.
 See then the deist lost: remorse for vice,
 Not paid; or, paid, inadequate in price:
 What farther means can reason now direct,
 Or what relief from human wit expect?
 That shows us sick; and sadly are we sure
 Still to be sick, till Heaven reveal the cure:
 If then Heaven's will must needs be understood,
 Which must, if we want cure, and Heaven be good,
 Let all records of will reveal'd be shown;
 With Scripture all in equal balance thrown,
 And our one sacred book will be that one.

Proof needs not here; for whether we compare
 That impious, idle, superstitious ware
 Of rites, lustrations, offerings, which before,
 In various ages, various countries bore,
 With Christian faith and virtues, we shall find
 None answering the great ends of human kind
 But this one rule of life, that shows us best
 How God may be appeas'd, and mortals blest.
 Whether from length of time its worth we draw,
 The word is scarce more ancient than the law:
 Heaven's early care prescrib'd for every age;
 First, in the soul, and after, in the page.
 Or, whether more abstractedly we look,
 Or on the writers, or the written book,
 Whence, but from Heaven, could men unskill'd arts,

In several ages born, in several parts,
 Weave such agreeing truths? or how, or why,
 Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie?
 Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice,
 Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price.

If on the book itself we cast our view,
 Concurrent heathens prove the story true:

The doctrine, miracles ; which must convince,
For Heaven in them appeals to human sense :
And though they prove not, they confirm the cause,
When what is taught agrees with Nature's laws.

Then for the style, majestic and divine,
It speaks no less than God in every line :
Commanding words ; whose force is still the same
As the first fiat that produc'd our frame.
All faiths beside, or did by arms ascend ;
Or sense indulg'd has made mankind their friend :
This only doctrine does our lusts oppose :
Laid by Nature's soil, in which it grows ;
Cross to our interests, curbing sense and sin ;
Oppress'd without, and undermin'd within,
It thrives through pain ; its own tormentors tires ;
And with a stubborn patience still aspires.
To what can reason such effects assign
Transcending nature, but to laws divine ;
Which in that sacred volume are contain'd ;
Insistent, clear, and for that use ordain'd ?

But stay : the deist here will urge anew,
No supernatural worship can be true :
Because a general law is that alone
Which must to all, and every where, be known :
A style so large as not this book can claim,
Nor ought that bears reveal'd religion's name.
Tis said the sound of a Messiah's birth
Is gone through all the habitable Earth :
But still that text must be confin'd alone
To what was then inhabited and known :
Had what provision could from thence accrue
To Indian souls, and worlds discover'd new ?
In other parts it helps, that, ages past,
The Scriptures there were known, and were embrac'd,
Till sin spread once again the shades of night :
What's that to these, who never saw the light ?

Of all objections this indeed is chief
To startle reason, stagger frail belief :
Be grant, 'tis true, that Heaven from human sense
Has hid the secret paths of providence :
But boundless wisdom, boundless mercy, may
Indulge ev'n for those bewilder'd souls, a way :
From his nature foes may pity claim,
Much more may strangers who ne'er heard his name.
And though no name be for salvation known,
Not that of his eternal Son's alone ;
Who knows how far transcending goodness can Attend the merits of that Son to man ?
Who knows what reasons may his mercy lead ;
Whom ignorance invincible may plead ?
Not only charity bids hope the best,
But more the great apostle has exprest :
That if the Gentiles, whom no law inspir'd,
By nature did what was by law requir'd ;
Why, who the written rule had never known,
Were to themselves both rule and law alone :
By nature's plain indictment they shall plead ;
And by their conscience be condemn'd or freed."
Not righteous doom ! because a rule reveal'd
None to those from whom it was conceal'd.
Even those who follow'd reason's dictates right ;
R'd up, and lifted high their natural light ;
Whom Socrates may see their Maker's face,
And a thousand rubric-martyrs want a place.
Nor does it baulk my charity, to find
An Egyptian bishop of another mind :
Though his creed eternal truth contains,
How hard for man to doom to endless pains
Who believ'd not all his zeal requir'd ;
How can he first could prove he was inspir'd.

Then let us either think he meant to say
This faith, where publish'd, was the only way ;
Or else conclude, that, Arius to confute,
The good old man, too eager in dispute,
Flew high ; and as his Christian fury rose,
Damn'd all for heretics who durst oppose.

Thus far my charity this path has try'd ;
A much unskilful, but well-meaning guide : [bred
Yet what they are, ev'n these crude thoughts were
By reading that which better thou hast read.
Thy matchless author's work : which thou, my friend,
By well translating better dost commend :
Those youthful hours which, of thy equals most
In toys have squander'd, or in vice have lost,
Those hours hast thou to nobler use employ'd ;
And the severe delights of truth enjoy'd.
Witness this weighty book, in which appears
The crabbed toil of many thoughtful years,
Spent by the author, in the sifting care
Of rabbins old sophisticated ware
From gold divine ; which he who well can sort
May afterwards make algebra a sport.
A treasure, which if country-curates buy,
They Junius and Tremellius may defy :
Save pains in various readings, and translations ;
And without Hebrew make most learn'd quotations.
A work so full with various learning fraught,
So nicely ponder'd, yet so strongly wrought,
As Nature's height and Art's last hand requir'd :
As much as man could compass, uninspir'd.
Where we may see what errors have been made
Both in the copier's and translator's trade :
How Jewish, popish, interests have prevail'd,
And where infallibility has fail'd.

For some, who have his secret meaning guess'd,
Have found our author not too much a priest :
For fashion-sake he seems to have recourse
To pope, and councils, and tradition's force :
But he that old traditions could subdue,
Could not but find the weakness of the new :
If Scripture, though deriv'd from heavenly birth,
Has been but carelessly preserv'd on Earth ;
If God's own people, who of God before
Knew what we know, and had been promis'd more,
In fuller terms, of Heaven's assisting care,
And who did neither time nor study spare
To keep this book untainted, unperplexed,
Let in gross errors to corrupt the text,
Omitted paragraphs, embroil'd the sense,
With vain traditions stop the gaping fence,
Which every common hand pull'd up with ease :
What safety from such brushwood-helps as these ?
If written words from time are not secur'd,
How can we think have oral sounds endur'd ?
Which thus transmitted, if one mouth has fail'd,
Immortal lies on ages are intail'd :
And that some such have been, is prov'd too plain ;
If we consider interest, church, and gain.

O but, says one, tradition set aside,
Where can we hope for an unerring guide ?
For since th' original Scripture has been lost,
All copies disagreeing, maim'd the most,
Or christian faith can have no certain ground,
Or truth in church-tradition must be found.

Such an omniscient church we wish indeed ;
'Twere worth both Testaments ; cast in the creed :
But if this mother be a guide so sure,
As can all doubts resolve, all truth secure,
Then her infallibility, as well
Where copies are corrupt or lame, can tell ;

Restore lost canon with as little pains,
 As truly explicate what still remains :
 Which yet no council dare pretend to do ;
 Unless like Eadras they could write it new :
 Strange confidence still to interpret true,
 Yet not be sure that all they have explain'd
 Is in the blest original contain'd.
 More safe, and much more modest 'tis, to say
 God would not leave mankind without a way :
 And that the Scriptures, though not every where Free from corruption, or entire, or clear,
 Are uncorrupt, sufficient, clear, entire,
 In all things which our needful faith require.
 If others in the same glass better see,
 'Tis for themselves they look, but not for me :
 For my salvation must its doom receive,
 Not from what others, but what I believe.

Must all tradition then be set aside ?
 This to affirm, were ignorance or pride.
 Are there not many points, some needful sure
 To saving faith, that Scripture leaves obscure ?
 Which every sect will wrest a several way,
 For what one sect interprets, all sects may :
 We hold, and say we prove from Scripture plain,
 That Christ is God ; the bold Socinian
 From the same Scripture urges he's but man.
 Now what appeal can end th' important suit ?
 Both parts talk loudly, but the rule is mute.

Shall I speak plain, and in a nation free
 Assume an honest layman's liberty ?
 I think, according to my little skill,
 To my own mother-church submitting still,
 That many have been sav'd, and many may,
 Who never heard this question brought in play
 Th' unletter'd Christian, who believes in gross,
 Plods on to Heaven ; and ne'er is at a loss :
 For the straight-gate would be made straighter yet,
 Were none admitted there but men of wit.
 The few by Nature form'd, with learning fraught,
 Born to instruct, as others to be taught,
 Must study well the sacred page ; and see
 Which doctrine, this, or that, does best agree
 With the whole tenour of the work divine :
 And plainliest points to Heaven's reveal'd design ;
 Which exposition flows from genuine sense,
 And which is forc'd by wit and eloquence.
 Not that tradition's parts are useless here :
 When general, old, disinterested, clear :
 That ancient fathers thus expound the page,
 Gives truth the reverend majesty of age :
 Confirms its force by hiding every test ;
 For best authorities, next rules, are best.
 And still the nearer to the spring we go
 More limpid, more unsoil'd, the waters flow,
 Thus first traditions were a proof alone ;
 Could we be certain such they were, so known :
 But since some flaws in long descent may be,
 They make not truth, but probability.
 Ev'n Arius and Pelagius durst provoke
 To what the centuries preceding spoke.
 Such difference is there in an oft-told tale :
 But truth by its own sinews will prevail.
 Tradition written therefore more commends
 Authority, than what from voice descends :
 And this, as perfect as its kind can be,
 Rolls down to us the sacred history :
 Which, from the universal church receiv'd,
 Is try'd, and after, for itself believ'd.

The partial papists would infer from hence
 Their church, in last resort, should judge the sense.

But first they would assume, with wondrous art,
 Themselves to be the whole, who are but part
 Of that vast frame the church ; yet grant they were
 The handers-down, can they from thence infer
 A right t' interpret ? or would they alone,
 Who brought the present, claim it for their own ?
 The book's a common largess to mankind ;
 Not more for them than every man design'd :
 The welcome news is in the letter found ;
 The carrier's not commission'd to expound.
 It speaks itself, and what it does contain,
 In all things needful to be known is plain.

In times o'ergrown with rust and ignorance,
 A gainful trade their clergy did advance :
 When want of learning kept the laymen low,
 And none but priests were authoris'd to know :
 When what small knowledge was, in them did dwell ;
 And he a god who could but read and spell ;
 Then mother-church did mightily prevail :
 She parcel'd out the Bible by retail :
 But still expounded what she sold or gave ;
 To keep it in her power to damn and save :
 Scripture was scarce, and, as the market went,
 Poor laymen took salvation on content ;
 As needy men take money good or bad :
 God's word they had not, but the priest's they had.
 Yet whate'er false conveyances they made,
 The lawyer still was certain to be paid.
 In those dark times they learn'd their knack so well,
 That by long use they grew infallible :
 At last a knowing age began t' inquire
 If they the book, or that did them inspire :
 And, making narrower search, they found, though late,

That what they thought the priest's, was their estate :
 Taught by the will produc'd, the written word,
 How long they had been cheated on record.
 Then every man who saw the title fair,
 Claim'd a child's part, and put in for a share :
 Consulted soberly his private good ;
 And sav'd himself as cheap as e'er he could.

'Tis true, my friend, and far be flattery hence,
 This good had full as bad a consequence :
 The book thus put in every vulgar hand,
 Which each presum'd he best could understand,
 The common rule was made the common prey ;
 And at the mercy of the rabble lay.
 The tender page with horny fists was gall'd ;
 And he was gifted most that loudest bawl'd :
 The spirit gave the doctoral degree :
 And every member of a company
 Was of his trade, and of the Bible free.
 Plain truths enough for needful use they found ;
 But men would still be itching to expound :
 Each was ambitious of th' obscurest place,
 No measure ta'en from knowledge, all from grace.
 Study and pains were now no more their care ;
 Texts were explain'd by fasting and by prayer :
 This was the fruit the private spirit brought ;
 Occasion'd by great zeal and little thought.
 While crowds unlearn'd, with rude devotion war'd
 About the sacred viands buz and swarm.
 The fly-blown text creates a crawling brood ;
 And turns to maggots what was meant for food.
 A thousand daily sects rise up and die ;
 A thousand more the perish'd race supply :
 So all we make of Heaven's discover'd will,
 Is, not to have it, or to use it ill.
 The danger's much the same ; on several shelves
 If others wreck us, or we wreck ourselves.

What then remains, but, waving each extreme,
 The tides of ignorance and pride to stem?
 Neither so rich a treasure to forego;
 Nor proudly seek beyond our power to know:
 Faith is not built on disquisitions vain;
 The things we must believe are few and plain:
 But, since men will believe more than they need,
 And every man will make himself a creed,
 In doubtful questions 'tis the safest way
 To learn what unsuspected ancients say:
 For 'tis not likely we should higher soar
 In search of Heaven, than all the church before:
 Nor can we be deceiv'd, unless we see
 The Scripture and the fathers disagree.
 After all they stand suspected still,
 For no man's faith depends upon his will;
 In some relief, that points not clearly known
 Without much hazard may be let alone:
 And, after hearing what our church can say,
 Still our reason runs another way,
 But private reason 'tis more just to curb,
 Than by disputes, the public peace disturb,
 For points obscure are of small use to learn:
 But common quiet is mankind's concern.
 Thus have I made my own opinions clear:
 At neither praise expect, nor censure fear:
 And this unpolish'd rugged verse I chose;
 The fittest for discourse, and nearest prose:
 For while from sacred truth I do not swerve,
 As Sternhold's or Tom Shadwell's rhymes will serve.

TO SIR GODFREY KNELLER,

PRINCIPAL PAINTER TO HIS MAJESTY.

When I beheld the fairest of her kind,
 And still the sweet idea charms my mind:
 For she was dumb; for Nature gaz'd so long,
 Less'd with her work, that she forgot her tongue;
 But, smiling, said, "She still shall gain the prize;
 Only have transferr'd it to her eyes."
 What are thy pictures, Kneller: such thy skill,
 That Nature seems obedient to thy will;
 Comes out, and meets thy pencil in the draught;
 And there, and wants but words to speak her
 thought.
 At least thy pictures look a voice; and we
 Imagine sounds, deceiv'd to that degree,
 We think 'tis somewhat more than just to see.
 Shadows are but privations of the light;
 And, when we walk, they shoot before the sight;
 With us approach, retire, arise, and fall;
 Leaving themselves, and yet expressing all.
 Such are thy pieces, imitating life
 So near, they almost conquer in the strife;
 And from their animated canvass came,
 Struggling souls, and loosen'd from the frame.
 Prometheus, were he here, would cast away
 His Adam, and refuse a soul to clay;
 And either would thy noble work inspire,
 Or think it warm enough without his fire.
 But vulgar hands may vulgar likeness raise;
 This is the least attendant on thy praise:
 From hence the rudiments of art began;
 The coal, or chalk, first imitated man:
 Perhaps the shadow, taken on a wall,
 Gave outlines to the rude original;

Ere canvass yet was strain'd, before the grace
 Of blended colours found their use and place,
 Or cypress tablets first receiv'd a face.

By slow degrees the godlike art advanc'd;
 As man grew polish'd, picture was enhanc'd:
 Greece added posture, shade, and perspective;
 And then the mimic piece began to live.
 Yet perspective was lame, no distance true,
 But all came forward in one common view;
 No point of light was known, no bounds of art;
 When light was there, it knew not to depart,
 But glaring on remoter objects play'd;
 Not languish'd, and insensibly decay'd.

Rome rais'd not art, but barely kept alive,
 And with old Greece unequally did strive:
 Till Goths and Vandals, a rude northern race,
 Did all the matchless monuments deface.
 Then all the Muses in one ruin lie,
 And rhyme began to enervate poetry.
 Thus, in a stupid military state,
 The pen and pencil find an equal fate.
 Flat faces, such as would disgrace a screen,
 Such as in Bantam's embassy were seen.
 Unrais'd, unrounded, were the rude delight
 Of brutal nations, only born to fight.
 Long time the sister arts, in iron sleep,
 A heavy sabbath did supinely keep:
 At length, in Raphael's age, at once they rise,
 Stretch all their limbs, and open all their eyes.
 Thence rose the Roman, and the Lombard line;
 One colour'd best, and one did best design.
 Raphael's, like Homer's, was the nobler part,
 But Titian's painting look'd like Virgil's art.

Thy genius gives thee both; where true design,
 Postures unforc'd, and lively colours join.
 Likeness is ever there; but still the best,
 Like proper thoughts in lofty language drest;
 Where light, to shades descending, plays, not strives,
 Dies by degrees, and by degrees revives.
 Of various parts a perfect whole is wrought:
 Thy pictures think, and we divine their thought.
 Shakspeare, thy gift, I place before my sight:
 With awe, I ask his blessing ere I write;
 With reverence look on his majestic face;
 Proud to be less, but of his godlike race,
 His soul inspires me, while thy praise I write,
 And I, like Teucer, under Ajax fight. [breast
 Bids thee, through me, be bold; with dauntless
 Contemn the bad, and emulate the best.
 Like his, thy critics, in th' attempt are lost:
 When most they rail, know then, they envy most.
 In vain they snarl aloof; a noisy crowd,
 Like women's anger, impotent and loud.
 While they their barren industry deplore
 Pass on secure, and mind the goal before.
 Old as she is, my Muse shall march behind,
 Bear off the blast, and intercept the wind.
 Our arts are sisters, though not twins in birth:
 For hymns were sung in Eden's happy earth:
 But oh, the painter Muse, though last in place,
 Has seiz'd the blessing first, like Jacob's race.
 Apelles' art an Alexander found;
 And Raphael did with Leo's gold abound;
 But Homer was with barren laurel crown'd.
 Thou hadst thy Charles a while, and so had I;
 But pass we that displeasing image by.
 Rich in thyself, and of thyself divine;
 All pilgrims come and offer at thy shrine.
 A graceful truth thy pencil can command;
 The fair themselves go mended from thy hand.

Likeness appears in every lineament ;
 But likeness in thy work is eloquent.
 Though Nature there her true resemblance bears,
 A nobler beauty in thy piece appears.
 So warm thy work, so glows the generous frame,
 Flesh looks less living in the lovely dame.
 Thou paint'st as we describe, improving still,
 When on wild Nature we ingraft our skill ;
 But not creating beauties at our will.

But poets are confin'd in narrower space,
 To speak the language of their native place :
 The painter widely stretches his command ;
 Thy pencil speaks the tongue of every land.
 From hence, my friend, all climates are your own,
 Nor can you forfeit, for you hold of none.
 All nations all immunities will give
 To make you theirs, where'er you please to live ;
 And not seven cities, but the world would strive.

Sure some propitious planet then did smile,
 When first you were conducted to this isle :
 Our genius brought you here, t' enlarge our fame ;
 For your good stars are every where the same.
 Thy matchless hand, of every region free,
 Adopts our climate, not our climate thee.

Great Rome and Venice early did impart
 To thee th' examples of their wondrous art.
 Those masters then, but seen, not understood,
 With generous emulation fir'd thy blood :
 For what in Nature's dawn the child admir'd,
 The youth endeavour'd, and the man acquir'd.

If yet thou hast not reach'd their high degree,
 'Tis only wanting to this age, not thee.
 Thy genius, bounded by the times, like mine,
 Drudges on petty draughts, nor dare design
 A more exalted work, and more divine.
 For what a song, or senseless opera,
 Is to the living labour of a play ;
 Or what a play to Virgil's work would be,
 Such is a single piece to history.

But we, who life bestow, ourselves must live :
 Kings cannot reign, unless their subjects give :
 And they, who pay the taxes, bear the rule :
 Thus, thou, sometimes, art forc'd to draw a fool :
 But so his follies in thy posture sink,
 The senseless idiot seems at last to think. [vain,

Good Heaven ! that sots and knaves should be so
 To wish their vile resemblance may remain !
 And stand recorded, at their own request
 To future days, a libel or a jest !

Else should we see your noble pencil trace
 Our unities of action, time, and place :
 A whole compos'd of parts, and those the best,
 With every various character exprest ;
 Heroes at large, and at a nearer view :
 Less, and at distance, an ignobler crew.
 While all the figures in one action join,
 As tending to complete the main design.

More cannot be by mortal art exprest ;
 But venerable age shall add the rest,
 For Time shall with his ready pencil stand ;
 Retouch your figures with his ripening hand ;
 Mellow your colours, and imbrown the teint ;
 Add every grace, which Time alone can grant ;
 To future ages shall your fame convey,
 And give more beauties than he takes away.

THE COCK AND THE FOX :

OR THE TALE OF THE NUN'S PRIEST.

THERE liv'd, as authors tell, in days of yore,
 A widow, somewhat old, and very poor :
 Deep in her cell her cottage lonely stood,
 Well thatch'd, and under covert of a wood.
 This dowager, on whom my tale I found,
 Since last she laid her husband in the ground,
 A simple sober life, in patience, led,
 And had but just enough to buy her bread :
 But huswifing the little Heaven had lent,
 She duly paid a groat for quarter rent ;
 And pinch'd her belly, with her daughters two,
 To bring the year about with much ado.

The cattle in her homestead were three sows,
 An ewe call'd Mallie, and three brindled cows.
 Her parlour-window stuck with herbs around,
 Of savoury smell ; and rushes strew'd the ground.
 A maple-dresser in her hall she had,
 On which full many a slender meal she made ;
 For no delicious morsel pass'd her throat ;
 According to her cloth she cut her coat :
 No poignant sauce she knew, nor costly treat,
 Her hunger gave a relish to her meat :
 A sparing diet did her health assure ;
 Or, sick, a pepper posset was her cure.
 Before the day was done, her work she sped,
 And never went by candle-light to bed :
 With exercise she sweat ill humours out,
 Her dancing was not hinder'd by the gout.
 Her poverty was glad ; her heart content ;
 Nor knew she what the spleen or vapours meant.

Of wine she never tasted through the year,
 But white and black was all her homely cheer :
 Brown bread, and milk, (but first she skimm'd her bowls)

And rashers of sing'd bacon on the coals.
 On holy days an egg, or two at most ;
 But her ambition never reach'd to roast.

A yard she had with pales enclos'd about,
 Some high, some low and a dry ditch without.
 Within this homestead, liv'd, without a peer,
 For crowing loud, the noble Chanticleer ;
 So hight her cock, whose singing did surpass
 The merry notes of organs at the mass.
 More certain was the crowing of the cock
 To number hours, than is an abbey-clock ;
 And sooner than the matin-bell was rung,
 He clapp'd his wings upon his roost, and sung :
 For when degrees fifteen ascended right,
 By sure instinct he knew 'twas one at night.
 High was his comb, and coral-red withal,
 In dents embattled like a castle wall ;
 His bill was raven-black, and shone like jet ;
 Blue were his legs, and orient were his feet :
 White were his nails, like silver to behold,
 His body glittering like the burnish'd gold.
 This gentle cock, for solace of his life,
 Six misses had, besides his lawful wife ;
 Scandal, that spares no king, though ne'er so good
 Says, they were all of his own flesh and blood,
 His sisters both by sire and mother's side ;
 And sure their likeness show'd them near ally'd.
 But make the worst, the monarch did no more,
 Than all the Ptolemys had done before :
 When incest is for interest of a nation,
 'Tis made no sin by holy dispensation.
 Some lines have been maintain'd by this alone,
 Which by their common ugliness are known.

But passing this, as from our tale apart,
 Dame Parlet was the sovereign of his heart :
 Ardent in love, outrageous in his play,
 He feather'd her a hundred times a day :
 And she, that was not only passing fair,
 But was withal discreet, and debonair,
 Revolv'd the passive doctrine to fulfil,
 Though loth ; and let him work his wicked will :
 At board and bed was affable and kind,
 According as their marriage vow did bind,
 And as the church's precept had enjoin'd :
 Ev'n since she was a se'nnight old, they say,
 Was chaste and humble to her dying day,
 Nor chick nor hen was known to disobey.

By this her husband's heart she did obtain ;
 That cannot beauty, join'd with virtue, gain !
 He was his only joy, and he her pride,
 He, when he walk'd, went pecking by his side ;
 Turning up the ground, he sprung a corn,
 He tribute in his bill to her was borne.

At, oh ! what joy it was to hear him sing
 In summer, when the day began to spring,
 Stretching his neck, and warbling in his throat,
 Solus cum sola," then was all his note.

As in the days of yore, the birds of parts [arts.
 Were bred to speak, and sing, and learn the liberal
 It happ'd, that, perching on the parlour-beam
 Amidst his wives, he had a deadly dream,
 At the dawn ; and sigh'd, and groan'd so fast,
 Every breath he drew would be his last.

Dame Parlet, ever nearest to his side,
 Heard all his piteous moan, and how he cry'd
 For help from gods and men : and sore aghast
 He peck'd and pull'd, and waken'd him at last.
 " Dear heart," said she, " for love of Heaven, declare
 Your pain, and make me partner of your care.

He groan, sir, ever since the morning-light,
 Something had disturb'd your noble spright."
 " And, madam, well I might," said Chanticleer,
 " Never was shrovetide cock in such a fear ;
 I'd still I run all over in a sweat,
 My princely senses not recover'd yet.

Such a dream I had of dire portent,
 As much I fear my body will be shent :
 I shall have wars and woeful strife,
 And in a loathsome dungeon end my life.

Now, dame, I dreamt within my troubled breast,
 As in our yard I saw a murderous beast,
 As on my body would have made arrest.
 With waking eyes I ne'er beheld his fellow ;
 A colour was betwixt a red and yellow :
 He had his tail, and both his pricking ears
 Were black, and much unlike his other hairs :
 He rest, in shape a bragle's whelp throughout,
 With broader forehead, and a sharper snout :
 As in his front were sunk his glowing eyes,
 As yet methinks I see him with surprise.

Stretch out your hand, I drop with clammy sweat,
 And lay it to my heart, and feel it beat."
 " Now fy for shame," quoth she, " by Heaven
 Above,

How hast for ever lost thy lady's love ;
 A woman can endure a recreant knight,
 But must be bold by day, and free by night :
 If not she desires a husband or a friend,
 Who can our honour and his own defend ;
 He, hardy, secret, liberal of his purse :
 His soul is nauseous, but a coward worse :
 A bragging coscomb, yet no baffled knight,
 How dar'st thou talk of love, and dar'st not fight ?

How dar'st thou tell thy dame thou art affear'd ?
 Hast thou no manly heart, and hast a beard ?

" If aught from fearful dreams may be divin'd,
 They signify a cock of dunghill kind.
 All dreams, as in old Galen I have read,
 Are from repletion and complexion bred ;
 From rising fumes of indigested food,
 And noxious humours that infect the blood :
 And sure, my lord, if I can read aright,
 These foolish fancies you have had to-night
 Are certain symptoms (in the canting style)
 Of boiling choler, and abounding bile ;
 This yellow gall, that in your stomach floats,
 Engenders all these visionary thoughts.
 When choler overflows, then dreams are bred
 Of flames, and all the family of red ;
 Red dragons, and red beasts in sleep we view,
 For humours are distinguish'd by their hue.
 From hence we dream of wars and warlike things,
 And wasps and hornets with their double wings.
 Choler adust congeals our blood with fear,
 Then black bulls toss us, and black devils tear.
 In sanguine airy dreams aloft we bound,
 With rheums oppress'd we sink, in rivers drown'd.

" More I could say, but thus conclude my theme,
 The dominating humour makes the dream.
 Cato was in his time accounted wise,
 And he condemns them all for empty lies.
 Take my advice, and when we fly to ground,
 With laxatives preserve your body sound,
 And purge the peccant humours that abound.
 I should be loth to lay you on a bier ;
 And though there lives no 'pothecary near,
 I dare for once prescribe for your disease,
 And save long bills, and a damn'd doctor's fees.

" Two sovereign herbs, which I by practice know,
 And both at hand (for in our yard they grow) ;
 On peril of my soul shall rid you wholly
 Of yellow choler, and of melancholy :
 You must both purge and vomit ; but obey,
 And for the love of Heaven make no delay.
 Since hot and dry in your complexion join,
 Beware the Sun when in a vernal sign ;
 For when he mounts exalted in the Ram,
 If then he finds your body in a flame,
 Replete with choler, I dare lay a groat,
 A tertian ague is at least your lot.
 Perhaps a fever (which the gods forefend)
 May bring your youth to some untimely end :
 And therefore, sir, as you desire to live,
 A day or two before your laxative,
 Take just three worms, nor under nor above,
 Because the gods unequal numbers love.
 These digestives prepare you for your purge ;
 Of fumetery, centaury, and spurge,
 And of ground-ivy add a leaf or two,
 All which within our yard or garden grow.
 Eat these, and be, my lord, of better cheer ;
 Your father's son was never born to fear."

" Madam," quoth he, " grammercy for your care,
 But Cato, whom you quoted, you may spare :
 'Tis true, a wise and worthy man he seems,
 And (as you say) gave no belief to dreams :
 But other men of more authority,
 And, by th' immortal powers, as wise as he,
 Maintain, with sounder sense, that dreams forebode ;
 For Homer plainly says they come from God.
 Nor Cato said it : but some modern fool
 Impos'd in Cato's name on boys at school.

" Believe me, madam, morning dreams forebode
Th' event of things, and future weal or woe :
Some truths are not by reason to be try'd,
But we have sure experience for our guide.
An ancient author, equal with the best,
Relates this tale of dreams among the rest.

" Two friends or brothers, with devout intent,
On some far pilgrimage together went.
It happen'd so, that, when the Sun was down,
They just arriv'd by twilight at a town :
That day had been the baiting of a bull,
'Twas at a feast, and every inn so full,
That no void room in chamber, or on ground,
And but one sorry bed was to be found :
And that so little it would hold but one,
Though till this hour they never lay alone.

" So were they forc'd to part ; one stay'd behind,
His fellow sought what lodging he could find :
At last he found a stall where oxen stood,
And that he rather chose than lie abroad.
'Twas in a farther yard without a door ;
But, for his ease, well litter'd was the floor.

" His fellow, who the narrow bed had kept,
Was weary, and without a rocker slept :
Supine he snor'd ; but in the dead of night,
He dreamt his friend appear'd before his sight,
Who, with a ghastly look and doleful cry,
Said, ' Help me, brother, or this night I die :
Arise, and help, before all help be vain,
Or in an ox's stall I shall be slain.'

" Rous'd from his rest, he waken'd in a start,
Shivering with horror, and with aching heart,
At length to cure himself by reason tries ;
'Tis but a dream, and what are dreams but lies ?
So thinking, chang'd his side, and clos'd his eyes.
His dream returns ; his friend appears again :
' The murderers come, now help, or I am slain :'
'Twas but a vision still, and visions are but vain.
He dreamt the third : but now his friend appear'd
Pale, naked, pierc'd with wounds, with blood besmear'd :

Thrice warn'd, ' Awake,' said he ; ' relief is late,
The deed is done ; but thou revenge my fate :
Tardy of aid, unseal thy heavy eyes,
Awake, and with the dawning day arise :
Take to the western gate thy ready way,
For by that passage they my corpse convey :
My corpse is in a tumbril laid, among
The filth and ordure, and enclos'd with dung :
That cart arrest, and raise a common cry ;
For sacred hunger of my gold, I die :
Then show'd his grisly wound : and last he drew
A piteous sigh, and took a long adieu.'

" The frightened friend arose by break of day,
And found the stall where late his fellow lay.
Then of his impious host inquiring more,
Was answer'd that his guest was gone before :
' Muttering, he went,' said he, ' by morning light,
And much complain'd of his ill rest by night.'
This rais'd suspicion in the pilgrim's mind ;
Because all hosts are of an evil kind,
And oft to share the spoils with robbers join'd.

" His dream confirm'd his thought : with troubled look
Straight to the western gate his way he took ;
There, as his dream foretold, a cart he found,
That carry'd compost forth to dung the ground.
This when the pilgrim saw, he stretch'd his throat,
And cry'd out murder with a yelling note.
' My murder'd fellow in this cart lies dead,
Vengeance and justice on the villain's head.

Ye magistrates, who sacred laws dispense,
On you I call, to punish this offence.'

" The word thus given, within a little space,
The mob came roaring out, and throng'd the place.
All in a trice they cast the cart to the ground,
And in the dung the murder'd body found ;
Though breathless, warm, and reeking from the wound.

Good Heaven, whose darling attribute we find
Is boundless grace, and mercy to mankind,
Abhors the cruel ; and the deeds of night
By wondrous ways reveals in open light :
Murder may pass unpunish'd for a time,
But tardy Justice will o'ertake the crime.
And oft a speedier pain the guilty feels :
The hue and cry of Heaven pursues him at the heels :
Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place :
Carter and host confronted face to face.
Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they distend their tortur'd joints :
So was confession forc'd, th' offence was known,
And public justice on th' offenders done.

" Here may you see that visions are to dread ;
And in the page that follows this, I read
Of two young merchants, whom the hope of gain
Induc'd in partnership to cross the main.
Waiting till willing winds their sails supply'd,
Within a trading town they long abide,
Full fairly situate on a haven's side ;
One evening it befell, that looking out,
The wind they long had wish'd was come about :
Well pleas'd they went to rest ; and if the gale
Till morn continued, both resolv'd to sail.
But as together in a bed they lay,
The younger had a dream at break of day.
A man he thought stood frowning at his side :
Who warn'd him for his safety to provide,
Nor put to sea, but safe on shore abide.
' I come, thy genius, to command thy stay ;
Trust not the winds, for fatal is the day,
And Death unhop'd attends the watery way.'

" The vision said : and vanish'd from his sight
The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fright :
Then pull'd his drowsy neighbour, and declar'd
What in his slumber he had seen and heard.
His friend smil'd scornful, and with proud contempt
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt.
' Stay, who will stay : for me no fears restrain,
Who follow Mercury the god of gain ;
Let each man do as to his fancy seems,
I wait not, I, till you have better dreams.
Dreams are but interludes which Fancy makes
When monarch Reason sleeps ; this mimic wakes
Compounds a medley of disjointed things,
A mob of coblers, and a court of kings :
Light fumes are merry, grosser fumes are sad :
Both are the reasonable soul run mad :
And many monstrous forms in sleep we see,
That neither were, nor are, nor e'er can be.
Sometimes forgotten things long cast behind
Rush forward in the brain, and come to mind.
The nurse's legends are for truths receiv'd,
And the man dreams but what the boy believ'd.
Sometimes we but rehearse a former play,
The night restores our actions done by day ;
As hounds in sleep will open for their prey.
In short, the farce of dreams is of a piece,
Chimeras all ; and more absurd, or less :
You, who believe in tales, abide alone ;
Whate'er I get this voyage is my own.'

" Thus while he spoke, he heard the shouting crew
That call'd aboard, and took his last adieu.
The vessel went before a merry gale,
And for quick passage put on every sail :
But when least fear'd, and ev'n in open day,
The mischief overtook her in the way :
Whether she sprung a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overset with wind,
Or that some rock below her bottom rent ;
But down at once with all her crew she went :
Her fellow ships from far her loss descri'd :
But only she was sunk, and all were safe beside.

" By this example you are taught again,
That dreams and visions are not always vain :
But if, dear Partlet, you are still in doubt,
Another tale shall make the former out.

" Kenelm the son of Kenulph, Mercia's king,
Whose holy life the legends loudly sing,
Warn'd in a dream, his murder did foretell
From point to point as after it befell ;
All circumstances to his nurse he told
A wonder from a child of seven years old) :
The dream with horror heard, the good old wife
From treason counsel'd him to guard his life ;
But close to keep the secret in his mind,
For a boy's vision small belief would find.
The pious child, by promise bound, obey'd,
For was the fatal murder long delay'd :
By Quenda slain, he fell before his time,
Made a young martyr by his sister's crime.
The tale is told by venerable Bede,
Which at your better leisure you may read.

" Macrobius too relates the vision sent
To the great Scipio, with the fam'd event :
Predictions makes, but after makes replies,
And adds, that dreams are often prophesies.

" Of Daniel you may read in holy writ,
How, when the king his vision did forget,
Word for word the wondrous dream repeat.
At least of patriarch Joseph understand,
How by a dream enslav'd th' Egyptian land,
The years of plenty and of dearth foretold,
Then, for their bread, their liberty they sold.
Nor must th' exalted butler be forgot,
Nor he whose dream presag'd his hanging lot.

" And did not Croesus the same death foresee,
Warn'd in his vision on a lofty tree ?
The wife of Hector, in his utmost pride,
Warn'd of his death the night before he dy'd ;
Till was he warn'd from battle to refrain,
And men to death decreed are warn'd in vain :
He saw the dream, and by his fatal foe was slain.

" Much more I know, which I forbear to speak,
Nor see the ruddy day begins to break ;
But this suffice, that plainly I foresee
My dream was bad, and bodes adversity :
I neither pills nor laxatives I like,
They only serve to make the well-man sick :
These his gain the sharp physician makes,
And often gives a purge, but seldom takes :
They not correct, but poison all the blood,
And ne'er did any but the doctors good :
My tribe, trade, trinkets, I defy them all,
With every work of 'pothecary's hall.
These melancholy matters I forbear :
But let me tell thee, Partlet mine, and swear,
That when I view the beauties of thy face,
I fear not death, nor dangers, nor disgrace :
May my soul have bliss, as, when I spy
The scarlet red about thy partridge eye,

While thou art constant to thy own true knight,
While thou art mine, and I am thy delight,
All sorrows at thy presence take their flight.
For true it is, as in principio,
Mulier est hominis confusio.
Madam, the meaning of this Latin is,
That woman is to man his sovereign bliss.
For when by night I feel your tender side,
Though for the narrow perch I cannot ride,
Yet I have such a solace in my mind,
That all my boding cares are cast behind ;
And ev'n already I forget my dream :"
He said, and downward flew from off the beam.
For day-light now began apace to spring,
The thrush to whistle, and the lark to sing.
Then crowing clapp'd his wings, th' appointed call,
To chuck his wives together in the hall.

By this the widow had unbarr'd the door,
And Chanticleer went strutting out before,
With royal courage, and with heart so light,
As show'd he scorn'd the visions of the night.
Now roaming in the yard he spurn'd the ground,
And gave to Partlet the first grain he found.
Then often feather'd her with wanton play,
And trod her twenty times ere prime of day :
And took by turns and gave so much delight,
Her sisters pin'd with envy at the sight.
He chuck'd again, when other corns he found,
And scarcely deign'd to set a foot to ground ;
But swagger'd like a lord about his hall,
And his seven wives came running at his call.

'Twas now the month in which the world began
(If March beheld the first created man) :
And since the vernal equinox, the Sun,
In Aries, twelve degrees, or more, had run ;
When casting up his eyes against the light,
Both month, and day, and hour, he measur'd right,
And told more truly than th' Ephemeris :
For Art may err, but Nature cannot miss.

Thus numbering times and seasons in his breast,
His second crowing the third hour confess'd.
Then turning, said to Partlet, " See, my dear,
How lavish Nature has adorn'd the year ;
How the pale primrose and blue violet spring,
And birds essay their throats, disus'd to sing :
All these are ours ; and I with pleasure see
Man strutting on two legs, and aping me :
An unfledg'd creature, of a lumpish frame,
Endow'd with fewer particles of flame :
Our dames sit scouring o'er a kitchen fire,
I draw fresh air, and Nature's works admire :
And ev'n this day in more delight abound,
Than, since I was an egg, I ever found."

The time shall come when Chanticleer shall wish
His words unsaid, and hate his boasted bliss :
The crested bird shall by experience know,
Jove made not him his master-piece below ;
And learn the latter end of joy is woe.
The vessel of his bliss to dregs is run,
And Heaven will have him taste his other tun.
Ye wise, draw near, and hearken to my tale,
Which proves that oft the proud by flattery fall :
The legend is as true, I undertake,
As Tristran is, and Launcelot of the lake :
Which all our ladies in such reverence hold,
As if in book of martyrs it were told.

A fox, full-fraught with seeming sanctity,
That fear'd an oath, but, like the Devil, would lie ;
Who look'd like Lent, and had the holy leer,
And durst not sin before he said his prayer ;

This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,
Nor chew'd the flesh of lambs, but when he cou'd ;
Had pass'd three summers in the neighbouring
wood :

And musing long whom next to circumvent,
On Chanticleer his wicked fancy bent :
And in his high imagination cast,
By stratagem to gratify his taste.

The plot contriv'd, before the break of day,
Saint Reynard through the hedge had made his way ;
The pale was next, but proudly with a bound
He leapt the fence of the forbidden ground :
Yet, fearing to be seen, within a bed
Of coleworts he conceal'd his wily head ;
Then skulk'd till afternoon, and watch'd his time,
(As murderers use) to perpetrate his crime.

O hypocrite, ingenious to destroy,
O traitor, worse than Sinon was to Troy !
O vile subverter of the Gallic reign,
More false than Gano was to Charlemagne !
O Chanticleer, in an unhappy hour
Didst thou forsake the safety of thy bower :
Better for thee thou hadst believ'd thy dream,
And not that day descended from the beam !

But here the doctors eagerly dispute :
Some hold predestination absolute :
Some clerks maintain, that Heaven at first foresees,
And in the virtue of foresight decrees.
If this be so, then prescience binds the will,
And mortals are not free to good or ill :
For what he first foresaw, he must ordain,
Or its eternal prescience may be vain :
As bad for us as prescience had not been,
For first, or last, he's author of the sin.
And who says that, let the blaspheming man
Say worse ev'n of the Devil, if he can.
For how can that eternal Power be just
To punish man, who sins because he must ?
Or, how can he reward a virtuous deed,
Which is not done by us ; but first decreed ?

I cannot bolt this matter to the bran,
As Bradwardin and holy Austin can ;
If prescience can determine actions so
That we must do, because he did foreknow,
Or that, foreknowing, yet our choice is free,
Not forc'd to sin by strict necessity ;
This strict necessity they simple call,
Another sort there is conditional.
The first so binds the will, that things foreknown
By spontaneity, not choice, are done.
Thus galley-slaves tug willing at their oar,
Content to work, in prospect of the shore ;
But would not work at all if not constrain'd before.
That other does not liberty constrain,
But man may either act, or may refrain.
Heaven made us agents free to good or ill,
And forc'd it not, though he foresaw the will.
Freedom was first bestow'd on human race,
And prescience only held the second place.

If he could make such agents wholly free,
I not dispute, the point's too high for me ; [sound,
For Heaven's unfathom'd power what man can
Or put to his Omnipotence a bound ?
He made us to his image, all agree ;
That image is the soul, and that must be,
Or not the Maker's image, or be free.
But whether it were better man had been
By nature bound to good, not free to sin,
I wave, for fear of splitting on a rock.
The tale I tell is only of a cock,

Who had not run the hazard of his life,
Had he believ'd his dream, and not his wife :
For women, with a mischief to their kind,
Pervert, with bad advice, our better mind.
A woman's counsel brought us first to woe,
And made her man his Paradise forego,
Where at heart's ease he lived ; and might have been
As free from sorrow as he was from sin.
For what the devil had their sex to do,
That, born to folly, they presum'd to know,
And could not see the serpent in the grass ?
But I myself presume, and let it pass.

Silence in times of suffering is the best,
'Tis dangerous to disturb an hornet's nest.
In other authors you may find enough,
But all they say of dames is idle stuff.
Legends of lying wits together bound,
The Wife of Bath would throw them to the ground.
These are the words of Chanticleer, not mine,
I honour dames, and think their sex divine.

Now to continue what my tale begun ;
Lay madam Partlet basking in the Sun,
Breast-high in sand : her sisters, in a row,
The cock, that of his flesh was ever free,
Sung merrier than the mermaid in the sea :
And so befell, that as he cast his eye,
Among the coleworts, on a butterfly,
He saw false Reynard where he lay full low :
I need not swear he had no list to crow :
But cry'd, " Cock, cock !" and gave a sudden start
As sore dismay'd and frightened at his heart ;
For birds and beasts, inform'd by Nature, know
Kinds opposite to theirs, and fly their foe.
So Chanticleer, who never saw a fox,
Yet shunn'd him as a sailor shuns the rocks.

But the false loon, who could not work his will
By open force, employ'd his flattering skill ;
" I hope, my lord," said he, " I not offend ;
Are you afraid of me, that am your friend ?
I were a beast indeed to do you wrong,
I, who have lov'd and honour'd you so long :
Stay, gentle sir, nor take a false alarm,
For, on my soul, I never meant you harm.
I come no spy, nor as a traitor press,
To learn the secrets of your soft recess :
Far be from Reynard so profane a thought,
But by the sweetness of your voice was brought :
For, as I bid my beads, by chance I heard,
The song as of an angel in the yard ;
A song that would have charm'd th' infernal go
And banish'd horror from the dark abodes ;
Had Orpheus sung it in the nether sphere,
So much the hymn had pleas'd the tyrant's ear,
The wife had been detained, to keep the husband
there.

" My lord, your sire familiarly I knew,
A peer deserving such a son as you :
He, with your lady-mother (whom Heaven rest)
Has often grac'd my house, and been my guest :
To view his living features, does me good ;
For I am your poor neighbour in the wood ;
And in my cottage should be proud to see
The worthy heir of my friend's family.

" But since I speak of singing, let me say,
As with an upright heart I safely may, [grow
That, save yourself, there breathes not on
One like your father for a silver sound.
So sweetly would he wake the winter-day,
That matrons to the church mistook their way,
And thought they heard the merry organ play.

And he, to raise his voice with artful care,
 (What will not beaux attempt to please the fair?)
 On tiptoe stood to sing with greater strength,
 And stretch'd his comely neck at all the length;
 And while he strain'd his voice to pierce the skies,
 As saints in raptures use, would shut his eyes,
 That the sound striving through the narrow throat,
 His winking might avail to mend the note.
 By this, in song, he never had his peer,
 From sweet Cecilia down to Chanticleer;
 Not Maro's Muse, who sung the mighty man,
 Nor Pindar's heavenly lyre, nor Horace when a swan.
 Your ancestors proceed from race divine:
 From Brennus and Belinus is your line;
 Who gave to sovereign Rome such loud alarms,
 That ev'n the priests were not excus'd from arms.

"Besides, a famous monk of modern times
 Has left of cocks recorded in his rhymes,
 That of a parish-priest the son and heir,
 (When sons of priests were from the proverb clear,)
 Affronted once a cock of noble kind,
 And either lam'd his legs, or struck him blind;
 For which the clerk his father was disgrac'd,
 And in his benefice another plac'd.
 Now sing, my lord, if not for love of me,
 Yet for the sake of sweet saint Charity;
 Make hills and dales, and Earth and Heaven rejoice,
 And emulate your father's angel voice."

The cock was pleas'd to hear him speak so fair,
 And proud beside, as solar people are;
 Nor could the treason from the truth descry,
 So was he ravish'd with this flattery:
 So much the more, as, from a little elf,
 He had a high opinion of himself;
 Though sickly, slender, and not large of limb,
 Concluding all the world was made for him.

Ye princes, rais'd by poets to the gods,
 Had Alexander'd up in lying odes,
 Believe not every flattering knave's report,
 There's many a Reynard lurking in the court;
 Had he shall be receiv'd with more regard
 And listen'd to, than modest Truth is heard.
 This Chanticleer, of whom the story sings,
 Hood high upon his toes, and clapp'd his wings;
 Then stretch'd his neck, and wink'd with both his eyes,

Ambitious, as he sought th' Olympic prize.
 But while he pain'd himself to raise his note,
 The Reynard rush'd, and caught him by the throat.
 Then on his back he laid the precious load,
 And sought his wonted shelter of the wood;
 Swiftly he made his way, the mischief done,
 Of all unheeded, and pursu'd by none.
 Alas, what stay is there in human state,
 Or who can shun inevitable fate?

The doom was written, the decree was past,
 Ere the foundations of the world were cast!
 As Arius though the Sun exalted stood,
 As patron-planet to procure his good;
 Yet Saturn was his mortal foe, and he,
 As Libra rais'd, oppos'd the same degree:
 He rays both good and bad, of equal power,
 Each thwarting other made a mingled hour.

On Friday morn he dreamt this direful dream,
 Of loss to the worthy native, in his scheme!
 Ah, blissful Venus, goddess of delight,
 How could'st thou suffer thy devoted knight,
 In thy own day to fall by foe oppress'd,
 The wight of all the world who serv'd thee best?

Who, true to love, was all for recreation,
 And minded not the work of propagation.
 Gaufride, who could'st so well in rhyme complain
 The death of Richard with an arrow slain,
 Why had not I thy Muse, or thou my heart,
 To sing this heavy dirge with equal art!
 That I like thee on Friday might complain;
 For on that day was Cœur de Lion slain.

Not louder cries, when Ilium was in flames,
 Were sent to Heaven by woeful Trojan dames,
 When Pyrrhus toss'd on high his burnish'd blade,
 And offer'd Priam to his father's shade,
 Than for the cock the widow'd poultry made.
 Fair Partlet first, when he was borne from sight,
 With sovereign shrieks bewail'd her captive knight:
 Far louder than the Carthaginian wife,
 When Asdrubel, her husband, lost his life,
 When she beheld the smouldering flames ascend,
 And all the Punic glories at an end:
 Willing into the fires she plung'd her head,
 With greater ease than others seek their bed;
 Not more aghast the matrons of renown,
 When tyrant Nero burn'd th' imperial town,
 Shriek'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
 For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die.

Now to my story I return again:
 The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,
 This woeful cackling cry with horror heard,
 Of those distracted damsels in the yard;
 And, starting up, beheld the heavy sight,
 How Reynard to the forest took his flight,
 And cross his back, as in triumphant scorn,
 The hope and pillar of the house was borne.

"The fox, the wicked fox!" was all the cry;
 Out from his house ran every neighbour nigh:
 The vicar first, and after him the crew
 With forks and staves, the felon to pursue.
 Ran Coll our dog, and Talbot with the band;
 And Malkin, with her distaff in her hand;
 Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
 In panic horror of pursuing dogs;
 With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
 Poor swine, as if their pretty hearts would break.
 The shouts of men, the women in dismay,
 With shrieks augment the terror of the day;
 The ducks, that heard the proclamation cry'd,
 And fear'd a persecution might betide,
 Full twenty miles from town their voyage take,
 Obscure in rushes of the liquid lake.
 The geese fly o'er the barn; the bees in arms
 Drive headlong from their waxen cells in swarms.
 Jack Straw at London-stone, with all his rout,
 Struck not the city with so loud a shout;
 Not when with English hate they did pursue
 A Frenchman, or an unbelieving Jew;
 Not when the welkin rung with one and all;
 And echoes bounded back from Fox's hall: [fall.
 Earth seem'd to sink beneath, and Heaven above to
 With might and main they chac'd the murderous fox,

With brazen trumpets, and inflated box,
 To kindle Mars with military sounds,
 Nor wanted horns to inspire sagacious hounds.

But see, how Fortune can confound the wise,
 And, when they least expect it, turn the dice.
 The captive cock, who scarce could draw his breath,
 And lay within the very jaws of Death;
 Yet in this agony his fancy wrought,
 And Fear supply'd him with this happy thought:

"Your's is the prize, victorious prince," said he,
 "The vicar my defeat, and all the village see.
 Enjoy your friendly fortune while you may,
 And bid the churls that envy you the prey
 Call back their mungril curs, and cease their cry,
 See, fools, the shelter of the wood is nigh,
 And Chanticleer in your despite shall die,
 He shall be pluck'd and eaten to the bone."

"'Tis well advis'd, in faith it shall be done ;"
 This Reynard said : but, as the word he spoke,
 The prisoner with a spring from prison broke :
 Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
 And to the neighbouring maple wing'd his flight ;
 Whom when the traitor safe on tree beheld,
 He curs'd the gods, with shame and sorrow fill'd ;
 Shame for his folly, sorrow out of time,
 For plotting an unprofitable crime ;
 Yet, mastering both, th' artificer of lies
 Renews th' assault, and his last battery tries. [fend,

"Though I," said he, "did ne'er in thought of-
 How justly may my lord suspect his friend !
 Th' appearance is against me, I confess,
 Who seemingly have put you in distress :
 You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
 May think I broke all hospitable laws,
 To bear you from your palace-yard by might,
 And put your noble person in a fright :
 This, since you take it ill, I must repent,
 Though, Heaven can witness, with no bad intent :
 I practis'd it, to make you taste your cheer
 With double pleasure, first prepar'd by fear.
 So loyal subjects often seize their prince,
 Forc'd (for his good) to seeming violence,
 Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence.
 Descend ; so help me Jove as you shall find
 That Reynard comes of no dissembling kind."

"Nay," quoth the cock ; "but I beshrew us both,
 If I believe a saint upon his oath :
 An honest man may take a knave's advice,
 But idiots only may be cozen'd twice :
 Once warn'd is well bewar'd ; not flattering lies
 Shall sooth me more to sing with winking eyes
 And open mouth, for fear of catching flies.
 Who blindfold walks upon a river's brim,
 When he should see, has he deserv'd to swim ?"
 "Better, sir cock, let all contention cease, [peace."
 "Come down," said Reynard, "let us treat of
 "A peace with all my soul," said Chanticleer ;
 "But, with your favour, I will treat it here :
 And, lest the truce with treason should be mixt,
 'Tis my concern to have the tree betwixt."

THE MORAL.

In this plain fable you th' effect may see
 Of negligence, and fond credulity :
 And learn beside of flatterers to beware,
 Then most pernicious when they speak too fair.
 The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply ;
 The truth is moral, though the tale a lie.
 Who spoke in parables, I dare not say ;
 But sure he knew it was a pleasing way,
 Sound sense, by plain example, to convey ;
 And in a heathen author we may find,
 That pleasure with instruction should be join'd ;
 So take the corn, and leave the chaff behind.

THE FLOWER AND THE LEAF :

OR THE LADY IN THE ARBOUR.

A Vision.

Now, turning from the wintery signs, the Sun
 His course exalted through the Ram had run,
 And, whirling up the skies, his chariot drove Through Taurus and the lightsome realms of Love ;
 Where Venus from her orb descends in showers,
 To glad the ground, and paint the fields with flowers :

When first the tender blades of grass appear,
 And buds, that yet the blast of Eurus fear, [year
 Stand at the door of life, and doubt to clothe the Till gentle heat, and soft repeated rains,
 Make the green blood to dance within their veins
 Then, at their call embolden'd, out they come,
 And swell the germs, and burst the narrow room ;
 Broader and broader yet, their blooms display,
 Salute the welcome Sun, and entertain the day.
 Then from their breathing souls the sweets repair,
 To scent the skies, and purge th' unwholesome air :
 Joy spreads the heart, and, with a general song,
 Spring issues out, and leads the jolly months along.

In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,
 And sought in sleep to pass the night away,
 I turn'd my weary'd side, but still in vain,
 Though full of youthful health, and void of pain
 Cares I had none, to keep me from my rest,
 For Love had never enter'd in my breast ;
 I wanted nothing Fortune could supply,
 Nor did she slumber till that hour deny.
 I wonder'd then, but after found it true,
 Much joy had dry'd away the balmy dew :
 Seas would be pools, without the brushing air,
 To curl the waves : and sure some little care
 Should weary Nature so, to make her want repair.

When Chanticleer the second watch had sung,
 Scorning the scorner Sleep, from bed I sprung,
 And, dressing by the Moon, in loose array,
 Pass'd out in open air, preventing day,
 And sought a goodly grove, as fancy led my way.
 Straight as a line in beauteous order stood
 Of oaks unshorn a venerable wood ;
 Fresh was the grass beneath, and every tree
 At distance planted in a due degree,
 Their branching arms in air with equal space
 Stretch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace
 And the new leaves on every bough were seen.
 Some ruddy colour'd, some of lighter green.
 The painted birds, companions of the Spring,
 Hopping from spray to spray, were heard to sing.
 Both eyes and ears receiv'd a like delight,
 Enchanting music, and a charming sight.
 On Philomel I fix'd my whole desire ;
 And listen'd for the queen of all the quire ;
 Fain would I hear her heavenly voice to sing ;
 And wanted yet an omen to the spring.

Attending long in vain, I took the way,
 Which through a path but scarcely printed lay ;
 In narrow mazes oft it seem'd to meet,
 And look'd as lightly press'd by fairy feet.
 Wandering I walk'd alone, for still methought
 To some strange end so strange a path was wrought
 At last it led me where an arbour stood,
 The sacred receptacle of the wood : [grove
 This place unmark'd, though oft I walk'd
 In all my progress I had never seen :

and, seiz'd at once with wonder and delight,
 seiz'd all around me, new to the transporting sight.
 'Twas bench'd with turf, and goodly to be seen,
 the thick young grass arose in fresher green :
 the mound was newly made, no sight could pass
 betwixt the nice partitions of the grass ;
 the well-united sods so closely lay ;
 and all around the shades defended it from day :
 'twixt sycamores with eglantine were spread,
 a hedge about the sides, a covering over head.
 And so the fragrant brier was wove between,
 the sycamore and flowers were mix'd with green,
 that Nature seem'd to vary the delight ;
 and satisfy'd at once the smell and sight.
 The master workman of the bower was known brought fairy lands, and built for Oberon ;
 the twining leaves with such proportion drew,
 they rose by measure, and by rule they grew ;
 no mortal tongue can half the beauty tell :
 nor none but hands divine could work so well.
 Both roof and sides were like a parlour made,
 a soft recess, and a cool summer shade ;
 the hedge was set so thick, no foreign eye
 the persons plac'd within it could espy :
 but all that pass'd without with ease was seen,
 as if nor fence nor tree was plac'd between.
 'Twas border'd with a field ; and some was plain with grass, and some was sow'd with rising grain.
 But now the dew with spangles deck'd the ground)
 a sweeter spot of earth was never found.
 I look'd and look'd, and still with new delight ;
 why joy my soul, such pleasures fill'd my sight :
 And the fresh eglantine exhal'd a breath,
 whose odours were of power to raise from death.
 For sullen discontent, nor anxious care,
 ev'n though brought thither, could inhabit there :
 but thence they fled as from their mortal foe ;
 for this sweet place could only pleasure know.
 Thus as I mus'd, I cast aside my eye,
 and saw a medlar-tree was planted nigh.
 The spreading branches made a goodly show,
 and full of opening blooms was every bough :
 A goldfinch there I saw with gawdy pride
 Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side, full pecking as she pass'd ; and still she drew the sweets from every flower, and suck'd the dew :
 befic'd at length, she warbled in her throat,
 and tun'd her voice to many a merry note,
 but indistinct, and neither sweet nor clear,
 yet such as sooth'd my soul and pleas'd my ear.
 Her short performance was no sooner try'd,
 when she I sought, the nightingale reply'd :
 so sweet, so shrill, so variously she sung,
 that the grove echoed, and the valleys rung :
 And I so ravish'd with her heavenly note,
 I stood entranc'd, and had no room for thought,
 but, all o'erpower'd with ecstasy of bliss,
 was in a pleasing dream of Paradise ;
 At length I wak'd, and looking round the bower, search'd every tree, and pry'd on every flower,
 if any where by chance I might espy,
 the rural poet of the melody ;
 For still methought she sung not far away :
 At last I found her on a laurel spray.
 Close by my side she sat, and fair in sight,
 full in a line against her opposite ;
 Where stood with eglantine the laurel twin'd ;
 And both their native sweets were well conjoin'd.
 On the green bank I sat, and listen'd long
 (String was more convenient for the song) :

Nor till her lay was ended could I move,
 But wish'd to dwell for ever in the grove.
 Only methought the time too swiftly pass'd,
 And every note I fear'd would be the last.
 My sight, and smell, and hearing were employ'd,
 And all three senses in full gust enjoy'd.
 And what alone did all the rest surpass,
 The sweet possession of the fairy place ;
 Single, and conscious to myself alone
 Of pleasures to th' excluded world unknown :
 Pleasures which no where else were to be found,
 And all Elysium in a spot of ground.

Thus while I sat intent to see and hear,
 And drew perfumes of more than vital air,
 All suddenly I heard th' approaching sound
 Of vocal music, on th' enchanted ground :
 An host of saints it seem'd, so full the quire ;
 As if the bless'd above did all conspire
 To join their voices, and neglect the lyre.
 At length there issued from the grove behind
 A fair assembly of the female kind :
 A train less fair, as ancient fathers tell,
 Seduc'd the sons of Heaven to rebel.
 I pass their form, and every charming grace,
 Less than an angel would their worth debase :
 But their attire, like liveries of a kind
 All rich and rare, is fresh within my mind.
 In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
 The seams with sparkling emeralds set around :
 Their hoods and sleeves the same ; and purfl'd o'er
 With diamonds, pearls, and all the shining store
 Of eastern pomp : their long descending train,
 With rubies edg'd, and sapphires, swept the plain :
 High on their heads, with jewels richly set,
 Each lady wore a radiant coronet.
 Beneath the circles, all the quire was grac'd
 With chaplets green, on their fair foreheads plac'd.
 Of laurel some, of woodbine many more ;
 And wreaths of agnus-castus others bore :
 These last, who with those virgin crowns were dress'd,
 Appear'd in higher honour than the rest.
 They danc'd around : but in the midst was seen
 A lady of a more majestic mien ;
 By stature and by beauty mark'd their sovereign queen.

She in the midst began with sober grace ;
 Her servant's eyes were fixed upon her face,
 And, as she mov'd or turn'd, her motions view'd,
 Her measures kept, and step by step pursued.
 Methought she trod the ground with greater grace,
 With more of godhead shining in her face ;
 And as in beauty she surpass'd the quire,
 So, nobler than the rest, was her attire.
 A crown of ruddy gold enclos'd her brow,
 Plain without pomp, and rich without a show.
 A branch of agnus-castus in her hand
 She bore aloft (her sceptre of command) ;
 Admir'd, ador'd by all the circling crowd,
 For wheresoe'er she turn'd her face, they bow'd :
 And as she danc'd, a roundelay she sung,
 In honour of the laurel, ever young :
 She rais'd her voice on high, and sung so clear,
 The fawns came scudding from the groves to hear ;
 And all the bending forest lent an ear.
 At every close she made, th' attending throng
 Reply'd, and bore the burthen of the song :
 So just, so small, yet in so sweet a note,
 It seem'd the music melted in the throat.

Thus dancing on, and singing as they danc'd,
 They to the middle of the mead advanc'd,

Till round my arbour a new ring they made,
And footed it about the secret shade.

O'erjoy'd to see the jolly troop so near,
But somewhat aw'd, I shook with holy fear ;
Yet not so much, but that I noted well
Who did the most in song or dance excel.

Not long I had observ'd, when from afar
I heard a sudden symphony of war ;
The neighing coursers, and the soldiers' cry,
And sounding trumps that seem'd to tear the sky :
I saw soon after this, behind the grove
From whence the ladies did in order move,
Come issuing out in arms a warrior train,
That like a deluge pour'd upon the plain :
On barbed steeds they rode in proud array,
Thick as the college of the bees in May,
When swarming o'er the dusky fields they fly,
New to the flowers, and intercept the sky.
So fierce they drove, their coursers were so fleet,
That the turf trembled underneath their feet.

To tell their costly furniture were long,
The summer's day would end before the song :
To purchase but the tenth of all their store,
Would make the mighty Persian monarch poor.
Yet what I can, I will ; before the rest
The trumpets issued, in white mantles dress'd :
A numerous troop, and all their heads around
With chaplets green of cerial-oak were crown'd ;
And at each trumpet was a banner bound,
Which, waving in the wind, display'd at large
Their master's coat of arms, and knightly charge.
Broad were the banners, and of snowy hue,
A purer web the silk-worm never drew.
The chief about their necks the scutcheons wore,
With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er :
Broad were their collars too, and every one
Was set about with many a costly stone.
Next these of kings-at-arms a godly train
In proud array came prancing o'er the plain :
Their cloaks were cloth of silver mix'd with gold,
And garlands green around their temples roll'd ;
Rich crowns were on their royal scutcheons plac'd,
With sapphires, diamonds, and with rubies grac'd :
And as the trumpets their appearance made,
So these in habits were alike array'd ;
But with a pace more sober, and more slow ;
And twenty, rank in rank, they rode a row.
The pursuivants came next, in number more ;
And like the heralds each his scutcheon bore :
Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head.

Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed :
In golden armour glorious to behold ;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold.
Their surcoats of white ermin fur were made,
With cloth of gold between, that cast a glittering
shade ;

The trappings of their steeds were of the same ;
The golden fringe ev'n set the ground on flame,
And drew a precious trail : a crown divine
Of laurel did about their temples twine.

Three henchmen were for every knight assign'd,
All in rich livery clad, and of a kind :
White velvet, but unshorn, for cloaks they wore,
And each within his hand a truncheon bore :
The foremost held a helm of rare device ;
A prince's ransom would not pay the price.
The second bore the buckler of his knight,
The third of cornel-wood a spear upright,
Headed with piercing steel, and polish'd bright.

Like to their lords their equipage was seen,
And all their foreheads crown'd with garlands green.

And after these came, arm'd with spear and shield,
An host so great, as cover'd all the field,
And all their foreheads, like the knights before,
With laurels ever green were shaded o'er,
Or oak, or other leaves of lasting kind,
Tenacious of the stem, and firm against the wind.
Some in their hands, beside the lance and shield,
The boughs of woodbine or of hawthorn held,
Or branches for their mystic emblems took,
Of palm, of laurel, or of cerial-oak.

Thus marching to the trumpet's lofty sound,
Drawn in two lines adverse they wheel'd around,
And in the middle meadow took their ground.
Among themselves the turney they divide,
In equal squadrons rang'd on either side.
Then turn'd their horses' heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began.
Then lightly set their lances in the rest,
And, at the sign, against each other press'd :
They met. I, sitting at my ease, beheld
The mix'd events, and fortunes of the field.
Some broke their spears, some tumbled horse and
man,

And round the field the lighten'd coursers ran.
An hour and more, like tides, in equal sway
They rush'd, and won by turns, and lost the day.
At length the nine (who still together held)
Their fainting foes to shameful fight compell'd,
And with resistless force o'erran the field.
Thus, to their fame, when finish'd was the fight,
The victors from their lofty steeds alight :
Like them dismounted all the warlike train,
And two by two proceeded o'er the plain :
Till to the fair assembly they advanc'd,
Who near the secret harbour sung and danc'd.

The ladies left their measures at the sight,
To meet the chiefs returning from the fight,
And each with open arms embrac'd her chosen knight.
Amid the plain a spreading laurel stood,
The grace and ornament of all the wood :
That pleasing shade they sought, a soft retreat
From sudden April showers, a shelter from the heat.
Her leafy arms with such extent were spread,
So near the clouds was her aspiring head,
That hosts of birds, that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs, had nightly lodging there.
And flocks of sheep beneath the shade from far
Might hear the rattling hail, and wintery war,
From Heaven's inclemency here found retreat.
Enjoy'd the cool, and shunn'd the scorching heat.
A hundred knights might there at ease abide ;
And every knight a lady by his side :
The trunk itself such odours did bequeath,
That a Moluccan breeze to these was common breath.

The lords and ladies here, approaching, paid
Their homage, with a low obeisance made :
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade.
These rites perform'd, their pleasures they pursue
With song of love, and mix with pleasures new ;
Around the holy tree their dance they frame,
And every champion leads his chosen dame.

I cast my sight upon the farther field,
And a fresh object of delight beheld :
For from the region of the west I heard
New music sound, and a new troop appear'd ;
Of knights, and ladies mix'd, a jolly band,
But all on foot they march'd, and hand in hand.

The ladies dress'd in rich cymarr were seen
 Of Florence satin, flower'd with white and green,
 And for a shade betwixt the bloomy gridelin.
 The borders of their petticoats below
 Were guarded thick with rubies on a row ;
 And every damsel wore upon her head
 Of flowers a garland blended white and red.
 Stir'd in mantles all the knights were seen,
 That gratify'd the view with cheerful green :
 Their chaplets of their ladies colours were, [hair.
 Compos'd of white and red, to shade their shining
 Before the merry troop the minstrels play'd ;
 All in their master's liveries were array'd,
 And clad in green, and on their temples wore
 The chaplets white and red their ladies bore.
 Their instruments were various in their kind,
 Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind :
 The sawtry, pipe, and hautboy's noisy band, [hand.
 And the soft lute trembling beneath the touching
 A tuft of daisies on a flowery lay
 They saw, and thitherward they bent their way ;
 To this both knights and dames their homage made,
 And due obeisance to the daisy paid.
 And then the band of flutes began to play,
 To which a lady sung a virelay :
 And still at every close she would repeat
 The burthen of the song, " The daisy is so sweet."
 The daisy is so sweet," when she begun,
 The troop of knights and dames continued on.
 The concert and the voice so charm'd my ear,
 And sooth'd my soul, that it was Heaven to hear
 But soon their pleasure pass'd : at noon of day,
 The Sun with sultry beams began to play :
 Hot Sirius shoots a fiercer flame from high,
 Then with his poisonous breath he blasts the sky :
 Then droop'd the fading flowers (their beauty fled)
 And clos'd their sickly eyes, and hung the head ;
 And, rivet'd up with heat, lay dying in their bed.
 The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire :
 The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire ;
 The fainty knights were scorch'd ; and knew not where
 To run for shelter, for no shade was near ;
 And after this the gathering clouds amain
 Pour'd down a storm of rattling hail and rain :
 And lightning flash'd betwixt : the field, and flowers,
 Burnt up before, were buried in the showers.
 The ladies and the knights, no shelter nigh,
 Hur'd to the weather, and the wintry sky,
 Were dropping wet, disconsolate, and wan,
 And through their thin array receiv'd the rain :
 While those in white, protected by the tree, [free.
 Were pass in vain th' assault, and stood from danger
 But as compassion mov'd their gentle minds,
 When ceas'd the storm, and silent were the winds,
 Pleased at what, not suffering, they had seen,
 They went to cheer the faction of the green :
 The queen in white array, before her band,
 Leading, took her rival by the hand :
 So did the knights and dames, with courtly grace,
 And with behaviour sweet, their foes embrace :
 Then thus the queen with laurel on her brow,
 " Fair sister, I have suffer'd in your woe ;
 Nor shall be wanting aught within my power
 For your relief in my refreshing bower."
 That other answer'd with a lowly look,
 And soon the gracious invitation took :
 For ill at ease both she and all her train
 The scorching Sun had borne, and beating rain.
 Like courtesy was us'd by all in white, [knight.
 Each dame a dame receiv'd, and every knight a

The laurel champions with their swords invade
 The neighbouring forests, where the justs were made,
 And serewood from the rotten hedges took,
 And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke :
 A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire [attire.
 They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet
 Refresh'd with heat, the ladies sought around
 For virtuous herbs, which gather'd from the ground
 They squeez'd the juice, and cooling ointment made,
 Which on their sun-burnt cheeks and their chapt skins they laid :

Then sought green salads, which they bade them eat,
 A sovereign remedy for inward heat.

The lady of the leaf ordain'd a feast,
 And made the lady of the flower her guest :
 When lo, a bower ascended on the plain,
 With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train.
 This bower was near my pleasant arbour plac'd,
 That I could hear and see whatever pass'd :
 The ladies sat with each a knight between,
 Distinguish'd by their colours, white and green ;
 The vanquish'd party with the victors join'd, [mind.
 Nor wanted sweet discourse, the banquet of the Meantime the minstrels play'd on either side,
 Vain of their art, and for the mastery vy'd :
 The sweet contention lasted for an hour,
 And reach'd my secret arbour from the bower.

The Sun was set ; and Vesper, to supply
 His absent beams, had lighted up the sky :
 When Philomel, officious all the day
 To sing the service of th' ensuing May,
 Fled from her laurel shade, and wing'd her flight
 Directly to the queen array'd in white ;
 And, hopping, sat familiar on her hand,
 A new musician, and increas'd the band.

The goldfinch, who, to shun the scalding heat,
 Had chang'd the medlar for a safer seat,
 And, hid in bushes, 'scap'd the bitter shower,
 Now perch'd upon the lady of the flower ;
 And either songster holding out their throats,
 And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes :
 As if all day, preluding to the fight,
 They only had rehears'd, to sing by night :
 The banquet ended, and the battle done,
 They danc'd by star-light and the friendly Moon :
 And when they were to part, the laureat queen
 Supply'd with steeds the lady of the green,
 Her and her train conducting on the way,
 The Moon to follow, and avoid the day.

This when I saw, inquisitive to know
 The secret moral of the mystic show,
 I started from my shade, in hopes to find
 Some nymph to satisfy my longing mind :
 And, as my fair adventure fell, I found
 A lady all in white, with laurel crown'd,
 Who clos'd the rear, and softly pac'd along,
 Repeating to herself the former song.
 With due respect my body I inclin'd,
 As to some being of superior kind,
 And made my court according to the day,
 Wishing her queen and her a happy May.
 " Great thanks, my daughter," with a gracious bow
 She said ; and I, who much desir'd to know
 Of whence she was, yet fearful how to break
 My mind, adventur'd humbly thus to speak :
 " Madam, might I presume and not offend,
 So may the stars and shining Moon attend
 Your nightly sports, as you vouchsafe to tell
 What nymphs they were who mortal forms excel,
 And what the knights who fought in listed fields so well."

To this the dame reply'd: "Fair daughter, know,
That what you saw was all a fairy show:
And all those airy shapes you now behold, [mold,
Were human bodies once, and cloth'd with earthly
Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomsday wander in the shades of night;
This only holiday of all the year,
We privileg'd in sunshine may appear:
With songs and dance we celebrate the day,
And with due honours usher in the May.
At other times we reign by night alone,
And posting through the skies pursue the Moon:
But when the morn arises, none are found;
For cruel Demogorgon walks the round,
And if he finds a fairy lag in light,
He drives the wretch before, and lashes into night.

"All courteous are by kind; and ever proud
With friendly offices to help the good.
In every land we have a larger space
Than what is known to you of mortal race:
Where we with green adorn our fairy bowers,
And ev'n this grove, unseen before, is ours.
Know farther: every lady cloth'd in white,
And, crown'd with oak and laurel every knight,
Are servants to the Leaf, by liveries known
Of innocence; and I myself am one.
Saw you not her so graceful to behold
In white attire, and crown'd with radiant gold?
The sovereign lady of our land is she,
Diana call'd, the queen of chastity:
And, for the spotless name of maid she bears,
That agnus-castus in her hand appears;
And all her train, with leafy chaplets crown'd,
Were for unblam'd virginity renown'd;
But those the chief and highest in command
Who bear those holy branches in their hand:
The knights adorn'd with laurel crowns are they,
Whom death nor danger never could dismay,
Victorious names, who made the world obey:
Who, while they liv'd, in deeds of arms excell'd,
And after death for deities were held.
But those, who wear the woodbine on their brow,
Were knights of love, who never broke their vow;
Firm to their plighted faith, and ever free
From fears, and fickle chance, and jealousy.
The lords and ladies, who the woodbine bear,
As true as Tristram and Isotta were." [nine,

"But what are those," said I, "th' unconquer'd
Who crown'd with laurel-wreaths in golden armour shine?"

And who the knights in green, and what the train
Of ladies dress'd with daisies on the plain?
Why both the bands in worship disagree,
And some adorn the flower, and some the tree?"

"Just is your suit, fair daughter," said the dame:
"Those laurel'd chiefs were men of mighty fame;
Nine worthies were they call'd of different rites,
Three Jews, three Pagans, and three Christian knights.

These, as you see, ride foremost in the field,
As they the foremost rank of honour held,
And all in deeds of chivalry excell'd:
Their temples wreath'd with leaves, that still renew;
For deathless laurel is the victor's due:
Who bear the bows were knights in Arthur's reign,
Twelve they, and twelve the peers of Charlemain;
For bows the strength of brawny arms imply,
Emblems of valour and of victory.
Behold an order yet of newer date
Doubling their number, equal in their state;

Our England's ornament, the crown's defence,
In battle brave, protectors of their prince:
Unchang'd by fortune, to their sovereign true,
For which their manly legs are bound with blue.
These, of the garter call'd, of faith unstain'd,
In fighting fields the laurel have obtain'd,
And well repaid the honours which they gain'd.
The laurel wreaths were first by Caesar worn,
And still they Caesar's successors adorn:
One leaf of this is immortality,
And more of worth than all the world can buy."

"One doubt remains," said I, "the daisies in green,

What were their qualities, and who their queen?"

"Flora commands," said she, "those nymphs and
knights,

Who liv'd in slothful ease and loose delights;
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue
Who, nurs'd in idleness, and train'd in courts,
Pass'd all their precious hours in plays and sports.
Till Death behind came stalking on, unseen, [green
And wither'd (like the storm) the freshness of the
These, and their mates, enjoy their present hour,
And therefore pay their homage to the Flower.
But knights in knightly deeds should persevere,
And still continue what at first they were;
Continue, and proceed in honour's fair career.
No room for cowardice, or dull delay;
From good to better they should urge their way.
For this with golden spurs the chiefs are grac'd,
With pointed rowels arm'd to mend their haste;
For this with lasting leaves their brows are bound
For laurel is the sign of labour crown'd, [ground
Which bears the bitter blast, nor shaken falls:
From winter winds it suffers no decay,
For ever fresh and fair, and every month is May.
Ev'n when the vital sap retreats below,
Ev'n when the hoary head is hid in snow;
The life is in the leaf, and still between
The fits of falling snow appears the streaky green
Not so the flower, which lasts for little space,
A short-liv'd good, and an uncertain grace;
This way and that the feeble stem is driven,
Weak to sustain the storms and injuries of Heaven
Propp'd by the spring, it lifts aloft the head,
But of a sickly beauty, soon to shed:
In summer living, and in winter dead.
For things of tender kind, for pleasure made,
Shoot up with swift increase, and sudden decay'd."

With humble words, the wisest I could frame,
And proffer'd service, I repaid the dame;
That, of her grace, she gave her maid to know
The secret meaning of this moral show.
And she, to prove what profit I had made
Of mystic truth, in fables first convey'd,
Demanded, till the next returning May,
Whether the Leaf or Flower I would obey?
I chose the leaf; she smil'd with sober cheer,
And wish'd me fair adventure for the year,
And gave me charms and sigils, for defence
Against ill tongues that scandal innocence:
"But I," said she, "my fellows must pursue,
Already past the plain, and out of view."

We parted thus; I homeward sped my way,
Bewilder'd in the wood till dawn of day:
And met the merry crew who danc'd about the May
Then, late refresh'd with sleep, I rose to write
The visionary vigils of the night:

Blush, as thou may'st, my Little Book, with shame,
Nor hope with homely verse to purchase fame;
For such thy Maker chose : and so design'd
Thy simple style to suit thy lowly kind.

CYMON AND IPHIGENIA.

POETA LOQUITUR.

Once as I am, for ladies' love unfit,
The power of beauty I remember yet. [wit.
Which once inflam'd my soul, and still inspires my
If love be folly, the severe divine
Has felt that folly, though he censures mine;
Pollutes the pleasures of a chaste embrace,
Acts what I write, and propagates in grace,
With riotous excess, a priestly race.
Suppose him free, and that I forge th' offence,
He show'd the way, perverting first my sense :
A malice witty, and with venom fraught,
He makes me speak the things I never thought.
Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal ;
It suits his cloth the praise of railing well.
The world will think, that what we loosely write,
Though now arraign'd, he read with some delight ;
Because he seems to chew the cud again,
When his broad comment makes the text too plain ;
And teaches more in one explaining page,
Than all the double-meanings of the stage.
What needs he paraphrase on what we mean ?
He were at worst but wanton ; he's obscene.
Not my fellows nor myself excuse ;
But love's the subject of the comic Muse ;
Nor can we write without it, nor would you
Take of only dry instruction view ;
For love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind,
Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And, brushing o'er, adds motion to the pool.
Love, studious how to please, improves our parts
And polish'd manners, and adorns with arts.
Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
He motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime ;
His liberal acts enlarg'd the narrow-soul'd,
He smother'd the fierce, and made the coward bold :
The world, when waste, he peopled with increase,
And warring nations reconcil'd in peace.
He found, the first, and all the fair may find,
In this one legend, to their fame design'd,
When Beauty fires the blood, how love exalts the mind.

In that sweet isle where Venus keeps her court,
And every Grace, and all the Loves, resort ;
Where either sex is form'd of softer earth,
And takes the bent of pleasure from their birth ;
Where liv'd a Cyprian lord above the rest
In wealth, with a numerous issue bless'd.
But as no gift of Fortune is sincere,
He was only wanting in a worthy heir ;
His eldest born, a goodly youth to view,
Well-skill'd the rest in shape, and outward show,
Tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd,
Set off a heavy, dull, degenerate mind.
His soul bely'd the features of his face ;
Beauty was there, but beauty in disgrace.
His clownish mien, a voice with rustic sound,
And stupid eyes that ever lov'd the ground.

He look'd like Nature's errour, as the mind
And body were not of a piece design'd,
But made for two, and by mistake in one were join'd.

The ruling rod, the father's forming care,
Were exercis'd in vain on Wit's despair ;
The more inform'd, the less he understood,
And deeper sunk by floundering in the mud.
Now scorn'd of all, and grown the public shame,
The people from Galesus chang'd his name,
And Cymon call'd, which signifies a brute ;
So well his name did with his nature suit.

His father, when he found his labour lost,
And care employ'd that answer'd not the cost,
Chose an ungrateful object to remove,
And loath'd to see what Nature made him love ;
So to his country farm the fool confin'd ;
Rude work well suited with a rustic mind.
Thus to the wilds the sturdy Cymon went, [ment.
A squire among the swains, and pleas'd with banish-
His corn and cattle were his only care,
And his supreme delight, a country fair

It happen'd on a summer's holiday,
That to the green-wood shade he took his way ;
For Cymon shunn'd the church, and us'd not much to pray.

His quarter-staff, which he could ne'er forsake,
Hung half before, and half behind his back.
He trudg'd along, unknowing what he sought,
And whistled as he went for want of thought.

By Chance conducted, or by thirst constrain'd,
The deep recesses of the grove he gain'd ;
Where, in a plain defended by the wood,
Crept through the matted grass a crystal flood,
By which an alabaster fountain stood :
And on the margin of the fount was laid
(Attended by her slaves) a sleeping maid.
Like Dian and her nymphs, when, tir'd with sport,
To rest by cool Eurotas they resort :
The dame herself the goddess well express'd,
Not more distinguish'd by her purple vest,
Than by the charming features of her face,
And ev'n in slumber a superior grace :
Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,
Her body shaded with a slight cymarr ;
Her bosom to the view was only bare :
Where two beginning paps were scarcely spy'd,
For yet their places were but signify'd :
The fanning wind upon her bosom blows,
To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose ;
The fanning wind, and purling streams, continue her repose.

The fool of Nature stood with stupid eyes,
And gaping mouth that testify'd surprise,
Fix'd on her face, nor could remove his sight,
New as he was to love, and novice to delight :
Long mute he stood, and leaning on his staff,
His wonder witness'd with an idiot laugh ;
Then would have spoke, but by his glimmering sense
First found his want of words, and fear'd offence :
Doubted for what he was he should be known,
By his clown accent, and his country tone.
Through the rude chaos thus the running light
Shot the first ray that pierc'd the native night :
Then day and darkness in the mass were mix'd,
Till gather'd in a globe the beams were fix'd :
Last shone the Sun, who, radiant in his sphere,
Illumin'd Heaven and Earth, and roll'd around the year.

So reason in this brutal soul began,
Love made him first suspect he was a man ;

Love made him doubt his broad barbarian sound ;
By love his want of words and wit he found ;
That sense of want prepar'd the future way
To knowledge, and disclos'd the promise of a day.

What not his father's care, nor tutor's art,
Could plant with pains in his unpolish'd heart,
The best instructor, Love, at once inspir'd,
As barren grounds to fruitfulness are fir'd :
Love taught him shame ; and Shame, with Love at strife,

Soon taught the sweet civilities of life ;
His gross material soul at once could find
Somewhat in her excelling all her kind :
Exciting a desire till then unknown,
Somewhat unfound, or found in her alone.
This made the first impression on his mind,
Above, but just above, the brutal kind.
For beasts can like, but not distinguish too,
Nor their own liking by reflection know ;
Nor why they like or this or t'other face,
Or judge of this or that peculiar grace ;
But love in gross, and stupidly admire :
As flies, allur'd by light, approach the fire.
Thus our man-beast, advancing by degrees,
First likes the whole, then separates what he sees ;
On several parts a several praise bestows,
'The ruby lips, the well-proportion'd nose,
The snowy skin, and raven-glossy hair,
The dimpled cheek, and forehead rising fair,
And, ev'n in sleep itself, a smiling air.
From thence his eyes descending view'd the rest,
Her plump round arms, white hands, and heaving breast.

Long on the last he dwelt, though every part
A pointed arrow sped to pierce his heart.

Thus in a trice a judge of beauty grown,
(A judge erected from a country clown)
He long'd to see her eyes, in slumber hid,
And wish'd his own could pierce within the lid :
He would have wak'd her, but restrain'd his thought,
And Love, new-born, the first good-manners taught.
And awful Fear his ardent wish withstood,
Nor durst disturb the goddess of the wood.
For such she seem'd by her celestial face,
Excelling all the rest of human race.
And things divine, by common sense he knew,
Must be devoutly seen, at distant view :
So checking his desire, with trembling heart
Gazing he stood, nor would nor could depart ;
Fix'd as a pilgrim wilder'd in his way,
Who dares not stir by night, for fear to stray,
But stands with awful eyes to watch the dawn of day.

At length awaking, Iphigene the fair
(So was the beauty call'd who caus'd his care)
Unclos'd her eyes, and double day reveal'd,
While those of all her slaves in sleep were seal'd.

The slaving cudden, propp'd upon his staff,
Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh,
To welcome her awake ; nor durst begin
To speak, but wisely kept the fool within.
Then she : " What makes you, Cymon, here alone ?"
(For Cymon's name was round the country known
Because descended of a noble race,
And for a soul ill sorted with his face).

But still the sot stood silent with surprise,
With fix'd regard on her new-open'd eyes,
And in his breast receiv'd th' envenom'd dart,
A tickling pain that pleas'd amid the smart.
But, conscious of her form, with quick distrust
Sbe saw his sparkling eyes, and fear'd his brutal lust :

This to prevent, she wak'd her sleepy crew,
And, rising hasty, took a short adieu.

Then Cymon first his rustic voice essay'd,
With proffer'd service to the parting maid
To see her safe ; his hand she long deny'd,
But took at length, asham'd of such a guide.
So Cymon led her home, and leaving there,
No more would to his country clowns repair,
But sought his father's house, with better mind,
Refusing in the farm to be confin'd.

The father wonder'd at the son's return,
And knew not whether to rejoice or mourn ;
But doubtfully receiv'd, expecting still
To learn the secret causes of his alter'd will.
Nor was he long delay'd : the first request
He made, was like his brothers to be dress'd,
And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest.

With ease his suit was granted by his sire,
Distinguishing his heir by rich attire :
His body thus adorn'd, he next design'd
With liberal arts to cultivate his mind :
He sought a tutor of his own accord,
And study'd lessons he before abhorr'd.

Thus the man-child advanc'd, and learn'd so fast
That in short time his equals he surpass'd :
His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd ;
In every exercise of all admir'd,
He seem'd, nor only seem'd, but was inspir'd :
Inspir'd by Love, whose business is to please ;
He rode, he fenc'd, he mov'd with graceful ease,
More fam'd for sense, for courtly carriage more.
Than for his brutal folly known before.

What then of alter'd Cymon shall we say,
But that the fire which choak'd in ashes lay,
A load too heavy for his soul to move, [Love
Was upward blown below, and brush'd away
Love made an active progress through his mind,
The dusky parts he clear'd, the gross refin'd,
The drowsy wak'd ; and as he went impress'd
The Maker's image on the human breast.

Thus was the man amended by desire,
And though he lov'd perhaps with too much fire,
His father all his faults with reason scann'd,
And lik'd an error of the better hand ;
Excus'd th' excess of passion in his mind,
By flames too fierce, perhaps too much retin'd :
So Cymon, since his sire indulg'd his will,
Impetuous lov'd, and would be Cymon still ;
Galesus he disown'd, and chose to bear
The name of fool confirm'd and bishop'd by the fa

To Cipseus by his friends his suit he mov'd,
Cipseus the father of the fair he lov'd :
But he was pre-engag'd by former ties,
While Cymon was endeavouring to be wise :
And Iphigene, oblig'd by former vows,
Had given her faith to wed a foreign spouse :
Her sire and she to Rhodian Pasimond,
Though both repenting, were by promise bound.
Nor could retract ; and thus, as Fate decreed,
Though better lov'd, he spoke too late to speed.

The doom was past, the ship, already sent,
Did all his tardy diligence prevent :
Sigh'd to herself the fair unhappy maid,
While stormy Cymon thus in secret said :
" The time is come for Iphigene to find
The miracle she wrought upon my mind :
Her charms have made me man, her ravish'd love
In rank shall place me with the bless'd above.
For mine by love, by force she shall be mine,
Or death, if force should fail, shall finish my design."

resolv'd he said; and rigg'd with speedy care vessel strong, and well equipp'd for war.
 He secret ship with chosen friends he stor'd;
 And, bent to die or conquer, went aboard.
 Ambush'd he lay behind the Cyprian shore,
 Waiting the sail that all his wishes bore;
 For long expected, for the following tide
 Sent out the hostile ship and beauteous bride.
 To Rhodes the rival bark directly steer'd,
 When Cymon sudden at her back appear'd,
 And stopp'd her flight: then, standing on his prow,
 In haughty terms he thus defy'd the foe:
 "Or strike your sails at summons, or prepare
 To prove the last extremities of war."
 Thus warn'd, the Rhodians for the fight provide;
 Already were the vessels side by side,
 Some obstinate to save, and those to seize the bride.
 At Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
 Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd,
 And, arm'd with sword and shield, amid the press
 He pass'd.
 Once was the fight, but, hastening to his prey,
 He force the furious lover freed his way:
 Himself alone dispers'd the Rhodian crew,
 A weak disdain'd, the valiant overthrew;
 His conquest for his following friends remain'd,
 He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.
 His victory confess'd, the foes retreat,
 And cast the weapons at the victor's feet. [fought Whom thus he cheer'd: "O Rhodian youth, I
 For love alone, nor other booty sought:
 Your lives are safe; your vessel I resign;
 Mine be your own, restoring what is mine;
 Iphigene I claim my rightful due,
 Detain'd by my rival, and detain'd by you:
 For Pasimond a lawless bargain drove,
 Whose parent could not sell the daughter's love;
 If he could, my Love disdains the laws,
 And like a king by conquest gains his cause:
 Here arms take place, all other pleas are vain,
 He taught me force, and Force shall love maintain,
 And, what by strength you could not keep, release,
 And at an easy ransom buy your peace."
 Fear on the conquer'd side soon sign'd th' accord,
 And Iphigene to Cymon was restor'd:
 Like to his arms the blushing bride he took,
 And, seeming sadness she compos'd her look;
 And by force subjected to his will,
 Though pleas'd, dissembling, and a woman still.
 And for she wept, he wip'd her falling tears,
 And pray'd her to dismiss her empty fears;
 "For yours I am," he said, "and have deserv'd
 To have much better whom so long I serv'd,
 Than he to whom your formal father ty'd
 His vows, and sold a slave, not sent a bride."
 As while he spoke, he seiz'd the willing prey,
 And Paris bore the Spartan spouse away.
 And, as she scream'd, and ev'n her eyes confess'd
 It rather would be thought, than was distress'd.
 No more exults but Cymon in his mind?
 In hopes and empty joys of human kind,
 And of the present, to the future blind!
 Sure of Fate, while Cymon plows the sea,
 He steers to Candy with his conquer'd prey,
 Ere the third glass of measur'd hours was run,
 When, like a fiery meteor, sunk the Sun;
 A promise of a storm; the shifting gales
 Made by fits, and fill the flagging sails;
 And marmors of the main from far were heard,
 And night came on, not by degrees prepar'd,

But all at once; at once the winds arise,
 The thunders roll, the forked lightning flies.
 In vain the master issues out commands,
 In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands:
 The tempest unforeseen prevents their care,
 And from the first they labour in despair.
 The giddy ship betwixt the winds and tides,
 Forc'd back, and forwards, in a circle rides,
 Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots amain,
 Till, counterbuff'd, she stops, and sleeps again.
 Not more aghast the proud archangel fell,
 Plung'd from the height of Heaven to deepest Hell,
 Than stood the lover of his love possess'd,
 Now curs'd the more, the more he had been bless'd;
 More anxious for her danger than his own,
 Death he defies; but would be lost alone.

Sad Iphigene to womanish complaints
 Adds pious prayers, and wearies all the saints;
 Ev'n if she could, her love she would repent,
 But, since she cannot, dreads the punishment:
 Her forfeit faith, and Pasimond betray'd,
 Are ever present, and her crime upbraid.
 She blames herself, nor blames her lover less,
 Augments her anger, as her fears increase:
 From her own back the burthen would remove,
 And lays the load on his ungovern'd love,
 Which, interposing, durst, in Heaven's despite,
 Invade, and violate another's right:
 The powers incens'd awhile deferr'd his pain,
 And made him master of his vows in vain:
 But soon they punish'd his presumptuous pride;
 That for his daring enterprize she dy'd;
 Who rather not resisted, than comply'd.

Then, impotent of mind, with alter'd sense,
 She hugg'd th' offender, and forgave th' offence,
 Sex to the last: meantime with sails declin'd
 The wandering vessel drove before the wind:
 Toss'd and retoss'd, aloft, and then below,
 Nor port they seek, nor certain course they know,
 But every moment wait the coming blow.
 Thus blindly driven, by breaking day they view'd
 The land before them, and their fears renew'd;
 The land was welcome, but the tempest bore
 The threaten'd ship against a rocky shore.

A winding bay was near; to this they bent,
 And just escap'd; their force already spent:
 Secure from storms, and panting from the sea,
 The land unknown at leisure they survey;
 And saw (but soon their sickly sight withdrew)
 The rising towers of Rhodes at distant view;
 And curs'd the hostile shore of Pasimond,
 Sav'd from the seas, and shipwreck'd on the ground.

The frightened sailors try'd their strength in vain
 To turn the stern, and tempt the stormy main;
 But the stiff wind withstood the labouring oar,
 And forc'd them forward on the fatal shore!
 The crooked keel now bites the Rhodian strand,
 And the ship moor'd constrains the crew to land:
 Yet still they might be safe, because unknown,
 But, as ill fortune seldom comes alone,
 The vessel they dismiss'd was driven before,
 Already shelter'd on their native shore; [cheer;
 Known each, they know; but each with change of
 The vanquish'd side exults; the victors fear;
 Not them, but theirs, made prisoners ere they fight,
 Despairing conquest, and depriv'd of flight.

The country rings around with loud alarms.
 And raw in fields the rude militia swarms;
 Mouths without hands; maintain'd at vast expense,
 In peace a charge, in war a weak defence:

Stout once a month they march, a blustering band,
And ever, but in times of need, at hand ;
This was the morn when, issuing on the guard,
Drawn up in rank and file they stood prepar'd
Of seeming arms to make a short essay,
Then hasten to be drunk, the business of the day.

The cowards would have fled, but that they knew Themselves so many, and their foes so few :
But, crowding on, the last the first impel :
Till overborn with weight the Cyprians fell.
Cymon enslav'd, who first the war begun,
And Iphigene once more is lost and won.

Deep in a dungeon was the captive cast,
Depriv'd of day, and held in fetters fast :
His life was only spar'd at their request,
Whom taken he so nobly had releas'd :
But Iphigenia was the ladies' care,
Each in their turn address'd to treat the fair ;
While Pasimond and his the nuptial feast prepare.

Her secret soul to Cymon was inclin'd,
But she must suffer what her Fates assign'd ;
So passive is the church of woman-kind.
What worse to Cymon could his fortune deal,
Roll'd to the lowest spoke of all her wheel ?
It rested to dismiss the downward weight,
Or raise him upward to his former height ;
The latter pleas'd ; and Love (concern'd the most)
Prepar'd th' amends, for what by love he lost.

The sire of Pasimond had left a son,
Though younger, yet for courage early known,
Ormisda call'd, to whom, by promise ty'd,
A Rhodian beauty was the destin'd bride ;
Cassandra was her name, above the rest
Renown'd for birth, with fortune amply bless'd.
Lysimachus, who rul'd the Rhodian state,
Was then by choice their annual magistrate :
He lov'd Cassandra too with equal fire,
But Fortune had not favour'd his desire ;
Cross'd by her friends, by her not disapprov'd,
Nor yet preferr'd, or like Ormisda lov'd :
So stood th' affair : some little hope remain'd,
That, should his rival chance to lose, he gain'd.

Meantime young Pasimond his marriage press'd,
Ordain'd the nuptial day, prepar'd the feast ;
And frugally resolv'd (the charge to shun,
Which would be double should he wed alone)
To join his brother's bridal with his own.

Lysimachus, oppress'd with mortal grief,
Receiv'd the news, and study'd quick relief :
The fatal day approach'd ; if force were us'd,
The magistrate his public trust abus'd ;
To justice liable, as law requir'd ;
For, when his office ceas'd, his power expir'd :
While power remain'd the means were in his hand
By force to seize, and then forsake the land :
Betwixt extremes he knew not how to move,
A slave to fame, but, more a slave to love :
Restraining others, yet himself not free,
Made impotent by power, debas'd by dignity.
Both sides he weigh'd : but, after much debate,
The man prevail'd above the magistrate.

Love never fails to master what he finds,
But works a different way in different minds,
The fool enlightens, and the wise he blinds.
This youth, proposing to possess and 'scape,
Began in murder, to conclude in rape : [bless
Unprais'd by me, though Heaven sometimes may
An impious act with undeserv'd success :
The great it seems are privileg'd alone
To punish all injustice but their own.

But here I stop, not daring to proceed,
Yet blush to flatter an unrighteous deed :
For crimes are but permitted, not decreed.

Resolv'd on force, his wit the pretor bent,
To find the means that might secure th' event :
Nor long he labour'd, for his lucky thought
In captive Cymon found the friend he sought ;
Th' example pleas'd : the cause and crime the same ;
An injur'd lover, and a ravish'd dame.
How much he durst he knew by what he dar'd,
The less he had to lose, the less he car'd
To manage loathsome life, when love was the reward.

This ponder'd well, and fix'd on his intent,
In depth of night he for the prisoner sent ;
In secret sent, the public view to shun,
Then with a sober smile he thus begun.
" The powers above, who bounteously bestow
Their gifts and graces on mankind below,
Yet prove our merit first, nor blindly give
To such as are not worthy to receive.
For valour and for virtue they provide
Their due reward, but first they must be try'd :
These fruitful seeds within your mind they sow'd ;
'Twas yours t' improve the talent they bestow'd :
They gave you to be born of noble kind,
They gave you love to lighten up your mind,
And purge the grosser parts ; they gave you care
To please, and courage to deserve the fair.

" Thus far they try'd you, and by proof they found

The grain intrusted in a grateful ground :
But still the great experiment remain'd,
They suffer'd you to lose the prize you gain'd,
That you might learn the gift was theirs alone,
And when restor'd, to them the blessing own.
Restor'd it soon will be ; the means prepar'd,
The difficulty smooth'd, the danger shar'd :
Be but yourself, the care to me resign,
Then Iphigene is yours, Cassandra mine.
Your rival Pasimond pursues your life,
Impatient to revenge his ravish'd wife,
But yet not his ; to-morrow is behind,
And Love our fortunes in one band has join'd :
Two brothers are our foes, Ormisda mine,
As much declar'd as Pasimond is thine :
To-morrow must their common vows be ty'd :
With Love to friend, and Fortune for our guide,
Let both resolve to die, or each redeem a bride.

" Right I have none, nor hast thou much to plead
'Tis force, when done, must justify the deed :
Our task perform'd, we next prepare for flight :
And let the losers talk in vain of right :
We with the fair will sail before the wind,
If they are griev'd, I leave the laws behind.
Speak thy resolves : if now thy courage droop,
Despair in prison, and abandon hope :
But if thou dar'st in arms thy love regain,
(For liberty without thy love were vain,)
Then second my design to seize the prey, [was
Or lead to second rape, for well thou know'st

Said Cymon overjoy'd, " Do thou propose
The means to fight, and only show the foes :
For from the first, when love had fir'd my mind,
Resolv'd I left the care of life behind."

To this the bold Lysimachus reply'd,
" Let Heaven be neuter, and the sword decide :
The spousals are prepar'd, already play
The minstrels, and provoke the tardy day :
By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are dress'd.
All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast,
All but myself, the sole unbidden guest.

Forbidden though I am, I will be there,
 And, join'd by thee, intend to joy the fair.
 "Now hear the rest; when Day resigns the light,
 And cheerful torches gild the jolly Night,
 Be ready at my call; my chosen few
 With arms administer'd shall aid thy crew.
 When, entering unexpected, will we seize
 Our destin'd prey, from men dissolv'd in ease,
 By wine disabled, unprepar'd for fight,
 And hastening to the seas, suborn our flight:
 The seas are ours, for I command the fort,
 A ship well-mann'd expects us in the port:
 If they, or if their friends, the prize contest,
 Each shall attend the man who dares resist."
 It pleas'd! the prisoner to his hold retir'd,
 A troop with equal emulation fir'd,
 All fix'd to fight, and all their wonted work requir'd.
 The Sun arose; the streets were throng'd around,
 The palace open'd, and the posts were crown'd.
 A double bridegroom at the door attends
 An expected spouse, and entertains the friends:
 My met, they lead to church, the priests invoke
 The powers, and feed the flames with fragrant smoke.
 The feast is done, they feast, and at the close of night
 Kindled torches vary their delight,
 We lead the lively dance, and those the brimming
 Bowls invite.
 Now at th' appointed place and hour assign'd,
 The souls resolv'd the ravishers were join'd:
 The bands are form'd; the first is sent before
 To favour the retreat, and guard the shore;
 The second at the palace gate is plac'd,
 And up the lofty stairs ascend the last:
 A peaceful troop they seem with shining vests,
 And coats of mail beneath secure their breasts.
 Dauntless they enter, Cymon at their head,
 And find the feast renew'd, the table spread:
 Yet voices, mix'd with instrumental sounds,
 Tend the vaulted roof, the vaulted roof rebounds.
 Men like the harpies rushing through the hall
 A sudden troop appears, the tables fall,
 A smoking load is on the pavement thrown;
 Each ravisher prepares to seize his own;
 The brides, invaded with a rude embrace,
 Look out for aid, confusion fills the place.
 Sick to redeem the prey their plighted lords
 Advance, the palace gleams with shining swords.
 But late is all defence, and succour vain;
 The rape is made, the ravishers remain:
 The sturdy slaves were only sent before
 To bear the purchas'd prize in safety to the shore.

The troop retires, the lovers close the rear,
 With forward faces not confessing fear:
 Backward they move, but scorn their pace to mend,
 Then seek the stairs, and with slow haste descend.
 Fierce Pasimond, their passage to prevent,
 Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent;
 The blade return'd unbath'd, and to the handle bent.
 Stout Cymon soon remounts, and cleft in two
 His rival's head with one descending blow:
 And as the next in rank Ormisda stood,
 He turn'd the point; the sword, inur'd to blood,
 Bor'd his unguarded breast, which pour'd a purple
 Flood.
 With vow'd revenge the gathering crowd pursues,
 The ravishers turn head, the fight renews;
 The hall is heap'd with corps; the sprinkled gore
 Besmears the walls, and floats the marble floor.
 Dispers'd at length the drunken squadron flies,
 The victors to their vessel bear the prize;
 And hear behind loud groans, and lamentable cries.
 The crew with merry shouts their anchors weigh,
 Then ply their oars, and brush the buxom sea,
 While troops of gather'd Rhodians crowd the key
 What should the people do when left alone?
 The governor and government are gone.
 The public wealth to foreign parts convey'd;
 Some troops disbanded, and the rest unpaid.
 Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more;
 Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store,
 They neither could defend, nor can pursue,
 But grinn'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view;
 In vain with darts a distant war they try,
 Short, and more short, the missive weapons fly.
 Meanwhile the ravishers their crimes enjoy,
 And flying sails and sweeping oars employ:
 The cliffs of Rhodes in little space are lost,
 Jove's isle they seek; nor Jove denies his coast.
 In safety landed on the Candian shore,
 With generous wines their spirits they restore:
 There Cymon with his Rhodian friend resides,
 Both court, and wed at once the willing brides.
 A war ensues, the Cretans own their cause,
 Stiff to defend their hospitable laws:
 Both parties lose by turns; and neither wins,
 Till peace propounded by a truce begins.
 The kindred of the slain forgive the deed,
 But a short exile must for show precede:
 The term expir'd, from Candia they remove;
 And happy each, at home, enjoys his love.

JOHN PHILIPS.

JOHNS PHILIPS, an English poet, was the son of Dr. Stephen Philips, archdeacon of Salop. He was born at Bampton, in Oxfordshire, in 1676, and received his classical education at Winchester school. He was removed to Christ-Church college, in Oxford, in 1694, where he fully maintained the distinction he had already acquired at school, and obtained the esteem of several eminent literary characters. In 1703 he made himself known by his poem of "The Splendid Shilling," a pleasant burlesque, in which he happily imitated the style of Milton. The reputation he acquired by this piece caused him to be selected by the leaders of the Tory party to celebrate the victory of Blenheim, in competition with Addison, an attempt which, however, seems to have added little to his fame.

His didactic poem on Cyder, published in 1706, is considered as his principal performance, and is the work with which his name is chiefly associated. It became popular, and raised him to eminence among the poets of his age and class. This, and his "Splendid Shilling," are the pieces by which he will chiefly deserve to be remembered. Philips died of a pulmonary affection, in February 1709, at his mother's house in Hereford, greatly regretted by his friends, to whom he was endeared by the modesty, kindness, and blamelessness of his character. Besides a tablet, with a Latin inscription in Hereford cathedral, he was honoured with a monument in Westminster Abbey, erected by Lord Chancellor Harcourt, with a long and classical epitaph, composed by Atterbury.

THE SPLENDID SHILLING.

"..... Sing, heavenly Muse !
Things unattempted yet, in prose or rhyme,"
A shilling, breeches, and chimeras dire.

HAPPY the man, who, void of cares and strife.
In silken or in leathern purse retains
A Splendid Shilling : he nor hears with pain
New oysters cry'd, nor sighs for cheerful ale ;
But with his friends, when nightly mists arise,
To Juniper's Magpie, or Town-hall * repairs :
Where, mindful of the nymph, whose wanton eye
Transfix'd his soul, and kindled amorous flames,
Chloe, or Phillis, he each circling glass
Wisheth her health, and joy, and equal love.
Meanwhile, he smokes, and laughs at merry tale,
Or pun ambiguous, or conundrum quaint.
But I, whom griping Penury surrounds,
And Hunger, sure attendant upon Want,
With scanty offals, and small acid tiff,
(Wretched repast !) my meagre corpse sustain :
Then solitary walk, or doze at home
In garret vile, and with a warming puff

Thus while my joyless minutes tedious flow,
With looks demure, and silent pace, a Dun,
Horrible monster ! hated by gods and men,
To my aërial citadel ascends,
With vocal heel thrice thundering at my gate,
With hideous accent thrice he calls ; I know
The voice ill-boding, and the solemn sound.
What should I do ? or whither turn ? Amaz'd,
Confounded, to the dark recess I fly

 Disastrous acts forbode ; in his right hand
 Long scrolls of paper solemnly he waves,
 With characters and figures dire inscrib'd,
 Grievous to mortal eyes ; (ye gods, avert [stalks
 Such plagues from righteous men !) Behind him
 Another monster, not unlike himself,
 Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd
 A catchpole, whose polluted hands the gods,
 With force incredible, and magic charms,
 First have endued : if he his ample palm
 Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay
 Of debtor, straight his body, to the touch
 Obsequious (as whilom knights were wont),
 To some enchanted castle is convey'd,
 Where gates impregnable, and coercive chains,
 A durance strict detain him, till, in form
 Of money, Pallas sets the captive free.

Beware, ye debtors ! when ye walk, beware,
 Be circumspect ; oft with insidious ken
 He casteth eyes your steps aloof, and oft
 Lies perdué in a nook or gloomy cave,
 Prompt to enchant some inadvertent wretch
 With his unhallow'd touch. So (poets sing)
 Grimalkin, to domestic vermin sworn
 An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
 Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
 Branding her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
 Ere ruin. So her disembowell'd web
 Stretches, in a hall or kitchen, spreads
 Obtrusive to vagrant flies : she secret stands
 Within her woven cell : the humming prey,
 Regardless of their fate, rush on the toils
 Inextricable, nor will aught avail
 Their arts, or arms, or shapes of lovely hue ;
 The wasp insidious, and the buzzing drone,
 And butterfly, proud of expanded wings
 Tinct with gold, entangled in her snares,
 Unless resistance make ; with eager strides,
 She towers flies to her expected spoils ;
 Her, with envenom'd jaws, the vital blood
 Sinks of reluctant foes, and to her cave
 Her bulky carcasses triumphant drags.
 So pass my days. But when nocturnal shades
 His world envelop, and th' inclement air
 Trades men to repel benumbing frosts
 With pleasant wines, and crackling blaze of wood ;
 He, lonely sitting, nor the glimmering light
 Of make-weight candle, nor the joyous talk
 Of living friend, delights : distress'd, forlorn,
 Amid the horrors of the tedious night,
 Uttering I sigh, and feed with dismal thoughts
 My anxious mind : or sometimes mournful verse
 He, and sing of groves and myrtle shades,
 Or desperate lady near a purling-stream,
 Or lover pendant on a willow-tree.
 Meanwhile I labour with eternal drought,
 And restless wish, and rave ; my parched throat
 Finds no relief, nor heavy eyes repose :
 As if a slumber haply does invade
 My weary limbs, my fancy's still awake,
 Thoughtful of drink, and eager, in a dream,
 To sip imaginary pots of ale,
 I vain ; awake I find the settled thirst
 Still gnawing, and the pleasant phantom curse.
 Thus do I live, from pleasure quite debarr'd,

Nor taste the fruits that the Sun's genial rays
 Mature, john-apple, nor the downy peach,
 Nor walnut in rough-furrow'd coat secure,
 Nor medlar, fruit delicious in decay ;
 Afflictions great ! yet greater still remain :
 My galligaskins, that have long withstood
 The winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
 By time subdued (what will not time subdue !)
 An horrid chasm disclos'd with orifice
 Wide, discontinuous ; at which the winds
 Eurus and Auster, and the dreadful force
 Of Boreas, that congeals the Cronian waves,
 Tumultuous enter with dire chilling blasts,
 Portending agues. Thus a well-fraught ship,
 Long sail'd secure, or through th' Ægean deep,
 Or the Ionian, till cruising near
 The Lilybean shore, with hideous crush
 On Scylla, or Charybdis (dangerous rocks !)
 She strikes rebounding ; whence the shatter'd oak,
 So fierce a shock unable to withstand,
 Admits the sea : in at the gaping side
 The crowding waves gush with impetuous rage,
 Resistless, overwhelming ; horrors seize
 The mariners ; Death in their eyes appears, [pray :
 They stare, they lave, they pump, they swear, they (Vain efforts !) still the battering waves rush in,
 Implacable, till, delug'd by the foam,
 The ship sinks foundering in the vast abyss.

CIDER,

A POEM, IN TWO BOOKS.

..... Honos erit huic quoque Pomo? VIRG.

Book I.

WHAT soil the apple loves, what care is due
 To orchards, timeliest when to press the fruits,
 Thy gift, Pomona, in Miltonian verse
 Adventurous I presume to sing ; of verse
 Nor skill'd, nor studious : but my native soil
 Invites me, and the theme as yet unsung.

Ye Ariconian knights, and fairest dames,
 To whom propitious Heaven these blessings grants,
 Attend my lays, nor hence disdain to learn,
 How Nature's gifts may be improv'd by art.
 And thou, O Mostyn, whose benevolence,
 And candour, oft experienc'd, me vouchsaf'd
 To knit in friendship, growing still with years,
 Accept this pledge of gratitude and love.
 May it a lasting monument remain
 Of dear respect ; that when this body frail
 Is moulder'd into dust, and I become
 As I had never been, late times may know
 I once was bless'd in such a matchless friend !

Whoe'er expects his labouring trees should bend
 With fruitage, and a kindly harvest yield,
 Be this his first concern, to find a tract
 Impervious to the winds, begirt with hills
 That intercept the Hyperborean blasts
 Tempestuous, and cold Eurus' nipping force,
 Noxious to feeble buds : but to the west
 Let him free entrance grant, let Zephyrs bland
 Administer their tepid genial airs ;
 Nought fear he from the west, whose gentle warmth
 Discloses well the Earth's all-teeming womb,
 Invigorating tender seeds ; whose breath
 Nurtures the orange, and the citron groves,

Hesperian fruits, and wafts their odours sweet
Wide through the air, and distant shores perfumes.
Nor only do the hills exclude the winds :
But when the blackening clouds in sprinkling showers

Distil, from the high summits down the rain
Runs trickling ; with the fertile moisture cheer'd,
The orchards smile ; joyous the farmers see
Their thriving plants, and bless the heavenly dew.

Next let the planter, with discretion meet,
The force and genius of each soil explore ;
To what adapted, what it shuns averse :
Without this necessary care, in vain
He hopes an apple-vintage, and invokes
Pomona's aid in vain. The miry fields,
Rejoicing in rich mould, most ample fruit
Of beauteous form produce ; pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat.
So Nature has decreed : so oft we see
Men passing fair, in outward lineaments
Elaborate ; less, inwardly, exact.
Nor from the sable ground expect success,
Nor from cretaceous, stubborn and jejune :
The Must, of pallid hue, declares the soil
Devoid of spirit ; wretched he, that quaffs
Such wheyish liquors ; oft with colic pangs,
With pungent colic pangs distress'd he'll roar,
And toss, and turn, and curse th' unwholesome draught.

But, farmer, look where full-eared sheaves of rye
Grow wavy on the tilth, that soil select
For apples : thence thy industry shall gain
Ten-fold reward : thy garners, thence with store
Surcharg'd, shall burst ; thy press with purest juice
Shall flow, which, in revolving years, may try
Thy feeble feet, and bind thy faltering tongue.
Such is the Kentchurch, such Dantzeyan ground,
Such thine, O learned Brome, and Capel such,
Willisian Burlton, much-lov'd Geers his Marsh,
And Sutton-acres, drench'd with regal blood
Of Ethelbert, when to th' unhallow'd feast
Of Mercian Offa he invited came,
To treat of spousals : long connubial joys
He promis'd to himself, allur'd by fair
Elfrida's beauty : but, deluded, dy'd
In height of hopes — oh ! hardest fate, to fall
By show of friendship, and pretended love !

I nor advise, nor reprehend the choice
Of Marcley-hill ; the apple no where finds
A kinder mould : yet 'tis unsafe to trust
Deceitful ground : who knows but that, once more,
This mount may journey, and, his present site
Forsaking, to thy neighbour's bounds transfer
The goodly plants, affording matter strange
For law-debates * ? If therefore thou incline

* February the seventh, 1571, at six o'clock in the evening, this hill roused itself with a roaring noise, and by seven the next morning had moved forty paces ; it kept moving for three days together, carrying with it sheep in their cotes, hedge-rows and trees, and in its passage overthrew Kin-naston Chapple, and turned two highways near an hundred yards from their former position. The ground thus moved was about twenty-six acres, which opened itself, and carried the earth before it for four hundred yards space, leaving that which was pasture in the place of the tillage, and the tillage overspread with pasture. See Speed's Account of Herefordshire, page 49, and Camden's Britannia.

To deck this rise with fruits of various tastes,
Fail not by frequent vows t' implore success ;
Thus piteous Heaven may fix the wandering glebe.

But if (for Nature doth not share alike
Her gifts) an happy soil should be withheld ;
If a penurious clay should be thy lot,
Or rough unwieldy earth, nor to the plough,
Nor to the cattle kind, with sandy stones
And gravel o'er-abounding, think it not
Beneath thy toil ; the sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit, and restive marl.
Thus nought is useless made ; nor is there land,
But what, or of itself, or else compell'd,
Affords advantage. On the barren heath
The shepherd tends his flock, that daily crop
Their verdant dinner from the mossy turf,
Sufficient ; after them the cackling goose,
Close-grazer, finds wherewith to ease her want.
What should I more ? Ev'n on the cliffy height
Of Penmenmaur, and that cloud-piercing hill,
Plinlimmon, from afar the traveller kens
Astonish'd, how the goats their shrubby brows
Gnaw pendent ; nor untrembling canst thou see
How from a scraggy rock, whose prominence
Half overshades the ocean, hardy men,
Fearless of rending winds, and dashing waves,
Cut samphire, to excite the squeamish gust
Of pamper'd luxury. Then, let thy ground
Not lie unlabored ; if the richest stem
Refuse to thrive, yet who would doubt to plant
Somewhat, that may to human use redound,
And penury, the worst of ills, remove ?

There are, who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mould on their ill-natur'd land
Induce laborious, and with fattening muck
Besmear the roots ; in vain ! the nursling grove
Seems fair a while, cherish'd with foster earth :
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails.

Though this art fails, despond not ; little pains
In a due hour employ'd, great profit yield.
Th' industrious, when the Sun in Leo rides,
And darts his sultriest beams, portending drought
Forgets not at the foot of every plant
To sink a circling trench, and daily pour
A just supply of alimental streams,
Exhausted sap recruiting ; else false hopes
He cherishes, nor will his fruit expect
Th' autumnal season, but, in summer's pride,
When other orchards smile, abortive fail.

Thus the great light of Heaven, that in his course
Surveys and quickens all things, often proves
Noxious to planted fields, and often men
Perceive his influence dire ; sweltering they run
To grotts, and caves, and the cool umbrage seek
Of woven arborets, and oft the rills
Still streaming fresh revisit, to allay
Thirst inextinguishable : but if the spring
Preceding should be destitute of rain,
Or blast septentrional with brushing wings
Sweep up the smoky mists, and vapours damp,
Then woe to mortals ! Titan then exerts
His heat intense, and on our vitals preys ;
Then maladies of various kinds, and names
Unknown, malignant fevers, and that foe
To blooming beauty, which imprints the face
Of fairest nymph, and checks our growing love.
Reign far and near ; grim Death in different shapes
Depopulates the nations ; thousands fall

His victims; youths, and virgins, in their flower,
Reluctant die, and sighing leave their loves
Unfinish'd, by infectious heaven destroy'd.

Such heats prevail'd, when fair Eliza, last Of Winchcomb's name (next thee in blood and worth,

O fairest St. John!) left this toilsome world
In beauty's prime, and sadden'd all the year:
Not could her virtues, nor repeated vows
Of thousand lovers, the relentless hand
Of Death arrest: she with the vulgar fell,
O'er-distinguish'd by this humble verse.

But if it please the Sun's intemperate force
To know, attend; whilst I of ancient fame
The annals trace, and image to thy mind,
How our forefathers, (luckless men!) ingulf'd
By the wide-yawning Earth, to Stygian shades
Went quick, in one sad sepulchre enclos'd.

In elder days, ere yet the Roman bands
Victorious, this our other world subdued,
A spacious city stood, with firmest walls
Are mounded, and with numerous turrets crown'd,
Martial spires, and citadels, the seat

Of kings, and heroes resolute in war,
And Ariconium: uncontroll'd and free,
All all-subduing Latian arms prevail'd.

Here also, though to foreign yoke submiss,
The undemolish'd stood, and ev'n till now
Triumphs had stood, of ancient British art
Pleasing monument, not less admir'd

Than what from Attic, or Etruscan hands
Rose; had not the heavenly Powers averse
Decreed her final doom: for now the fields
Shour'd with thirst; Aquarius had not shed
His wonted showers, and Sirius parch'd with heat

Withstand the green herb: hence 'gan relax
The ground's contexture, hence Tartarian dregs,
And nitrous spume, enkindling fierce,
Flow'd within their darksome caves, by far
More dismal than the loud dislodged roar

Of brazen enginry, that ceaseless storm
The bastion of a well-built city, deem'd
Impregnable: th' infernal winds, till now
Unconfin'd, by Titanian warmth
Heating, and with unctuous vapours fed,

Expand'd their narrow cells; and, their full strength
Exercising, from beneath the solid mass
Heav'd, and all her castles rooted deep
Toss'd from their lowest seat: old Vaga's stream,
Stopp'd by the sudden shock, her wonted track

Forsook, and drew her humid train aslope,
Unraveling her banks: and now the lowering sky,
And baleful lightning, and the thunder, voice
Of angry gods, that rattled solemn, dismay'd
The sinking hearts of men. Where should they turn

Struck? whence seek for aid? when from below
All threatens, and ev'n Fate supreme gives signs
Of wrath and desolation: vain were vows,
And plaints, and suppliant hands to Heaven erect!

Some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor, and Woden, fabled gods,
Beside with their votaries in one ruin shar'd,
Overwhelm'd, and o'erwhelm'd. Others in frantic mood
Howling through the streets; their hideous yells
And the dark welkin; Horror stalks around,

And staring, and, his sad concomitant,
Repair, of abject look: at every gate
The thronging populace with hasty strides
Runs furious, and, too eager of escape,
Obstruct the easy way; the rocking town

Supplants their footsteps: to, and fro, they reel
Astonish'd, as o'ercharg'd with wine; when lo!
The ground adust her riven mouth disparts,
Horrible chasm; profound! with swift descent
Old Ariconium sinks, and all her tribes,
Heroes, and senators, down to the realms
Of endless night. Meanwhile, the loosen'd winds,
Infuriate, molten rocks and flaming globes
Hurl'd high above the clouds; till all their force
Consum'd, her ravenous jaws th' Earth satiate clos'd.
Thus this fair city fell, of which the name
Survives alone; nor is there found a mark,
Whereby the curious passenger may learn
Her ample site, save coins, and mouldering urns,
And huge unwieldy bones, lasting remains
Of that gigantic race; which, as he breaks
The clotted glebe, the ploughman haply finds,
Appall'd. Upon that treacherous tract of land,
She whilome stood; now Ceres, in her prime,
Smiles fertile, and with ruddiest freight bedeck'd,
The apple-tree, by our forefathers blood
Improv'd, that now recalls the devious Muse,
Urging her destin'd labours to pursue.

The prudent will observe, what passions reign
In various plants (for not to man alone,
But all the wide creation, Nature gave Love, and aversion:) everlasting hate
The Vine to Ivy bears, nor less abhors
The Colewort's rankness; but with amorous twine
Clasps the tall Elm: the Pæstan Rose unfolds
Her bud more lovely, near the fetid Leek,
(Crest of stout Britons,) and enhances thence
The price of her celestial scent: the Gourd,
And thirsty Cucumber, when they perceive
Th' approaching Olive, with resentment fly
Her fatty fibres, and with tendrils creep
Diverse, detesting contact; whilst the Fig
Contemns not Rue, nor Sage's humble leaf,
Close-neighbouring: th' Herefordian plant
Caresses freely the contiguous Peach,
Hazel, and weight-resisting Palm, and likes
To approach the Quince, and the Elder's pithy stem;
Uneasy, seated by funereal Yew,
Or Walnut, (whose malignant touch impairs
All generous fruits,) or near the bitter dews
Of Cherries. Therefore weigh the habits well
Of plants, how they associate best, nor let
Ill neighbourhood corrupt thy hopeful grafts.

Would'st thou thy vats with gen'rous juice should froth?

Respect thy orchards; think not, that the trees
Spontaneous will produce an wholesome draught.
Let Art correct thy breed: from parent bough
A cion meetly sever: after, force
A way into the crabstock's close-wrought grain
By wedges, and within the living wound
Enclose the foster twig; nor over-nice
Refuse with thy own hands around to spread
The binding clay: ere-long their differing veins
Unite, and kindly nourishment convey
To the new pupil; now he shoots his arms
With quickest growth; now shake the teeming trunk,
Down rain th' empurpled balls, ambrosial fruit.
Whether the Wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist
It's feculence, which in more porous stocks
Of cider-plants finds passage free, or else
The native verjuice of the Crab, deriv'd
Through th' infix'd graft, a grateful mixture forms
Of tart and sweet; whatever be the cause,

This doubtful progeny by nicest tastes
Expected best acceptance finds, and pays
Largest revenues to the orchard-lord.

Some think the Quince and Apple would combine
In happy union ; others fitter deem
The Sloe-stem bearing Sylvan Plums austere.
Who knows but both may thrive? howe'er, what loss
To try the powers of both, and search how far
Two different natures may concur to mix
In close embraces, and strange offspring bear?
Thou'lt find that plants will frequent changes try,
Undamag'd, and their marriageable arms
Conjoin with others. So Silurian plants
Admit the Peach's odoriferous globe,
And Pears of sundry forms ; at different times
Adopted Plums will alien branches grace ;
And men have gather'd from the Hawthorn's branch
Large Medlars, imitating regal crowns.

Nor is it hard to beautify each month
With files of parti-colour'd fruits, that please
The tongue, and view, at once. So Maro's Muse,
Thrice sacred Muse! commodious precepts gives Instructive to the swains, not wholly bent
On what is gainful : sometimes she diverts
From solid counsels, shows the force of love
In savage beasts ; how virgin face divine
Attracts the helpless youth through storms and waves,
Alone, in deep of night : then she describes
The Scythian winter, nor disdains to sing
How under ground the rude Riphæan race
Mimic brisk Cider with the brakes product wild ;
Sloes pounded, Hips, and Servis' harshest juice.

Let sage Experience teach thee all the arts
Of grafting and in-eyeing ; when to lop
The flowing branches ; what trees answer best
From root, or kernel : she will best the hours
Of harvest, and seed-time declare ; by her
The different qualities of things were found,
And secret motions ; how with heavy bulk
Volatile Hermes, fluid and unmoist,
Mounts on the wings of air ; to her we owe
The Indian weed*, unknown to ancient times,
Nature's choice gift, whose acrimonious fume
Extracts superfluous juices, and refines
The blood distemper'd from its noxious salts ;
Friend to the spirits, which with vapours bland
It gently mitigates, companion fit
Of pleasantry, and wine ; nor to the bards
Unfriendly, when they to the vocal shell
Warble melodious their well-labour'd songs.
She found the polish'd glass, whose small convex
Enlarges to ten millions of degrees
The mite, invisible else, of Nature's hand
Least animal ; and shows, what laws of life
The cheese-inhabitants observe, and how
Fabric their mansions in the harden'd milk,
Wonderful artists ! But the hidden ways
Of Nature would'st thou know? how first she frames
All things in miniature? Thy specular orb
Apply to well-dissected kernels ; lo !
Strange forms arise, in each a little plant
Unfolds its boughs : observe the slender threads
Of first beginning trees, their roots, their leaves,
In narrow seeds describ'd ; thou'lt wondering say,
An inmate orchard every apple boasts.
Thus all things by experience are display'd,
And most improv'd. Then sedulously think
To meliorate thy stock ; no way, or rule,

* Tobacco.

Be unassay'd ; prevent the morning star
Assiduous, nor with the western Sun
Surcease to work ; lo ! thoughtful of thy gain,
Not of my own, I all the live-long day
Consume in meditation deep, recluse
From human converse, nor, at shut of eve,
Enjoy repose ; but oft at midnight lamp
Ply my brain-racking studies, if by chance
Thee I may counsel right ; and oft this care
Disturbs me slumbering. Wilt thou then repine
To labour for thyself? and rather choose
To lie supinely, hoping Heaven will bless
Thy slighted fruits, and give thee bread unearn'd?

'Twill profit, when the stork, sworn foe of snakes,
Returns, to show compassion to thy plants,
Fatigu'd with breeding. Let the arched knife
Well sharpen'd now assail the spreading shades
Of vegetables, and their thirsty limbs
Dissever : for the genial moisture, due
To apples, otherwise mis-spends itself
In barren twigs, and for th' expected crop,
Nought but vain shoots, and empty leaves abound.

When swelling buds their odorous foliage shed,
And gently harden into fruit, the wise
Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow
Redundant ; but the thronging clusters thin
By kind avulsion : else the starveing brood,
Void of sufficient sustenance, will yield
A slender autumn ; which the niggard soul
Too late shall weep, and curse his thrifty hand,
That would not timely ease the ponderous boughs.

It much conduces, all the cares to know
Of gardening, how to scare nocturnal thieves,
And how the little race of birds that hop
From spray to spray, scooping the costliest fruit
Insatiate, undisturb'd. Priapus' form
Avails but little ; rather guard each row
With the false terrors of a breathless kite.
This done, the timorous flock with swiftest wing
Scud through the air ; their fancy represents
His mortal talons, and his ravenous beak
Destructive ; glad to shun his hostile gripe,
They quit their thefts, and unfrequent the fields.

Besides, the filthy swine will oft invade
Thy firm enclosure, and with delving snout
The rooted forest undermine : forthwith
Halloo thy furious mastiff, bid him vex
The noxious herd, and print upon their ears
A sad memorial of their past offence.

The flagrant Procyon will not fail to bring Large shoals of slow house-bearing snails, that creep
O'er the ripe fruitage, paring slimy tracts
In the sleek rinds, and unprest Cider drink.
No art averts this pest ; on thee it lies,
With morning and with evening hand to rid
The preying reptiles ; nor, if wise, wilt thou
Decline this labour, which itself rewards
With pleasing gain, whilst the warm limbeck draws
Salubrious waters from the nocent brood.

Myriads of wasps now also clustering hang,
And drain a spurious honey from thy groves,
Their winter food ; though oft repuls'd, again
They rally, undismay'd ; but fraud with ease
Ensnarers the noisome swarms ; let every bough
Bear frequent vials, pregnant with the dregs
Of Moyle, or Mum, or Treacle's viscous juice ;
They, by th' alluring odour drawn, in haste
Fly to the dulcet cates, and crowding sip
Their palatable bane ; joyful thou'lt see
The clammy surface all o'erstrown with tribes

Of greedy insects, that with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pennons oft, to extricate
Their feet, in liquid shackles bound, till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls: such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain!

Howe'er thou may'st forbid external force,
Intestate evils will prevail; damp airs,
And rainy winters, to the centre pierce
The firmest fruits, and by unseen decay
The proper relish vitiate: then the grub
Of unobserv'd invades the vital core,
Pernicious tenant, and her secret cave
Enlarges hourly, preying on the pulp
Cessless; meanwhile the apple's outward form
Delectable the witless swain beguiles,
Till, with a writhen mouth, and spattering noise,
He tastes the bitter morsel, and rejects
Disrelish'd; not with less surprise, than when Embattled troops with flowing banners pass
Through flowery meads delighted, nor distrust
The smiling surface; whilst the cavern'd ground,
With grain incentive stor'd, by sudden blaze
Bursts fatal, and involves the hopes of war,
In fiery whirls; full of victorious thoughts,
Torn and dismember'd, they aloft expire.

Now turn thine eye to view Alcinous' groves,
The pride of the Phæacian isle, from whence,
Sailing the spaces of the boundless deep,
To Ariconium precious fruits arriv'd:
The Pippin burnish'd o'er with gold, the Moyle
Of sweetest bonied taste, the fair Permain
Temper'd, like comliest nymph, with red and white.
Salopian acres flourish with a growth
Peculiar, styl'd the Ottley: be thou first
This apple to transplant; if to the name
Its merit answers, no where shalt thou find
A wiser more priz'd, or laudable of taste.
Nor does the Eliot least deserve thy care,
Nor John-Apple, whose wither'd rind, intrencht
With many a furrow, aptly represents
Decrepit age, nor that from Harvey nam'd,
Quick-relishing: why should we sing the Thrift,
Coddling, or Pomroy, or of pimpled coat
The Russet, or the Cat's-Head's weighty orb,
Enormous in its growth, for various use
Though these are meet, though after full repast
Are oft requir'd, and crown the rich dessert?

What, though the Pear-tree rival not the worth
Of Ariconian products? yet her freight
Is not condemn'd, yet her wide-branching arms
Best screen thy mansion from the fervent Dog,
Adverse to life; the wintry hurricanes
In vain employ their roar, her trunk unmov'd
Breaks the strong onset, and controls their rage.
Chiefly the Bosbury, whose large increase,
Annual, in sumptuous banquets claims applause.
Thrice acceptable beverage! could but Art
Subdue the floating lee, Pomona's self
Would dread thy praise, and shun the dubious strife.
Be it thy choice, when summer-heats annoy,
To sit beneath her leafy canopy,
Quaffing rich liquids! oh! how sweet t' enjoy,
At once her fruits, and hospitable shade!

But how with equal numbers shall we match
The Musk's surpassing worth; that earliest gives Sure hopes of racy wine, and in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring, that defies
The vernal nippings, and cold sidereal blasts!
Yet let her to the Red-streak yield, that once

Was of the sylvan kind, uncivilis'd, -
Of no regard, till Scudamore's skilful hand
Improv'd her, and by courtly discipline
Taught her the savage nature to forget:
Hence styl'd the Scudamorean plant; whose wine
Whoever tastes, let him with grateful heart
Respect that ancient loyal house, and wish
The nobler peer, that now transcends our hopes
In early worth, his country's justest pride,
Uninterrupted joy, and health entire.

Let every tree in every garden own
The Red-streak as supreme, whose pulpy fruit
With gold irradiate, and vermilion shines,
Tempting, not fatal, as the birth of that Primeval interdicted plant that won
Fond Eve in hapless hour to taste, and die.
This, of more bounteous influence, inspires
Poetic raptures, and the lowly Muse
Kindles to loftier strains; even I perceive
Her sacred virtue. See! the numbers flow
Easy, whilst, cheer'd with her nectareous juice,
Hers, and my country's praises I exalt.
Hail Herefordian plant, that dost disdain
All other fields! Heaven's sweetest blessing, hail!
Be thou the copious matter of my song,
And thy choice nectar; on which always waits
Laughter, and sport, and care-beguiling wit,
And friendship, chief delight of human life.
What should we wish for more? or why, in quest
Of foreign vintage, insincere, and mixt,
'T' traverse th' extremest world? why tempt the rage
Of the rough ocean? when our native glebe
Imparts, from bounteous womb, annual recruits
Of wine delectable, that far surmounts
Gallic, or Latin grapes, or those that see
The setting sun near Calpe's towering height.
Nor let the Rhodian, nor the Lesbian vines
Vaunt their rich Must, nor let Tokay contend
For sovereignty; Phanæus' self must bow
To th' Ariconian vales: and shall we doubt
T' improve our vegetable wealth, or let
The soil lie idle, which, with fit manure,
With largest usury repay, alone
Empowered to supply what Nature asks
Frugal, or what nice appetite requires?
The meadows here, with battening ooze enrich'd,
Give spirit to the grass; three cubits high
The jointed herbage shoots; th' unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with store
Of golden wheat, the strength of human life.
Lo, on auxiliary poles, the hops
Ascending spiral, rang'd in meet array!
Lo, how the arable with barley-grain
Stands thick, o'ershadow'd, to the thirsty hind
Transporting prospect! these, as modern use
Ordains, infus'd, an auburn drink compose,
Wholesome, of deathless fame. Here, to the sight
Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn,
Oft interlac'd occur, and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice; so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'er-abound!
Nor are the hills unamiable, whose tops
To Heaven aspire, affording prospect sweet
To human ken; nor at their feet the vales
Descending gently, where the lowing herd
Chew verdurous pasture; nor the yellow fields
Gaily' interchang'd, with rich variety
Pleasing; as when an emerald green, enchas'd
In flamy gold, from the bright mass acquires
A nobler hue, more delicate to sight.

Next add the sylvan shades, and silent groves,
 (Haunt of the Druids) whence the Earth is fed
 With copious fuel; whence the sturdy oak,
 A prince's refuge once, th' eternal guard
 Of England's throne, by sweating peasants fell'd,
 Stems the vast main, and bears tremendous war
 To distant nations, or with sov'reign sway
 Awe the divided world to peace and love.
 Why should the Chalybes, or Bilboa boast
 Their harden'd iron; when our mines produce
 As perfect martial ore? Can Tmolus' head
 Vie with our saffron odours? or the fleece
 Bætic, or finest Tarentine, compare
 With Lemster's silken wool? Where shall we find
 Men more undaunted, for their country's weal
 More prodigal of life? In ancient days
 The Roman legions, and great Cæsar, found
 Our fathers no mean foes: and Cressy's plains,
 And Agincourt, deep-ting'd with blood, confess
 What the Silures' vigour unwithstood
 Could do in rigid fight; and chiefly what
 Brydges' wide-wasting hand, first garter'd knight,
 Puissant author of great Chandos' stem,
 High Chandos, that transmits paternal worth,
 Prudence, and ancient prowess, and renown,
 To his noble offspring. O thrice happy peer!
 That, blest with hoary vigour, view'st thyself
 Fresh blooming in thy generous son; whose lips,
 Flowing with nervous eloquence exact,
 Charm the wise senate, and attention win
 In deepest councils: Ariconium pleas'd,
 Him, as her chosen worthy, first salutes.
 Him on th' Iberian, on the Gallic shore,
 Him hardy Britons bless; his faithful hand
 Conveys new courage from afar, nor more
 The general's conduct, than his care avails.

Thee also, glorious branch of Cecil's line,
 This country claims; with pride and joy to thee
 Thy Alterennis calls: yet she endures
 Patient thy absence, since thy prudent choice
 Has fix'd thee in the Muses' fairest seat*,
 Where Aldrich† reigns, and from his endless store
 Of universal knowledge still supplies
 His noble care: he generous thoughts instils
 Of true nobility, their country's love,
 (Chief end of life,) and forms their ductile minds
 To human virtues: by his genius led,
 Thou soon in every art pre-eminent
 Shalt grace this isle, and rise to Burleigh's fame.

Hail, high-born peer! and thou, great nurse of arts,
 And men, from whence conspicuous patriots spring,
 Hammer, and Bromley; thou, to whom with due
 Respect Wintonia bows, and joyful owns
 Thy mitred offspring; be for ever blest
 With like examples, and to future times
 Proficuous, such a race of men produce,
 As, in the cause of virtue firm, may fix
 Her throne inviolate. Hear, ye gods, this vow
 From one, the meanest in her numerous train;
 Though meanest, not least studious of her praise.

Muse, raise thy voice to Beaufort's spotless fame,
 To Beaufort, in a long descent deriv'd
 From royal ancestry, of kingly rights
 Faithful assertors, in him centering meet
 Their glorious virtues, high desert from pride
 Disjoin'd, unshaken honour, and contempt
 Of strong allurements. O illustrious prince!

* Oxford.

† Dr. Aldrich, dean of Christ Church.

O thou of ancient faith! exulting, thee,
 In her fair list this happy land enrolls.
 Who can refuse a tributary verse
 To Weymouth, firmest friend of slighted worth
 In evil days? whose hospitable gate,
 Unbarr'd to all, invites a numerous train
 Of daily guests; whose board, with plenty crown'd,
 Revives the feast-rites old: meanwhile his care
 Forgets not the afflicted, but content
 In acts of secret goodness, shuns the praise,
 That sure attends. Permit me, bounteous lord,
 To blazon what, though hid, will beauteous shine,
 And with thy name to dignify my song.

But who is he, that on the winding stream
 Of Vaga first drew vital breath, and now
 Approv'd in Anna's secret councils sits,
 Weighing the sum of things, with wise forecast
 Solicitous of public good? How large
 His mind, that comprehends whate'er was known
 To old, or present time; yet not elate,
 Not conscious of its skill? What praise deserves
 His liberal hand, that gathers but to give,
 Preventing suit? O not unthankful Muse,
 Him lowly reverence, that first deign'd to hear
 Thy pipe, and screen'd thee from opprobrious
 tongues,

Acknowledge thy own Harley, and his name
 Inscribe on every bark; the wounded plants
 Will fast increase, faster thy just respect.

Such are our heroes, by their virtues known,
 Or skill in peace, and war: of softer mould
 The female sex, with sweet attractive airs
 Subdue obdurate hearts. The travellers oft,
 That view their matchless forms with transient glance,
 Catch sudden love, and sigh for nymphs unknown,
 Smit with the magic of their eyes: nor bath
 The dardal hand of Nature only pour'd
 Her gifts of outward grace; their innocence
 Unfeign'd, and virtue most engaging, free
 From pride, or artifice, long joys afford
 To th' honest nuptial bed, and in the wane
 Of life, rebate the miseries of age.

And is there found a wretch so base of mind,
 That woman's powerful beauty dares condemn,
 Exactest work of Heaven? He ill deserves
 Or love, or pity; friendless let him see
 Uneasy, tedious day, despis'd, forlorn,
 As stain of human race: but may the man,
 That cheerfully recounts the female's praise,
 Find equal love, and love's untainted sweets
 Enjoy with honour! O, ye gods! might I
 Elect my fate, my happiest choice should be
 A fair and modest virgin, that invites
 With aspect chaste, forbidding loose desire,
 Tenderly smiling; in whose heavenly eye
 Sits purest love enthron'd: but if the stars
 Malignant these my better hopes oppose,
 May I, at least, the sacred pleasures know
 Of strictest amity; nor ever want
 A friend, with whom I mutually may share
 Gladness and anguish, by kind intercourse
 Of speech and offices. May in my mind,
 Indelible a grateful sense remain
 Of favours undeserv'd! — O thou! from whom Gladly both rich and low seek aid; most wise
 Interpreter of right, whose gracious voice
 Breathes equity, and curbs too rigid law
 With mild, impartial reason; what returns
 Of thanks are due to thy beneficence
 Freely vouchsaf'd, when to the gates of Death

tended prone? if thy indulgent care had not preven'd, among unbody'd shades
 now had wander'd; and these empty thoughts of apples perish'd; but, uprais'd by thee,
 tune my pipe afresh, each night and day,
 by unexampled goodness to extol desirous; but nor night, nor day, suffice for that great task; the highly-honour'd name of Trevor must employ my willing thoughts incessant, dwell for ever on my tongue.
 Let me be grateful; but let far from me
 the fawning cringe, and false dissembling look,
 the sly flattery, that harbours oft in courts and gilded roofs. Some loose the bands of ancient friendship, cancel Nature's laws of pageantry, and tawdry gewgaws. Some announce their sires, oppose paternal right of rule and power; and others realms invade with specious shows of love. This traitorous wretch craves his sovereign. Others, destitute of real zeal, to every altar bend to procure sway'd, and act the basest things to be styl'd honourable: the honest man, simple of heart, prefers inglorious want to ill-got wealth; rather from door to door,
 a poor pilgrim, though distress'd, he'll rove,
 nor break his plighted faith; nor fear, nor hope,
 will shock his steadfast soul; rather debarr'd of common privilege, cut off from hopes of meanest gain, of present goods despoil'd,
 will bear the marks of infamy contemn'd,
 scorn'd; yet his mind, of evil pure,
 reports him, and intention free from fraud.
 He continues with observant eyes to read him, if he can't with purple stain of tawny vestments, labour'd o'er with gold,
 like the crowd, and set them all agape;
 he clad in homely weeds, from Envy's darts secure he lives, nor knows the nightly pangs of conscience, nor with spectres' grisly forms, of fears, and injur'd souls, at close of day
 may'd, sad interrupted slumbers finds;
 he as a child, whose inexperience'd age of evil purpose fears, nor knows) enjoys his sweet refreshment, humid sleep sincere.
 When Chanticleer, with clarion shrill, recalls a tardy day, he to his labours hies at home, intent on somewhat that may ease healthy mortals, and with curious search examines all the properties of herbs, with and minerals, that th' embowell'd Earth displays, if by his industry he can best human race: or else his thoughts he exercis'd with speculations deep of good, and just, and meet, and th' wholesome rules of temperance, and aught that may improve the moral life; not sedulous to rail, nor with envenom'd tongue to blast the fame of harmless men, or secret whispers spread among faithful friends, to breed distrust and hate.
 Conscious of virtue, he no life observes,
 except his own; his own employs his cares,
 his own subject! that he labours to refine his, nor of his little stock denies he aims to laziness, merciful and meek.
 Thus sacred Virgil liv'd from courtly vice,
 and bates of pompous Rome secure; at court,
 he thoughtful of the rural honest life,
 and how to improve his grounds, and how himself:
 a poet! fit exemplar for the tribe

Of Phœbus, nor less fit Mæonides,
 Poor eyeless pilgrim! and, if after these,
 If after these another I may name,
 Thus tender Spenser liv'd, with mean repast
 Content, depress'd by penury, and pin'd
 In foreign realm; yet not debas'd his verse
 By Fortune's frowns. And had that other bard*,
 Oh, had but he, that first ennobled song
 With holy rapture, like his Abdiel been;
 'Mong many faithless, strictly faithful found;
 Unpity'd, he should not have wail'd his orbs,
 That roll'd in vain to find the piercing ray,
 And found no dawn, by dim diffusion veil'd!
 But he — however, let the Muse abstain,
 Nor blast his fame, from whom she learnt to sing
 In much inferior strains, grovelling beneath
 Th' Olympian hill, on plains, and vales intent,
 Mean follower. There let her rest a while,
 Pleas'd with the fragrant walks, and cool retreat.

BOOK II.

O HARCOURT, whom th' ingenuous love of arts
 Has carry'd from thy native soil, beyond
 Th' eternal Alpine snows, and now detains
 In Italy's waste realms, how long must we Lament thy absence? whilst in sweet sojourn
 Thou view'st the relics of old Rome; or, what Unrival'd authors by their presence made
 For ever venerable, rural seats,
 Tibur, and Tusculum, or Virgil's urn,
 Green with immortal bays, which haply thou,
 Respecting his great name, dost now approach
 With bended knee, and strow with purple flowers;
 Unmindful of thy friends, that ill can brook
 This long delay. At length, dear youth, return,
 Of wit and judgment ripe in blooming years,
 And Britain's isle with Latian knowledge grace.
 Return, and let thy father's worth excite
 Thirst of pre-eminence; see! how the cause
 Of widows, and of orphans, he asserts
 With winning rhetoric, and well-argu'd law!
 Mark well his footsteps, and, like him, deserve
 Thy prince's favour, and thy country's love.

Meanwhile (although the Massic grape delights,
 Pregnant of racy juice, and Formian hills
 Temper thy cups, yet) wilt not thou reject
 Thy native liquors: lo! for thee my mill
 Now grinds choice apples, and the British vats
 O'erflow with generous Cider; far remote
 Accept this labour, nor despise the Muse,
 That, passing lands and seas, on thee attends.

Thus far of trees: the pleasing task remains,
 To sing of wines, and Autumn's blest increase.
 Th' effect of art are shown, yet what avails
 'Gainst Heaven? oft, notwithstanding all thy care
 To help thy plants, when the small fruitery seems Exempt from ills, an oriental blast
 Disastrous flies, soon as the hind fatigued
 Unyokes his team; the tender freight, unskill'd
 To bear the hot disease, distemper'd pines
 In the year's prime: the deadly plague annoys
 The wide enclosure: think not vainly now
 To treat thy neighbours with mellifluous cups,
 Thus disappointed. If the former years
 Exhibit no supplies, alas! thou must
 With tasteless water wash thy droughty throat.

* Milton.

A thousand accidents the farmer's hopes
Subvert, or check ; uncertain all his toil,
Till lusty Autumn's lukewarm days, allay'd
With gentle colds, insensibly confirm
His ripening labours : Autumn, to the fruits
Earth's various lap produces, vigour gives
Equal, intenerating milky grain,
Berries, and sky-dy'd Plums, and what in coat
Rough, or soft-rin'd, or bearded husk, or shell ;
Fat Olives, and Pistacio's fragrant nut,
And the Pine's tasteful apple : Autumn paints
Ausonian hills with Grapes ; whilst English plains
Blush with pomaceous harvests, breathing sweets.
O let me now, when the kind early dew
Unlocks th' embosom'd odours, walk among
The well-rang'd files of trees, whose full-ag'd store
Diffuse ambrosial steams, than Myrrh, or Nard,
More grateful, or perfuming flowery Bean !
Soft whispering airs, and the lark's matten song
Then woo to musing, and becalm the mind
Perplex'd with irksome thoughts. Thrice happy time,
Best portion of the various year, in which Nature rejoiceth, smiling on her works
Lovely, to full perfection wrought ! but ah !
Short are our joys, and neighbouring griefs disturb
Our pleasant hours ! inclement Winter dwells
Contiguous ; forthwith frosty blasts deface
The blithsome year : trees of their shrivell'd fruits
Are widow'd, dreary storms o'er all prevail !
Now, now 's the time, ere hasty suns forbid
To work, disburthen thou thy sapless wood
Of its rich progeny ; the turgid fruit
Abounds with mellow liquor : now exhort
Thy hinds to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder : now prepare
Materials for thy mill ; a sturdy post
Cylindric, to support the grinder's weight
Excessive ; and a flexile saw, intrench'd,
Rounding, capacious of the juicy hord.
Nor must thou not be mindful of thy press,
Long ere the vintage ; but with timely care
Shave the goat's shaggy beard, lest thou too late
In vain should'st seek a strainer to dispart
The husky, terrene dregs, from purer Must.
Be cautious next a proper steed to find,
Whose prime is past ; the vigorous horse disdains
Such servile labours, or, if forc'd, forgets
His past achievements, and victorious palms.
Blind Bayard rather, worn with work, and years,
Shall roll th' unwieldy stone ; with sober pace
He'll tread the circling path till dewy eve,
From early day-spring, pleas'd to find his age
Declining not unuseful to his lord.

Some, when the press, by utmost vigour screw'd,
Has drain'd the pulpous mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse ; thou, more wise, shall steep
Thy husks in water, and again employ
The ponderous engine. Water will imbibe
The small remains of spirit, and acquire
A vinous flavour ; this the peasants blithe
Will quaff, and whistle, as thy tinkling team
They drive, and sing of Fusca's radiant eyes,
Pleas'd with the medley draught. Nor shalt thou now
Reject the apple-cheese, though quite exhaust :
Even now 'twill cherish, and improve the roots
Of sickly plants ; new vigour hence convey'd
Will yield an harvest of unusual growth.
Such profit springs from husks discreetly us'd !

The tender apples, from their parents rent

By stormy shocks, must not neglected lie,
The prey of worms : a frugal man I knew,
Rich in one barren acre, which, subdued
By endless culture, with sufficient Must
His casks replenish'd yearly : he no more
Desir'd, nor wanted ; diligent to learn
The various seasons, and by skill repel
Invading pests, successful in his cares,
Till the damp Libyan wind, with tempests arm'd
Outrageous, bluster'd horrible amidst
His Cider-grove : o'erturn'd by furious blasts,
The sightly ranks fall prostrate, and around
Their fruitage scatter'd, from the genial boughs
Stript immature : yet did he not repine,
Nor curse his stars : but prudent, his fallen heaps Collecting, cherish'd with the tepid wreaths
Of tedded grass, and the Sun's mellowing beams
Rivall'd with artful heats, and thence procur'd
A costly liquor, by improving time,
Equall'd with what the happiest vintage bears.

But this I warn thee, and shall always warn,
No heterogeneous mixtures use, as some
With wat'ry turnips have debas'd their wines,
Too frugal ; nor let the crude humours dance
In heated brass, steaming with fire intense ;
Although Devonian much commends the use
Of strengthening Vulcan : with their native strength
Thy wines sufficient, other aid refuse ;
And, when th' allotted orb of time's complete,
Are more commended than the labour'd drinks.

Nor let thy avarice tempt thee to withdraw
The priest's appointed share ; with cheerful heart
The tenth of thy increase bestow, and own
Heaven's bounteous goodness, that will sure repay
Thy grateful duty : this neglected, fear
Signal vengeance, such as overtook
A miser, that unjustly once withheld
The clergy's due : relying on himself,
His fields he tended, with successful care,
Early and late, when or unwish'd-for rain
Descended, or unseasonable frosts
Curb'd his increasing hopes ; or, when around
The clouds dropt fatness, in the middle sky
The dew suspended staid, and left unmoist
His execrable glebe : recording this,
Be just, and wise, and tremble to transgress.

Learn now the promise of the coming year,
To know, that by no flattering signs abus'd,
Thou wisely may'st provide : the various Moon
Prophetic, and attendant stars, explain
Each rising dawn ; ere icy crusts surmount
The current stream. the heavenly orbs serene
Twinkle with trembling rays, and Cynthia glows
With light unsully'd : now the fowler, warn'd
By these good omens, with swift early steps [glad Treads the crimp earth, ranging through fields
Offensive to the birds ; sulphureous death
Checks their mid flight, and heedless while they strain
Their tuneful throats, the towering, heavy lead
O'ertakes their speed ; they leave their little lives
Above the clouds, precipitant to Earth.

The woodcock's early visit, and abode
Of long continuance in our temperate clime,
Foretell a liberal harvest ; he of times
Intelligent, the harsh Hyperborean ice
Shuns for our equal winters ; when our suns
Cleave the chill'd soil, he backward wings his way
To Scandinavian frozen summers, meet
For his numb'd blood. But nothing profits more Than frequent snows : O, may'st thou often see

by furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain nutritious! secret nitre lurks within be porous wet, quickening the languid glebe.
 Sometimes thou shalt with fervent vows implore
 A moderate wind: the orchard loves to wave
 With winter winds, before the gems exert
 Their feeble heads; the loosen'd roots then drink
 Large increment, earnest of happy years.

Nor will it nothing profit to observe
 The monthly stars, their powerful influence
 O'er planted fields, what vegetables reign
 Under each sign. On our account has Jove
 Indulgent, to all moons some succulent plant allotted, that poor helpless man might slack
 His present thirst, and matter find for toil.
 Now will the Corinths, now the Rasps, supply
 Delicious draughts; the Quinces now, or Plums,
 Or Cherries, or the fair Thisbeian fruit
 Are prest to wines; the Britons squeeze the works
 Of sedulous bees, and mixing odorous herbs
 Prepare balsamic cups, to wheezing lungs
 Medicinal, and short-breath'd, ancient sires.

But, if thou 'rt indefatigably bent
 On toil, and omnifarious drinks would'st brew;
 Besides the orchard, every hedge and bush
 Offers assistance; ev'n afflictive Birch,
 Nurs'd by unletter'd, idle youth, distils
 A limpid current from her wounded bark,
 A refuse of nursing sap. When solar beams
 Warm thirsty human veins, the damask'd meads,
 Adorn'd, display ten thousand painted flowers
 Useful in potables. Thy little sons
 Permit to range the pastures: gladly they
 Will mow the Cowslip-posies, faintly sweet,
 From whence thou artificial wines shalt drain
 Of icy taste, that, in mid fervours, best
 Relieve craving thirst, and mitigate the day.

Happy Ierne*, whose most wholesome air
 Poisons envenom'd spiders, and forbids
 The baleful toad, and viper, from her shore!
 More happy in her balmy draughts, enrich'd
 With miscellaneous spices, and the root,
 (For thirst-abating sweetness prais'd) which wide
 Extends her fame, and to each drooping heart
 Presents redress, and lively health convey.

See, how the Belgæ, sedulous and stout,
 With bowls of fattening Mum, or blissful cups
 Of kernel-relish'd fluids, the fair star
 Of early Phosphorus salute, at noon
 Beset with frequent-rising fumes! by use
 Instructed, thus to quell their native phlegm
 Prevailing, and engender wayward mirth.

What need to treat of distant climes, remov'd
 Far from the sloping journey of the year,
 Beyond Petsora, and Islandic coasts?
 Where ever-during snows, perpetual shades
 Of darkness, would congeal their livid blood,
 Did not the Arctic tract spontaneous yield
 A cheering purple berry, big with wine,
 Intensely fervent, which each hour they crave,
 Spread round a flaming pile of pines, and oft
 They interlard their native drinks with choice
 Of strongest Brandy, yet scarce with these aids
 Enabled to prevent the sudden rot
 Of freezing nose, and quick-decaying feet

Nor less the sable borderers of Nile,
 Nor they who Taprobane manure, nor they,
 Whom sunny Bornio bears, are stor'd with streams

* Ireland.

Egregious, Rum, and Rice's spirit extract.
 For here, expos'd to perpendicular rays,
 In vain they covet shades, and Thracia's gales,
 Pining with equinoctial heat, unless
 The cordial glass perpetual motion keep,
 Quick circuiting; nor dare they close their eyes,
 Void of a bulky charger near their lips,
 With which, in often interrupted sleep,
 Their frying blood compels to irrigate
 Their dry-furr'd tongues, else minutely to death
 Obnoxious, dismal death, th' effect of drought!

More happy they, born in Columbus' world,
 Carybbs, and they, whom the Cotton plant
 With downy-sprouting vests arrays! their woods
 Bow with prodigious nuts, that give at once
 Celestial food, and nectar; then, at hand
 The Lemon, uncorrupt with voyage long,
 To vinous spirits added (heavenly drink!)
 They with pneumatic engine ceaseless draw,
 Intent on laughter; a continual tide
 Flows from th' exhilarating fount. As, when Against a secret cliff, with sudden shock
 A ship is dash'd, and leaking drinks the sea,
 Th' astonish'd mariners aye ply the pump,
 Nor stay, nor rest, till the wide breach is clos'd:
 So they (but cheerful) unfatigued, still move
 The draining sucker, then alone concern'd
 When the dry bowl forbids their pleasing work.

But if to hoarding thou art bent, thy hopes
 Are frustrate, should'st thou think thy pipes will flow
 With early limpid wine. The hoarded store,
 And the harsh draught, must twice endure the Sun's Kind strengthening heat, twice Winter's purging cold.

There are, that a compounded fluid drain
 From different mixtures, Woodcock, Pippin, Moyle,
 Rough Eliot, sweet Permain: the blended streams
 (Each mutually correcting each) create
 A pleasurable medley, of what taste
 Hardly distinguish'd; as the showery arch,
 With listed colours gay, ore, azure, gules,
 Delights and puzzles the beholder's eye,
 That views the wat'ry brede, with thousand shows
 Of painture vary'd, yet 's unskill'd to tell
 Or where one colour rises, or one faints.

Some Ciders have by art, or age, unlearn'd
 Their genuine relish, and of sundry vines
 Assum'd the flavour; one sort counterfeits
 The Spanish product; this, to Gauls has seem'd
 The sparkling Nectar of Champagne; with that,
 A German oft has swill'd his throat, and sworn,
 Deluded, that imperial Rhine bestow'd
 The generous rummer, whilst the owner, pleas'd,
 Laughs inly at his guests, thus entertain'd
 With foreign vintage from his cider cask.

Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells
 Of close-press'd husks is freed, thou must refrain
 Thy thirsty soul; let none persuade to broach
 Thy thick, unwholesome, undigested cades:
 The hoary frosts, and northern blasts, take care
 Thy muddy beverage to serene, and drive
 Precipitant the baser, ropy lees.

And now thy wine's transpicuous, purg'd from all
 Its earthy gross, yet let it feed awhile
 On the fat refuse, lest, too soon disjoin'd,
 From sprightly, it to sharp or rapid change.
 When to convenient vigour it attains,
 Suffice it to provide a brazen tube
 Inflexible; self-taught, and voluntary, flies
 The defecated liquor, through the vent

Ascending, then by downward tract convey'd,
Spouts into subject vessels, lovely clear.
As when a noontide sun, with summer beams,
Darts through a cloud, her wat'ry skirts are edg'd
With lucid amber, or undrossy gold :
So, and so richly, the purg'd liquid shines.

Now also, when the colds abate, nor yet
Full summer shines, a dubious season, close
In glass thy purer streams, and let them gain,
From due confinement, spirit, and flavour new.

For this intent, the subtle chymist feeds
Perpetual flames, whose unresisted force,
O'er sand, and ashes, and the stubborn flint
Prevailing, turns into a fusil sea,
That in his furnace bubbles sunny-red :
From hence a glowing drop with hollow'd steel
He takes, and by one efficacious breath
Dilates to a surprising cube, or sphere,
Or oval, and fit receptacles forms
For every liquid, with his plastic lungs,
To human life subservient ; by his means
Ciders in metal frail improve : the Moyle,
And tasteful Pippin, in a moon's short year,
Acquire complete perfection : now they smoke
Transparent, sparkling in each drop, delight
Of curious palate, by fair virgins crav'd.
But harsher fluids different lengths of time
Expect : thy flask will slowly mitigate
The Eliot's roughness. Sirom, firmest fruit,
Embottled (long as Priæmian Troy
Withstood the Greeks) endures, ere justly mild.
Softened by age, it youthful vigour gains.
Fallacious drink ! ye honest men, beware,
Nor trust its smoothness ; the third circling glass
Suffices virtue : but may hypocrites,
(That slyly speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as Hell) pleas'd with the relish weak,
Drink on unwarn'd, till by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose,
And through intemperance grow awhile sincere.

The farmer's toil is done ; his cades mature
Now call for vent ; his lands exhaust permit
To indulge awhile. Now solemn rites he pays
To Bacchus, author of heart-cheering mirth.
His honest friends, at thirsty hour of dusk,
Come uninvited ; he with bounteous hand
Imparts his smoking vintage, sweet reward
Of his own industry ; the well-fraught bowl
Circles incessant, whilst the humble cell
With quavering laugh and rural jests resounds.
Ease, and content, and undissembled love,
Shine in each face ; the thoughts of labour past
Increase their joy : As, from retentive cage
When sullen Philomel escapes, her notes
She varies, and of past imprisonment
Sweetly complains ; her liberty retriev'd
Cheers her sad soul, improves her pleasing song.
Gladsome they quaff, yet not exceed the bounds
Of healthy temperance, nor encroach on night,
Season of rest, but well bedew'd repair
Each to his home, with unsupplanted feet.
Ere Heaven's emblazon'd by the rosy dawn,
Domestic cares awake them ; brisk they rise,
Refresh'd, and lively with the joys that flow
From amicable talk, and moderate cups
Sweetly interchang'd. The pining lover finds
Present redress, and long oblivion drinks
Of coy Lucinda. Give the debtor wine ;
His joys are short, and few ; yet when he drinks,
His dread retires, the flowing glasses add

Courage and mirth : magnificent in thought,
Imaginary riches he enjoys,
And in the gaol expatiates unconfin'd.
Nor can the poet Bacchus' praise indite,
Debarr'd his grape : the Muses still require
Humid regalement, nor will aught avail
Imploring Phœbus, with unmoisten'd lips.
Thus to the generous bottle all incline,
By parching thirst allur'd : with vehement sums
When dusty Summer bakes the crumbling chods,
How pleasant is 't, beneath the twisted arch
Of a retreating bower, in mid-day's reign
To ply the sweet carouse, remote from noise,
Secur'd of feverish heats ! When th' aged year
Inclines, and Boreas' spirit blusters frore,
Beware th' inclement Heavens ; now let thy hearth
Crackle with juiceless boughs ; thy lingering blood
Now instigate with th' apple's powerful streams.
Perpetual showers, and stormy gusts confine
The willing ploughman, and December warns
To annual jollities ; now sportive youth
Carol incondite rhymes, with suiting notes,
And quaver unharmonious ; sturdy swains
In clean array for rustic dance prepare,
Mixt with the buxom damsels ; hand in hand
They frisk and bound, and various mazes weave,
Shaking their brawny limbs, with uncouth mien,
Transported, and sometimes an oblique leer
Dart on their loves, sometimes an hasty kiss
Steal from unwary lasses ; they with scorn,
And neck reclin'd, resent the ravish'd bliss.
Meanwhile blind British bards with volant touch
Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes
Provoke to harmless revels ; these among,
A subtle artist stands, with wondrous bag
That bears imprison'd winds (of gentler sort
Than those, which erst Laertes' son enclos'd.)
Peaceful they sleep ; but let the tuneful squeeze
Of labouring elbow rouse them, out they fly
Melodious, and with sprightly accents charm.
'Midst these desports, forget they not to drench
Themselves with bellying goblets ; nor, when Spring
Returns, can they refuse to usher in
The fresh-born year with loud acclaim, and store
Of jovial draughts, now, when the sappy boughs
Attire themselves with blooms, sweet rudiments
Of future harvest. When the Gnosian crown
Leads on expected autumn, and the trees
Discharge their mellow burthens, let them thank
Boon Nature, that thus annually supplies
Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts
Exhilarates their languid minds, within
The golden mean confin'd : beyond there's nought
Of health, or pleasure. Therefore, when thy heart
Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul
Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, be sure
'Tis time to shun it ; if thou wilt prolong
Dire computation, forthwith Reason quits
Her empire to confusion, and misrule,
And vain debates ; then twenty tongues at once
Conspire in senseless jargon, nought is heard
But din, and various clamour, and mad rant :
Distrust, and jealousy to these succeed,
And anger-kindling taunt, the certain bane
Of well-knit fellowship. Now horrid frays
Commence, the brimming glasses now are hurl'd
With dire intent ; bottles with bottles clash
In rude encounter, round their temples fly
The sharp-edg'd fragments, down their batter'd cheeks

fix'd gore and cider flow. What shall we say
 Of rash Elpenor, who in evil hour
 Drank an immeasurable bowl, and thought
 To exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep,
 Imprudent? him Death's iron-sleep opprest,
 Descending careless from his couch; the fall
 Split his neck-joint, and spinal marrow bruis'd.
 Nor need we tell what anxious cares attend
 The turbulent mirth of wine; nor all the kinds
 Of maladies, that lead to Death's grim cave,
 Brought by intemperance, joint-racking gout,
 Measles stone, and pining atrophy,
 Kill even when the Sun with July heats
 Burns the scorch'd soil, and dropsy all a-float,
 Of craving liquids: nor the Centaurs tale
 Is here repeated; how, with lust and wine
 Stam'd, they fought, and split their drunken souls
 In feasting hour. Ye heavenly Powers, that guard
 The British isles, such dire events remove
 From fair Albion, nor let civil broils
 Arise from social cups: may we, remote
 From the hoarse, brazen sound of war, enjoy
 The humid products, and with seemly draughts
 Kindle mirth, and hospitable love.
 Too oft, alas! has mutual hatred drench'd
 Our swords in native blood; too oft has pride,
 And hellish discord, and insatiate thirst
 Of others rights, our quiet discompos'd.
 How we forgot, how fell Destruction rag'd
 In spreading, when by Eris' torch incens'd
 Our fathers warr'd? what heroes, signalis'd
 For loyalty and prowess, met their fate
 Too timely, undeserv'd! how Bertie fell,
 Eglon, and Granville, dauntless sons of Mars,
 Victims of endless grief, but that we view
 Their virtues yet surviving in their race!
 How we forget, how the mad, headstrong rout
 Slay'd their prince to arms, nor made account
 Of faith or duty, or allegiance sworn?
 How late, atheist rebels! bent to ill,
 In seeming sanctity, and cover'd fraud,
 Kill'd by him, who first presum'd to oppose
 Their impotence; alike their crime, the event
 Is not alike; these triumph'd, and in height
 Of barbarous malice, and insulting pride,
 Remain'd not from imperial blood. O fact
 Parallel'd! O Charles, O best of kings!
 How stars their black disastrous influence shed
 On thy nativity, that thou should'st fall
 Slain by inglorious hands, in this thy realm,
 Prime and innocent, adjudg'd to death
 When those thy mercy only would have sav'd!
 How was the Cider-land unstain'd with guilt;
 The Cider-land, obsequious still to thrones,
 How'd such base disloyal deeds, and all
 Its pruning-hooks extended into swords,
 Mounted, to assert the trampled rights
 Of monarchy: but, ah! successful she,
 Never faithful! then was no regard
 To right, or wrong. And this once happy land,
 By homebred fury rent, long groan'd beneath
 Tyrannic sway, till fair revolving years
 Restor'd exil'd kings and liberty restor'd.
 Now we exult, by mighty Anna's care
 Secure at home, while she to foreign realms
 Sends forth her dreadful legions, and restrains
 The rage of kings: here, nobly she supports
 Oppress'd; here, her victorious arms
 Quell the ambitious: from her hand alone
 All Europe fears revenge, or hopes redress.

Rejoice, O Albion! sever'd from the world
 By Nature's wise indulgence, indigent
 Of nothing from without; in one supreme Entirely blest; and from beginning time
 Design'd thus happy; but the fond desire
 Of rule and grandeur multiply'd a race
 Of kings, and numerous sceptres introduc'd,
 Destructive of the public weal. For now
 Each potentate, as wary fear, or strength,
 Or emulation urg'd, his neighbour's bounds
 Invades, and ampler territory seeks
 With ruinous assault; on every plain
 Host cop'd with host, dire was the din of war,
 And ceaseless, or short truce haply procur'd
 By havoc, and dismay, till jealousy
 Rais'd new combustion. Thus was peace in vain
 Sought for by martial deeds, and conflict stern:
 Till Edgar grateful (as to those who pine
 A dismal half-year night, the orient beam
 Of Phœbus' lamp) arose, and into one
 Cemented all the long-contending powers,
 Pacific monarch; then her lovely head
 Concord rear'd high, and all around diffus'd
 The spirit of love. At ease, the bards new strung
 Their silent harps, and taught the woods and vales,
 In uncouth rhymes, to echo Edgar's name.
 Then gladness smil'd in every eye; the years
 Ran smoothly on, productive of a line
 Of wise, heroic kings, that by just laws
 Establish'd happiness at home, or crush'd
 Insulting enemies in furthest climes.

See lion-hearted Richard, with his force
 Drawn from the North, to Jewry's hallow'd plains!
 Piously valiant (like a torrent swell'd
 With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds,
 Breaking a way impetuous, and involves Within its sweep, trees, houses, men) he press'd
 Amidst the thickest battle, and o'erthrew
 Whate'er withstood his zealous rage: no pause,
 No stay of slaughter, found his vigorous arm,
 But th' unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight,
 Smote in the rear, and with dishonest wounds
 Mangled behind. The Soldan, as he fled,
 Oft call'd on Alla, gnashing with despite,
 And shame, and murmur'd many an empty curse.

Behold third Edward's streamers blazing high
 On Gallia's hostile ground! his right withheld,
 Awakens vengeance. O imprudent Gauls,
 Relying on false hopes, thus to incense
 The warlike English! One important day
 Shall teach you meaner thoughts. Eager of fight,
 Fierce Brutus' offspring to the adverse front
 Advance resistless, and their deep array
 With furious inroad pierce: the mighty force
 Of Edward twice o'eturn'd their desperate king;
 Twice he arose, and join'd the horrid shock:
 The third time, with his wide-extended wings,
 He fugitive declin'd superior strength,
 Discomfited; pursued, in the sad chase
 Ten thousand ignominious fall; with blood
 The vallies float. Great Edward thus aveng'd,
 With golden Iris his broad shield emboss'd.

Thrice glorious prince! whom Fame with all her
 Tongues
 For ever shall resound. Yet from his loins
 New authors of dissension spring: from him
 Two branches, that in hosting long contend
 For sov'reign sway; and can such anger dwell
 In noblest minds? But little now avail'd
 The ties of friendship; every man, as led

By inclination, or vain hope, repair'd
 To either camp, and breath'd immortal hate,
 And dire revenge. Now horrid Slaughter reigns :
 Sons against fathers tilt the fatal lance,
 Careless of duty, and their native grounds
 Distain with kindred blood ; the twanging bows
 Send showers of shafts, that on their barbed points
 Alternate ruin bear. Here might you see
 Barons, and peasants on th' embattled field
 Slain, or half-dead, in one huge, ghastly heap
 Promiscuously amass'd. With dismal groans,
 And ejulation, in the pangs of death
 Some call for aid, neglected ; some o'erturn'd
 In the fierce shock, lie gasping, and expire,
 Trampled by fiery coursers : Horror thus,
 And wild Uproar, and Desolation, reign'd
 Unrespited. Ah ! who at length will end
 This long, pernicious fray ? what man has Fate
 Reserv'd for this great work ? — Hail, happy prince
 Of Tudor's race, whom in the womb of Time
 Cadwallador foresaw ! thou, thou art he,
 Great Richmond Henry, that by nuptial rites
 Must close the gates of Janus, and remove Destructive Discord. Now no more the drum
 Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangour shrill
 Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood ;
 But joy and pleasure open to the view
 Uninterrupted ! with presaging skill
 Thou to thy own unitest Fergus' line
 By wise alliance : from thee James descends,
 Heaven's chosen favourite, first Britannic king.
 To him alone hereditary right
 Gave power supreme ; yet still some seeds remain'd
 Of discontent : two nations under one,
 In laws and interest diverse, still pursued

Peculiar ends, on each side resolute
 To fly conjunction ; neither fear, nor hope,
 Nor the sweet prospect of a mutual gain,
 Could aught avail, till prudent Anna said,
 Let there be union : strait with reverence due
 To her command, they willingly unite,
 One in affection, laws and government,
 Indissolubly firm ; from Dubris south,
 To northern Orcades, her long domain.

And now, thus leagued by an eternal bond,
 What shall retard the Britons' bold designs,
 Or who sustain their force, in union knit,
 Sufficient to withstand the powers combin'd
 Of all this globe ? At this important act
 The Mauritanian and Cathaian kings
 Already tremble, and th' unbaptis'd Turk
 Dreads war from utmost Thule. Uncontroll'd
 The British navy through the ocean vast
 Shall wave her double cross, t' extremest climes
 Terrific, and return with odorous spoils
 Of Araby well fraught, or Indus' wealth,
 Pearl, and barbaric gold : meanwhile the swains
 Shall unmolested reap what Plenty strows
 From well-stor'd horn, rich grain, and timely fruits
 The elder year, Pomona, pleas'd, shall deck
 With ruby-tinctur'd births, whose liquid store
 Abundant, flowing in well-blended streams,
 The native shall applaud ; while glad they talk
 Of baleful ills, caus'd by Bellona's wrath
 In other realms ; where'er the British spread
 Triumphant banners, or their fame has reach'd
 Diffusive, to the utmost bounds of this
 Wide universe, Silurian cider borne
 Shall please all tastes, and triumph o'er the vine.

THOMAS PARNELL.

THOMAS PARNELL, an agreeable poet, was descended from an ancient family in Cheshire. His father, who was attached to the cause of the Parliament in the civil wars of Charles I., withdrew to Ireland after the Restoration, where he purchased an estate. His eldest son, Thomas, was born at Dublin, in 1679, and received his school education in that city. At an early age he was removed to the college, where he was admitted to the degree of M. A. in 1700, took deacon's orders the same year, and was ordained priest three years afterwards. In 1705 he was presented to the benefice of Clogher, and about the same time married a lady of great beauty and merit. He began to make those frequent excursions to England, in which the most desirable part of his life was thenceforth spent. His first connections were principally with the Whigs, at that time in power; and Addison, Congreve, and Steele are named among his chief companions. When, at the latter part of Queen Anne's reign, the Tories were triumphant, Parnell deserted his former friends, and associated with Swift, Pope, Gay, and Arbuthnot. Swift introduced him to Lord-Treasurer Weymouth; and, with the dictatorial air which he was fond of assuming, insisted upon the Treasurer's bringing with his staff in his hand into the anti-chamber, where Parnell was waiting to welcome him. It is said of this poet, that every year, as soon as he had collected the rents of his estate, and the value of his benefices, he came over to England, and spent some months, living in an elegant style, rather impairing than improving his fortune. At this time he was an assiduous preacher in the London pulpits, with the intention of rising to notice; but the change of the ministry at Queen Anne's death put an end to his more brilliant prospects in the church. By means, however, of Swift's recommendation to Archbishop King, he obtained a prebend, and the valuable living of Finglass.

His domestic happiness received a severe shock in 1712, by the death of his beloved wife; and it was the effect on his spirits of this affliction which led him into such a habit of intemperance in wine as shortened his days. This, at least, is the gloss put upon the circumstance by his historian, Goldsmith, who represents him, "as in some measure a martyr to conjugal fidelity." But it can scarcely be doubted, that this mode of life had already been formed when his very unequal spirits had required the aid of a glass for his support. He died at Chester, on his way to Ireland, in July 1717, in the thirty-eighth year of his age, and was buried in Trinity Church, in that city.

Parnell was the author of several pieces, both in prose and verse; but it is only by the latter that he is now known. Of these a collection was published by Pope, with a dedication to the Earl of Oxford. Their characters are ease, sprightliness, fancy, clearness of language, and melody of versification; and though not ranking among the most finished productions of the British muse, they claim a place among the most pleasing. A large addition to these was made in a work printed in Dublin, in 1758, of which Dr. Johnson says, "I know not whence they came, nor have ever enquired whither they are going."

FAIRY TALE,

IN THE ANCIENT ENGLISH STYLE.

In Britain's isle, and Arthur's days,
When midnight fairies danc'd the maze,
Liv'd Edwin of the Green;
Edwin, I wis, a gentle youth,
Endow'd with courage, sense, and truth,
Though badly shap'd he'd been.

His mountain back mote well be said,
To measure height against his head,
And lift itself above:
Yet, spite of all that Nature did
To make his uncouth form forbid,
This creature dar'd to love.

He felt the charms of Edith's eyes,
Nor wanted hope to gain the prize,
Could ladies look within;
But one sir Topaz dress'd with art,
And, if a shape could win a heart,
He had a shape to win.

Edwin, if right I read my song,
With slighted passion pac'd along
All in the moony light ;
'Twas near an old enchanted court,
Where sportive fairies made resort
To revel out the night.

His heart was drear, his hope was cross'd,
'Twas late, 'twas far, the path was lost
That reach'd the neighbour-town ;
With weary steps he quits the shades,
Resolv'd, the darkling dome he treads,
And drops his limbs adown.

But scant he lays him on the floor,
When hollow winds remove the door,
And trembling rocks the ground :
And, well I ween to count aright,
At once a hundred tapers light
On all the walls around.

Now sounding tongues assail his ear,
Now sounding feet approached near,
And now the sounds increase :
And from the corner where he lay
He sees a train profusely gay,
Come pranking o'er the place.

But (trust me, gentles!) never yet
Was dight a masquing half so neat,
Or half so rich before ;
The country lent the sweet perfumes,
The sea the pearl, the sky the plumes,
The town its silken store.

Now whilst he gaz'd, a gallant drest
In flaunting robes above the rest,
With awful accent cry'd ;
What mortal of a wretched mind,
Whose sighs infect the balmy wind,
Has here presum'd to hide ?

At this the swain, whose venturous soul
No fears of magic art control,
Advanc'd in open sight ;
" Nor have I cause of dread," he said,
" Who view, by no presumption led,
Your revels of the night.

" 'Twas grief, for scorn of faithful love,
Which made my steps unweeting rove
Amid the nightly dew."
" 'Tis well," the gallant cries again,
" We fairies never injure men
Who dare to tell us true.

" Exalt thy love-dejected heart,
Be mine the task, or ere we part,
To make thee grief resign ;
Now take the pleasure of thy chance ;
Whilst I with Mab, my partner, daunce,
Be little Mable thine."

He spoke, and all a sudden there
Light music floats in wanton air ;
The monarch leads the queen :
The rest their fairy partners found :
And Mable trimly tript the ground
With Edwin of the Green.

The dauncing past, the board was laid,
And sicker such a feast was made,
As heart and lip desire,
Withouten hands the dishes fly,
The glasses with a wish come nigh,
And with a wish retire.

But, now to please the fairy king,
Full every deal they laugh and sing,
And antic feats devise ;
Some wind and tumble like an ape,
And other some transmute their shape
In Edwin's wondering eyes.

Till one at last, that Robin hight,
Renown'd for pinching maids by night,
Has bent him up aloof :
And full against the beam he flung,
Where by the back the youth he hung
To spraul unneath the roof.

From thence, " Reverse my charm," he cries,
" And let it fairly now suffice
The gambol has been shown."
But Oberon answers with a smile,
" Content thee, Edwin, for a while,
The vantage is thine own."

Here ended all the phantom-play ;
They smelt the fresh approach of day,
And heard a cock to crow ;
The whirling wind that bore the crowd
Has clapp'd the door, and whistled loud,
To warn them all to go.

Then screaming all at once they fly,
And all at once the tapers dye ;
Poor Edwin falls to floor ;
Forlorn his state, and dark the place,
Was never wight in such a case
Through all the land before.

But soon as Dan Apollo rose,
Full jolly creature home he goes,
He feels his back the less ;
His honest tongue and steady mind
Had rid him of the lump behind,
Which made him want success.

With lusty livelyhed he talks,
He seems a dauncing as he walks,
His story soon took wind ;
And beauteous Edith sees the youth
Endow'd with courage, sense, and truth,
Without a bunch behind.

The story told, sir Topaz mov'd,
The youth of Edith erst approv'd,
To see the revel scene :
At close of eve he leaves his home,
And wends to find the ruin'd dome
All on the gloomy plain.

As there he bides, it so befell,
The wind came rustling down a dell,
A shaking seiz'd the wall ;
Up spring the tapers as before,
The fairies bragly foot the floor,
And music fills the hall.

But certes sorely sunk with woe
 Sir Topaz sees the elphin show,
 His spirits in him dye :
 When Oberon cries, " A man is near,
 A mortal passion, cleeped fear,
 Hangs flagging in the sky."

With that sir Topaz, hapless youth !
 In accents faltering, ay for ruth,
 Entreats them pity graunt ;
 For als he been a mister wight
 Betray'd by wandering in the night
 To tread the circled haunt ;

" Ah, loael vile," at once they roar :
 " And little skill'd of fairie lore,
 Thy cause to come, we know :
 Now has thy kestrel courage fell ;
 And fairies, since a lye you tell,
 Are free to work thee woe."

Then Will, who bears the whispy fire
 To trail the swains among the mire,
 The caitiff upward flung ;
 There, like a tortoise, in a shop
 He dangled from the chamber-top,
 Where whilome Edwin hung.

The revel now proceeds apace,
 Deftly they frisk it o'er the place,
 They sit, they drink, and eat ;
 The time with frolic mirth beguile,
 And poor sir Topaz hangs the while
 Till all the rout retreat.

By this the stars began to wink,
 They shriek, they fly, the tapers sink,
 And down y-drops the knight :
 For never spell by fairie laid
 With strong enchantment bound a glade,
 Beyond the length of night.

Chill, dark, alone, adreed, he lay,
 Till up the welkin rose the day,
 Then deem'd the dole was o'er ;
 But wot ye well his harder lot ?
 His seely back the bunch had got
 Which Edwin lost afore.

This tale a Sybil-nurse ared ;
 She softly stroak'd my youngling head,
 And when the tale was done,
 " Thus some are born, my son," she cries,
 " With base impediments to rise,
 And some are born with none.

" But virtue can itself advance
 To what the favourite fools of chance
 By fortune seem design'd ;
 Virtue can gain the odds of Fate,
 And from itself shake off the weight
 Upon th' unworthy mind."

A NIGHT-PIECE ON DEATH.

By the blue taper's trembling light,
 No more I waste the wakeful night,
 Intent with endless view to pore
 The schoolmen and the sages o'er :
 Their books from wisdom widely stray,
 Or point at best the longest way
 I'll seek a readier path, and go
 Where wisdom 's surely taught below.

How deep yon azure dyes the sky !
 Where orbs of gold unnumber'd lie,
 While through their ranks in silver pride
 The nether crescent seems to glide.
 The slumbering breeze forgets to breathe,
 The lake is smooth and clear beneath,
 Where once again the spangled show
 Descends to meet our eyes below.
 The grounds, which on the right aspire,
 In dimness from the view retire :
 The left presents a place of graves,
 Whose wall the silent water laves.
 That steeple guides thy doubtful sight
 Among the livid gleams of night.
 There pass with melancholy state
 By all the solemn heaps of Fate,
 And think, as softly-sad you tread
 Above the venerable dead,
Time was, like thee, thy life possess,
And time shall be, that thou shalt rest.

Those with bending osier bound,
 That nameless heave the crumbled ground,
 Quick to the glancing thought disclose,
 Where toil and poverty repose.

The flat smooth stones that bear a name,
 The chisel's slender help to fame,
 (Which ere our set of friends decay
 Their frequent steps may wear away)
 A middle race of mortals own,
 Men, half ambitious, all unknown.

The marble tombs that rise on high,
 Whose dead in vaulted arches lie,
 Whose pillars swell with sculptur'd stones,
 Arms, angels, epitaphs, and bones,
 These, all the poor remains of state,
 Adorn the rich, or praise the great ;
 Who, while on Earth in fame they live,
 Are senseless of the fame they give.

Ha ! while I gaze, pale Cynthia fades,
 The bursting earth unveils the shades !
 All slow, and wan, and wrap'd with shrouds,
 They rise in visionary crowds,
 And all with sober accent cry,
 " Think, mortal, what it is to die."

Now from yon black and funeral yew.
 That bathes the charnel-house with dew,
 Methinks, I hear a voice begin ;
 (Ye ravens, cease your croaking din,
 Ye tolling clocks, no time resound
 O'er the long lake and midnight ground !)
 It sends a peal of hollow groans,
 Thus speaking from among the bones.

" When men my scythe and darts supply,
 How great a king of fears am I !
 They view me like the last of things ;
 They make, and then they draw, my strings.
 Fools ! if you less provok'd your fears,
 No more my spectre-form appears.
 Death's but a path that must be trod,
 If man would ever pass to God :

A port of calms, a state to ease
From the rough rage of swelling seas."

Why then thy flowing sable stoles,
Deep pendant cypress, mourning poles,
Loose scarfs to fall athwart thy weeds,
Long palls, drawn hearses, cover'd steeds,
And plumes of black, that, as they tread,
Nod o'er the escutcheons of the dead?

Nor can the parted body know,
Nor wants the soul these forms of woe;
As men who long in prison dwell,
With lamps that glimmer round the cell,
Whene'er their suffering years are run,
Spring forth to greet the glittering Sun:
Such joy, though far transcending sense,
Have pious souls at parting hence.
On Earth, and in the body plac'd,
A few, and evil years, they waste:
But when their chains are cast aside,
See the glad scene unfolding wide,
Clap the glad wing, and tower away,
And mingle with the blaze of day.

THE HERMIT.

FAR in a wild, unknown to public view,
From youth to age a reverend hermit grew;
The moss his bed, the cave his humble cell,
His food the fruits, his drink the crystal well:
Remote from men, with God he pass'd the days,
Prayer all his business, all his pleasure praise.

A life so sacred, such serene repose,
Seem'd Heaven itself, till one suggestion rose;
That Vice should triumph, Virtue, Vice obey,
This sprung some doubt of Providence's sway:
His hopes no more a certain prospect boast,
And all the tenour of his soul is lost:
So when a smooth expanse receives imprest
Calm Nature's image on its watery breast,
Down bend the banks, the trees depending grow,
And skies beneath with answering colours glow:
But if a stone the gentle sea divide,
Swift ruffling circles curl on every side,
And glimmering fragments of a broken Sun,
Banks, trees, and skies, in thick disorder run.

To clear this doubt, to know the world by sight,
To find if books, or swains, report it right,
(For yet by swains alone the world he knew,
Whose feet came wandering o'er the nightly dew)
He quits his cell; the pilgrim-staff he bore,
And fix'd the scallop in his hat before;
Then with the Sun a rising journey went,
Sedate to think, and watching each event.

The morn was wasted in the pathless grass,
And long and lonesome was the wild to pass;
But when the southern Sun had warm'd the day,
A youth came posting o'er a crossing way;
His raiment decent, his complexion fair,
And soft in graceful ringlets wav'd his hair.
Then near approaching, "Father, hail!" he cry'd,
"And hail, my son," the reverend sire reply'd;
Words follow'd words, from question answer flow'd,
And talk of various kind deceiv'd the road;
Till each with other pleas'd, and loth to part,
While in their age they differ, join in heart.
Thus stands an aged elm in ivy bound,
Thus youthful ivy clasps an elm around.

Now sunk the Sun; the closing hour of day
Came onward, mantled o'er with sober grey;
Nature in silence bid the world repose;
When near the road a stately palace rose:
There by the Moon through ranks of trees they pass
Whose verdure crown'd their sloping sides of grass.
It chanc'd the noble master of the dome
Still made his house the wandering stranger's home:
Yet still the kindness, from a thirst of praise,
Prov'd the vain flourish of expensive ease.
The pair arrive: the livery'd servants wait;
Their lord receives them at the pompous gate.
The table groans with costly piles of food,
And all is more than hospitably good.

Then led to rest, the day's long toil they drown,
Deep sunk in sleep, and silk, and heaps of down.
At length 'tis morn, and at the dawn of day,
Along the wide canals the zephyrs play:
Fresh o'er the gay parterres the breezes creep,
And shake the neighbouring wood to banish sleep.
Up rise the guests, obedient to the call:
An early banquet deck'd the splendid hall;
Rich luscious wine a golden goblet grac'd,
Which the kind master forc'd the guests to taste.
Then, pleas'd and thankful, from the porch they go:
And, but the landlord, none had cause of woe:
His cup was vanish'd; for in secret guise
The younger guest purloin'd the glittering prize.

As one who spies a serpent in his way,
Glistening and basking in the summer ray,
Disorder'd stops to shun the danger near,
Then walks with faintness on, and looks with fear;
So seem'd the sire; when far upon the road,
The shining spoil his wily partner show'd.
He stopp'd with silence, walk'd with trembling heart,
And much he wish'd, but durst not ask to part.
Murmuring he lifts his eyes, and thinks it hard,
That generous actions meet a base reward.

While thus they pass, the Sun his glory shrouds,
The changing skies hang out their sable clouds;
A sound in air presag'd approaching rain,
And beasts to covert scud across the plain.
Warn'd by the signs, the wandering pair retreat,
To seek for shelter at a neighbouring seat.
'Twas built with turrets on a rising ground,
And strong, and large, and unimprov'd around;
Its owner's temper, timorous and severe,
Unkind and griping, caus'd a desert there.

As near the miser's heavy doors they drew,
Fierce rising gusts with sudden fury blew;
The nimble lightning mix'd with showers began,
And o'er their heads loud rolling thunders ran.
Here long they knock, but knock or call in vain.
Driven by the wind, and batter'd by the rain.
At length some pity warm'd the master's breast,
('Twas then his threshold first receiv'd a guest):
Slow creaking turns the door with jealous care,
And half he welcomes in the shivering pair;
One frugal fagot lights the naked walls,
And Nature's fervour through their limbs recalls.
Bread of the coarsest sort, with eager wine,
(Each hardly granted) serv'd them both to dine:
And when the tempest first appear'd to cease,
A ready warning bid them part in peace.

With still remark the pondering hermit view'd,
In one so rich, a life so poor and rude;
"And why should such" within himself he cry'd,
"Lock the lost wealth a thousand want beside?"
But what new marks of wonder soon take place,
In every settling feature of his face;

When from his vest the young companion bore
That cup, the generous landlord own'd before,
And paid profusely with the precious bowl
The stinted kindness of this churlish soul.

But now the clouds in airy tumult fly ;
The Sun emerging opes an azure sky ;
A fresher green the smelling leaves display,
And, glittering as they tremble, cheer the day :
The weather courts them from the poor retreat,
And the glad master bolts the wary gate.

While hence they walk, the pilgrim's bosom wrought

With all the travel of uncertain thought ;
His partner's acts without their cause appear,
'Twas there a vice, and seem'd a madness here :
Detesting that, and pitying this, he goes,
Lost and confounded with the various shows.

Now Night's dim shades again involve the sky,
Again the wanderers want a place to lie,
Again they search, and find a lodging nigh,
The soil improv'd around, the mansion neat,
And neither poorly low, nor idly great :
It seem'd to speak its master's turn of mind,
Content, and not to praise, but virtue kind.

Hither the walkers turn with weary feet,
Then bless the mansion, and the master greet :
Their greeting fair, bestow'd with modest guise,
The courteous master hears, and thus replies :
" Without a vain, without a grudging heart,
To him who gives us all, I yield a part ;
From him you come, for him accept it here,
A frank and sober, more than costly cheer."
He spoke, and bid the welcome table spread,
Then talk of virtue till the time of bed,
When the grave household round his hall repair,
Warn'd by a bell, and close the hours with prayer.

At length the world, renew'd by calm repose,
Was strong for toil, the dappled Morn arose ;
Before the pilgrims part, the younger crept,
Near the clos'd cradle where an infant slept,
And with'd his neck : the landlord's little pride,
Strange return ! grew black, and gasp'd, and dy'd.
Horror of horrors ! what ! his only son !
How look'd our hermit when the fact was done ;
Kne Hell, though Hell's black jaws in sunder part,
And breathe blue fire, could more assault his heart.

Confus'd, and struck with silence at the deed,
He flies, but trembling, fails to fly with speed.
His steps the youth pursues ; the country lay
Perplex'd with roads, a servant show'd the way :
A river cross'd the path ; the passage o'er
Was nice to find ; the servant trod before ;
Long arms of oaks an open bridge supply'd,
And deep the waves beneath the bending glide.
The youth, who seem'd to watch a time to sin,
Approach'd the careless guide, and thrust him in ;
Plunging he falls, and rising lifts his head,
Then flashing turns, and sinks among the dead.

Wild, sparkling rage inflames the father's eyes,
He bursts the bands of fear, and madly cries,
' Detested wretch !' — But scarce his speech began,
When the strange partner seem'd no longer man :
His youthful face grew more serenely sweet ;
His robe turn'd white, and flow'd upon his feet ;
Fair rounds of radiant points invest his hair ;
Celestial odours breathe through purpled air ;
And wings, whose colours glitter'd on the day,
Wide at his back their gradual plumes display.
The form ethereal burst upon his sight,
And moves in all the majesty of light.

Though loud at first the pilgrim's passion grew,
Sudden he gaz'd, and wist not what to do ;
Surprise in secret chains his words suspends,
And in a calm his settling temper ends.
But silence here the beauteous angel broke
(The voice of music ravish'd as he spoke).

" Thy prayer, thy praise, thy life to vice unknown,
In sweet memorial rise before the throne :
These charms, success in our bright region find,
And force an angel down, to calm thy mind ;
For this, commission'd, I forsook the sky,
Nay, cease to kneel — thy fellow-servant I.

" Then know the truth of government divine,
And let these scruples be no longer thine.

" The Maker justly claims that world he made,
In this the right of Providence is laid ;
Its sacred majesty through all depends
On using second means to work his ends :
'Tis thus, withdrawn in state from human eye,
The power exerts his attributes on high,
Your actions uses, nor controls your will,
And bids the doubting sons of men be still.

" What strange events can strike with more surprise,

Than those which lately struck thy wondering eyes ?
Yet, taught by these, confess th' Almighty just,
And where you can't unriddle, learn to trust !

" The great, vain man, who far'd on costly food,
Whose life was too luxurious to be good ;
Who made his ivory stands with goblets shine,
And forc'd his guests to morning draughts of wine,
Has, with the cup, the graceless custom lost,
And still he welcomes, but with less of cost.

" The mean, suspicious wretch, whose bolted door
Ne'er mov'd in duty to the wandering poor ;
With him I left the cup, to teach his mind
That Heaven can bless, if mortals will be kind.
Conscious of wanting worth, he views the bowl,
And feels compassion touch his grateful soul.
Thus artists melt the sullen ore of lead,
With heaping coals of fire upon its head ;
In the kind warmth the metal learns to glow,
And loose from dross the silver runs below.

" Long had our pious friend in virtue trod,
But now the child half-wean'd his heart from God ;
(Child of his age) for him he liv'd in pain,
And measur'd back his steps to Earth again.
To what excesses had his dotage run ?

But God, to save the father, took the son.
To all but thee, in fits he seem'd to go,
(And 'twas my ministry to deal the blow,)
The poor fond parent, humbled in the dust,
Now owns in tears the punishment was just.

" But now had all his fortune felt a wrack,
Had that false servant sped in safety back ;
This night his treasur'd heaps he meant to steal,
And what a fund of charity would fail !
Thus Heaven instructs thy mind : this trial o'er,
Depart in peace, resign, and sin no more."

On sounding pinions here the youth withdrew,
The sage stood wondering as the seraph flew.
Thus look'd Elisha when, to mount on high,
His master took the chariot of the sky ;
The fiery pomp ascending left to view ;
The prophet gaz'd, and wish'd to follow too.

The bending hermit here a prayer begun,
" Lord ! as in Heaven, on Earth thy will be done :"
Then gladly turning sought his ancient place,
And pass'd a life of piety and peace.

HESIOD :

OR,

THE RISE OF WOMAN.

WHAT ancient times (those times we fancy wise)
Have left on long record of woman's rise,
What morals teach it, and what fables hide,
What author wrote it, how that author dy'd,
All these I sing. In Greece they fram'd the tale
(In Greece 'twas thought a woman might be frail);
Ye modern beauties! where the poet drew
His softest pencil, think he dreamt of you;
And, warn'd by him, ye wanton pens beware
How Heaven's concern'd to vindicate the fair.
The case was Hesiod's; he the fable writ;
Some think with meaning, some with idle wit:
Perhaps 'tis either, as the ladies please;
I wave the contest, and commence the lays.

In days of yore (no matter where or when,
'Twas ere the low creation swarm'd with men)
That one Prometheus, sprung of heavenly birth,
(Our author's song can witness) liv'd on Earth:
He carv'd the turf to mould a manly frame,
And stole from Jove his animating flame.

The sly contrivance o'er Olympus ran,
When thus the monarch of the stars began:

"O vers'd in arts! whose daring thoughts aspire,
To kindle clay with never-dying fire!
Enjoy thy glory past, that gift was thine;
The next thy creature meets, be fairly mine:
And such a gift, a vengeance so design'd,
As suits the counsel of a god to find;
A pleasing bosom-cheat, a specious ill,
Which felt the curse, yet covets still to feel."

He said, and Vulcan straight the sire commands,
To temper mortar with ethereal hands;
In such a shape to mould a rising fair,
As virgin goddesses are proud to wear;
To make her eyes with diamond-water shine,
And form her organs for a voice divine.
'Twas thus the sire ordain'd: the power obey'd;
And work'd, and wonder'd at the work he made;
The fairest, softest, sweetest frame beneath,
Now made to seem, now more than seem to breathe.

As Vulcan ends, the cheerful queen of charms
Clasp'd the new-panting creature in her arms:
From that embrace a fine complexion spread,
Where mingled whiteness glow'd with softer red.
Then in a kiss she breath'd her various arts,
Of trifling prettily with wounded hearts;
A mind for love, but still a changing mind:
The lisp affected, and the glance design'd;
The sweet confusing blush, the secret wink,
The gentle swimming walk, the courteous sink;
The stare for strangeness fit, for scorn the frown;
For decent yielding, looks declining down;
The practis'd languish, where well-feign'd desire
Would own its melting in a mutual fire;
Gay smiles to comfort: April showers to move;
And all the nature, all the art of love.

Gold scepter'd Juno next exalts the fair;
Her touch endows her with imperious air,
Self-valuing fancy, highly-crested pride,
Strong sovereign will, and some desire to chide;
For which, an eloquence, that aims to vex,
With native troops of anger, arms the sex.
Minerva, skilful goddess, train'd the maid
To twirle the spindle by the twisting thread;

To fix the loom, instruct the reeds to part,
Cross the long weft, and close the web with art,
An useful gift; but what profuse expense,
What world of fashions, took its rise from hence!

Young Hermes next, a close contriving god,
Her brows encircled with his serpent rod;
Then plots and fair excuses fill'd her brain,
The views of breaking amorous vows for gain;
The price of favours; the designing arts
That aim at riches in contempt of hearts;
And, for a comfort in the marriage life,
The little pilfering temper of a wife.

Full on the fair his beams Apollo flung,
And fond persuasion tipp'd her easy tongue;
He gave her words, where oily flattery lays
The pleasing colours of the art of praise;
And wit, to scandal exquisitely prone,
Which frets another's spleen to cure its own.

Those sacred Virgins whom the bards revere
Tun'd all her voice, and shed a sweetness there,
To make her sense with double charms abound,
Or make her lively nonsense please by sound.

To dress the maid, the decent Graces brought
A robe in all the dyes of beauty wrought,
And plac'd their boxes o'er a rich brocade,
Where pictur'd Loves on every cover play'd;
Then spread those implements that Vulcan's art
Had fram'd to merit Cytherea's heart;
The wire to curl, the close indented comb
To call the locks, that lightly wander, home;
And chief, the mirror, where the ravish'd maid
Beholds and loves her own reflected shade.

Fair Flora lent her stores; the purpled Hours
Confin'd her tresses with a wreath of flowers;
Within the wreath arose a radiant crown;
A veil pellucid hung depending down;
Back roll'd her azure veil with serpent fold,
The purpled border deck'd the floor with gold.
Her robe (which closely by the girdle brac'd Reveal'd the beauties of a slender waist)
Flow'd to the feet, to copy Venus' air,
When Venus' statues have a robe to wear.

The new-sprung creature, finish'd thus for harm,
Adjusts her habit, practises her charms,
With blushes glows, or shines with lively smiles,
Confirms her will, or recollects her wiles:
Then, conscious of her worth, with easy pace
Glides by the glass, and turning views her face.

A finer flax than what they wrought before,
Through Time's deep cave, the sister Fates explore,
Then fix the loom, their fingers nimbly weave,
And thus their toil prophetic songs deceive.

"Flow from the rock, my flax! and swiftly flow
Pursue thy thread; the spindle runs below.
A creature fond and changing, fair and vain,
The creature woman, rises now to reign.
New beauty blooms, a beauty form'd to fly;
New love begins, a love produc'd to die;
New parts distress the troubled scenes of life,
The fondling mistress, and the ruling wife.

"Men born to labour, all with pains provide;
Women have time to sacrifice to pride:
They want the care of man, their want they know,
And dress to please with heart-alluring show;
The show prevailing, for the sway contend,
And make a servant where they meet a friend.

"Thus in a thousand wax-erected forts
A loitering race the painful bee supports;
From sun to sun, from bank to bank he flies,
With honey loads his bag, with wax his thighs;

Fly where he will, at home the race remain,
Prune the silk dress, and murmuring eat the gain:

"Yet here and there we grant a gentle bride,
Whose temper betters by the father's side;
Unlike the rest that double human care,
Fond to relieve, or resolute to share:

Happy the man whom thus his stars advance!
The curse is general, but the blessing chance."

Thus sung the sisters, while the gods admire
Their beauteous creature, made for man in ire;
The young Pandora she, whom all contend
To make too perfect not to gain her end:
Then bid the winds, that fly to breathe the spring,
Return to bear her on a gentle wing;
With wafting airs the winds obsequious blow,
And land the shining vengeance safe below.
A golden coffer in her hand she bore,
The present treacherous, but the bearer more;
'Twas fraught with pangs; for Jove ordain'd above,
That gold should aid, and pangs attend on love.

Her gay descent the man perceiv'd afar,
Wondering he ran to catch the falling star:
But so surpris'd, as none but he can tell,
Who lov'd so quickly, and who lov'd so well.
O'er all his veins the wandering passion burns,
He calls her nymph, and every nymph by turns.
Her form to lovely Venus he prefers,
Or swears that Venus' must be such as hers.
She, proud to rule, yet strangely fram'd to tease,
Neglects his offers while her airs she plays,
Shoots scornful glances from the bended frown,
In brisk disorder trips it up and down;
Then hums a careless tune to lay the storm,
And sits, and blushes, smiles, and yields, in form.

"Now take what Jove design'd," she softly cry'd,
"This box thy portion, and myself the bride."
Fir'd with the prospect of the double charms,
He snatch'd the box, and bride, with eager arms.

Unhappy man! to whom so bright she shone,
The fatal gift, her tempting self, unknown!
The winds were silent, all the waves asleep,
And Heaven was trac'd upon the flattering deep:
But, whilst he looks unmindful of a storm,
And thinks the water wears a stable form,
What dreadful din around his ears shall rise!
What frowns confuse his picture of the skies!

At first the creature man was fram'd alone,
Lord of himself, and all the world his own.
For him the nymphs in green forsook the woods,
For him the nymphs in blue forsook the floods;
In vain the Satyrs rage, the Tritons rave,
They bore him heroes in the secret cave.
No care destroy'd, no sick disorder prey'd,
No bending age his sprightly form decay'd,
No wars were known, no females heard to rage,
And, poets tell us, 'twas a golden age.

When woman came, those ills the box confin'd
Burst furious out, and poison'd all the wind,
From point to point, from pole to pole they flew,
Spread as they went, and in the progress grew:
The nymphs regretting left the mortal race,
And altering Nature wore a sickly face.
New terms of folly rose, new states of care;
New plagues, to suffer, and to please, the fair!
The days of whining, and of wild intrigues,
Commenc'd, or finish'd with the breach of leagues;
The mean designs of well-dissembled love;
The sordid matches never join'd above:
Abroad the labour, and at home the noise,
(Man's double sufferings for domestic joys,)

The curse of jealousy; expense and strife;
Divorce, the public brand of shameful life;
The rival's sword; the qualm that takes the fair;
Disdain for passion, passion in despair —
These, and a thousand yet unnam'd, we find;
Ah fear the thousand yet unnam'd behind!

Thus on Parnassus tuneful Hesiod sung,
The mountain echoed, and the valley rung,
The sacred groves a fix'd attention show,
The crystal Helicon forebore to flow,
The sky grew bright, and (if his verse be true)
The Muses came to give the laurel too.
But what avail'd the verdant prize of wit,
If Love swore vengeance for the tales he writ?
Ye fair offended, hear your friend relate
What heavy judgment prov'd the writer's fate,
Though when it happen'd no relation clears,
'Tis thought in five, or five and twenty years.

Where, dark and silent, with a twisted shade
The neighbouring woods a native arbour made,
There oft a tender pair, for amorous play
Retiring, toy'd the ravish'd hours away;
A Locrian youth, the gentle Troilus he,
A fair Milesian, kind Evanthe she:
But swelling nature in a fatal hour
Betray'd the secrets of the conscious bower;
The dire disgrace her brothers count their own,
And track her steps, to make its author known.

It chanc'd one evening, 'twas the lover's day,
Conceal'd in brakes the jealous kindred lay;
When Hesiod, wandering, mus'd along the plain,
And fix'd his seat where love had fix'd the scene;
A strong suspicion straight possess their mind,
(For poets ever were a gentle kind,)
But when Evanthe near the passage stood,
Flung back a doubtful look, and shot the wood,
"Now take" (at once they cry) "thy due reward,"
And, urg'd with erring rage, assault the bard.
His corpse the sea receiv'd. The dolphins bore
( 'Twas all the gods would do) the corpse to shore.

Methinks I view the dead with pitying eyes,
And see the dreams of ancient wisdom rise:
I see the Muses round the body cry,
But here a Cupid loudly laughing by;
He wields his arrow with insulting hand,
And thus inscribes the moral on the sand.
"Here Hesiod lies: ye future bards, beware
How far your moral tales incense the fair.
Unlov'd, unloving, 'twas his fate to bleed;
Without his quiver, Cupid caus'd the deed:
He judg'd this turn of malice justly due,
And Hesiod dy'd for joys he never knew."

AN ALLEGORY ON MAN.

A THOUGHTFUL being, long and spare,
Our race of mortals call him Care,
(Were Homer living, well he knew
What name the gods have call'd him too,)
With fine mechanic genius wrought,
And lov'd to work, though no one bought.
This being, by a model bred
In Jove's eternal sable head,
Contriv'd a shape empower'd to breathe,
And be the worldling here beneath.

The man rose, staring like a stake;
Wondering to see himself awake!

Then look'd so wise, before he knew
The business he was made to do ;
That, pleas'd to see with what a grace
He gravely show'd his forward face,
Jove talk'd of breeding him on high,
An under-something of the sky.

But ere he gave the mighty nod,
Which ever binds a poet's god,
(For which his curls ambrosial shake,
And mother Earth's oblig'd to quake,)
He saw old mother Earth arise,
She stood confess'd before his eyes ;
But not with what we read she wore,
A castle for a crown before,
Nor with long streets and longer roads
Dangling behind her, like commodes :
As yet with wreaths alone she drest,
And trail'd a landskip-painted vest.
Then thrice she rais'd, as Ovid said,
And thrice she bow'd her weighty head.

Her honours made, " Great Jove," she cry'd,
" This thing was fashion'd from my side :
His hands, his heart, his head are mine ;
Then what hast thou to call him thine ?"

" Nay, rather ask," the monarch said,
" What boots his hand, his heart, his head,
Were what I gave remov'd away ?
Thy part's an idle shape of clay."

" Halves, more than halves!" cry'd honest Care,
" Your pleas would make your titles fair,
You claim the body, you the soul,
But I who join'd them, claim the whole."

Thus with the gods debate began,
On such a trivial cause, as man.
And can celestial tempers rage ?
Quoth Virgil, in a later age ?

As thus they wrangled, Time came by ;
(There's none that paint him such as I,
For what the fabling ancients sung
Makes Saturn old, when Time was young).
As yet his winters had not shed
Their silver honours on his head ;
He just had got his pinions free,
From his old sire, Eternity.
A serpent girdled round he wore,
The tail within the mouth, before ;
By which our almanacs are clear
That learned Egypt meant the year.
A staff he carry'd, where on high
A glass was fix'd to measure by,
As amber boxes made a show
For heads of canes an age ago.
His vest, for day and night, was py'd ;
A bending sickle arm'd his side ;
And Spring's new months his train adorn !
The other seasons were unborn.

Known by the gods, as near he draws,
They make him umpire of the cause.
O'er a low trunk his arm he laid,
Where since his hours a dial made ;
Then leaning heard the nice debate,
And thus pronounc'd the words of Fate :

" Since body from the parent Earth,
And soul from Jove receiv'd a birth,
Return they where they first began ;
But since their union makes the man,
Till Jove and Earth shall part these two,
To Care who join'd them, man is due."

He said, and sprung with swift career
To trace a circle for the year ;

Where ever since the seasons wheel
And tread on one another's heel."

" 'Tis well," said Jove, and for consent
Thundering he shook the firmament.
" Our umpire Time shall have his way,
With Care I let the creature stay :
Let business vex him, avarice blind,
Let doubt and knowledge rack his mind,
Let error act, opinion speak,
And want afflict, and sickness break,
And anger burn, dejection chill,
And joy distract, and sorrow kill,
Till, arm'd by Care, and taught to mow,
Time draws the long destructive blow ;
And wasted man, whose quick decay
Comes hurrying on before his day,
Shall only find by this decree,
The soul flies sooner back to me."

THE BOOK-WORM.

Come hither, boy, we'll hunt to-day,
The book-worm, ravening beast of prey,
Produc'd by parent Earth, at odds,
As Fame reports it, with the gods.
Him frantic hunger wildly drives
Against a thousand authors' lives :
Through all the fields of wit he flies ;
Dreadful his head with clustering eyes,
With horns without, and tusks within,
And scales to serve him for a skin.
Observe him nearly, lest he climb
To wound the bards of ancient time,
Or down the vale of fancy go
To tear some modern wretch below.
On every corner fix thine eye,
Or ten to one he slips thee by.
See where his teeth a passage eat :
We'll rouse him from the deep retreat.
But who the shelter's forc'd to give ?
'Tis sacred Virgil, as I live !
From leaf to leaf, from song to song,
He draws the tadpole form along,
He mounts the gilded edge before,
He's up, he scuds the cover o'er,
He turns, he doubles, there he past,
And here we have him, caught at last.
Insatiate brute, whose teeth abuse
The sweetest servants of the Muse —
(Nay never offer to deny,
I took thee in the fact to fly).
His roses nipt in every page,
My poor Anacreon mourns thy rage ;
By thee my Ovid wounded lies ;
By thee my Lesbia's sparrow dies ;
Thy rabid teeth have half destroy'd
The work of love in Biddy Floyd,
They rent Belinda's locks away,
And spoil'd the Blouzelind of Gay.
For all, for every single deed,
Relentless Justice bids thee bleed.
Then fall a victim to the Nine,
Myself the priest, my desk the shrine.
Bring Homer, Virgil, Tasso near,
To pile a sacred altar here ;
Hold, boy, thy hand out-runs thy wit,
You reach'd the plays that Dennis writ ;

You reach'd me Philips' rustic strain ;
 Pray take your mortal bards again.
 Come, bind the victim, — there he lies,
 And here between his numerous eyes
 This venerable dust I lay,
 From manuscripts just swept away.

The goblet in my hand I take,
 (For the libation's yet to make,)
 A health to poets ! all their days
 May they have bread, as well as praise ;
 Sense may they seek, and less engage
 In papers fill'd with party-rage.
 But if their riches spoil their vein,
 Ye Muses, make them poor again.

Now bring the weapon, yonder blade,
 With which my tuneful pens are made.
 I strike the scales that arm thee round,
 And twice and thrice I print the wound ;
 The sacred altar floats with red,
 And now he dies, and now he's dead.

How like the son of Jove I stand,
 This Hydra stretch'd beneath my hand !
 Lay bare the monster's entrails here,
 To see what dangers threat the year :
 Ye gods ! what sonnets on a wench !
 What lean translations out of French !
 'Tis plain, this lobe is so unsound,
 S— prints, before the months go round.

But hold, before I close the scene,
 The sacred altar should be clean.
 Oh had I Shadwell's second bays,
 Or, Tate ! thy pert and humble lays !
 (Ye pair, forgive me, when I vow
 I never miss'd your works till now,)
 I'd tear the leaves to wipe the shrine,
 (That only way you please the Nine,)
 But since I chance to want these two,
 I'll make the songs of Durfey do.

Rent from the corps, on yonder pin,
 I hang the scales that brac'd it in ;
 I hang my studious morning-gown,
 And write my own inscription down.

" This trophy from the Pithon won,
 This robe, in which the deed was done,
 These, Parnell, glorying in the feat,
 Hung on these shelves, the Muses' seat.
 Here Ignorance and Hunger found
 Large realms of Wit to ravage round :
 Here Ignorance and Hunger fell ?
 Two foes in one I sent to Hell.
 Ye poets, who my labours see,
 Come share the triumph all with me !
 Ye critics ! born to vex the Muse,
 Go mourn the grand ally you lose."

NICHOLAS ROWE.

NICHOLAS ROWE, descended from an ancient family in Devonshire, was the son of John Rowe, Esquire, a barrister of reputation and extensive practice. He was born in 1673, at the house of his maternal grandfather, at Little Berkford, in Bedfordshire. Being placed at Westminster-school, under Dr. Busby, he pursued the classical studies of that place with credit. At the age of sixteen he was removed from school, and entered a student of the Middle Temple, it being his father's intention to bring him up to his own profession; but the death of this parent, when Nicholas was only nineteen, freed him from what he probably thought a pursuit foreign to his disposition; and he turned his chief studies to poetry and polite literature. At the age of twenty-five he produced his first tragedy, "The Ambitious Stepmother;" which was afterwards succeeded by "Tamerlane;" "The Fair Penitent;" "Ulysses;" "The Royal Convert;" "Jane Shore;" and "Lady Jane Grey." Of these, though all have their merits, the third and the two last alone keep possession of the stage; but Jane Shore in particular never fails to be viewed with deep interest. His plays, from which are derived his principal claims upon posterity, are chiefly founded on the model of French tragedy; and in his diction, which is poetical without being bombastic or affected; in his versification, which is singularly sweet; and in tirades of sentiment, given with force and elegance, he has few competitors.

As a miscellaneous poet, Rowe occupies but an inconsiderable place among his countrymen; but it has been thought proper to give some of his songs or ballads in the pastoral strain; which have a touching simplicity, scarcely excelled by any pieces of the kind. His principal efforts, however, were in poetical translation; and his version of Lucan's Pharsalia has been placed by Dr. Johnson among the greatest productions of English poetry.

In politics, Rowe joined the party of the Whigs, under whose influence he had some gainful posts, without reckoning that of poet-laureat, on the accession of George I. He was twice married to women of good connections, by the first of whom he had a son, and by the second, a daughter. He died in December, 1718, in the 45th year of his age, and was interred among the poets in Westminster Abbey.

COLIN'S COMPLAINT.

A SONG, TO THE TUNE OF "GRIM KING OF THE GHOSTS."

DESPAIRING beside a clear stream,
A shepherd forsaken was laid;
And while a false nymph was his theme,
A willow supported his head.
The wind that blew over the plain,
To his sighs with a sigh did reply;
And the brook, in return to his pain,
Ran mournfully murmuring by.

"Alas, silly swain that I was!"
Thus sadly complaining, he cry'd,
"When first I beheld that fair face,
'Twere better by far I had dy'd.
She talk'd, and I bless'd the dear tongue;
When she smil'd, 'twas a pleasure too great.
I listen'd, and cry'd, when she sung,
Was nightingale ever so sweet?"

"How foolish was I to believe
She could doat on so lowly a clown,
Or that her fond heart would not grieve,
To forsake the fine folk of the town?
To think that a beauty so gay,
So kind and so constant would prove;
Or go clad like our maidens in gray,
Or live in a cottage on love?"

"What though I have skill to complain,
Though the Muses my temples have crown'd;
What though, when they hear my soft strain,
The virgins sit weeping around.
Ah, Colin, thy hopes are in vain,
Thy pipe and thy laurel resign;
Thy false-one inclines to a swain,
Whose music is sweeter than thine.

"And you, my companions so dear,
Who sorrow to see me betray'd,
Whatever I suffer, forbear,
Forbear to accuse the false maid.

Though through the wide world I should range,
'Tis in vain from my fortune to fly ;
'Twas hers to be false and to change,
'Tis mine to be constant and die.

" If while my hard fate I sustain,
In her breast any pity is found,
Let her come with the nymphs of the plain,
And see me laid low in the ground.
The last humble boon that I crave,
Is to shade me with cypress and yew ;
And when she looks down on my grave,
Let her own that her shepherd was true.

" Then to her new love let her go,
And deck her in golden array,
Be finest at every fine show,
And frolic it all the long day ;
While Colin, forgotten and gone,
No more shall be talk'd of, or seen,
Unless when beneath the pale Moon,
His ghost shall glide over the green."

THE CONTENTED SHEPHERD.

TO MRS. A—— D——.

As on a summer's day
In the greenwood shade I lay,
The maid that I lov'd,
As her fancy mov'd,
Came walking forth that way.

And as she passed by
With a scornful glance of her eye,
" What a shame," quoth she,
" For a swain must it be,
Like a lazy loon for to die !

" And dost thou nothing heed,
What Pan our God has decreed ;
What a prize to-day
Shall be given away,
To the sweetest shepherd's reed !

" There's not a single swain
Of all this fruitful plain,
But with hopes and fears
Now busily prepares
The bonny boon to gain.

" Shall another maiden shine
In brighter array than thine ?
Up, up, dull swain,
Tune thy pipe once again,
And make the garland mine."

" Alas ! my love," he cry'd,
" What avails this courtly pride ?
Since thy dear desert
Is written in my heart
What is all the world beside ?

" To me thou art more gay,
In this homely russet gray,
Than the nymphs of our green,
So trim and so sheen ;
Or the brightest queen of May.

• Afterwards his wife.

" What though my fortune frown,
And deny thee a silken gown ;
My own dear maid,
Be content with this shade,
And a shepherd all thy own."

SONG.

AH WILLOW. TO THE SAME IN HER SICKNESS.

To the brook and the willow that heard him complain,
Ah willow, willow.
Poor Colin sat weeping, and told them his pain ;
Ah willow, willow ; ah willow, willow.

Sweet stream, he cry'd sadly, I'll teach thee to flow.
Ah willow, &c.
And the waters shall rise to the brink with my woe.
Ah willow, &c.

All restless and painful poor Amoret lies,
Ah willow, &c.
And counts the sad moments of time as it flies.
Ah willow, &c.

To the nymph my heart loves, ye soft slumbers repair ;
Ah willow, &c. [your care.
Spread your downy wings o'er her, and make her
Ah willow, &c.

Dear brook, were thy chance near her pillow to creep,
Ah willow, &c.
Perhaps thy soft murmurs might lull her to sleep.
Ah willow, &c.

Let me be kept waking, my eyes never close,
Ah willow, &c.
So the sleep that I lose brings my fair one repose,
Ah willow, &c.

But if I am doom'd to be wretched indeed ;
Ah willow, &c.
If the loss of my dear-one, my love is decreed ;
Ah willow, &c.

If no more my sad heart by those eyes shall be cheer'd ;
Ah willow, &c.
If the voice of my warbler no more shall be heard ;
Ah willow, &c.

Believe me, thou fair-one ; thou dear-one believe,
Ah willow, &c.
Few sighs to thy loss, and few tears will I give.
Ah willow, &c.

One fate to thy Colin and thee shall be ty'd,
Ah willow, &c.
And soon lay thy shepherd close by thy cold side.
Ah willow, &c.

Then run, gentle brook ; and to lose thyself, haste ;
Ah willow, willow.
Fade thou too, my willow, this verse is my last ;
Ah willow, willow ; ah willow, willow.

JOSEPH ADDISON.

JOSEPH ADDISON, a person in the foremost ranks of wit and elegant literature, was the son of the Reverend Lancelot Addison, at whose parsonage at Milston, near Ambrosbury, Wiltshire, he was born in May, 1672. At the age of fifteen he was entered of Queen's College, Oxford, where he distinguished himself by his proficiency in classical literature, especially in Latin poetry. He was afterwards elected a demy of Magdalen College, where he took the degrees of bachelor and master of arts. In his twenty-second year he became an author in his own language, publishing a short copy of verses addressed to the veteran poet, Dryden. Other pieces in verse and prose succeeded; and in 1695 he opened the career of his fortune as a literary man, by a complimentary poem on one of the campaigns of King William, addressed to the Lord-keeper Somers. A pension of 300*l.* from the crown, which his patron obtained for him, enabled him to indulge his inclination for travel; and an epistolary poem to Lord Halifax in 1701, with a prose relation of his travels, published on his return, are distinguished by the spirit of liberty which they breathe, and which, during life, was his ruling passion. The most famous of his political poems, "The Campaign," appeared in 1704. It was a task kindly imposed by Lord Halifax, who intimated to him that the writer should not lose his labour. It was accordingly rewarded by an immediate appointment to the post of commissioner of appeals.

This will be the proper place for considering the merits of Addison in his character of a writer in verse. Though Dryden and Pope had already secured the first places on the British Parnassus, and other rivals for fame were springing to view, it will scarcely be denied that Addison, by a decent mediocrity of poetic language, rising occasionally to superior efforts, has deserved that degree of praise, which, in general estimation, has been allotted to him. It cannot be doubted that playful and humorous wit was the quality in which he obtained almost unrivalled pre-eminence; but the reader of his poem to Sir Godfrey Kneller will discover, in the comparison of the painter to Phidias, a very happy and elegant resemblance pointed out in his verse. His celebrated tragedy of "Cato," equally remarkable for a correctness of plan, and a sustained elevation of style, then unusual on the English stage, was further distinguished by the glow of its sentiments in favour of political liberty, and was equally applauded by both parties.

A very short account will suffice for the remainder of his works. His connection with Steele engaged him in occasionally writing in the Tatler, the Spectator, and the Guardian, in which his productions, serious and humorous, conferred upon him immortal honour, and placed him deservedly at the head of his class. Some other periodical papers, decidedly political, were traced to Addison, of which The Freeholder was one of the most conspicuous. In 1716 he married the Countess-Dowager of Warwick, a connexion which is said not to have been remarkably happy. In the following year he was raised to the office of one of the principal secretaries of state; but finding himself ill suited to the post, and in a declining state of health, he resigned it to Mr. Craggs. In reality, his constitution was suffering from an habitual excess in wine; and it is a lamentable circumstance that a person so generally free from moral defects, should have given way to a fondness for the pleasures of a tavern life. Addison died in June, 1719, leaving an only daughter by the Countess of Warwick.

A LETTER FROM ITALY.

TO THE RIGHT HON. CHARLES LORD HALIFAX, IN THE YEAR MDCCL.

Salve magna parens frugum Saturnia tellus,
Magna virum! tibi res antiquæ laudis et artis
Aggredior, sanctos ausus recludere fontes.

VIRG. Georg. ii.

WHILE you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's public posts retire,
Nor longer, her ungrateful sons to please,
For their advantage sacrifice your ease;

Me into foreign realms my fate conveys
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays,
Where the soft season and inviting clime
Conspire to trouble your repose with rhyme.

For wheresoe'er I turn my ravish'd eyes,
Gay gilded scenes and shining prospects rise,
Poetic fields encompass me around,
And still I seem to tread on classic ground;
For here the Muse so oft her harp has strung,
That not a mountain rears its head unsung,
Renown'd in verse each shady thicket grows,
And every stream in heavenly numbers flows.

How am I pleas'd to search the hills and woods
For rising springs and celebrated floods!

To view the Nar, tumultuous in his course,
 And trace the smooth Clitumnus to his source,
 To see the Mincio draw his watery store,
 Through the long windings of a fruitful shore,
 And hoary Albula's infected tide
 For the warm bed of smoking sulphur glide.
 Fir'd with a thousand raptures, I survey
 Idanus through flowery meadows stray,
 The king of floods ! that, rolling o'er the plains,
 The towering Alps of half their moisture drains,
 And proudly swoln with a whole winter's snows,
 Distributes wealth and plenty where he flows.
 Sometimes, misguided by the tuneful throng,
 I look for streams immortalis'd in song,
 But lost in silence and oblivion lie,
 Dumb are their fountains and their channels dry,)
 It run for ever by the Muse's skill,
 And in the smooth description murmur still.
 Sometimes to gentle Tiber I retire,
 And the fam'd river's empty shores admire,
 At destitute of strength derives its course
 From thrifty urns and an unfruitful source ;
 It sung so often in poetic lays,
 It scorn the Danube and the Nile surveys ;
 Though the deathless Muse exalts her theme !
 It was the Boyne, a poor inglorious stream,
 That in Hibernian vales obscurely stray'd,
 And, unobserv'd, in wild meanders play'd ;
 But by your lines and Nassau's sword renown'd,
 Rising billows through the world resound,
 Where'er the hero's godlike acts can pierce,
 Where the fame of an immortal verse.
 Ah, could the Muse my ravish'd breast inspire
 With warmth like yours, and raise an equal fire,
 Number'd beauties in my verse should shine,
 And Virgil's Italy should yield to mine !
 How the golden groves around me smile,
 How the coast of Britain's stormy isle,
 When transplanted and preserv'd with care,
 In the cold clime, and starve in northern air.
 How kindly warmth their mountain juice ferments
 Nobler tastes, and more exalted scents :
 How the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom,
 How trodden weeds send out a rich perfume.
 Come, some god, to Baia's gentle seats,
 Cover me in Umbria's green retreats ;
 Where western gales eternally reside,
 Where all the seasons lavish all their pride :
 Where soma, and fruits, and flowers together rise,
 Where the whole year in gay confusion lies.
 Immortal glories in my mind revive,
 In my soul a thousand passions strive,
 In Rome's exalted beauties I descry
 Precipitant in piles of ruin lie.
 Amphitheatre's amazing height
 Fills my eye with terror and delight,
 On its public shows unpeopled Rome,
 Beld, uncrowded, nations in its womb :
 The pillars rough with sculpture pierce the skies,
 Where the proud triumphal arches rise,
 Where the old Romans deathless acts display'd,
 Where base degenerate progeny upbraid :
 The rivers here forsake the fields below, [flow.
 Wondering at their height through airy channels
 All to new scenes my wandering Muse retires,
 The dumb show of breathing rocks admires :
 Where the smooth chisel all its force has shown,
 Soften'd into flesh the rugged stone.
 Stern silence, a majestic band,
 Deities, and gods, and Roman consuls stand.

Stern tyrants, whom their cruelties renown,
 And emperors in Parian marble frown :
 While the bright dames, to whom they humbly sued,
 Still show the charms that their proud hearts subdued.

Fain would I Raphael's godlike art rehearse,
 And show th' immortal labours in my verse,
 Where, from the mingled strength of shade and light,
 A new creation rises to my sight,
 Such heavenly figures from his pencil flow,
 So warm with life his blended colours glow.
 From theme to theme with secret pleasure tost,
 Amidst the soft variety I'm lost :
 Here pleasing airs my ravish'd soul confound
 With circling notes and labyrinths of sound ;
 Here domes and temples rise in distant views,
 And opening palaces invite my Muse.

How has kind Heaven adorn'd the happy land,
 And scatter'd blessings with a wasteful hand !
 But what avail her unexhausted stores,
 Her blooming mountains, and her sunny shores,
 With all the gifts that Heaven and Earth impart,
 The smiles of Nature, and the charms of Art,
 While proud oppression in her valleys reigns,
 And tyranny usurps her happy plains ?
 The poor inhabitant beholds in vain
 The reddening orange and the swelling grain :
 Joyless he sees the growing oils and wines,
 And in the myrtle's fragrant shade repines :
 Starves in the midst of Nature's bounty curst,
 And in the loaden vineyard dies for thirst.

O Liberty, thou goddess heavenly bright,
 Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight !
 Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign,
 And smiling Plenty leads thy wanton train ;
 Eas'd of her load, Subjection grows more light,
 And Poverty looks cheerful in thy sight ;
 Thou mak'st the gloomy face of Nature gay,
 Giv'st beauty to the Sun, and pleasure to the day.

Thee, goddess, thee, Britannia's isle adores ;
 How has she oft exhausted all her stores,
 How oft in fields of death thy presence sought,
 Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought !
 On foreign mountains may the Sun refine
 The grape's soft juice, and mellow it to wine,
 With citron groves adorn a distant soil,
 And the fat olive swell with floods of oil :
 We envy not the warmer clime, that lies
 In ten degrees of more indulgent skies,
 Nor at the coarseness of our Heaven repine,
 Though o'er our heads the frozen Plejads shine :
 'Tis Liberty that crowns Britannia's isle,
 And makes her barren rocks and her bleak mountains smile.

Others with towering piles may please the sight,
 And in their proud aspiring domes delight ;
 A nicer touch to the stretcht canvas give,
 Or teach their animated rocks to live :
 'Tis Britain's care to watch o'er Europe's fate,
 And hold in balance each contending state,
 To threaten bold presumptuous kings with war,
 And answer her afflicted neighbour's prayer.
 The Dane and Swede, rous'd up by fierce alarms,
 Bless the wise conduct of her pious arms :
 Soon as her fleets appear, their terrors cease,
 And all the northern world lies hush'd in peace.
 Th' ambitious Gaul beholds with secret dread
 Her thunder aim'd at his aspiring head,
 And fain her god-like sons would disunite
 By foreign gold, or by domestic spite :

But strives in vain to conquer or divide,
Whom Nassau's arms defend and counsels guide.
Fir'd with the name, which I so oft have found
The distant climes and different tongues resound,
I bridle in my struggling Muse with pain,
That longs to launch into a bolder strain.

But I've already troubled you too long,
Nor dare attempt a more adventurous song.
My humble verse demands a softer theme,
A painted meadow, or a purling stream;
Unfit for heroes: whom immortal lays,
And lines, like Virgil's, or like yours, should praise.

THE CAMPAIGN,

A POEM.

TO HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH, 1705.

—Rheni pacator et Istri.

Omnis in hoc uno variis discordia cessit
Ordinibus; lætatur eques, plauditque senator,
Votaque patricio certant plebeia favori.

CLAUD. de Laud. Stilic.

Esse aliquam in terris gentem quæ suâ impensâ, suo labore ac periculo, bella gerat pro libertate aliorum. Nec hoc finitimis, aut propinquæ vi-cinitatis hominibus, aut terris continenti junctis præstet. Maria trajiciat: ne quod toto orbe terrarum injustum imperium sit, et ubique jus, fas, lex, potentissima sint. Liv. Hist. lib. 33.

While crowds of princes your deserts proclaim,
Proud in their number to enrol your name;
While emperors to you commit their cause,
And Anna's praises crown the vast applause;
Accept, great leader, what the Muse recites,
That in ambitious verse attempts your fights.
Fir'd and transported with a theme so new,
Ten thousand wonders opening to my view
Shine forth at once; sieges and storms appear,
And wars and conquests fill th' important year:
Rivers of blood I see, and hills of slain,
An Iliad rising out of one campaign.

The haughty Gaul beheld, with towering pride,
His ancient bounds enlarg'd on every side;
Pyrene's lofty barriers were subdued,
And in the midst of his wide empire stood;
Ausonia's states, the victor to restrain,
Oppos'd their Alps and Apennines in vain,
Nor found themselves, with strength of rocks im-
mur'd,

Behind their everlasting hills secur'd;
The rising Danube its long race began,
And half its course through the new conquests ran;
Amaz'd and anxious for her sovereign's fates,
Germania trembled through a hundred states;
Great Leopold himself was seiz'd with fear;
He gaz'd around, but saw no succour near;
He gaz'd, and half-abandon'd to despair
His hopes on Heav'n, and confidence in prayer.

To Britain's queen the nations turn their eyes,
On her resolves the western world relies,
Confiding still, amidst its dire alarms,
In Anna's councils, and in Churchill's arms.
Thrice happy Britain, from the kingdoms rent,
To sit the guardian of the continent!

That sees her bravest son advanc'd so high
And flourishing so near her prince's eye;
Thy favourites grow not up by fortune's sport,
Or from the crimes or follies of a court;
On the firm basis of desert they rise,
From long-try'd faith, and friendship's holy ties:
Their sovereign's well-distinguish'd smiles they share,

Her ornaments in peace, her strength in war;
The nation thanks them with a public voice;
By showers of blessings Heaven approves their choice;

Envy itself is dumb, in wonder lost,
And factions strive who shall applaud them most.

Soon as soft vernal breezes warm the sky,
Britannia's colours in the zephyrs fly;
Her chief already has his march begun,
Crossing the provinces himself had won,
Till the Moselle, appearing from afar,
Retards the progress of the moving war.
Delightful stream, had Nature bid her fall
In distant climes far from the perjur'd Gaul;
But now a purchase to the sword she lies,
Her harvests for uncertain owners rise,
Each vineyard doubtful of its master grows,
And to the victor's bowl each vintage flows.
The discontented shades of slaughter'd hosts,
That wander'd on her banks, her heroes' ghosts,
Hop'd, when they saw Britannia's arms appear,
The vengeance due to their great deaths was near.

Our godlike leader, ere the stream he past,
The mighty scheme of all his labours cast,
Forming the wondrous year within his thought:
His bosom glow'd with battles yet unfought.
The long laborious march he first surveys,
And joins the distant Danube to the Maese,
Between whose floods such pathless forests grow,
Such mountains rise, so many rivers flow:
The toil looks lovely in the hero's eyes,
And danger serves but to enhance the prize.

Big with the fate of Europe, he renews
His dreadful course, and the proud foe pursues!
Infected by the burning Scorpion's heat,
The sultry gales round his chaf'd temples beat.
Till on the borders of the Maine he finds
Defensive shadows, and refreshing winds.
Our British youth, with in-born freedom bold,
Unnumber'd scenes of servitude behold,
Nations of slaves, with tyranny debas'd,
(Their Maker's image more than half defac'd.)
Hourly instructed, as they urge their toil,
To prize their queen, and love their native soil.

Still to the rising Sun they take their way
Through clouds of dust, and gain upon the day.
When now the Neckar on its friendly coast
With cooling streams revives the fainting host,
That cheerfully his labours past forgets,
The mid-night watches, and the noon-day heat.

O'er prostrate towns and palaces they pass
(Now cover'd o'er with woods, and hid in grass)
Breathing revenge; whilst anger and disdain
Fire every breast, and boil in every vein:
Here shatter'd walls, like broken rocks from far,
Rise up in hideous views, the guilt of war,
Whilst here the vine o'er hills of ruin climbs,
Industrious to conceal great Bourbon's crimes.

At length the fame of England's hero drew
Eugenio to the glorious interview.
Great souls by instinct to each other turn,
Demand alliance, and in friendship burn;

A sudden friendship, while with stretch'd-out rays
 They meet each other, mingling blaze with blaze.
 Polish'd in courts, and harden'd in the field,
 Renown'd for conquest, and in council skill'd,
 Their courage dwells not in a troubled flood
 Of mountain spirits, and fermenting blood ;
 Lodg'd in the soul, with virtue over-rul'd,
 Inflam'd by reason, and by reason cool'd,
 In hours of peace content to be unknown,
 And only in the field of battle shown :

To souls like these, in mutual friendship join'd,
 Heaven dares intrust the cause of human-kind.
 Britannia's graceful sons appear in arms,
 Her harass'd troops the hero's presence warms,
 Whilst the high hills and rivers all around
 With thundering peals of British shouts resound :
 Doubbling their speed, they march with fresh delight,
 Eager for glory, and require the fight.

The stanch hound the trembling deer pursues,
 And smells his footsteps in the tainted dew,
 He tedious track unravelling by degrees :
 But when the scent comes warm in every breeze,
 He'd at the near approach he shoots away
 To his full stretch, and bears upon his prey.

The march concludes, the various realms are past ;
 His immortal Schellenberg appears at last :
 The hills th' aspiring ramparts rise on high,
 The valleys at their feet the trenches lie ;
 Batteries on batteries guard each fatal pass,
 Threatening destruction ; rows of hollow brass,
 Behind tube, the dreadful entrance keep,
 Whilst in their wombs ten thousand thunders sleep :
 Great Churchill owns, charm'd with the glorious
 sight,

His march o'er-paid by such a promis'd fight.
 The western Sun now shot a feeble ray,
 And faintly scatter'd the remains of day :
 Evening approach'd ; but oh what host of foes
 Were never to behold that evening close !
 Thickening their ranks, and wedg'd in firm array,
 The close-compacted Britons win their way ;
 And win the cannon their throng'd war defac'd
 With tracts of death, and laid the battle waste ;
 Still pressing forward to the fight, they broke
 Rough flames of sulphur, and a night of smoke,
 A slaughter'd legions fill'd the trench below,
 And bore their fierce avengers to their foe.
 High on the works the mingling hosts engage ;
 The battle, kindled into tenfold rage,
 With showers of bullets and with storms of fire
 Burns in full fury ; heaps on heaps expire,
 Nations with nations mix'd confus'dly die,
 And lost in one promiscuous carnage lie.
 How many generous Britons meet their doom,
 Far to the field, and heroes in the bloom !
 O illustrious youths, that left their native shore
 To march where Britons never march'd before,
 O fatal love of fame ! O glorious heat,
 How destructive to the brave and great !
 How such toils o'ercome, such dangers past,
 And rich'd on Bavarian ramparts breathe their last :
 Hold, my Muse, may no complaints appear,
 Nor blot the day with an ungrateful tear :
 While Marlborough lives, Britannia's stars dispense
 Friendly light, and shine in innocence.
 Mingling through seas of blood his fiery steed
 Where'er his friends retire, or foes succeed ;
 Nor he supports, these drives to sudden flight,
 And turns the various fortune of the fight.
 Forbear, great man, renown'd in arms, forbear,
 To leave the thickest terrors of the war,

Nor hazard thus, confus'd in crowds of foes,
 Britannia's safety, and the world's repose ;
 Let nations anxious for thy life abate
 This scorn of danger, and contempt of fate :
 Thou liv'st not for thyself ; thy queen demands
 Conquest and peace from thy victorious hands ;
 Kingdoms and empires in thy fortune join,
 And Europe's destiny depends on thine.

At length the long-disputed pass they gain,
 By crowded armies fortify'd in vain ;
 The war breaks in, the fierce Bavarians yield,
 And see their camp with British legions fill'd.
 So Belgian mounds bear on their shatter'd sides
 The sea's whole weight increas'd with swelling tides ;
 But if the rushing wave a passage finds,
 Enrag'd by watery moons, and warring winds,
 The trembling peasant sees his country round
 Cover'd with tempests, and in oceans drown'd.

The few surviving foes disperst in flight,
 (Refuse of swords, and gleanings of a fight,)
 In every rustling wind the victor hear,
 And Marlborough's form in every shadow fear,
 Till the dark cope of night with kind embrace
 Befriends the rout, and covers their disgrace.

To Donavert, with unresisted force,
 The gay victorious army bends its course.
 The growth of meadows, and the pride of fields,
 Whatever spoils Bavaria's summer yields,
 (The Danube's great increase,) Britannia shares,
 The food of armies and support of wars :
 With magazines of death, destructive balls,
 And cannon doom'd to batter Landau's walls,
 The victor finds each hidden cavern stor'd,
 And turns their fury on their guilty lord.

Deluded prince ! how is thy greatness crost,
 And all the gaudy dream of empire lost,
 That proudly set thee on a fancy'd throne,
 And made imaginary realms thy own !
 Thy troops, that now behind the Danube join,
 Shall shortly seek for shelter from the Rhine,
 Nor find it there ! Surrounded with alarms,
 Thou hop'st the assistance of the Gallic arms ;
 The Gallic arms in safety shall advance,
 And crowd thy standards with the power of France ;
 While, to exalt thy doom, th' aspiring Gaul
 Shares thy destruction, and adorns thy fall.

Unbounded courage and compassion join'd,
 Tempering each other in the victor's mind,
 Alternately proclaim him good and great,
 And make the hero and the man complete.
 Long did he strive th' obdurate foe to gain
 By proffer'd grace, but long he strove in vain ;
 Till, fir'd at length, he thinks it vain to spare
 His rising wrath, and gives a loose to war.
 In vengeance rous'd, the soldier fills his hand
 With sword and fire, and ravages the land,
 A thousand villages to ashes turns,
 In crackling flames a thousand harvests burns.
 To the thick woods the woolly flocks retreat,
 And mixt with bellowing herds confus'dly bleat ;
 Their trembling lords the common shade partake,
 And cries of infants sound in every brake :
 The listening soldier fixt in sorrow stands,
 Loth to obey his leader's just commands ;
 The leader grieves, by generous pity sway'd,
 To see his just commands so well obey'd.

But now the trumpet terrible from far
 In shriller clangors animates the war ;
 Confederate drums in fuller concert beat,
 And echoing hills the loud alarm repeat :

Gallia's proud standards, to Bavaria's join'd,
Unfurl their gilded lilies in the wind ;
The daring prince his blasted hopes renews,
And, while the thick embattled host he views
Stretcht out in deep array, and dreadful length,
His heart dilates, and glories in his strength.

The fatal day its mighty course began,
That the griev'd world had long desir'd in vain ;
States that their new captivity bemoan'd,
Armies of martyrs that in exile groan'd,
Sighs from the depth of gloomy dungeons heard,
And prayers in bitterness of soul preferr'd,
Europe's loud cries, that Providence assail'd,
And Anna's ardent vows at length prevail'd ;
The day was come when Heaven design'd to show
His care and conduct of the world below.

Behold in awful march and dread array
The long-extended squadrons shape their way !
Death, in approaching, terrible, imparts
An anxious horror to the bravest hearts ;
Yet do their beating breasts demand the strife,
And thirst of glory quells the love of life.
No vulgar fears can British minds control :
Heat of revenge, and noble pride of soul,
O'erlook the foe, advantag'd by his post,
Lessen his numbers, and contract his host ;
Though fens and floods possess the middle space,
That unprovok'd they would have fear'd to pass ;
Nor fens nor floods can stop Britannia's bands,
When her proud foe rang'd on their borders stands.

But O, my Muse, what numbers wilt thou find
To sing the furious troops in battle join'd !
Methinks I hear the drums tumultuous sound
The victors' shouts and dying groans confound,
The dreadful burst of cannon rend the skies,
And all the thunder of the battle rise. [prov'd,
'Twas then great Marlborough's mighty soul was
That, in the shock of charging hosts unmov'd,
Amidst confusion, horror, and despair,
Examin'd all the dreadful scenes of war :
In peaceful thought the field of death survey'd,
To fainting squadrons sent the timely aid,
Inspir'd repuls'd battalions to engage,
And taught the doubtful battle where to rage.
So when an angel by divine command
With rising tempests shakes a guilty land,
Such as of late o'er pale Britannia past,
Calm and serene he drives the furious blast ;
And, pleas'd th' Almighty orders to perform,
Rides in the whirlwind, and directs the storm.

But see the haughty household troops advance !
The dread of Europe, and the pride of France.
The war's whole art each private soldier knows,
And with a general's love of conquest glows ;
Proudly he marches on, and void of fear
Laughs at the shaking of the British spear :
Vain insolence ! with native freedom brave,
The meanest Briton scorns the highest slave :
Contempt and fury fire their souls by turns,
Each nation's glory in each warrior burns ;
Each fights, as in his arm th' important day
And all the fate of his great monarch lay :
A thousand glorious actions, that might claim
Triumphant laurels, and immortal fame,
Confus'd in crowds of glorious actions lie,
And troops of heroes undistinguish'd die.
O Dormer, how can I behold thy fate,
And not the wonders of thy youth relate !
How can I see the gay, the brave, the young,
Fall in the cloud of war, and lie unsung !

In joys of conquest he resigns his breath,
And, fill'd with England's glory, smiles in death.

The rout begins, the Gallic squadrons run,
Compell'd in crowds to meet the fate they shun ;
Thousands of fiery steeds with wounds transfir'd,
Floating in gore, with their dead masters mixt,
'Midst heaps of spears and standards driven round,
Lie in the Danube's bloody whirlpools drown'd.
Troops of bold youths, born on the distant Seine,
Or sounding borders of the rapid Rhone,
Or where the Seine her flowery fields divides,
Or where the Loire through winding vineyards
glides,

In heaps the rolling billows sweep away,
And into Scythian seas their bloated corps convey.
From Blenheim's towers the Gaul, with wild affright,
Beholds the various havoc of the fight ;
His waving banners, that so oft had stood
Planted in fields of death, and streams of blood,
So wont the guarded enemy to reach,
And rise triumphant in the fatal breach,
Or pierce the broken foe's remotest lines,
The hardy veteran with tears resigns.

Unfortunate Tallard ! Oh, who can name
The pangs of rage, of sorrow, and of shame,
That with mixt tumult in thy bosom swell'd,
When first thou saw'st thy bravest troops repell'd,
Thine only son pierc'd with a deadly wound,
Chok'd in his blood, and gasping on the ground,
Thyself in bondage by the victor kept !
The chief, the father, and the captive, wept.
An English Muse is touch'd with generous woe,
And in th' unhappy man forgets the foe !
Greatly distress ! thy loud complaints forbear.
Blame not the turns of fate, and chance of war ;
Give thy brave foes their due, nor blush to own
The fatal field by such great leaders won,
The field whence fam'd Eugenio bore away
Only the second honours of the day.

With floods of gore, that from the vanquish'd flow
The marshes stagnate, and the rivers swell.
Mountains of slain lie heap'd upon the ground,
Or 'midst the roarings of the Danube drown'd.
Whole captive hosts the conqueror detains
In painful bondage, and inglorious chains ;
Ev'n those who 'scape the fetters and the sword,
Nor seek the fortunes of a happier lord,
Their raging king dishonours, to complete
Marlborough's great work, and finish the defeat.

From Memminghen's high domes, and Augsburg's walls,
The distant battle drives th' insulting Gauls ;
Freed by the terror of the victor's name
The rescu'd states his great protection claim ;
Whilst Ulme th' approach of her deliverer waits
And longs to open her obsequious gates.

The hero's breast still swells with great design
In every thought the towering genius shines :
If to the foe his dreadful course he bends,
O'er the wide continent his march extends ;
If sieges in his labouring thoughts are form'd,
Camps are assaulted, and an army storm'd ;
If to the fight his active soul is bent,
The fate of Europe turns on its event.
What distant land, what region, can afford
An action worthy his victorious sword ?
Where will he next the flying Gaul defeat,
To make the series of his toils complete ?

Where the swoln Rhine, rushing with all its force,
Divides the hostile nations in its course,

While each contracts its bounds, or wider grows,
 enlarg'd or straiten'd as the river flows,
 On Gallia's side a mighty bulwark stands,
 That all the wide-extended plain commands ;
 Since, since the war was kindled, has it try'd
 The victor's rage, and twice has chang'd its side ;
 Oft whole armies, with the prize o'erjoy'd,
 Have the long summer on its walls employ'd.
 When our mighty chief his arms directs,
 Hence future triumphs from the war expects ;
 And though the dog star had its course begun,
 Moves his arms still nearer to the Sun :
 But on the glorious action, he forgets
 The change of seasons, and increase of heats ;
 No toils are painful that can danger show,
 No crimes unlovely, that contain a foe.
 The roving Gaul, to his own bounds restrain'd,
 Arms to incamp within his native land,
 As soon as the victorious host he spies,
 From hill to hill, from stream to stream he flies :
 No dire impressions in his heart remain
 Of Marlborough's sword and Hochtste's fatal plain :
 In vain Britannia's mighty chief besets
 Her shady coverts, and obscure retreats ;
 They fly the conqueror's approaching fame,
 And bears the force of armies in his name.
 Austria's young monarch, whose imperial sway
 Empires and thrones are destin'd to obey,
 His boasted ancestry so high extends
 As in the pagan gods his lineage ends,
 Comes from afar, in gratitude to own
 The great supporter of his father's throne :
 As tides of glory to his bosom ran,
 He'd in th' embraces of the godlike man !
 How were his eyes with pleasing wonder fixt
 To see such fire with so much sweetness mixt,
 In easy greatness, such a graceful port,
 Turn'd and finish'd for the camp or court !
 Achilles thus was form'd with ev'ry grace,
 And Nireus shone but in the second place ;
 As the great father of almighty Rome
 Divinely flusht with an immortal bloom,
 As Cythera's fragrant breath bestow'd)
 All the charms of his bright mother glow'd.
 The royal youth by Marlborough's presence
 Charm'd,
 Light by his counsels, by his actions warm'd,
 Landau with redoubled fury falls,
 Charges all the thunder on its walls,
 Mines and caves of death provokes the fight,
 And learns to conquer in the hero's sight.
 The British chief, for mighty toils renown'd,
 Read in titles, and with conquests crown'd,
 Belgian coasts his tedious march renews,
 And the long windings of the Rhine pursues,
 Bringing its borders from usurping foes,
 And blest by rescued nations as he goes.
 No fears no more, freed from its dire alarms ;
 And Traerbach feels the terrour of his arms :
 Her rocks her proud foundations shake,
 While Marlborough presses to the bold attack.
 His all his batteries, bids his cannon roar,
 And shows how Landau might have fall'n before.
 Read at his near approach, great Louis fears
 A stance reserv'd for his declining years,
 Gets his thirst of universal sway,
 And scarce can teach his subjects to obey ;
 His arms he finds on vain attempts employ'd,
 His ambitious projects for his race destroy'd,
 His works of ages sunk in one campaign,
 His lives of millions sacrific'd in vain.

Such are th' effects of Anna's royal cares :
 By her, Britannia, great in foreign wars,
 Ranges through nations, wheresoe'er disjoin'd,
 Without the wonted aid of sea and wind.
 By her th' unfetter'd Ister's states are free,
 And taste the sweets of English liberty :
 But who can tell the joys of those that lie
 Beneath the constant influence of her eye !
 Whilst in diffusive showers her bounties fall
 Like Heaven's indulgence, and descend on all,
 Secure the happy, succour the distress,
 Make every subject glad, and a whole people blest.

Thus would I fain Britannia's wars rehearse,
 In the smooth records of a faithful verse ;
 That, if such numbers can o'er time prevail,
 May tell posterity the wondrous tale.
 When actions, unadorn'd, are faint and weak,
 Cities and countries must be taught to speak ;
 Gods may descend in factions from the skies,
 And rivers from their oozy beds arise ;
 Fiction may deck the truth with spurious rays,
 And round the hero cast a borrow'd blaze.
 Marlborough's exploits appear divinely bright,
 And proudly shine in their own native light,
 Rais'd of themselves their genuine charms they boast,
 And those who paint them truest praise them most.

TO SIR GODFREY KNELLER,

ON HIS PICTURE OF THE KING.

KNELLER, with silence and surprise
 We see Britannia's monarch rise,
 A godlike form, by thee display'd
 In all the force of light and shade ;
 And, aw'd by thy delusive hand,
 As in the presence-chamber stand.

The magic of thy art calls forth
 His secret soul and hidden worth,
 His probity and mildness shows,
 His care of friends, and scorn of foes ;
 In every stroke, in every line,
 Does some exalted virtue shine,
 And Albion's happiness we trace
 Through all the features of his face.

O may I live to hail the day,
 When the glad nation shall survey
 Their sovereign, through his wide command,
 Passing in progress o'er the land !
 Each heart shall bend, and every voice
 In loud applauding shouts rejoice,
 Whilst all his gracious aspect praise,
 And crowds grow loyal as they gaze.

The image on the medal plac'd,
 With its bright round of titles grac'd,
 And stamp'd on British coins shall live,
 To richest ores the value give,
 Or, wrought within the curious mold,
 Shape and adorn the running gold.
 To bear this form, the genial Sun
 Has daily since his course begun
 Rejoic'd the metal to refine,
 And ripen'd the Peruvian mine.

Thou, Kneller, long with noble pride,
 The foremost of thy art, hast vy'd
 With nature in a generous strife,
 And touch'd the canvas into life.

Thy pencil has, by monarchs sought,
From reign to reign in ermine wrought,
And, in the robes of state array'd,
The kings of half an age display'd.

Here swarthy Charles appears, and there
His brother with dejected air :
Triumphant Nassau here we find,
And with him bright Maria join'd ;
There Anna, great as when she sent
Her armies through the continent,
Ere yet her hero was disgrac'd :
O may fam'd Brunswick be the last,
(Though Heaven should with my wish agree,
And long preserve thy art in thee)
The last, the happiest British king,
Whom thou shalt paint, or I shall sing !

Wise Phidias thus, his skill to prove,
Through many a god advanc'd to Jove,
And taught the polish'd rocks to shine
With airs and lineaments divine ;
Till Greece, amaz'd, and half-afraid,
Th' assembled deities survey'd.

Great Pan, who wont to chase the fair,
And lov'd the spreading oak, was there ;
Old Saturn too with upcast eyes
Beheld his abdicated skies ;
And mighty Mars, for war renown'd,
In adamantinè armour frown'd ;
By him the childless goddess rose,
Minerva, studious to compose
Her twisted threads ; the web she strung,
And o'er a loom of marble hung :
Thetis, the troubled ocean's queen,
Match'd with a mortal, next was seen,
Reclining on a funeral urn,
Her short-liv'd darling son to mourn.
The last was he, whose thunder slew
The Titan-race, a rebel crew,
That from a hundred hills ally'd
In impious leagues their king defy'd.

This wonder of the sculptor's hand
Produc'd, his art was at a stand :
For who would hope new fame to raise,
Or risk his well-establish'd praise,
That, his high genius to approve,
Had drawn a George, or carv'd a Jove ?

PARAPHRASE ON PSALM XXIII.

THE Lord my pasture shall prepare,
And feed me with a shepherd's care ;
His presence shall my wants supply,
And guard me with a watchful eye :
My noon-day walks he shall attend,
And all my midnight hours defend.

When in the sultry glebe I faint,
Or on the thirsty mountain pant ;
To fertile vales and dewy meads
My weary wandering steps he leads :
Where peaceful rivers, soft and slow,
Amid the verdant landscape flow.

Though in the paths of death I tread,
With gloomy horrors overspread,
My stedfast heart shall fear no ill,
For thou, O Lord, art with me still ;
Thy friendly crook shall give me aid,
And guide me through the dreadful shade.

Though in a bare and rugged way,
Through devious lonely wilds I stray,
Thy bounty shall my wants beguile :
The barren wilderness shall smile,
With sudden greens and herbage crown'd,
And streams shall murmur all around.

MATTHEW PRIOR.

MATTHEW PRIOR, a distinguished poet, was born in 1664, in London according to one account, according to another at Winborne, in Dorsetshire. His father dying when he was young, an uncle, who was a vintner, or tavern-keeper, at Charing-cross, took him under his care, and sent him to Westminster-school, of which Dr. Busby was master. Before he had passed through the school, his uncle took him home, for the purpose of bringing him into his own business; but the Earl of Dorset, a great patron of letters, having found him one day reading Horace, and being amused with his conversation, determined to give him an university education. He was accordingly admitted of St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1682, proceeded bachelor of arts in 1686, and was afterwards elected to a fellowship. After having showed his poetic talents by some college exercises, he was introduced at court by the Earl of Dorset, and was so effectually recommended, that, in 1690, he was appointed secretary to the English plenipotentiaries who attended the congress at the Hague. Being now enlisted in the service of the court, his productions were, for some years, chiefly directed to courtly topics, of which one of the most considerable was an Ode presented to King William in 1695, on the death of Queen Mary. In 1697, he was nominated secretary to the commissioners of the treaty of Ryswick; and, on his return, was made secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. He went to France in the following year, as secretary, first to the Earl of Portland, and then to the Duke of Jersey; and being now regarded as one conversant in public affairs, he was summoned by King William to Loo, where he had a confidential place. In the beginning of 1701 he sat in Parliament for East Grinstead.

Prior had hitherto been promoted and acted with the Whigs: but the Tories now having become the valent party, he turned about, and ever after adhered to them. He even voted for the impeachment of those lords who advised that partition by which he had been officially employed. He most converts, he embraced his new friends with much zeal, and from that time almost all his personal connections were confined within the limits of party.

The successes in the beginning of Queen Anne's reign were celebrated by the poets on both sides; Prior sung the victories of Blenheim and Malplaquet: he afterwards, however, joined in the eulogium of the great general who had been his theme.

It will not be worth while here to take notice of all his changes in the political world, except to mention the disgraces which followed the famous congress of Utrecht, in which he was deeply engaged. For the completion of that business he was left in France, with the appointments and authority of an ambassador, though without the title, the proud Duke of Shrewsbury having refused to be joined in commission with a man so meanly born. Prior, however, publicly assumed the character till he was superseded by the Earl of Stair, on the accession of George I. The Whigs being now in power, he was welcomed, on his return, by a warrant from the House of Commons, under which he was committed to the custody of a messenger. He was examined before the Privy Council respecting his share in the peace of Utrecht, was treated with rigour, and Walpole moved an impeachment against him, on a charge of high treason, for holding clandestine conferences with the French plenipotentiary. His name was excepted from an act of grace passed in 1717: at length, however, he was discharged, without being brought to trial, to end his days in retirement.

We are now to consider Prior among the poetical characters of the time. In his writings is found that incongruous mixture of light and rather indecent topics with grave and even religious ones, which was not uncommon at that period. In the faculty of telling a story with ease and vivacity, he yields only to Swift, compared to whom his humour is occasionally strained and quaint. His songs and amatory pieces are generally elegant and classical. The most popular of his serious compositions are "Henry and Emma," or the Nut-brown Maid, modernised from an antique original; and "Solomon," the idea of which is taken from the book of Ecclesiastes. These are harmonious in their versification, splendid and correct in their diction, and copious in poetical imagery; but they exert no powerful effect on the feelings or the fancy, and are enfeebled by prolixity. His "Alma," a piece of philosophical pleasantry, was written to console himself when under confinement, and displays a considerable share of reading. As to his elaborate effusions of loyalty and patriotism, they seem to have sunk into total neglect.

The life of Prior was cut short by a lingering illness, which closed his days at Wimpole, the seat of Lord Oxford, in September, 1721, in the 58th year of his age.

HENRY AND EMMA.

A POEM,

Upon the Model of the Nut-Brown Maid.

TO CLOE.

Thou, to whose eyes I bend, at whose command
 (Though low my voice, though artless be my hand),
 I take the sprightly reed, and sing, and play,
 Careless of what the censuring world may say:
 Bright Cloe, object of my constant vow,
 Wilt thou awhile unbend thy serious brow?
 Wilt thou with pleasure hear thy lover's strains,
 And with one heavenly smile o'erpay his pains?
 No longer shall the Nut-brown Maid be old;
 Though since her youth three hundred years have
 roll'd:

At thy desire, she shall again be rais'd;
 And her reviving charms in lasting verse be prais'd.

No longer man or woman shall complain,
 That he may love, and not be lov'd again:
 That we in vain the fickle sex pursue,
 Who change the constant lover for the new.
 Whatever has been writ, whatever said,
 Of female passion feign'd, or faith decay'd,
 Henceforth shall in my verse refuted stand,
 Be said to winds, or writ upon the sand.
 And, while my notes to future times proclaim
 Unconquer'd love, and ever-during flame,
 O fairest of the sex! be thou my Muse:
 Deign on my work thy influence to diffuse.
 Let me partake the blessings I rehearse,
 And grant me, love, the just reward of verse!

As beauty's potent queen, with every grace,
 That once was Emma's, has adorn'd thy face;
 And, as her son has to my bosom dealt
 That constant flame, which faithful Henry felt:
 O let the story with thy life agree:
 Let men once more the bright example see;
 What Emma was to him, be thou to me.
 Nor send me by thy frown from her I love,
 Distant and sad, a banish'd man to rove.
 But, oh! with pity, long-entreated, crown
 My pains and hopes; and, when thou say'st that one
 Of all mankind thou lov'st, oh! think on me alone.

WHERE beauteous Isis and her husband Tame,
 With mingled waves, for ever flow the same,
 In times of yore an ancient baron liv'd;
 Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd.

When dreadful Edward, with successful care,
 Led his free Britons to the Gallic war;
 This lord had headed his appointed bands,
 In firm allegiance to his king's commands;
 And (all due honours faithfully discharg'd)
 Had brought back his paternal coat, enlarg'd
 With a new mark, the witness of his toil,
 And no inglorious part of foreign spoil.

From the loud camp retir'd, and noisy court,
 In honourable ease and rural sport,
 The remnant of his days he safely past;
 Nor found they lagg'd too slow, nor flew too fast.
 He made his wish with his estate comply,
 —ful to live, yet not afraid to die.

One child he had, a daughter chaste and fair,
 His age's comfort, and his fortune's heir.
 They call'd her Emma; for the beauteous dame,
 Who gave the virgin birth, had borne the name:
 The name th' indulgent father doubly lov'd:
 For in the child the mother's charms improv'd.
 Yet as, when little, round his knees she play'd,
 He call'd her oft, in sport, his Nut-brown Maid,
 The friends and tenants took the fondling word,
 (As still they please, who imitate their lord):

Usage confirm'd what fancy had begun;
 The mutual terms around the land were known:
 And Emma and the Nut-brown Maid were one.

As with her stature, still her charms increas'd;
 Through all the isle her beauty was confess'd.
 Oh! what perfections must that virgin share,
 Who fairest is esteem'd, where all are fair!
 From distant shires repair the noble youth,
 And find report, for once, had lessen'd truth.
 By wonder first, and then by passion mov'd,
 They came; they saw; they marvell'd; and they lov'd.

By public praises, and by secret sighs,
 Each own'd the general power of Emma's eyes.
 In tilts and tournaments the valiant strove,
 By glorious deeds, to purchase Emma's love.
 In gentle verse the witty told their flame,
 And grac'd their choicest songs with Emma's name.
 In vain they combated, in vain they writ:
 Useless their strength, and impotent their wit.
 Great Venus only must direct the dart,
 Which else will never reach the fair-one's heart,
 Spite of th' attempts of force, and soft effects of art.
 Great Venus must prefer the happy one:
 In Henry's cause her favour must be shown;
 And Emma, of mankind, must love but him alone.

While these in public to the castle came,
 And by their grandeur justified their flame;
 More secret ways the careful Henry takes;
 His squires, his arms, and equipage forsakes:
 In borrow'd name, and false attire array'd,
 Oft he finds means to see the beauteous maid.

When Emma hunts, in huntsman's habit dress'd,
 Henry on foot pursues the bounding beast.
 In his right-hand his beechen pole he bears;
 And graceful at his side his horn he wears.
 Still to the glade, where she has bent her way,
 With knowing skill he drives the future prey;
 Bids her decline the hill, and shun the brake;
 And shows the path her steed may safest take;
 Directs her spear to fix the glorious wound;
 Pleas'd in his toils to have her triumph crown'd,
 And blows her praises in no common sound.

A falconer Henry is, when Emma hawks:
 With her of tarsels and of lures he talks.
 Upon his wrist the towering merlin stands,
 Practis'd to rise, and stoop at her commands.
 And when superior now the bird has flown,
 And headlong brought the tumbling quarry down,
 With humble reverence he accosts the fair,
 And with the honour'd feather decks her hair.
 Yet still, as from the sportive field she goes,
 His down-cast eye reveals his inward woes;
 And by his look and sorrow is express'd,
 A nobler game pursued than bird or beast.

A shepherd now along the plain he roves;
 And, with his jolly pipe, delights the groves.

The neighbouring swains around the stranger throng,
Or to admire, or emulate his song :
While with soft sorrow he renews his lays,
Nor heedful of their envy, nor their praise.
But, soon as Emma's eyes adorn the plain,
His notes he raises to a nobler strain,
With dutiful respect and studious fear ;
Lest any careless sound offend her ear.

A frantic gipsy now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants.
With the fond maids in palmistry he deals :
They tell the secret first, which he reveals ;
Says who shall wed, and who shall be beguil'd ;
What groom shall get, and squire maintain the child.
But, when bright Emma would her fortune know,
A softer look unbends his opening brow ;
With trembling awe he gazes on her eye,
And in soft accents forms the kind reply ;
That she shall prove as fortunate as fair ;
And Hymen's choicest gifts are all reserv'd for her.

Now oft had Henry chang'd his sly disguise,
Unmark'd by all but beauteous Emma's eyes :
Oft had found means alone to see the dame,
And at her feet to breathe his amorous flame ;
And oft, the pangs of absence to remove,
By letters, soft interpreters of love :
Till Time and Industry (the mighty two
That bring our wishes nearer to our view)
Made him perceive, that the inclining fair
Receiv'd his vows with no reluctant ear ;
That Venus had confirm'd her equal reign,
And dealt to Emma's heart a share of Henry's pain.

While Cupid smil'd, by kind occasion bless'd,
And, with the secret kept, the love increas'd ;
The amorous youth frequents the silent groves ;
And much he meditates, for much he loves.
He loves, 'tis true ; and is belov'd again :
Great are his joys ; but will they long remain ?
Emma with smiles receives his present flame ;
But, smiling, will she ever be the same ?
Beautiful looks are rul'd by fickle minds ;
And summer seas are turn'd by sudden winds.
Another love may gain her easy youth :
Time changes thought, and flattery conquers truth.

O impotent estate of human life !
Where Hope and Fear maintain eternal strife ;
Where fleeting joy does lasting doubt inspire ;
And most we question, what we most desire !
Amongst thy various gifts, great Heaven, bestow
Our cup of love unmix'd ; forbear to throw
Bitter ingredients in ; nor pall the draught
With nauseous grief : for our ill-judging thought
Hardly enjoys the pleasurable taste ;
Or deems it not sincere ; or fears it cannot last.

With wishes rais'd, with jealousies oppress,
(Alternate tyrants of the human breast)
By one great trial he resolves to prove
The faith of woman, and the force of love.
If, scanning Emma's virtues, he may find
That beauteous frame enclose a steady mind,
He'll fix his hope, of future joy secure ;
And live a slave to Hymen's happy power.
But if the fair-one, as he fears, is frail ;
If, pois'd aright in Reason's equal scale,
Light fly her merit, and her faults prevail ;
His mind he vows to free from amorous care,
The latent mischief from his heart to tear,
Resume his azure arms, and shine again in war.
South of the castle, in a verdant glade,
A spreading beech extends her friendly shade :

Here oft the nymph his breathing vows had heard ;
Here oft her silence had her heart declar'd.
As active Spring awak'd her infant buds,
And genial life inform'd the verdant woods ;
Henry, in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half express'd, and half conceal'd, his flame,
Upon this tree : and, as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That, as the wound, the passion might increase.
As potent Nature shed her kindly showers,
And deck'd the various mead with opening flowers,
Upon this tree the nymph's obliging care
Had left a frequent wreath for Henry's hair ;
Which, as with gay delight the lover found,
Pleas'd with his conquest, with her present crown'd,
Glorious through all the plains he oft had gone,
And to each swain the mystic honour shown ;
The gift still prais'd, the giver still unknown.

His secret note the troubled Henry writes :
To the lone tree the lovely maid invites.
Imperfect words and dubious terms express,
That unforeseen mischance disturb'd his peace ;
That he must something to her ear commend,
On which her conduct and his life depend.

Soon as the fair-one had the note receiv'd,
The remnant of the day alone she griev'd :
For different this from every former note,
Which Venus dictated, and Henry wrote ;
Which told her all his future hopes were laid
On the dear bosom of his Nut-brown Maid ;
Which always bless'd her eyes, and own'd her power ;

And bid her oft adieu, yet added more.
Now night advanc'd. The house in sleep were laid ;
The nurse experienc'd, and the prying maid,
And, last, that sprite, which does incessant haunt
The lover's steps, the ancient maiden-aunt.
To her dear Henry, Emma wings her way,
With quicken'd pace repairing forc'd delay ;
For Love, fantastic power, that is afraid
To stir abroad till Watchfulness be laid,
Undaunted then o'er cliffs and valleys strays,
And leads his votaries safe through pathless ways.
Not Argus, with his hundred eyes, shall find
Where Cupid goes ; though he, poor guide ! is blind.

The maiden first arriving, sent her eye
To ask, if yet its chief delight were nigh :
With fear and with desire, with joy and pain,
She sees, and runs to meet him on the plain.
But, oh ! his steps proclaim no lover's haste :
On the low ground his fix'd regards are cast ;
His artful bosom heaves dissembled sighs ;
And tears suborn'd fall copious from his eyes.

With ease, alas ! we credit what we love :
His painted grief does real sorrow move
In the afflicted fair ; adown her cheek
Trickling the genuine tears their current break ;
Attentive stood the mournful nymph : the man
Broke silence first : the tale alternate ran.

HENRY.

SINCERE, O tell me, hast thou felt a pain,
Emma, beyond what woman knows to feign ?
Has thy uncertain bosom ever strove
With the first tumults of a real love ?
Hast thou now dreaded, and now blest his sway,
By turns averse, and joyful to obey ?

R

Thy virgin softness hast thou e'er bewail'd,
 As Reason yielded, and as Love prevail'd?
 And wept the potent god's resistless dart,
 His killing pleasure, his ecstatic smart,
 And heavenly poison thrilling through thy heart?
 If so, with pity view my wretched state;
 At least deplore, and then forget my fate:
 To some more happy knight reserve thy charms,
 By Fortune favour'd, and successful arms;
 And only, as the Sun's revolving ray
 Brings back each year this melancholy day,
 Permit one sigh, and set apart one tear,
 To an abandon'd exile's endless care.
 For me, alas! out-cast of human race,
 Love's anger only waits, and dire disgrace;
 For, lo! these hands in murder are imbrued;
 These trembling feet by Justice are pursued:
 Fate calls aloud, and hastens me away;
 A shameful death attends my longer stay;
 And I this night must fly from thee and love,
 Condemn'd in lonely woods, a banish'd man, to rove.

EMMA.

What is our bliss, that changeth with the Moon?
 And day of life, that darkens ere 'tis noon?
 What is true passion, if unblest it dies?
 And where is Emma's joy, if Henry flies?
 If love, alas! be pain; the pain I bear
 No thought can figure, and no tongue declare.
 Ne'er faithful woman felt, nor false one feign'd,
 The flames which long have in my bosom reign'd:
 The god of love himself inhabits there,
 With all his rage, and dread, and grief, and care,
 His complement of stores, and total war.

O! cease then coldly to suspect my love;
 And let my deed at least my faith approve.
 Alas! no youth shall my endearments share;
 Nor day nor night shall interrupt my care;
 No future story shall with truth upbraid
 The cold indifference of the Nut-brown Maid;
 Nor to hard banishment shall Henry run,
 While careless Emma sleeps on beds of down.
 View me resolv'd, where'er thou lead'st, to go,
 Friend to thy pain, and partner of thy woe;
 For I attest, fair Venus and her son,
 That I, of all mankind, will love but thee alone.

HENRY.

Let prudence yet obstruct thy venturous way;
 And take good heed, what men will think and say;
 That beauteous Emma vagrant courses took;
 Her father's house and civil life forsook;
 That, full of youthful blood, and fond of man,
 She to the wood-land with an exile ran.
 Reflect, that lessen'd fame is ne'er regain'd,
 And virgin honour, once, is always stain'd:
 Timely advis'd, the coming evil shun:
 Better not do the deed, than weep it done.
 No penance can absolve our guilty fame;
 Nor tears, that wash out sin, can wash out shame.
 Then fly the sad effects of desperate love,
 And leave a banish'd man through lonely woods to rove.

EMMA.

Let Emma's hapless case be falsely told
 By the rash young, or the ill-natur'd old:
 Let every tongue its various censures choose;
 Absolve with coldness, or with spite accuse:

Fair Truth, at last, her radiant beams will raise;
 And Malice vanquish'd heightens Virtue's praise.
 Let then thy favour but indulge my flight;
 O! let my presence make thy travels light;
 And potent Venus shall exalt my name
 Above the rumours of censorious Fame;
 Nor from that busy demon's restless power
 Will ever Emma other grace implore,
 Than that this truth should to the world be known,
 That I, of all mankind, have lov'd but thee alone.

HENRY.

But canst thou wield the sword, and bend the bow?
 With active force repel the sturdy foe?
 When the loud tumult speaks the battle nigh,
 And winged deaths in whistling arrows fly;
 Wilt thou, though wounded, yet undaunted stay,
 Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day?
 Then, as thy strength decays, thy heart will fail,
 Thy limbs all trembling, and thy cheeks all pale;
 With fruitless sorrow, thou, inglorious maid,
 Wilt weep thy safety by thy love betray'd:
 Then to thy friend, by foes o'er-charg'd, deny
 Thy little useless aid, and coward fly:
 Then wilt thou curse the chance that made thee love
 A banish'd man, condemn'd in lonely woods to rove.

EMMA.

With fatal certainty Thalestris knew
 To send the arrow from the twanging yew;
 And, great in arms, and foremost in the war,
 Bonduca brandish'd high the British spear.
 Could thirst of vengeance and desire of fame
 Excite the female breast with martial flame?
 And shall not love's diviner power inspire
 More hardy virtue, and more generous fire?

Near thee, mistrust not, constant I'll abide,
 And fall, or vanquish, fighting by thy side.
 Though my inferior strength may not allow
 That I should bear or draw the warrior bow;
 With ready hand I will the shaft supply,
 And joy to see thy victor arrows fly.
 Touch'd in the battle by the hostile reed,
 Should'st thou, (but Heaven avert it!) should'st
 thou bleed;

To stop the wounds, my finest lawn I'd tear,
 Wash them with tears, and wipe them with my hair;
 Blest, when my dangers and my toils have shown
 That I, of all mankind, could love but thee alone.

HENRY.

But canst thou, tender maid, canst thou sustain
 Afflictive want, or hunger's pressing pain?
 Those limbs, in lawn and softest silk array'd,
 From sun-beams guarded, and of winds afraid,
 Can they bear angry Jove? can they resist
 The parching dog-star, and the bleak north-east?
 When, chill'd by adverse snows and beating rain,
 We tread with weary steps the longsome plain;
 When with hard toil we seek our evening food,
 Berries and acorns from the neighbouring wood;
 And find among the cliffs no other house
 But the thin covert of some gather'd boughs;
 Wilt thou not then reluctant send thine eye
 Around the dreary waste, and, weeping, try
 (Though then, alas! that trial be too late)
 To find thy father's hospitable gate,
 And seats, where ease and plenty brooding sits?

Those seats, whence long excluded, thou must mourn :

That gate, for ever barr'd to thy return :

Wilt thou not then bewail ill-fated love, [rove?
And hate a banish'd man, condemn'd in woods to

EMMA.

Thy rise of fortune did I only wed,
From its decline determin'd to recede ;
Did I but purpose to embark with thee
On the smooth surface of a summer's sea ;
While gentle Zephyrs play in prosperous gales,
And Fortune's favour fills the swelling sails ;
But would forsake the ship, and make the shore,
When the winds whistle, and the tempests roar ?
No, Henry, no : one sacred oath has tied
Our loves : one destiny our life shall guide ;
Nor wild nor deep our common way divide.

When from the cave thou risest with the day,
To beat the woods, and rouse the bounding prey ;
The cave with moss and branches I'll adorn,
And cheerful sit, to wait my lord's return :
And, when thou frequent bring'st the smitten deer,
'For seldom, archers say, thy arrows err)
I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighbouring wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food ;
With humble duty, and officious haste,
I'll cull the furthest mead for thy repast ;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring,
And draw thy water from the freshest spring :
And, when at night with weary toil oppress,
In slumbers thou enjoy'st, and wholesome rest,
Watchful I'll guard thee, and with midnight prayer
Beseech the gods to keep thee in their care ;
And joyous ask, at morn's returning ray,
If thou hast health, and I may bless the day.
My thoughts shall fix, my latest wish depend,
On thee, guide, guardian, kinsman, father, friend :
By all these sacred names be Henry known
To Emma's heart ; and grateful let him own
That she, of all mankind, could love but him alone !

HENRY.

Vainly thou tell'st me, what the woman's care
Hath in the wildness of the wood prepare :
Ere thou goest, unhappiest of thy kind,
Must leave the habit and the sex behind.
No longer shall thy comely tresses break
In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck ;
Nor sit behind thy head, an ample round,
In graceful braids with various ribbon bound :
No longer shall the bodice aptly lac'd,
From thy full bosom to thy slender waist,
In air and harmony of shape express,
Increase by degrees, and beautifully less :
Nor shall thy lower garments' artful plait,
From thy fair side dependent to thy feet,
Among their chaste beauties with a modest pride,
And double every charm they seek to hide.
No ambrosial plenty of thy shining hair,
Snapt off and lost, scarce lower than thy ear
Shall stand uncouth : a horseman's coat shall hide
By taper shape, and comeliness of side :
The short trunk-hose shall show thy foot and knee
Inventious, and to common eye-sight free :
And, with a bolder stride and looser air,
Mingled with men, a man thou must appear.
Nor solitude, nor gentle peace of mind,
In forested maid, shalt thou in forests find :

'Tis long since Cynthia and her train were there,
Or guardian gods made innocence their care.
Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view :
For such must be my friends, a hideous crew
By adverse fortune mix'd in social ill,
Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill ;
Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back :
By sloth corrupted, by disorder fed,
Made bold by want, and prostitute for bread :
With such must Emma hunt the tedious day,
Assist their violence, and divide their prey :
With such she must return at setting light,
Though not partaker, witness of their night.
Thy ear, inur'd to charitable sounds
And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
Of jest obscene and vulgar ribaldry,
The ill-bred question, and the lewd reply ;
Brought by long habitude from bad to worse,
Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse,
That latest weapon of the wretches' war,
And blasphemy, sad comrade of despair.

Now, Emma, now the last reflection make,
What thou would'st follow, what thou must forsake :
By our ill-omen'd stars, and adverse Heaven,
No middle object to thy choice is given.
Or yield thy virtue, to attain thy love ;
Or leave a banish'd man, condemn'd in woods to rove.

EMMA.

O grief of heart ! that our unhappy fates
Force thee to suffer what thy honour hates :
Mix thee amongst the bad ; or make thee run
Too near the paths which Virtue bids thee shun.
Yet with her Henry still let Emma go ;
With him abhor the vice, but share the woe :
And sure my little heart can never err
Amidst the worst, if Henry still be there.

Our outward act is prompted from within ;
And from the sinner's mind proceeds the sin :
By her own choice free Virtue is approv'd ;
Nor by the force of outward objects mov'd.
Who has assay'd no danger, gains no praise.
In a small isle, amidst the wildest seas,
Triumphant Constancy has fix'd her seat :
In vain the Syrens sing, the tempests beat :
Their flattery she rejects, nor fears their threat.
For thee alone these little charms I drest :
Condemn'd them, or absolv'd them by thy test.
In comely figure rang'd my jewels shone,
Or negligently plac'd for thee alone :
For thee again they shall be laid aside ;
The woman, Henry, shall put off her pride
For thee : my clothes, my sex, exchang'd for thee,
I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee :
O line extreme of human infamy !
Wanting the scissors, with these hands I'll tear
(If that obstructs my flight) this load of hair.
Black soot, or yellow walnut, shall disgrace
This little red and white of Emma's face.
These nails with scratches shall deform my breast,
Lest by my look or colour be express'd
The mark of aught high-born, or ever better dress'd.
Yet in this commerce, under this disguise,
Let me be grateful still to Henry's eyes ;
Lost to the world, let me to him be known :
My fate I can absolve, if he shall own
That, leaving all mankind, I love but him alone.

HENRY.

O wildest thoughts of an abandon'd mind !
 Name, habit, parents, woman, left behind,
 Ev'n honour dubious, thou prefer'st to go
 Wild to the woods with me : said Emma so ?
 Or did I dream what Emma never said ?
 O guilty error ! and O wretched maid !
 Whose roving fancy would resolve the same
 With him, who next should tempt her easy fame ;
 And blow with empty words the susceptible flame.
 Now why should doubtful terms thy mind perplex ?
 Confess thy frailty, and avow the sex :
 No longer loose desire for constant love [to rove.
 Mistake : but say, 'tis man with whom thou long'st

EMMA.

Are there not poisons, racks, and flames, and swords,
 That Emma thus must die by Henry's words ?
 Yet what could swords or poison, racks or flame,
 But mangle and disjoint this brittle frame ! [fame.
 More fatal Henry's words ; they murder Emma's
 And fall these sayings from that gentle tongue,
 Where civil speech and soft persuasion hung ;
 Whose artful sweetness and harmonious strain,
 Courting my grace, yet courting it in vain,
 Call'd sighs, and tears, and wishes, to its aid ;
 And, whilst it Henry's glowing flame convey'd,
 Still blam'd the coldness of the Nut-brown Maid ?
 Let envious Jealousy and canker'd Spite
 Produce my actions to severest light,
 And tax my open day, or secret night.
 Did e'er my tongue speak my unguarded heart
 The least inclin'd to play the wanton's part ?
 Did e'er my eye one inward thought reveal,
 Which angels might not hear, and virgins tell ?
 And hast thou, Henry, in my conduct known
 One fault, but that which I must never own,
 That I, of all mankind, have lov'd but thee alone ?

HENRY.

Vainly thou talk'st of loving me alone :
 Each man is man ; and all our sex is one.
 False are our words, and fickle is our mind :
 Nor in Love's ritual can we ever find
 Vows made to last, or promises to bind.

By Nature prompted, and for empire made,
 Alike by strength or cunning we invade :
 When, arm'd with rage, we march against the foe,
 We lift the battle-axe, and draw the bow :
 When, fir'd with passion, we attack the fair,
 Delusive sighs and brittle vows we bear ;
 Our falsehood and our arms have equal use ;
 As they our conquest or delight produce.
 The foolish heart thou gav'st, again receive,
 The only boon departing love can give.
 To be less wretched, be no longer true ;
 What strives to fly thee, why should'st thou pursue ?
 Forget the present flame, indulge a new ;
 Single the loveliest of the amorous youth :
 Ask for his vow ; but hope not for his truth.
 The next man (and the next thou shalt believe)
 Will pawn his gods, intending to deceive ;
 Will kneel, implore, persist, o'ercome, and leave.
 Hence let thy Cupid aim his arrows right ;
 Be wise and false, shun trouble, seek delight :
 Change thou the first, nor wait thy lover's flight.

Why should'st thou weep ? let Nature judge our case ;

I saw thee young and fair ; pursued the chase
 Of Youth and Beauty : I another saw
 Fairer and younger : yielding to the law
 Of our all-ruling mother, I pursued
 More youth, more beauty : blest vicissitude !
 My active heart still keeps its pristine flame ;
 The object alter'd, the desire the same.

This younger, fairer, pleads her rightful charms ;
 With present power compels me to her arms.
 And much I fear, from my subjected mind,
 (If Beauty's force to constant love can bind,)
 That years may roll, ere in her turn the maid
 Shall weep the fury of my love decay'd ;
 And weeping follow me, as thou dost now,
 With idle clamours of a broken vow.

Nor can the wildness of thy wishes err
 So wide, to hope that thou may'st live with her.
 Love, well thou know'st, no partnership allows :
 Cupid averse rejects divided vows :
 Then, from thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove
 An useless sorrow, and an ill-starr'd love ;
 And leave me, with the fair, at large in woods to rove.

EMMA.

Are we in life through one great error led ?
 Is each man perjur'd, and each nymph betray'd ?
 Of the superior sex art thou the worst ?
 Am I of mine the most completely curst ?
 Yet let me go with thee ; and going prove,
 From what I will endure, how much I love.

This potent beauty, this triumphant fair,
 This happy object of our different care,
 Her let me follow ; her let me attend
 A servant (she may scorn the name of friend).
 What she demands, incessant I'll prepare :
 I'll weave her garlands ; and I'll plait her hair :
 My busy diligence shall deck her board,
 (For there at least I may approach my lord,)
 And, when her Henry's softer hours advise
 His servant's absence, with dejected eyes
 Far I'll recede, and sighs forbid to rise.

Yet, when increasing grief brings slow disease,
 And ebbing life, on terms severe as these,
 Will have its little lamp no longer fed ;
 When Henry's mistress shows him Emma dead ;
 Rescue my poor remains from vile neglect,
 With virgin honours let my hearse be deckt,
 And decent emblem ; and at least persuade
 This happy nymph, that Emma may be laid
 Where thou, dear author of my death, where she,
 With frequent eye my sepulchre may see.
 The nymph amidst her joys may haply breathe
 One pious sigh, reflecting on my death,
 And the sad fate which she may one day prove,
 Who hopes from Henry's vows eternal love.
 And thou forsworn, thou cruel, as thou art,
 If Emma's image ever touch'd thy heart ;
 Thou sure must give one thought, and drop of
 To her, whom love abandon'd to despair ;
 To her, who, dying, on the wounded stone
 Bid it in lasting characters be known,
 That, of mankind, she lov'd but thee alone.

HENRY.

Hear, solemn Jove ; and conscious Venus, hear
 And thou, bright maid, believe me whilst I swear

No time, no change, no future flame, shall move
The well-plac'd basis of my lasting love.

O powerful virtue ! O victorious fair !

At least, excuse a trial too severe :

Receive the triumph, and forget the war.

No banish'd man, condemn'd in woods to rove,

Entreats thy pardon, and implores thy love :

No perjur'd knight desires to quit thy arms,

Fairest collection of thy sex's charms,

Crown of my love, and honour of my youth !

Henry, thy Henry, with eternal truth,

As thou may'st wish, shall all his life employ,

And found his glory in his Emma's joy.

In me behold the potent Edgar's heir,

Illustrious earl : him terrible in war

Let Loyre confess, for she has felt his sword,

And trembling fled before the British lord.

Him great in peace and wealth fair Deva knows ;

For she amidst his spacious meadows flows ;

Inclines her urn upon his fatten'd lands ;

And sees his numerous herds imprint her sands.

And thou, my fair, my dove, shalt raise thy thought

To greatness next to empire : shalt be brought

With solemn pomp to my paternal seat ;

Where peace and plenty on thy word shall wait.

Music and song shall wake the marriage-day :

And, whilst the priests accuse the bride's delay,

Myrles and roses shall obstruct her way.

Friendship shall still thy evening feasts adorn ;

And blooming Peace shall ever bless thy morn.

Succeeding years their happy race shall run,

And Age, unheeded, by delight come on :

While yet superior Love shall mock his power :

And when old Time shall turn the fated hour,

Which only can our well-tied knot unfold,

What rests of both, one sepulchre shall hold.

Hence then for ever from my Emma's breast,

(That heaven of softness, and that seat of rest,)

Ye doubts and fears, and all that know to move

Tormenting grief, and all that trouble love,

Scatter'd by winds recede, and wild in forests rove.

EMMA.

O day, the fairest sure that ever rose !

Period and end of anxious Emma's woes !

See of her joy, and source of her delight ;

O' wing'd with pleasure, take thy happy flight,

And give each future morn a tincture of thy white.

Yet tell thy votary, potent queen of love,

Henry, my Henry, will he never rove ?

Will he be ever kind, and just, and good ?

And is there yet no mistress in the wood ?

None, none there is ; the thought was rash and vain ;

A false idea, and a fancy'd pain.

Doubt shall for ever quit my strengthen'd heart,

And anxious jealousy's corroding smart ;

Nor other inmate shall inhabit there,

But soft Belief, young Joy, and pleasing Care.

Hence let the tides of plenty ebb and flow,

And Fortune's various gale unheeded blow.

If at my feet the suppliant goddess stands,

And sheds her treasure with unweary'd hands ;

Her present favour cautious I'll embrace,

And not unthankful use the proffer'd grace :

If she reclaims the temporary boon,

And tries her pinions, fluttering to be gone ;

Secure of mind, I'll obviate her intent,

And unconcern'd return the goods she lent.

Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,

From any turn of her fantastic wheel :

Friendship's great laws, and Love's superior powers,

Must mark the colour of my future hours.

From the events which thy commands create

I must my blessings or my sorrows date ;

And Henry's will must dictate Emma's fate.

Yet, while with close delight and inward pride
(Which from the world my careful soul shall hide)

I see thee, lord and end of my desire,

Exalted high as virtue can require ;

With power invested, and with pleasure cheer'd ;

Sought by the good, by the oppressor fear'd ;

Loaded and blest with all the affluent store,

Which human vows at smoking shrines implore ;

Grateful and humble grant me to employ

My life subservient only to thy joy ;

And at my death to bless thy kindness shown

To her, who of mankind could love but thee alone.

WHILE thus the constant pair alternate said,

Joyful above them and around them play'd

Angels and sportive Loves, a numerous crowd ;

Smiling they clapt their wings, and low they bow'd :

They tumbled all their little quivers o'er,

To choose propitious shafts, a precious store ;

That, when their god should take his future darts,

To strike (however rarely) constant hearts,

His happy skill might proper arms employ,

All tipt with pleasure, and all wing'd with joy :

And those, they vow'd, whose lives should imitate

These lovers' constancy, should share their fate.

The queen of beauty stopt her bridled doves ;

Approv'd the little labour of the Loves ;

Was proud and pleas'd the mutual vow to hear ;

And to the triumph call'd the god of war :

Soon as she calls, the god is always near.

" Now, Mars," she said, " let Fame exalt her voice :

Nor let thy conquests only be her choice :

But, when she sings great Edward from the field

Return'd, the hostile spear and captive shield

In Concord's temple hung, and Gallia taught to yield ;

And when as prudent Saturn shall complete

The years design'd to perfect Britain's state,

The swift-wing'd power shall take her trump again,

To sing her favourite Anna's wondrous reign ;

To recollect unweary'd Marlborough's toils,

Old Rufus' hall unequal to his spoils ;

The British soldier from his high command

Glorious, and Gaul thrice vanquish'd by his hand :

Let her, at least, perform what I desire ;

With second breath the vocal brass inspire ;

And tell the nations, in no vulgar strain,

What wars I manage, and what wreaths I gain.

And, when thy tumults, and thy fights are past ;

And when thy laurels at my feet are cast ;

Faithful mayst thou, like British Henry, prove :

And, Emma-like, let me return thy love.

" Renown'd for truth, let all thy sons appear ;

And constant beauty shall reward their care."

Mars smil'd, and bow'd : the Cyprian deity

Turn'd to the glorious ruler of the sky ;

" And thou," she smiling said, " great god of days

And verse, behold my deed, and sing my praise ;

As on the British earth, my favourite isle,

Thy gentle rays and kindest influence smile,

Through all her laughing fields and verdant groves,

Proclaim with joy these memorable loves.

From every annual course let one great day
To celebrated sports and floral play
Be set aside ; and, in the softest lays
Of thy poetic sons, be solemn praise
And everlasting marks of honour paid
To the true lover, and the Nut-brown Maid."

ALMA:

OR,

THE PROGRESS OF THE MIND.

IN THREE CANTOS.

Πάντα γίλως, καὶ πάντα πόνις, καὶ πάντα τὸ μῆδιν·
Πάντα γὰρ ἔξ ἀλόγων ἰστί τὰ γιγνόμενα.

Incert. ap. Stobæum.

CANTO I.

MATTHEW * met Richard †, when or where
From story is not mighty clear :
Of many knotty points they spoke,
And pro and con by turns they took.
Rats half the manuscript have eat :
Dire hunger ! which we still regret.
O ! may they ne'er again digest
The horrors of so sad a feast !
Yet less our grief, if what remains,
Dear Jacob ‡, by thy care and pains
Shall be to future times convey'd.
It thus begins :

. . . . Here Matthew said,
" Alma in verse, in prose the Mind,
By Aristotle's pen defin'd,
Throughout the body, squat or tall,
Is, bonâ fide, all in all.
And yet, slap-dash, is all again
In every sinew, nerve, and vein :
Runs here and there, like Hamlet's ghost ;
While every where she rules the roast.

" This system, Richard, we are told,
The men of Oxford firmly hold.
The Cambridge wits, you know, deny
With ipse dixit to comply.
They say, (for in good truth they speak
With small respect of that old Greek,)
That, putting all his words together,
'Tis three blue beans in one blue bladder.

" Alma, they strenuously maintain,
Sits cock-horse on her throne, the brain ;
And from that seat of thought dispenses
Her sovereign pleasure to the senses.
Two optic nerves, they say, she ties,
Like spectacles, across the eyes ;
By which the spirits bring her word,
Whene'er the balls are fix'd or stirr'd,
How quick at park and play they strike ;
The duke they court ; the toast they like ;
And at St. James's turn their grace
From former friends, now out of place.

" Without these aids, to be more serious,
Her power, they hold, had been precarious :

* Himself. † Mr. Shelton. ‡ Tonson.

The eyes might have conspir'd her ruin,
And she not known what they were doing.
Foolish it had been, and unkind,
That they should see, and she be blind.

" Wise Nature likewise, they suppose,
Has drawn two conduits down our nose :
Could Alma else with judgment tell
When cabbage stinks, or roses smell ?
Or who would ask for her opinion
Between an oyster and an onion ?
For from most bodies, Dick, you know,
Some little bits ask leave to flow ;
And, as through these canals they roll,
Bring up a sample of the whole ;
Like footmen running before coaches,
To tell the inn what lord approaches.

" By nerves about our palate plac'd,
She likewise judges of the taste.
Else (dismal thought !) our warlike men
Might drink thick port for fine champagne ;
And our ill-judging wives and daughters
Mistake small-beer for citron-waters.

" Hence, too, that she might better hear
She sets a drum at either ear :
And, loud or gentle, harsh or sweet,
Are put th' alarums which they beat.

" Last, to enjoy her sense of feeling,
(A thing she much delights to deal in,)
A thousand little nerves she sends
Quite to our toes and fingers' ends ;
And these, in gratitude, again
Return their spirits to the brain ;
In which their figure being printed,
(As just before, I think, I hinted,)
Alma, inform'd, can try the case,
As she had been upon the place.

" Thus, while the judge gives different journais
To country council and attornies,
He on the bench in quiet sits,
Deciding, as they bring the writs.
The pope thus prays and sleeps at Rome,
And very seldom stirs from home :
Yet, sending forth his holy spies,
And having heard what they advise,
He rules the church's blest dominions,
And sets men's faith by his opinions.

" The scholars of the Stagyrte,
Who for the old opinion fight,
Would make their modern friends confess
The difference but from more to less.
The Mind, say they, while you sustain
To hold her station in the brain ;
You grant, at least, she is extended :
Ergo the whole dispute is ended.
For, till to-morrow should you plead,
From form and structure to the head,
The Mind as visibly is seen
Extended through the whole machine.
Why should all honour then be ta'en
From lower parts to load the brain,
When other limbs, we plainly see,
Each in his way as brisk as he ?
For music, grant the head receive it,
It is the artist's hand that gave it ;
And, though the skull may wear the laurel,
The soldier's arm sustains the quarrel.
Besides, the nostrils, ears, and eyes,
Are not his parts, but his allies ;
Ev'n what you hear the tongue proclaim
Comes ab origine from them.

What could the head perform alone,
If all their friendly aids were gone?
A foolish figure he must make;
Do nothing else but sleep and ake.

"Nor matters it, that you can show
How to the head the spirits go;
Those spirits started from some goal,
Before they through the veins could roll.
Now, we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back, before they came.

"If, therefore, as we must suppose,
They came from fingers, and from toes;
Or teeth, or fingers, in this case,
Of Nam-skull's self should take the place:
Disputing fair, you grant thus much,
That all sensation is but touch.
Dip but your toes into cold water,
Their correspondent teeth will chatter:
And, strike the bottom of your feet,
You set your head into a heat.
The bully beat, and happy lover,
Confess that feeling lies all over.

"Note here, Lucretius dares to teach
(As all our youth may learn from Creech)
That eyes were made, but could not view,
Nor hands embrace, nor feet pursue:
But heedless Nature did produce
The members first, and then the use.
What each must act was yet unknown,
Till all is mov'd by Chance alone.

"A man first builds a country-seat,
Then finds the walls not good to eat.
Another plants, and wondering sees
Nor books nor medals on his trees.
Yet poet and philosopher
Was he, who durst such whims aver.
Blest, for his sake, be human reason,
That came at all, though late in season.
But no man, sure, e'er left his house,

And saddled Ball, with thoughts so wild,
To bring a midwife to his spouse,

Before he knew she was with child.

And no man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,
Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,

That taught them both to sow and knead.

Before they're ask'd, can maids refuse?

Can"—"Pray," says Dick, "hold in your Muse.
While you Pindaric truths rehearse,
She hobbles in alternate verse."—

"Verse," Mat reply'd; "is that my care?"—

"Go on," quoth Richard, "soft and fair."

"This looks, friend Dick, as Nature had
But exercis'd the salesman's trade;
As if she haply had sat down,
And cut out clothes for all the town;
Then sent them out to Monmouth-street,
To try what persons they would fit.
But every free and licens'd taylor
Would in this thesis find a failure.
Should whims like these his head perplex,
How could he work for either sex?
His clothes, as atoms might prevail,
Might fit a pismire, or a whale.

No, no: he views with studious pleasure
Your shape, before he takes your measure.
For real Kate he made the bodice,
And not for an ideal goddess.

No error near his shop-board lurk'd;
He knew the folks for whom he work'd:

Still to their size he aim'd his skill:
Else, pr'ythee, who would pay his bill?

"Next, Dick, if Chance herself should vary,
Observe, how matters would miscarry:
Across your eyes, friend, place your shoes;
Your spectacles upon your toes:
Then you and Memmius shall agree
How nicely men would walk, or see.

"But Wisdom, peevish and cross-grain'd,
Must be oppos'd, to be sustain'd;
And still your knowledge will increase,
As you make other people's less.
In arms and science 'tis the same;
Our rival's hurts create our fame.
At Faubert's, if disputes arise
Among the champions for the prize,
To prove who gave the fairer butt,
John shows the chalk on Robert's coat.
So, for the honour of your book,
It tells where other folks mistook:
And, as their notions you confound,
Those you invent get farther ground.

"The commentators on old Aristotle ('tis urg'd) in judgment vary:
They to their own conceits have brought
The image of his general thought;
Just as the melancholic eye
Sees fleets and armies in the sky;
And to the poor apprentice ear
The bells sound, 'Whittington, lord-mayor.'
The conjuror thus explains his scheme;
Thus spirits walk, and prophets dream;
North Britons thus have second-sight;
And Germans, free from gun-shot, fight.

"Theodoret and Origen,
And fifty other learned men,
Attest, that, if their comments find
The traces of their master's mind,
Alma, can ne'er decay nor die:
This flatly t' other sect deny;
Simplicius, Theophrast, Durand,
Great names, but hard in verse to stand.
They wonder men should have mistook
The tenets of their master's book,
And hold, that Alma yields her breath,
O'ercome by age, and seiz'd by death.
Now which were wise? and which were fools?
Poor Alma sits between two stools:
The more she reads, the more perplex;
The comment ruining the text:
Now fears, now hopes, her doubtful fate:
But, Richard, let her look to that—
Whilst we our own affairs pursue.

"These different systems, old or new,
A man with half an eye may see,
Were only form'd to disagree.
Now, to bring things to fair conclusion,
And save much Christian ink's effusion,
Let me propose an healing scheme,
And sail along the middle stream;
For, Dick, if we could reconcile

Old Aristotle with Gassendus,
How many would admire our toil!

And yet how few would comprehend us!

"Here, Richard, let my scheme commence;
Oh! may my words be lost in sense!
While pleas'd Thalia deigns to write
The slips and bounds of Alma's flight.

"My simple system shall suppose
That Alma enters at the toes;

That then she mounts by just degrees
Up to the ancles, legs, and knees ;
Next, as the sap of life does rise,
She lends her vigour to the thighs ;
And all these under-regions past,
She nestles somewhere near the waist ;
Gives pain or pleasure, grief or laughter,
As we shall show at large hereafter.
Mature, if not improv'd by time,
Up to the heart she loves to climb ;
From thence, compell'd by craft and age,
She makes the head her latest stage.

" From the feet upward to the head"—
" Pithy and short," says Dick, " proceed."

" Dick, this is not an idle notion :
Observe the progress of the motion.
First, I demonstratively prove,
That feet were only made to move ;
And legs desire to come and go,
For they have nothing else to do.

" Hence, long before the child can crawl,
He learns to kick, and wince, and sprawl :
To hinder which, your midwife knows
To bind those parts extremely close ;
Lest Alma, newly enter'd in,
And stunn'd at her own christening's din,
Fearful of future grief and pain,
Should silently sneak out again.
Full piteous seems young Alma's case ;
As in a luckless gamester's place,
She would not play, yet must not pass.

" Again ; as she grows something stronger,
And master's feet are swath'd no longer,
If in the night too oft he kicks,
Or shows his loco-motive tricks ;
These first assaults fat Kate repays him ;
When half asleep, she overlays him.

" Now mark, dear Richard, from the age
That children tread this worldly stage,
Broom-staff or poker they bestride,
And round the parlour love to ride ;
Till thoughtful father's pious care
Provides his brood, next Smithfield Fair,
With supplemental hobby-horses :
And happy be their infant courses !

" Hence for some years they ne'er stand still :
Their legs, you see, direct their will,
From opening morn till setting sun,
Around the fields and woods they run ;
They frisk, and dance, and leap, and play,
Nor heed what Freind or Snape can say.

" To her next stage as Alma flies,
And likes, as I have said, the thighs,
With sympathetic power she warms
Their good allies and friends, the arms ;
While Betty dances on the green,
And Susan is at stool-ball seen ;
While John for nine-pins does declare,
And Roger loves to pitch the bar :
Both legs and arms spontaneous move ;
Which was the thing I meant to prove.

" Another motion now she makes :
O, need I name the seat she takes ?
His thought quite chang'd the stripling finds ;
'The sport and race no more he minds ;
Neglected Tray and pointer lie,
And covies unmolested fly.
Sudden the jocund plain he leaves,
And for the nymph in secret grieves.

In dying accents he complains
Of cruel fires, and raging pains.
The nymph too longs to be alone,
Leaves all the swains, and sighs for one.
The nymph is warm'd with young desire,
And feels, and dies to quench his fire.
They meet each evening in the grove ;
Their parley but augments their love :
So to the priest their case they tell :
He ties the knot ; and all goes well.

" But, O my Muse, just distance keep ;
Thou art a maid, and must not peep.
In nine months time, the bodice loose,
And petticoats too short, disclose
That at this age the active mind
About the waist lies most confin'd ;
And that young life and quickening sense
Spring from his influence darted thence.
So from the middle of the world
The Sun's prolific rays are hurl'd :
'Tis from that seat he darts those beams,
Which quicken Earth with genial flames."

Dick, who thus long had passive sat,
Here strok'd his chin, and cock'd his hat ;
Then slapp'd his hand upon the board,
And thus the youth put in his word.
" Love's advocates, sweet sir, would find him
A higher place than you assign'd him."

" Love's advocates ! Dick, who are those ?"—
" The poets, you may well suppose.
I'm sorry, sir, you have discarded
The men with whom till now you herded.
Prose-men alone, for private ends,
I thought, forsook their ancient friends.
In cor stillavit, cries Lucretius ;
If he may be allow'd to teach us.
The self-same thing soft Ovid says,
(A proper judge in such a case,)
Horace's phrase is, torret jecur ;
And happy was that curious speaker.
Here Virgil too has plac'd this passion.
What signifies too long quotation ?
In ode and epic, plain the case is,
That Love holds one of these two places."

" Dick, without passion or reflection,
I'll straight demolish this objection.

" First, poets, all the world agrees,
Write half to profit, half to please.
Matter and figure they produce ;
For garnish this, and that for use :
And in the structure of their feasts,
They seek to feed and please their guests :
But one may balk this good intent,
And take things otherwise than meant.
Thus, if you dine with my lord-mayor,
Roast-beef and venison is your fare ;
Thence you proceed to swan and bustard,
And persevere in tart and custard :
But tulip-leaves and lemon-peel
Help only to adorn the meal ;
And painted flags, superb and neat,
Proclaim you welcome to the treat.
The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flowers ;
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the streamer.

" That Cupid goes with bow and arrows,
And Venus keeps her coach and sparrows,
Is all but emblem, to acquaint one,
'The son is sharp, the mother wanton.

Such images have sometimes shown
A mystic sense, but oftener none.
For who conceives, what bards devise,
That Heaven is plac'd in Celia's eyes ;
Or where's the sense, direct and moral,
That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral ?

" Your Horace owns, he various writ,
As wild or sober maggots bit :
And, where too much the poet ranted,
The sage philosopher recanted.
His grave Epistles may disprove
The wanton Odes he made to love.

" Lucretius keeps a mighty pother
With Cupid and his fancy'd mother ;
Calls her great queen of Earth and Air,
Declares that winds and seas obey her ;
And, while her honour he rehearses,
Implores her to inspire his verses.

" Yet, free from this poetic madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That she and all her fellow-gods
Sit idling in their high abodes,
Regardless of this world below,
Our health or hanging, weal or woe ;
Nor once disturb their heavenly spirits
With Scapin's cheats, or Cæsar's merits.

" Nor e'er can Latin poets prove
Where lies the real seat of Love.
For they burn, and cor they pierce,
As either best supplies their verse ;
And, if folks ask the reason for't,
Why, one was long, and t'other short.
Thus, I presume, the British Muse
May take the freedom strangers use.
In prose our property is greater :
Why should it then be less in metre ?
If Cupid throws a single dart,
We make him wound the lover's heart :
But, if he takes his bow and quiver ;
Tis sure he must transfix the liver :
For rhyme with reason may dispense,
And sound has right to govern sense.

" But let your friends in verse suppose,
That ne'er shall be allow'd in prose ;
Anatomists can make it clear,
The Liver minds his own affair ;
Kindly supplies our public uses,
And parts and strains the vital juices ;
Till lays some useful bile aside,
To tinge the chyle's insipid tide :
But we should want both gibe and satire ;
And all be burst with pure good-nature.
Bitter gall is bitter with a witness,
And love is all delight and sweetness.
If logic then has lost its aim,
Sweet and bitter be the same :
And he, methinks, is no great scholar,
Who can mistake desire for choler.

" The like may of the heart be said ;
Courage and terroure there are bred.
All those, whose hearts are loose and low,
Tart, if they hear but the tattoo :
And mighty physical their fear is ;
For, soon as noise of combat near is,
Their heart, descending to their breeches,
Must give their stomach cruel twitches.
But heroes, who o'ercome or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high,
On strings of which, in battle's heat,
Against their very corsets beat ;

Keep time with their own trumpet's measure,
And yield them most excessive pleasure.

" Now, if 'tis chiefly in the heart
That Courage does itself exert,
'Twill be prodigious hard to prove
That this is eke the throne of Love.
Would Nature make one place the seat
Of fond desire, and fell debate ?
Must people only take delight in
Those hours, when they are tir'd of fighting ?
And has no man, but who has kill'd
A father, right to get a child ?
These notions then I think but idle ;
And Love shall still possess the middle.

" This truth more plainly to discover,
Suppose your hero were a lover.
Though he before had gall and rage,
Which death or conquest must assuage,
He grows dispirited and low ;
He hates the fight, and shuns the foe.

" In scornful sloth Achilles slept,
And for his wench, like Tall-boy, wept :
Nor would return to war and slaughter,
Till they brought back the parson's daughter.

" Antonius fled from Actium's coast,
Augustus pressing, Asia lost :
His sails by Cupid's hands unfurl'd,
To keep the fair, he gave the world.
Edward our Fourth, rever'd and crown'd,
Vigorous in youth, in arms renown'd,
While England's voice, and Warwick's care,
Design'd him Gallia's beauteous heir,
Chang'd peace and power for rage and wars,
Only to dry one widow's tears —

" France's fourth Henry we may see
A servant to the fair d'Estree ;
When, quitting Coutras' prosperous field,
And Fortune taught at length to yield,
He from his guards and midnight tent
Disguis'd o'er hills and vallies went,
To wanton with the sprightly dame,
And in his pleasure lost his fame.

" Bold is the critic who dares prove
These heroes were no friends to love ;
And bolder he, who dares aver
That they were enemies to war.
Yet, when their thought should, now or never,
Have rais'd their heart, or fir'd their liver,
Fond Alma to those parts was gone,
Which Love more justly calls his own.

" Examples I could cite you more ;
But be contented with these four :
For when one's proofs are aptly chosen,
Four are as valid as four dozen.
One came from Greece, and one from Rome ;
The other two grew nearer home.
For some in ancient books delight ;
Others prefer what moderns write :
Now I should be extremely loth,
Not to be thought expert in both."

CANTO II.

" But shall we take the Muse abroad,
To drop her idly on the road ?
And leave our subject in the middle,
As Butler did his Bear and Fiddle ?
Yet he, consummate master, knew,
When to recede, and where pursue :

His noble negligences teach
 What others toils despair to reach.
 He, perfect dancer, climbs the rope,
 And balances your fear and hope :
 If, after some distinguish'd leap,
 He drops his pole, and seems to slip,
 Straight gathering all his active strength,
 He rises higher half his length.
 With wonder you approve his slight,
 And owe your pleasure to your fright :
 But like poor Andrew I advance,
 False mimic of my master's dance.
 Around the cord awhile I sprawl,
 And thence, though low, in earnest fall.

" My preface tells you, I digress'd :
 He's half absolv'd who has confess'd."

" I like," quoth Dick, " your simile,
 And, in return, take two from me.
 As masters in the clare obscure
 With various light your eyes allure,
 A flaming yellow here they spread,
 Draw off in blue, or charge in red ;
 Yet, from these colours oddly mix'd,
 Your sight upon the whole is fix'd :
 Or as, again, your courtly dames
 (Whose clothes returning birth-day claims)
 By arts improve the stuffs they vary,
 And things are best as most contrary ;
 The gown, with stiff embroidery shining,
 Looks charming with a slighter lining ;
 The out-, if Indian figure stain,
 The in-side must be rich and plain.
 So you great authors have thought fit
 To make digression temper wit :
 When arguments too fiercely glare,
 You calm them with a milder air :
 To break their points, you turn their force,
 And furbelow the plain discourse."

" Richard," quoth Mat, " these words of thine
 Speak something sly, and something fine :
 But I shall e'en resume my theme,
 However thou may'st praise or blame.

" As people marry now, and settle,
 Fierce Love abates his usual mettle :
 Worldly desires, and household cares,
 Disturb the godhead's soft affairs :
 So now, as health or temper changes,
 In larger compass Alma ranges.
 This day below, the next above,
 As light or solid whimsies move.
 So merchant has his house in town,
 And country-seat near Bansted-down :
 From one he dates his foreign letters,
 Sends out his goods, and duns his debtors :
 In t'other, at his hours of leisure,
 He smokes his pipe, and takes his pleasure.

" And now your matrimonial Cupid,
 Lash'd on by Time, grows tir'd and stupid.
 For story and experience tell us
 That man grows old, and woman jealous.
 Both would their little ends secure ;
 He sighs for freedom, she for power :
 His wishes tend abroad to roam,
 And hers to domineer at home.
 Thus, passion flags by slow degrees,
 And, ruffled more, delighted less,
 The busy mind does seldom go
 To those once-charming seats below ;
 But, in the breast incamp'd, prepares
 For well-bred feints and future wars.

The man suspects his lady's crying
 (When he last autumn lay a-dying)
 Was but to gain him to appoint her
 By codicil a larger jointure.
 The woman finds it all a trick,
 That he could swoon when she was sick ;
 And knows, that in that grief he reckon'd
 On black-ey'd Susan for his second.

" Thus having strove some tedious years
 With feign'd desires, and real fears ;
 And, tir'd with answers and replies
 Of John affirms, and Martha lies,
 Leaving this endless altercation,
 The Mind affects a higher station.

" Poltis, that generous king of Thrace,
 I think, was in this very case.
 All Asia now was by the ears,
 And gods beat up for volunteers
 To Greece and Troy ; while Poltis sat
 In quiet governing his state.

' And whence,' said the pacific king, .
 ' Does all this noise and discord spring ?'
 ' Why, Paris took Atrides' wife.' —
 ' With ease I could compose this strife :
 The injur'd hero should not lose,
 Nor the young lover want a spouse.
 But Helen chang'd her first condition,
 Without her husband's just permission.
 What from the dame can Paris hope ?
 She may as well from him elope.

Again, how can her old good man,
 With honour, take her back again ?
 From hence I logically gather,
 The woman cannot live with either.
 Now, I have two right honest wives,
 For whose possession no man strives :
 One to Atrides I will send,
 And t'other to my Trojan friend.
 Each prince shall thus with honour have
 What both so warmly seem to crave :
 The wrath of gods and man shall cease,
 And Poltis live and die in peace.'

" Dick, if this story pleaseth thee,
 Pray thank Dan Pope, who told it me.

" Howe'er swift Alma's flight may vary,
 (Take this by way of corollary)
 Some limbs she finds the very same,
 In place, in dignity, in name :
 These dwell at such convenient distance,
 That each may give his friend assistance.
 Thus he who runs or dances begs
 The equal vigour of two legs ;
 So much to both does Alma trust,
 She ne'er regards which goes the first.
 Teague could make neither of them stay,
 When with himself he ran away.
 The man who struggles in the fight,
 Fatigues left arm as well as right ;
 For, whilst one hand exalts the blow,
 And on the earth extends the foe,
 T'other would take it wondrous ill,
 If in your pocket it lay still.
 And, when you shoot, and shut one eye,
 You cannot think he would deny
 To lend the other friendly aid,
 Or wink as coward, and afraid.
 No, sir ; whilst he withdraws his flame,
 His comrade takes the surer aim :
 One moment if his beams recede,
 As soon as e'er the bird is dead,

Opening again, he lays his claim
To half the profit, half the fame,
And helps to pocket up the game.
'Tis thus one tradesman slips away,
To give his partner fairer play.

"Some limbs again, in bulk or stature
Unlike, and not a-kin by nature,
In concert act, like modern friends,
Because one serves the other's ends.
The arm thus waits upon the heart,
So quick to take the bully's part,
That one, though warm, decides more slow
Than t'other executes the blow.

A stander-by may chance to have it,
Ere Hack himself perceives he gave it.

"The amorous eyes thus always go
A-strolling for their friends below ;
For, long before the squire and dame
Have tête-à-tête reliev'd their flame,
Ere visits yet are brought about,
The eye by sympathy looks out,
Knows Florimel, and longs to meet her,
And, if he sees, is sure to greet her,
Though at sash-window, on the stairs,
At court, nay (authors say) at prayers. —

"The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light.
View his two gauntlets ; these declare
That both his hands were us'd to war.
And from his two gilt spurs 'tis learn'd
His feet were equally concern'd.
But have you not, with thought, beheld
The sword hang dangling o'er the shield ?
Which shows the breast, that plate was us'd to,
Had an ally right arm to trust to :
And, by the peep-holes in his crest,
Is it not virtually confest,

That there his eyes took distant aim,
And glanc'd respect to that bright dame,
In whose delight his hope was center'd,
And for whose glove his life he ventur'd ?

"Objections to my general system
May rise, perhaps ; and I have mist them ;
But I can call to my assistance
Proximity (mark that !) and distance ;
To prove, that all things, on occasion,
Love union, and desire adhesion ;
But Alma merely is a scale,
And motives, like the weights, prevail.
Neither side turn down nor up,
For loss or gain, with fear or hope,
The balance always would hang even,
Like Mah'met's tomb, 'twixt Earth and Heaven.

"This, Richard, is a curious case :
Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
Not knowing which was mild or stale :
In this sad state your doubtful choice
Could never have the casting voice ;
Which best or worst you could not think,
And die you must for want of drink ;
Unless some chance inclines your sight,
Setting one pot in fairer light ;
When you prefer or A, or B,
As lines and angles best agree :
Your sense resolv'd impels your will :
He guides your hand — so drink your fill.

"Have you not seen a baker's maid
Between two equal banners sway'd ?

Her tallies useless lie, and idle,
If plac'd exactly in the middle :
But, forc'd from this unactive state
By virtue of some casual weight,
On either side you hear them clatter,
And judge of right and left hand matter.

"Now, Richard, this coercive force,
Without your choice, must take its course ;
Great kings to wars are pointed forth,
Like loaded needles to the north.
And thou and I, by power unseen,
Are barely passive, and suck'd-in
To Henault's vaults, or Celia's chamber,
As straw and paper are by amber.
If we sit down to play or set,
(Suppose at ombre or basset,)
Let people call us cheats or fools,
Our cards and we are equal tools.
We sure in vain the cards condemn :
Ourselves both cut and shuffled them.
In vain on Fortune's aid rely :
She only is a stander-by.

Poor men ! poor papers ! we and they
Do some impulsive force obey :
And are but play'd with — do not play.
But space and matter we should blame ;
They palm'd the trick that lost the game.

"Thus, to save further contradiction
Against what you may think but fiction,
I for attraction, Dick, declare :
Deny it those bold men that dare.
As well your motion, as your thought,
Is all by hidden impulse wrought :
Ev'n saying that you think or walk,
How like a country squire you talk !

"Mark then ; — Where fancy, or desire,
Collects the beams of vital fire ;
Into that limb fair Alma slides,
And there, pro tempore, resides.
She dwells in Nicolini's tongue,
When Pyrrhus chants the heavenly song.
When Pedro does the lute command,
She guides the cunning artist's hand.
Through Macer's gullet she runs down,
When the vile glutton dines alone.
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibbo's endless draught.
Through the soft sex again she ranges,
As youth, caprice, or fashion, changes.
Fair Alma, careless and serene,
In Fanny's sprightly eyes is seen ;
While they diffuse their infant beams,
Themselves not conscious of their flames.
Again fair Alma sits confest
On Florimel's experter breast ;
When she the rising sigh constrains,
And, by concealing, speaks her pains.
In Cynthia's neck fair Alma glows,
When the vain thing her jewels shows :
When Jenny's stays are newly lac'd,
Fair Alma plays about her waist ;
And when the swelling hoop sustains
The rich brocade, fair Alma deigns
Into that lower space to enter,
Of the large round herself the centre.

"Again : that single limb or feature,
(Such is the cogent force of Nature,)
Which most did Alma's passion move
In the first object of her love,

For ever will be found confest,
And printed on the amorous breast.

" O Abelard ! ill-fated youth,
Thy tale will justify this truth :
But well I weet, thy cruel wrong
Adorns a nobler poet's song.

Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has weav'd
A silken web ; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours ; gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress,
And Venus shall the texture bless.

He o'er the weeping nun has drawn
Such artful folds of sacred lawn,
That Love, with equal grief and pride,
Shall see the crime he strives to hide,
And, softly drawing back the veil,
The god shall to his votaries tell
Each conscious tear, each blushing grace,
That deck'd dear Eloisa's face.

Happy the poet, blest the lays,
Which Buckingham has deign'd to praise !

" Next, Dick, as youth and habit sways,
A hundred gambols Alma plays.

If, whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his hunting-horn and pole ;
Though gout and age his speed detain,
Old John halloos his hounds again ;
By his fire-side he starts the hare,
And turns her in his wicker-chair ;
His feet, however lame, you find,
Have got the better of his Mind.

" If, while the Mind was in her leg,
The dance affected nimble Peg ;
Old Madge, bewitch'd at sixty-one,
Calls for Green Sleeves, and Jumping Joan.
In public mask, or private ball,
From Lincoln's-inn to Goldsmiths-hall,
All Christmas long away she trudges,
Trips it with prentices and judges.
In vain her children urge her stay,
And age or palsy bar the way
But, if those images prevail
Which whilom did affect the tail,
She still renews the ancient scene,
Forgets the forty years between :
Awkwardly gay, and oddly merry,
Her scarf pale pink, her head-knot cherry ;
O'er-heated with ideal rage,
She cheats her son, to wed her page.

" If Alma, whilst the man was young,
Slipp'd up too soon into his tongue,
Pleas'd with his own fantastic skill,
He lets that weapon ne'er lie still.
On any point if you dispute,
Depend upon it, he'll confute :
Change sides, and you increase your pain,
For he'll confute you back again.
For one may speak with Tully's tongue,
Yet all the while be in the wrong.
And 'tis remarkable, that they
Talk most, who have the least to say.
Your dainty speakers have the curse,
To plead bad causes down to worse :
As dames, who native beauty want,
Still uglier look, the more they paint.

" Again : if in the female sex
Alma should on this member fix,
' A cruel and a desperate case,
From which Heaven shield my lovely lass !)

For ever more all care is vain,
That would bring Alma down again.
As, in habitual gout or stone,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet,
And keep the inward foe in quiet ;
So, if for any sins of ours,
Or our forefathers' higher powers,
Severe, though just, afflict our life
With that prime ill, a talking wife ;
Till Death shall bring the kind relief,
We must be patient, or be deaf.

" You know a certain lady, Dick,
Who saw me when I last was sick :
She kindly talk'd, at least three hours,
Of plastic forms, and mental powers ;
Describ'd our pre-existing station
Before this vile terrene creation ;
And, lest I should be weary'd, madam,
To cut things short, came down to Adam ;
From whence, as fast as she was able,
She drowns the world, and builds up Babel.
Through Syria, Persia, Greece, she goes,
And takes the Romans in the close.

" But we'll descant on general nature :
This is a system, not a satire.

" Turn we this globe, and let us see
How different nations disagree
In what we wear, or eat and drink ;
Nay, Dick, perhaps in what we think.
In water as you smell and taste
The soils through which it rose and past,
In Alma's manners you may read
The place where she was born and bred.

" One people from their swaddling bands
Releas'd their infants' feet and hands :
Here Alma to these limbs was brought,
And Sparta's offspring kick'd and fought.

" Another taught their babes to talk,
Ere they could yet in go-carts walk :
There Alma settled in the tongue,
And orators from Athens sprung.

" Observe but in these neighbouring lands
The different use of mouths and hands ;
As men repos'd their various hopes,
In battles these, and those in tropes.

" In Britain's isles, as Heylin notes,
The ladies trip in petticoats ;
Which, for the honour of their nation,
They quit but on some great occasion.
Men there in breeches clad you view :
They claim that garment as their due.
In Turkey the reverse appears ;
Long coats the haughty husband wears,
And greets his wife with angry speeches,
If she be seen without her breeches.

" In our fantastic climes the fair
With cleanly powder dry their hair :
And round their lovely breast and head
Fresh flowers their mingled odours shed.
Your nicer Hottentots think meet
With guts and tripe to deck their feet :
With down-cast looks on Totta's legs
The ogling youth most humbly begs
She would not from his hopes remove
At once his breakfast and his love :
And, if the skittish nymph should fly,
He in a double sense must die.

" We simple toasters take delight
To see our women's teeth look white,

And every saucy ill-bred fellow
Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow.
In China none hold women sweet,
Except their snags are black as jet.
King Chihu put nine queens to death,
Convict on statute, Ivory Teeth.

" At Tonquin, if a prince should die,
(As Jesuits write, who never lie,)
The wife, and counsellor, and priest,
Who serv'd him most, and lov'd him best,
Prepare and light his funeral fire,
And cheerful on the pile expire.
In Europe 'twould be hard to find
In each degree one half so kind.

" Now turn we to the farthest east,
And there observe the gentry drest.
Prince Giolo, and his royal sisters,
Scarr'd with ten thousand comely blisters;
The marks remaining on the skin,
To tell the quality within.

Distinguish'd slashes deck the great:
As each excels in birth or state,
His oylet-holes are more and ampler:
The king's own body was a sampler.
Happy the climate, where the beau
Wears the same suit for use and show:
And at a small expense your wife,
If once well pink'd, is cloth'd with life.

" Westward again, the Indian fair
Is nicely smear'd with fat of bear:
Before you see, you smell your toast;
And sweetest she who stinks the most.
The finest sparks and cleanest beaux
Dip from the shoulders to the toes:
How sleek their skins! their joints how easy!
Where slovens only are not greasy!

" I mention'd different ways of breeding:
Begin we in our children's reading.
To master John the English maid
A horn-book gives of gingerbread;
And, that the child may learn the better,
As he can name, he eats the letter.
Proceeding thus with vast delight,
He spells, and gnaws, from left to right.
But, show a Hebrew's hopeful son
Where we suppose the book begun,
The child would thank you for your kindness,
And read quite backward from our finis.
Heav'n he learning ne'er so fast,
That A would be reserv'd the last.

" An equal instance of this matter
In the manners of a daughter.
In Europe, if a harmless maid,
By Nature and by Love betray'd,
Should, ere a wife, become a nurse,
Her friends would look on her the worse.
In China, Dampier's Travels tell ye,
Look in his Index for Pagelli.)

And as the British ships unmoor,
And jolly long-boat rows to shore,
Down come the nobles of the land:
Each brings his daughter in his hand,
Creeching the imperious tar
To make her but one hour his care.
The tender mother stands affrighted,
That her dear daughter should be slighted:
And poor miss Yaya dreads the shame
Of going back the maid she came.

" Observe how custom, Dick, compels
The lady that in Europe dwells:

After her tea, she slips away,
And what to do, one need not say.
Now see how great Pomonque's queen
Behav'd herself amongst the men:
Pleas'd with her punch, the gallant soul
First drank, then water'd in the bowl;
And sprinkled in the captain's face
The marks of her peculiar grace. —

" To close this point, we need not roam
For instances so far from home.
What parts gay France from sober Spain?
A little rising rocky chain.
Of men born south or north o'th' hill,
Those seldom move, these ne'er stand still.
Dick, you love maps, and may perceive
Rome not far distant from Geneve.
If the good pope remains at home,
He's the first prince in Christendom.
Choose then, good pope, at home to stay,
Nor westward curious take thy way:
Thy way unhappy should'st thou take
From Tyber's bank to Leman lake,
Thou art an aged priest no more,
But a young flaring painted whore:
Thy sex is lost, thy town is gone;
No longer Rome, but Babylon.
That some few leagues should make this change,
To men unlearn'd seems mighty strange.

" But need we, friend, insist on this?
Since, in the very Canton Swiss,
All your philosophers agree,
And prove it plain, that one may be
A heretic, or true believer,
On this, or t'other side a river."

" Here," with an artful smile, quoth Dick,
" Your proofs come mighty full and thick."

The bard, on this extensive chapter
Wound up into poetic rapture,
Continued: " Richard, cast your eye,
By night, upon a winter-sky:
Cast it by day-light on the strand,
Which compasses fair Albion's land:
If you can count the stars that glow
Above, or sands that lie below,
Into those common places look,
Which from great authors I have took,
And count the proofs I have collected,
To have my writings well protected.
These I lay by for time of need,
And thou may'st at thy leisure read.
For, standing every critic's rage,
I safely will to future age
My system, as a gift, bequeath,
Victorious over Spite and Death."

CANTO III.

RICHARD, who now was half asleep,
Rous'd, nor would longer silence keep;
And sense like this, in vocal breath,
Broke from his two-fold hedge of teeth.
Now, if this phrase too harsh be thought,
Pope, tell the world, 'tis not my fault.
Old Homer taught us thus to speak;
If 'tis not sense, at least 'tis Greek.

" As folks," quoth Richard, " prone to leasing,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing,
Then prove what they have once asserted,
Nor care to have their lie deserted,

Till their own dreams at length deceive 'em,
 And, oft repeating, they believe 'em :
 Or as, again, those amorous blades,
 Who trifle with their mothers' maids,
 Though at the first their wild desire
 Was but to quench a present fire ;
 Yet if the object of their love
 Chance by Lucina's aid to prove,
 They seldom let the bantling roar
 In basket at a neighbour's door ;
 But, by the flattering glass of Nature
 Viewing themselves in cake-bread's feature,
 With serious thought and care support
 What only was begun in sport :

" Just so with you, my friend, it fares,
 Who deal in philosophic wares.
 Atoms you cut, and forms you measure,
 To gratify your private pleasure ;
 Till airy seeds of casual wit
 Do some fantastic birth beget ;
 And, pleas'd to find your system mended
 Beyond what you at first intended,
 The happy whimsey you pursue,
 Till you at length believe it true.
 Caught by your own delusive art,
 You fancy first, and then assert."

Quoth Matthew : " Friend, as far as I
 Through Art or Nature cast my eye,
 This axiom clearly I discern,
 That one must teach, and t'other learn.
 No fool Pythagoras was thought ;
 Whilst he his weighty doctrines taught,
 He made his listening scholars stand,
 Their mouth still cover'd with their hand :
 Else, may be, some odd-thinking youth,
 Less friend to doctrine than to truth,
 Might have refus'd to let his ears
 Attend the music of the spheres ;
 Deny'd all transmigrating scenes,
 And introduced the use of beans.
 From great Lucretius take his void,
 And all the world is quite destroy'd.
 Deny Des-cart his subtil matter,
 You leave him neither fire nor water.
 How oddly would Sir Isaac look,
 If you, in answer to his book,
 Say in the front of your discourse,
 That things have no elastic force !
 How could our chymic friends go on,
 To find the philosophic stone,
 If you more powerful reasons bring,
 To prove that there is no such thing ?

" Your chiefs in sciences and arts
 Have great contempt of Alma's parts.
 They find she giddy is, or dull ;
 She doubts if things are void, or full :
 And who should be presum'd to tell
 What she herself should see, or feel ?
 She doubts if two and two make four,
 Though she has told them ten times o'er.
 It can't — it may be — and it must ;
 To which of these must Alma trust ?
 Nay further yet they make her go
 In doubting, if she doubts, or no.
 Can sylogism set things right ?
 No : majors soon with minors fight ;
 Or, both in friendly consort join'd,
 The consequence limps false behind.
 So to some cunning man she goes,
 And asks of him, how much she knows.

With patience grave he hears her speak,
 And from his short notes gives her back
 What from her tale he comprehended ;
 Thus the dispute is wisely ended.

" From the account the loser brings,
 The conjuror knows who stole the things."

" 'Squire," interrupted Dick, " since when Were you amongst these cunning men ?"

" Dear Dick," quoth Mat, " let not thy love
 Of eloquence spoil my discourse.
 I tell thee, this is Alma's case,
 Still asking what some wise man says,
 Who does his mind in words reveal,
 Which all must grant, though few can spell.
 You tell your doctor that y're ill :
 And what does he, but write a bill ?
 Of which you need not read one letter :
 The worse the scrawl, the dose the better.
 For if you knew but what you take,
 Though you recover, he must break.

" Ideas, forms, and intellects,
 Have furnish'd out three different sects,
Substance, or accident, divides,
 All Europe into adverse sides.

" Now, as, engag'd in arms or laws,
 You must have friends to back your cause ;
 In philosophic matters so
 Your judgment must with others go :
 For as in senates, so in schools,
 Majority of voices rules.

" Poor Alma, like a lonely deer,
 O'er hills and dales does doubtful err :
 With panting haste, and quick surprise,
 From every leaf that stirs, she flies ;
 Till, mingled with the neighbouring herd,
 She slights what erst she singly fear'd :
 And now, exempt from doubt and dread,
 She dares pursue, if they dare lead ;
 As their example still prevails,
 She tempts the stream, or leaps the pales."

" He then," quoth Dick, " who by your Thinks for himself, becomes a fool ;
 As party man, who leaves the rest,
 Is call'd but whimsical * at best.

" Now, by your favour, master Mat,
 Like Ralpho, here I smell a rat.
 I must be listed in your sect,
 Who, though they teach not, can protect."
 " Right, Richard," Mat in triumph cry'd :
 " So put off all mistrust and pride.
 And, while my principles I beg,
 Pray answer only with your leg.
 Believe what friendly I advise :
 Be first secure, and then be wise.
 The man within the coach that sits,
 And to another's skill submits,
 Is safer much, (whate'er arrives,)
 And warmer too, than he that drives.

" So Dick Adept, tuck back thy hair,
 And I will pour into thy ear
 Remarks, which none did e'er disclose
 In smooth-pac'd verse, or hobbling prose.
 Attend, dear Dick ; but don't reply :
 And thou may'st prove as wise as I.

" When Alma now, in different ages,
 Has finish'd her ascending stages,

* Some of the Tories, in the queen's reign, distinguished by that appellation.

Into the head at length she gets,
 And there in public grandeur sits,
 To judge of things, and censure wits.
 "Here, Richard, how could I explain
 The various labyrinths of the brain!
 Surprise my readers, whilst I tell 'em
 Of cerebrum, and cerebellum!
 How could I play the commentator
 On deus and on pia mater!
 Where hot and cold, and dry and wet,
 Strive each the other's place to get;
 And, with incessant toil and strife,
 Would keep possession during life.
 I could demonstrate every pore,
 Where memory lays up all her store;
 And to an inch compute the station
 'Twixt judgment and imagination.
 O friend! I could display much learning,
 At least to men of small discerning.
 The brain contains ten thousand cells:
 In each some active fancy dwells;
 Which always is at work, and framing
 The several follies I was naming.
 As in a hive's vimineous dome
 Ten thousand bees enjoy their home,
 Each does her studious actions vary,
 To go and come, to fetch and carry;
 Each still renews her little labour,
 Nor jostles her assiduous neighbour:
 Each—whilst this thesis I maintain,
 I fancy, Dick, I know thy brain.
 O, with the mighty theme affected,
 Could I but see thy head dissected!"
 "My head!" quoth Dick, "to serve your whim!
 Spare that, and take some other limb.
 Sir, in your nice affairs of system,
 Fine men propose; but fools assist 'em."
 Says Matthew, "Richard, keep thy head,
 And hold thy peace; and I'll proceed."
 "Proceed!" quoth Dick: "Sir, I aver,
 You have already gone too far.
 When people once are in the wrong,
 Each line they add is much too long.
 The fastest walks, but walks astray,
 Only farthest from his way.
 Less your conceits! must I believe,
 How'er absurd, what you conceive;
 And, for your friendship, live and die
 A papist in philosophy?
 Say, whatever you maintain
 Of Alma in the heart or brain,
 The plainest man alive may tell ye,
 Her seat of empire is the belly:
 From hence she sends out those supplies,
 Which makes us either stout or wise;
 The strength of every other member
 Is founded on your belly-timber;
 The quahms or raptures of your blood
 Are in proportion to your food;
 And, if you would improve your thought,
 You must be fed as well as taught.
 Your stomach makes your fabric roll,
 Just as the bias rules the bowl.
 The great Achilles might employ
 The strength design'd to ruin Troy;
 He din'd on lion's marrow, spread
 A toast of ammunition bread:
 But, by his mother sent away,
 Amongst the Thracian girls to play,

Effeminate he set, and quiet:
 Strange product of a cheese-cake diet!
 Now give my argument fair play,
 And take the thing the other way:
 The youngster, who at nine and three
 Drinks with his sisters milk and tea,
 From breakfast reads till twelve o'clock,
 Burnet and Heylin, Hobbes, and Locke:
 He pays due visits after noon
 To cousin Alice and uncle John.
 At ten from coffee-house or play
 Returning, finishes the day.
 But, give him port and potent sack,
 From milk-sop he starts up Mohack;
 Holds that the happy know no hours;
 So through the street at midnight scours,
 Breaks watchmen's heads and chairmen's glasses,
 And thence proceeds to nicking sashes;
 Till, by some tougher hand o'ercome,
 And first knock'd down, and then led home,
 He damns the footman, strikes the maid,
 And decently reels up to bed.

"Observe the various operations
 Of food and drink in several nations.
 Was ever Tartar fierce or cruel
 Upon the strength of water-gruel?
 But who shall stand his rage and force,
 If first he rides, then eats his horse?
 Salads, and eggs, and lighter fare,
 Tune the Italian spark's guitar.
 And, if I take Dan Congreve right,
 Pudding and beef make Britons fight.
 Tokay and coffee cause this work
 Between the German and the Turk;
 And both, as they provisions want,
 Chicane avoid, retire and faint.

"Hunger and thirst, or guns and swords,
 Give the same death in different words.
 To push this argument no further;
 To starve a man, in law is murder.

"As in a watch's fine machine,
 Though many artful springs are seen;
 The added movements, which declare
 How full the Moon, how old the year,
 Derive their secondary power
 From that which simply points the hour.
 For, though those gim-cracks were away,
 (Quare would not swear, but Quare would say)
 However more reduc'd and plain,
 The watch would still a watch remain:
 But, if the horal-orbit ceases,
 The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces;
 Is now no longer what it was,
 And you may e'en go sell the case.
 So, if unprejudic'd you scan
 The goings of this clock-work man,
 You find a hundred movements made
 By fine devices in his head;
 But 'tis the stomach's solid stroke
 That tells his being what's o'clock.
 If you take off this rhetoric trigger,
 He talks no more in mode and figure;
 Or, clog his mathematic-wheel,
 His buildings fall, his ship stands still;
 Or, lastly, break his politic-weight,
 His voice no longer rules the state.
 Yet, if these finer whinns are gone,
 Your clock, though plain, would still go on;
 But spoil the engine of digestion,
 And you entirely change the question.

Alma's affairs no power can mend ;
The jest, alas ! is at an end :
Soon ceases all the worldly bustle,
And you consign the corpse to Russel.

" Now make your Alma come or go
From leg to hand, from top to toe,
Your system, without my addition,
Is in a very sad condition.
So Harlequin extoll'd his horse,
Fit for the war, or road, or course !
His mouth was soft, his eye was good,
His foot was sure as ever trod :
One fault he had (a fault indeed !)
And what was that ? the horse was dead."

" Dick, from these instances and fetches,
Thou mak'st of horses, clocks, and watches,"
Quoth Mat, " to me thou seem'st to mean,
That Alma is a mere machine :
That, telling others what's o'clock,
She knows not what herself has struck ;
But leaves to standers-by the trial
Of what is mark'd upon her dial."

" Here hold a blow, good friend," quoth Dick,
And rais'd his voice exceeding quick.
" Fight fair, sir : what I never meant
Don't you infer. In argument
Similies are like songs in love :
They much describe ; they nothing prove."

Mat, who was here a little gravell'd,
Tost up his nose, and would have cavill'd ;
But, calling Hermes to his aid,
Half pleas'd, half angry, thus he said :
(Where mind ('tis for the author's fame)
That Matthew call'd, and Hermes came.
In danger heroes, and in doubt
Poets find gods to help them out.)

" Friend Richard, I begin to see,
That you and I shall scarce agree.
Observe how oddly you behave :
The more I grant, the more you crave.
But, comrade, as I said just now,
I should affirm, and you allow.
We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain ;
And with remarks and comments tease ye,
In case the thing before was easy.
But, in a point obscure and dark,
We fight as Leibnitz did with Clarke ;
And, when no reason we can show,
Why matters this or that way go,
The shortest way the thing we try,
And what we know not, we deny ;
True to our own o'erbearing pride,
And false to all the world beside.

" That old philosopher grew cross,
Who could not tell what motion was :
Because he walk'd against his will,
He fac'd men down, that he stood still.
And he who, reading on the heart,
(When all his quodlibets of art
Could not expound its pulse and beat)
Swore he had never felt it beat.
Chrysippus, foil'd by Epicurus,
Makes bold (Jove bless him !) to assure us,
That all things, which our mind can view,
May be at once both false and true.
And Malebranche has an odd conceit,
As ever enter'd Frenchman's pate :
Says he, ' So little can our mind
Of matter or of spirit find,

That we by guess at least may gather
Something, which may be both, or neither.'
Faith, Dick, I must confess, 'tis true,
(But this is only entre nous)
That many knotty points there are,
Which all discuss, but few can clear ;
As Nature sily had thought fit,
For some by-ends, to cross-bite wit :
Circles to square, and cubes to double,
Would give a man excessive trouble ;
The longitude uncertain roams,
In spite of Whiston and his bomba.
What system, Dick, has right averr'd
The cause why woman has no beard ?
Or why, as years our frame attack,
Our hairs grow white, our teeth grow black !
In points like these we must agree,
Our barbers know as much as we.
Yet still, unable to explain,
We must persist the best we can ;
With care our system still renew,
And prove things likely, though not true.

" I could, thou seest, in quaint dispute,
By dint of logic, strike thee mute ;
With learned skill, now push, now parry,
From Darii to Bocardo vary,
And never yield ; or, what is worst,
Never conclude the point discours'd.
Yet, that you hic & nunc may know
How much you to my candour owe,
I'll from the disputant descend,
To show thee, I assume the friend :
I'll take thy notion for my own —
(So most philosophers have done)
It makes my system more complete :
Dick, can it have a nobler fate?"

" Take what thou wilt," said Dick, " do
But bring thy matters to an end."

" I find," quoth Mat, " reproof is vain :
Who first offend, will first complain.
Thou wishest I should make to shore ;
Yet still putt'st in thy thwarting oar.
What I have told thee fifty times
In prose, receive for once in rhymes :
A huge fat man in country-fair,
Or city-church, (no matter where,)
Labour'd and push'd amidst the crowd,
Still bawling out extremely loud,
' Lord save us ! why do people press !'
Another, marking his distress,
Friendly reply'd, ' Plump gentleman,
Get out as fast as e'er you can ;
Or cease to push, or to exclaim :
You make the very crowd you blame.'"

Says Dick, " Your moral does not need
The least return ; so e'en proceed :
Your tale, howe'er apply'd, was short :
So far, at least, I thank you for't."

Mat took his thanks ; and, in a tone
More magisterial, thus went on.

" Now Alma settles in the head,
As has before been sung or said :
And here begins this farce of life ;
Enter Revenge, Ambition, Strife :
Behold on both sides men advance,
To form in earnest Bays's dance.
L'Avare, not using half his store,
Still grumbles that he has no more ;
Strikes not the present tun, for fear
The vintage should be bad next year ;

And eats to day with inward sorrow,
And dread of fancy'd want to-morrow.
Abroad if the surtout you wear
Repels the rigour of the air ;
Would you be warmer, if at home
You had the fabric and the loom ?
And, if two boots keep out the weather,
What need you have two hides of leather ?
Could Pedro, think you, make no trial
Of a sonata on his viol,
Unless he had the total gut
Whence every string at first was cut ?

" When Rarus shows you his cartone,
He always tells you, with a groan,
Where two of that same hand were torn,
Long before you or he were born.

" Poor Vento's mind so much is crost,
For part of his Petronius lost,
That he can never take the pains
To understand what yet remains.

" What toil did honest Curio take,
What strict inquiries did he make,
To get one medal wanting yet,
And perfect all his Roman set !
Tis found : and, O his happy lot !
Tis bought, lock'd up, and lies forgot :
If these no more you hear him speak :
He now begins upon the Greek.
Here, rang'd and show'd, shall in their turns
Remain obscure as in their urns.

By copper lamps, at any rate,
For being true antique, I bought ;
It wisely melted down my plate,
On modern models to be wrought :
And trifles I alike pursue,
Because they're old, because they're new.

" Dick, I have seen you with delight,
Or Georgy * make a paper kite.
And simple ode too many show ye
By servile complaisance to Chloe.
Parents and lovers are decreed
By Nature fools." — " That's brave, indeed !"
Said Dick : " such truths are worth receiving."

" Still Dick look'd as not believing.
" Now, Alma, to divines and prose
Leave thy frauds, and crimes, and woes ;
Think to-night of thy ill-nature,
Of thy follies, idle creature !
The turns of thy uncertain wing,
And not the malice of thy sting :
By pride of being great and wise
Do but mention, to despise ;
Frown, with anger and disdain,
How little gives thee joy or pain ;
Print, a bronze, a flower, a root,
Still, a butterfly, can do't :
In a romance, a tune, a rhyme,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain ;
Rough, flown, it ne'er looks back again ;
And cards are dealt, and chess-boards brought,
To ease the pain of coward Thought :
Happy result of human wit !

But Alma may herself forget.
" Dick, thus we act ; and thus we are,
Toss'd by hope, or sunk by care.
With endless pain this man pursues
But, if he gain'd he could not use :

* Mr. Shelton's son.

And t'other fondly hopes to see
What never was, nor e'er shall be.
We err by use, go wrong by rules,
In gesture grave, in action fools :
We join hypocrisy to pride,
Doubling the faults we strive to hide.
Or grant that, with extreme surprise,
We find ourselves at sixty wise,
And twenty pretty things are known,
Of which we can't accomplish one ;
Whilst, as my system says, the Mind
Is to these upper rooms confin'd.
Should I, my friend, at large repeat
Her borrow'd sense, her fond conceit,
The bead-roll of her vicious tricks,
My poem would be too prolix.
For, could I my remarks sustain,
Like Socrates, or Miles Montaigne,
Who in these times would read my books,
But Tom o'Stiles, or John o'Nokes ?
" As Brentford kings, discreet and wise,
After long thought and grave advice,
Into Lardella's coffin peeping,
Saw nought to cause their mirth or weeping :
So Alma, now to joy or grief
Superior, finds her late relief :
Weary'd of being high or great,
And nodding in her chair of state ;
Stunn'd and worn out with endless chat
Of Will did this, and Nan said that ;
She finds, poor thing, some little crack,
Which Nature, forc'd by Time, must make,
Through which she wings her destin'd way ;
Upward she soars, and down drops clay :
While some surviving friend supplies
Hic jacet, and a hundred lies.

" O Richard, till that day appears,
Which must decide our hopes and fears,
Would Fortune calm her present rage,
And give us play-things for our age :
Would Clotho wash her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk ;
Would she, in friendship, peace and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty ;
And should we both, in this condition,
Have conquer'd Love, and worse Ambition,
(Else those two passions, by the way,
May chance to show us scurvy play,)
Then, Richard, then should we sit down,
Far from the tumult of this town ;
I fond of my well-chosen seat,
My pictures, medals, books complete.
Or, should we mix our friendly talk,
O'ershaded in that favourite walk,
Which thy own hand had whilom planted,
Both pleas'd with all we thought we wanted ;
Yet then, ev'n then, one cross reflection
Would spoil thy grove, and my collection :
Thy son, and his, ere that, may die,
And Time some uncouth heir supply,
Who shall for nothing else be known
But spoiling all that thou hast done.
Who set the twigs shall he remember
That is in haste to sell the timber ?
And what shall of thy woods remain,
Except the box that threw the main ?

" Nay, may not Time and Death remove
The near relations whom I love ?
And my coz Tom, or his coz Mary,
(Who hold the plough, or skim the dairy,)

My favourite books and pictures sell
To Smart, or Doiley, by the ell?
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger?
Those who could never read the grammar,
When my dear volumes touch the hammer,
May think books best, as richest bound;
My copper medals by the pound
May be with learned justice weigh'd;
To turn the balance, Otho's head
May be thrown in; and, for the metal,
The coin may mend a tinker's kettle—

"Tir'd with these thoughts" — "Less tir'd than I,"

Quoth Dick, "with your philosophy —
That people live and die, I knew
An hour ago, as well as you.
And, if Fate spins us longer years,
Or is in haste to take the shears,
I know we must both fortunes try,
And bear our evils, wet or dry.
Yet, let the goddess smile or frown,
Bread we shall eat, or white or brown;
And in a cottage, or a court,
Drink fine champaigne, or muddled port.
What need of books these truths to tell,
Which folks perceive who cannot spell?
And must we spectacles apply,
To view what hurts our naked eye!
"Sir, if it be your wisdom's aim
To make me merrier than I am,
I'll be all night at your devotion —
Come on, friend, broach the pleasing notion;
But, if you would depress my thought,
Your system is not worth a groat —
"For Plato's fancies what care I?
I hope you would not have me die,
Like simple Cato in the play,
For any thing that he can say:
E'en let him of ideas speak
To heathens in his native Greek.
If to be sad is to be wise,
I do most heartily despise
Whatever Socrates has said,
Or Tully writ, or Wanley read.

"Dear Drift*, to set our matters right,
Remove these papers from my sight;
Burn Mat's Des-cart, and Aristotle:
Here! Jonathan, your master's bottle."

SOLOMON

ON

THE VANITY OF THE WORLD.

A POEM,

IN THREE BOOKS.

'Ο Βίος γὰρ ὄνομα ἔχει, πόρος δ' ἔργου τίλει.

ΕΡΜ.

Siquis Deus mihi largiatur, ut ex hac ætate rep-erascam, et in cunis vagiam, valde recusem.

CIC. de Senect.

The bewailing of man's miseries has been elegantly and copiously set forth by many in the writings as well of philosophers as divines; and is both a pleasant and a profitable contemplation.

BACON.

Book I.—KNOWLEDGE.

Texts chiefly alluded to in Book I.

- "THE words of the Preacher the son of David,
king of Jerusalem."—ECCLES. chap. i. ver. 1.
- "Vanity of vanities, says the Preacher, vanity of vanities, all is vanity."—Ver. 2.
- "I communed with mine own heart, saying, Lo,
I am come to great estate, and have gotten more wisdom than all they that have been before me in Jerusalem: yea, my heart had great experience of wisdom and knowledge."—Ver. 16.
- "He spake of trees, from the cedar-tree that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes."—
1 KINGS, chap. iv. ver. 33.
- "I know, that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it; and God doeth it, that men should fear before him."—ECCLES. chap. iii. ver. 14.
- "He hath made every thing beautiful in his time:
also he hath set the world in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God maketh
from the beginning to the end."—Ver. 11.
- "For in much wisdom is much grief: and he that increaseth knowledge, increaseth sorrow."—
Ch. i. ver. 18.
- "And further, by these, my son, be admonished:
of making many books there is no end: and much study is a weariness of the flesh."—Ch. xii.
Ver. 12.

The Argument.

SOLOMON, seeking happiness from knowledge, convenes the learned men of his kingdom; requires them to explain to him the various operations and effects of Nature; discourses of vegetables, animals, and man; proposes some questions concerning the origin and situation of the habitable Earth; proceeds to examine the system of the visible Heaven; doubts if there may not be a plurality of worlds; inquires into the nature of spirits and angels; and wishes to be more fully inform'd as to the attributes of the Supreme Being. He is imperfectly answered by the rabbins and doctors; blames his own curiosity; and concludes, that, as to human science, All is vanity.

“ Sons of men, with just regard attend,
 Hear the preacher, and believe the friend,
 Whose serious Muse inspires him to explain,
 That all we act, and all we think, is vain;
 That, in this pilgrimage of seventy years,
 Yet rocks of perils, and through vales of tears,
 Destin'd to march, our doubtful steps we tend,
 Tired with the toil, yet fearful of its end:
 That from the womb we take our fatal shares
 Of follies, passions, labours, tumults, cares;
 And, at approach of Death, shall only know
 The truth, which from these pensive numbers flow,
 That we pursue false joy, and suffer real woe.

Happiness, object of that waking dream,
 Which we call life, mistaking: fugitive theme
 Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade,
 Notional good, by fancy only made,
 And by tradition nurs'd, fallacious fire,
 Whose dancing beams mislead our fond desire,
 Abuse of our care, and error of our mind;
 Hadst thou ever been by Heaven design'd
 To Adam, and his mortal race; the boon
 Attire had been reserv'd for Solomon:
 To me the partial lot had been bestow'd,
 And in my cup the golden draught had flow'd.
 But O! ere yet original man was made,
 Ere the foundations of this Earth were laid,
 I was, opponent to our search, ordain'd
 That joy, still sought, should never be attain'd.
 My sad experience cites me to reveal,
 And what I dictate is from what I feel.

Born, as I was, great David's favourite son,
 Near to my people, on the Hebrew throne,
 To blime my court, with Ophir's treasures blest,
 My name extended to the farthest east,
 My body cloth'd with every outward grace,
 Strength in my limbs, and beauty in my face,
 My shining thought with fruitful notions crown'd,
 My quick invention, and my judgment sound:
 “ Arise,” I commun'd with myself, “ arise;
 Seek, to be happy; to be great, be wise:
 Content of spirit must from science flow,
 'Tis a godlike attribute to know.”

I said; and sent my edict through the land:
 Around my throne the letter'd rabbins stand;
 Historic leaves revolve, long volumes spread,
 As old discoursing as the younger read:
 When I heard, propos'd my doubts, and said:
 “ The vegetable world, each plant and tree,
 I need, its name, its nature, its degree,
 I am allow'd, as Fame reports, to know
 Upon the fair cedar on the craggy brow
 Of Lebanon, nodding supremely tall,
 Or creeping moss and hyssop on the wall:
 But, just and conscious to myself, I find
 A thousand doubts oppose the searching mind.

“ I know not why the beech delights the glade
 With boughs extended, and a rounder shade;
 How towering firs in conic forms arise,
 And with a pointed spear divide the skies:
 Nor why again the changing oak should shed
 His yearly honour of his stately head;
 What the distinguish'd yew is ever seen,
 Or chang'd his branch, and permanent his green.

Wanting the Sun, why does the caltrea fade?
 Why does the cypress flourish in the shade?
 The fig and date, why love they to remain
 In middle station, and an even plain;
 While in the lower marsh the gourd is found,
 And while the hill with olive shade is crown'd?
 Why does one climate and one soil endue
 The blushing poppy with a crimson hue,
 Yet leave the lily pale, and tinge the violet blue?
 Why does the fond carnation love to shoot
 A various colour from one parent root;
 While the fantastic tulip strives to break
 In twofold beauty, and a parted streak?
 The twining jasmine and the blushing rose,
 With lavish grace, their morning scents disclose:
 The smelling tuberosa and jonquil declare
 The stronger impulse of an evening air.
 Whence has the tree (resolve me), or the flower,
 A various instinct, or a different power?
 Why should one earth, one clime, one stream, one
 breath,

Raise this to strength, and sicken that to death?
 “ Whence does it happen, that the plant, which well

We name the Sensitive, should move and feel?
 Whence know her leaves to answer her command,
 And with quick horror fly the neighbouring hand?
 “ Along the sunny bank, or watery mead,
 Ten thousand stalks the various blossoms spread:
 Peaceful and lowly in their native soil,
 They neither know to spin, nor care to toil;
 Yet with confess'd magnificence deride
 Our vile attire, and impotence of pride.
 The cowslip smiles, in brighter yellow dress'd
 Than that which veils the nubile virgin's breast:
 A fairer red stands blushing in the rose
 Than that which on the bridegroom's vestment flows.

Take but the humblest lily of the field,
 And, if our pride will to our reason yield,
 It must, by sure comparison, be shown
 That on the regal seat great David's son,
 Array'd in all his robes and types of power,
 Shines with less glory than that simple flower.

“ Of fishes next, my friends, I would inquire:
 How the mute race engender, or respire,
 From the small fry that glide on Jordan's stream,
 Unmark'd, a multitude without a name,
 To that Leviathan, who o'er the seas
 Immense rolls onward his impetuous ways,
 And mocks the wind, and in the tempest plays?
 How they in warlike bands march greatly forth
 From freezing waters and the colder north,
 To southern climes directing their career,
 Their station changing with th' inverted year?
 How all with careful knowledge are endued,
 To choose their proper bed, and wave, and food;
 To guard their spawn, and educate their brood?

“ Of birds, how each, according to her kind,
 Proper materials for her nest can find,
 And build a frame, which deepest thought in man
 Would or amend or imitate in vain?
 How in small flights they know to try their young,
 And teach the callow child her parent's song?
 Why these frequent the plain, and those the wood?
 Why every land has her specific brood?
 Where the tall crane, or winding swallow, goes,
 Fearful of gathering winds and falling snows;
 If into rocks, or hollow trees, they creep,
 In temporary death confin'd to sleep;

Or, conscious of the coming evil, fly
To milder regions, and a southern sky?

"Of beasts and creeping insects shall we trace
The wondrous nature, and the various race;
Or wild or tame, or friend to man or foe,
Of us what they, or what of them we know?

"Tell me, ye studious, who pretend to see
Far into Nature's bosom, whence the bee
Was first inform'd her venturous flight to steer
Through trackless paths, and an abyss of air?
Whence she avoids the slimy marsh, and knows
The fertile hills, where sweeter herbage grows,
And honey-making flowers their opening buds disclose?

How from the thicken'd mist, and setting sun,
Finds she the labour of her day is done?
Who taught her against winds and rains to strive,
To bring her burthen to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass,
Duteous, and hearkening to the sounding brass?

"And, O thou sluggard, tell me why the ant,
'Midst summer's plenty, thinks of winter's want,
By constant journies careful to prepare
Her stores; and, bringing home the corny ear,
By what instruction does she bite the grain,
Lest, hid in earth, and taking root again,
It might elude the foresight of her care?
Distinct in either insect's deed appear
The marks of thought, contrivance, hope, and fear.

"Fix thy corporeal and internal eye
On the young gnat, or new-engender'd fly;
On the vile worm that yesterday began
To crawl; thy fellow-creatures, abject man! [see,
Like thee they breathe, they move, they taste, they
They show their passions by their acts, like thee:
Darting their stings, they previously declare
Design'd revenge, and fierce intent of war:
Laying their eggs, they evidently prove
The genial power, and full effect of love.
Each then has organs to digest his food,
One to beget, and one receive the brood;
Has limbs and sinews, blood and heart, and brain,
Life and her proper functions to sustain,
Though the whole fabric smaller than a grain.
What more can our penurious reason grant
To the large whale, or castled elephant;
To those enormous terrors of the Nile,
The crested snake, and long-tail'd crocodile;
Than that all differ but in shape and name,
Each destin'd to a less or larger frame?

"For potent Nature loves a various act,
Prone to enlarge, or studious to contract;
Now forms her work too small, now too immense,
And scorns the measures of our feeble sense.
The object, spread too far, or rais'd too high,
Denies its real image to the eye;
Too little, it eludes the dazzled sight,
Becomes mixt blackness, or unparted light.
Water and air the varied form confound; [round.
The straight looks crooked, and the square grows

"Thus, while with fruitless hope and weary pain,
We seek great Nature's power, but seek in vain,
Safe sits the goddess in her dark retreat;
Around her myriads of ideas wait,
And endless shapes, which the mysterious queen
Can take or quit, can alter or retain,
As from our lost pursuit she wills, to hide
Her close decrees, and chasten human pride.

"Untam'd and fierce the tiger still remains.
He tires his life in biting on his chains:

For the kind gifts of water and of food
Ungrateful, and returning ill for good,
He seeks his keeper's flesh, and thirsts his blood:
While the strong camel, and the generous horse,
Restrained and aw'd by man's inferior force
Do to the rider's will their rage submit,
And answer to the spur, and own the bit;
Stretch their glad mouths to meet the feeder's hand,
Pleas'd with his weight, and proud of his command.

"Again: the lonely fox roams far abroad,
On secret rapine bent, and midnight fraud;
Now haunts the cliff, now traverses the lawn,
And flies the hated neighbourhood of man:
While the kind spaniel and the faithful hound,
Likest that fox in shape and species found,
Refuses through these cliffs and lawns to roam,
Pursues the noted path, and covets home,
Does with kind joy domestic faces meet,
Takes what the glutton child denies to eat,
And, dying, licks his long-lov'd master's feet.

"By what immediate cause they are inclin'd,
In many acts, 'tis hard, I own, to find.
I see in others, or I think I see,
That strict their principles and ours agree.
Evil like us they shun, and covet good;
Abhor the poison, and receive the food.
Like us they love or hate; like us they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe.
With seeming thought their action they intend;
And use the means proportion'd to the end.
Then vainly the philosopher avers,
That reason guides our deed, and instinct theirs.
How can we justly different causes frame,
When the effects entirely are the same?
Instinct and reason how can we divide?
'Tis the fool's ignorance, and the pedant's pride.

"With the same folly, sure, man vaunts his sway,
If the brute beast refuses to obey.
For tell me, when the empty boaster's word
Proclaims himself the universal lord,
Does he not tremble, lest the lion's paw
Should join his plea against the fancy'd law?
Would not the learned coward leave the chair,
If in the schools or porches should appear
The fierce hyena, or the foaming bear?

"The combatant too late the field declines,
When now the sword is girded to his loins.
When the swift vessel flies before the wind,
Too late the sailor views the land behind.
And 'tis too late now back again to bring
Inquiry, rais'd and towering on the wing:
Forward she strives, averse to be withheld
From nobler objects, and a larger field.

"Consider with me this ethereal space,
Yielding to earth and sea the middle place.
Anxious I ask you, how the pensile ball
Should never strive to rise, nor fear to fall?
When I reflect how the revolving Sun
Does round our globe his crooked journies run,
I doubt of many lands, if they contain
Or herd of beast, or colony of man;
If any nation pass their destin'd days
Beneath the neighbouring Sun's directer rays,
If any suffer on the polar coast
The rage of Arctos and eternal frost.

"May not the pleasure of Omnipotence
To each of these some secret good dispense?
Those who amidst the torrid regions live,
May they not gales unknown to us receive?
See daily showers rejoice the thirsty earth,
And bless the flowery buds' succeeding birth?

May they not pity us, condemn'd to bear
The various heaven of an obliquer sphere ;
While by fix'd laws, and with a just return, [burn ;
They feel twelve hours that shade, for twelve that
And praise the neighbouring Sun, whose constant flame

Enlightens them with seasons still the same ?
And may not those, whose distant lot is cast
North beyond Tartary's extended waste ;
Where through the plains of one continual day
Six shining months pursue their even way,
And six succeeding urge their dusky flight,
Obscur'd with vapours, and o'erwhelm'd in night ?
May not, I ask, the natives of these climes
As annals may inform succeeding times)
To our quotidian change of heaven prefer
Their own vicissitude, and equal share
Of day and night, disparted through the year ?
May they not scorn our Sun's repeated race,
To narrow bounds prescrib'd, and little space,
Lastening from morn, and headlong driven from noon,

Half of our daily toil yet scarcely done ?
May they not justly to our climes upbraid
Darkness of night, and penury of shade ;
That, ere our wearied limbs are justly blest
With wholesome sleep, and necessary rest,
Another Sun demands return of care,
To remnant toil of yesterday to bear ?
Whilst, when the solar beams salute their sight,
Cold and secure in half a year of light,
Uninterrupted voyages they take
To the remotest wood, and farthest lake ;
To range the fishing, and pursue the course [force ?
With more extended nerves, and more continued
And, when declining day forsakes their sky,
Then gathering clouds speak gloomy winter nigh ;
With plenty for the coming season blest,
A solid months (an age) they live, releas'd
From all the labour, process, clamour, woe,
Which our sad scenes of daily action know :
They light the shining lamp, prepare the feast,
And with full mirth receive the welcome guest ;
To tell their tender loves (the only care
Which now they suffer) to the listening fair ;
And, rais'd in pleasure, or repos'd in ease,
In grateful alternate of substantial peace)
They bless the long nocturnal influence shed
On the crown'd goblet, and the genial bed.

" In foreign isles, which our discoverers find,
Or from this length of continent disjoin'd,
The rugged bear's, or spotted lynx's brood,
Lighten the vallies, and infest the wood ;
The hungry crocodile, and hissing snake,
Work in the troubled stream and fenny brake ;
And man, untaught and ravenous as the beast,
Beset the valley, wood, and brake, and stream, infest :
Enriv'd these men and animals their birth
From trunk of oak, or pregnant womb of Earth ?
Hence then the old belief, that all began
In Eden's shade, and one created man ?
Or, grant this progeny was wafted o'er,
By coasting boats, from next adjacent shore ;
Could those, from whom we will suppose they
spring,

Laugh to harmless lands and poison bring ?
Could they on board or bears or lynxes take,
Lead the she-adder, and the brooding snake ?
Or could they think the new-discover'd isle
Meas'd to receive a pregnant crocodile ?

" And, since the savage lineage we must trace
From Noah sav'd, and his distinguish'd race ;
How should their fathers happen to forget
The arts which Noah taught, the rules he set,
To sow the glebe, to plant the generous vine,
And load with grateful flames the holy shrine ;
While the great sire's unhappy sons are found,
Unpress'd their vintage, and untill'd their ground,
Straggling o'er dale and hill in quest of food,
And rude of arts, of virtue, and of God ?

" How shall we next o'er earth and seas pursue
The varied forms of every thing we view ;
That all is chang'd, though all is still the same,
Fluid the parts, yet durable the frame ?
Of those materials, which have been confess'd
The pristine springs and parents of the rest,
Each becomes other. Water stopp'd gives birth
To grass and plants, and thickens into earth :
Diffus'd, it rises in a higher sphere,
Dilates its drops, and softens into air :
Those finer parts of air again aspire,
Move into warmth, and brighten into fire :
The fire, once more by thicker air o'ercome,
And downward forc'd, in Earth's capacious womb
Alters its particles ; is fire no more,
But lies resplendent dust, and shining ore ;
Or, running through the mighty mother's veins,
Changes its shape, puts off its old remains ;
With watery parts its lessen'd force divides,
Flows into waves, and rises into tides.

" Disparted streams shall from their channels fly,
And, deep surcharg'd, by sandy mountains lie,
Obscurely sepulcher'd. By beating rain,
And furious wind, down to the distant plain
The hill, that hides his head above the skies,
Shall fall ; the plain, by slow degrees, shall rise
Higher than erst had stood the summit-hill ;
For Time must Nature's great behest fulfil.

" Thus, by a length of years and change of fate,
All things are light or heavy, small or great :
Thus Jordan's waves shall future clouds appear,
And Egypt's pyramids refine to air :
Thus later age shall ask for Pison's flood,
And travellers inquire where Babel stood.
Now where we see these changes often fall,
Sedate we pass them by as natural ;
Where to our eye more rarely they appear,
The pompous name of prodigy they bear.
Let active thought these close meanders trace ;
Let human wit their dubious boundaries place :
Are all things miracle, or nothing such ?
And prove we not too little, or too much ?

" For, that a branch cut off, a wither'd rod,
Should, at a word pronounc'd, revive and bud ;
Is this more strange, than that the mountain's brow
Stripp'd by December's frost, and white with snow,
Should push in spring ten thousand thousand buds,
And boast returning leaves, and blooming woods ?
That each successive night, from opening Heaven,
The food of angels should to man be given ;
Is this more strange, than that with common bread
Our fainting bodies every day are fed ?
Than that each grain and seed, consum'd in earth,
Raises its store, and multiplies its birth,
And from the handful, which the tiller sows,
The labour'd fields rejoice, and future harvest
flows.

" Then, from whate'er we can to sense produce,
Common and plain, or wondrous and abstruse,

From Nature's constant or eccentric laws,
The thoughtful soul this general inference draws,
That an effect must pre-suppose a cause :
And, while she does her upward flight sustain,
Touching each link of the continued chain,
At length she is oblig'd and forc'd to see
A First, a Source, a Life, a Deity ;
What has for ever been, and must for ever be.

" This great Existence, thus by reason found,
Blest by all power, with all perfection crown'd ;
How can we bind or limit his decree,
By what our ear has heard, or eye may see ?
Say then, is all in heaps of water lost,
Beyond the islands, and the mid-land coast ?
Or has that God, who gave our world its birth,
Sever'd those waters by some other earth,
Countries by future plough-shares to be torn,
And cities raised by nations yet unborn !
Ere the progressive course of restless age
Performs three thousand times its annual stage,
May not our power and learning be suppress'd,
And arts and empire learn to travel west ?

" Where, by the strength of this idea charm'd,
Lighten'd with glory, and with rapture warm'd,
Ascends my soul ? what sees she white and great
Amidst subjected seas ? An isle, the seat
Of power and plenty ; her imperial throne,
For justice and for mercy sought and known ;
Virtues sublime, great attributes of Heaven,
From thence to this distinguish'd nation given.
Yet farther west the western Isle extends
Her happy fame ; her armed fleet she sends
To climates folded yet from human eye,
And lands, which we imagine wave and sky.
From pole to pole she hears her acts resound,
And rules an empire by no ocean bound ;
Knows her ships anchor'd, and her sails unfurl'd,
In other Indies, and a second world.

" Long shall Britannia (that must be her name)
Be first in conquest, and preside in fame :
Long shall her favour'd monarchy engage
The teeth of Envy, and the force of Age :
Rever'd and happy she shall long remain,
Of human things least changeable, least vain.
Yet all must with the general doom comply,
And this great glorious power, tho' last, must die.

" Now let us leave this Earth, and lift our eye
To the large convex of yon azure sky :
Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red ;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And choosing sable for the peaceful night.
Ask Reason now, whence light and shade were given,
And whence this great variety of Heaven.
Reason, our guide, what can she more reply,
Than that the Sun illuminates the sky ;
Than that night rises from his absent ray,
And his returning lustre kindles day ?

" But we expect the morning-red in vain :
'Tis hid in vapours, or obscur'd by rain.
The noon-tide yellow we in vain require :
'Tis black in storm, or red in lightning fire.
Pitchy and dark the night sometimes appears,
Friend to our woe, and parent of our fears :
Our joy and wonder sometimes she excites,
With stars unnumber'd, and eternal lights.
Send forth, ye wise, send forth your labouring
thought ;
Let it return with empty notions fraught,

Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke .
Yet this solution but once more affords
New change of terms, and scaffolding of words :
In other garb my question I receive,
And take the doubt the very same I gave.

" Lo ! as a giant strong, the lusty Sun
Multiply'd rounds in one great round does run ;
Twofold his course, yet constant his career,
Changing the day, and finishing the year.
Again, when his descending orb retires,
And Earth perceives the absence of his fires ;
The Moon affords us her alternate ray,
And with kind beams distributes fainter day,
Yet keeps the stages of her monthly race ;
Various her beams, and changeable her face.
Each planet, shining in his proper sphere,
Does with just speed his radiant voyage steer ;
Each sees his lamp with different lustre crown'd ;
Each knows his course with different periods bound
And, in his passage through the liquid space,
Nor hastens, nor retards, his neighbour's race.
Now, shine these planets with substantial rays ?
Does innate lustre gild their measur'd days ?
Or do they (as your schemes, I think, have shown)
Dart furtive beams and glory not their own,
All servants to that source of light, the Sun ?

" Again I see ten thousand thousand stars,
Nor cast in lines, in circles, nor in squares,
(Poor rules, with which our bounded mind is fill'd)
When we would plant, or cultivate, or build,
But shining with such vast, such various light,
As speaks the hand, that form'd them, infinite.
How mean the order and perfection sought,
In the best product of the human thought,
Compar'd to the great harmony that reigns
In what the Spirit of the world ordains !

" Now if the Sun to Earth transmits his ray,
Yet does not scorch us with too fierce a day !
How small a portion of his power is given
To orbs more distant, and remoter Heaven ?
And of those stars, which our imperfect eye
Has doom'd and fix'd to one eternal sky,
Each, by a native stock of honour great,
May dart strong influence, and diffuse kind heat,
(Itself a sun) and with transmissive light
Enliven worlds deny'd to human sight.
Around the circles of their ambient skies
New moons may grow or wane, may set or rise,
And other stars may to those suns be earths,
Give their own elements their proper births,
Divide their climes, or elevate their pole,
See their lands flourish, and their oceans roll :
Yet these great orbs, thus radically bright,
Primitive founts, and origins of light,
May each to other (as their different sphere
Makes or their distance or their light appear)
Be seen a nobler or inferior star,
And, in that space which we call air and sky,
Myriads of earths, and moons, and suns, may lie,
Unmeasur'd and unknown by human eye.

" In vain we measure this amazing sphere,
And find and fix its centre here or there ;
Whilst its circumference, scorning to be brought Ev'n into fancy'd space, illudes our vanquish'd
thought.

" Where then are all the radiant monsters driv'n
With which your guesses fill'd the frightful
Heaven ?

Where will their fictitious images remain?

In paper-schemes, and the Chaldean's brain.

"This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,

Let us for once a child of truth confess,

That these fair stars, these objects of delight

And terror to our searching dazzled sight,

Are worlds immense, unnumber'd, infinite.

But do these worlds display their beams, or guide

Their orbs, to serve thy use, to please thy pride?

Thyself but dust, thy stature but a span,

A moment thy duration, foolish man!

As well may the minutest emmet say,

That Caucasus was rais'd to pave his way;

The snail, that Lebanon's extended wood

Was destin'd only for his walk and food;

The vilest cockle, gaping on the coast

That rounds the ample seas, as well may boast,

The craggy rock projects above the sky,

That he in safety at its foot may lie;

And the whole ocean's confluent waters swell, [shell.

Only to quench his thirst, or move and blanch his

"A higher flight the venturous goddess tries,

Leaving material worlds and local skies;

Aspires what are the beings, where the space,

That form'd and held the angels' ancient race.

For rebel Lucifer with Michael fought,

Offer only what tradition taught,

Unbattled cherub against cherub rose,

His shield to shield, and power to power oppose;

Heaven rung with triumph, Hell was fill'd with woes.

That were these forms of which your volumes tell,

How some fought great, and others recreant fell?

How bound to bear an everlasting load,

Ofurance of chain, and banishment of God;

How fatal turns their wretched strength to tire,

To swim in sulphurous lakes, or land on solid fire:

While those, exalted to primeval light,

Access of blessing, and supreme delight,

Only perceive some little pause of joys

At those great moments when their God employs

Their ministry, to pour his threaten'd hate

On the proud king, or the rebellious state;

To reverse Jehovah's high command,

And speak the thunder falling from his hand,

Then to his duty the proud king returns,

And the rebellious state in ashes mourns;

How can good angels be in Heaven confin'd,

To view that presence, which no space can bind?

Is God above, beneath, or yon, or here?

He who made all, is he not every where?

Oh, how can wicked angels find a night

So dark, to hide them from that piercing light,

Which form'd the eye, and gave the power of sight?

"What mean I now of angel, when I hear

Of firm body, spirit pure, or fluid air?

How parts to action spiritual confin'd,

How tends to our thought, and kindred to our mind,

How should only act and prompt us from within,

How by external eye be ever seen.

Is it not, therefore, to our fathers known,

How these had appetite, and limb, and bone?

How could Abraham wash their weary'd feet?

How Sarah please their taste with savoury meat?

Thence should they fear? or why did Lot engage

To save their bodies from abusive rage?

And how could Jacob, in a real fight,

Feel or resist the wrestling angel's might?

How could a form in strength with matter try?

How a spirit touch a mortal's thigh?

"Now are they air condens'd, or gather'd rays?

How guide they then our prayer, or keep our ways,

By stronger blasts still subject to be tost,

By tempests scatter'd, and in whirlwinds lost?

"Have they again (as sacred song proclaims)

Substances real, and existing frames?

How comes it, since with them we jointly share

The great effect of one Creator's care,

That, whilst our bodies sicken and decay,

Theirs are for ever healthy, young, and gay?

Why, whilst we struggle in this vale beneath

With want and sorrow, with disease and death,

Do they, more bless'd, perpetual life employ

On songs of pleasure, and in scenes of joy?

"Now when my mind has all this world survey'd,

And found, that nothing by itself was made;

When thought has rais'd itself, by just degrees,

From vallies crown'd with flowers, and hills with trees;

From smoking mineral, and from rising streams;

From fattening Nilus, or victorious Thames;

From all the living, that four-footed move

Along the shore, the meadow, or the grove;

From all that can with fins or feathers fly

Through the aerial or the watery sky;

From the poor reptile with a reasoning soul,

That miserable master of the whole;

From this great object of the body's eye,

This fair half-round, this ample azure sky,

Terribly large, and wonderfully bright,

With stars unnumber'd, and unmeasur'd light;

From essences unseen, celestial names,

Enlightening spirits, and ministerial flames,

Angels, dominions, potentates, and thrones,

All that in each degree the name of creature owns:

Lift we our reason to that sovereign Cause, [laws;

Who blest the whole with life, and bounded it with

Who forth from nothing call'd this comely frame,

His will and act, his word and work the same;

To whom a thousand years are but a day;

Who bade the Light her genial beams display,

And set the Moon, and taught the Sun its way;

Who, waking Time, his creature, from the source

Primeval, order'd his predestin'd course;

Himself, as in the hollow of his hand,

Holding, obedient to his high command,

The deep abyss, the long-continued store, [pour

Where months, and days, and hours, and minutes

Their floating parts, and thenceforth are no more:

This Alpha and Omega, first and last,

Who like the potter in a mould has cast

The world's great frame, commanding it to be

Such as the eyes of Sense and Reason see;

Yet if he wills may change or spoil the whole;

May take yon' beauteous, mystic, starry roll,

And burn it like an useless parchment scroll;

May from its basis in one moment pour

This melted earth —

Like liquid metal, and like burning ore;

Who, sole in power, at the beginning said,

Let Sea, and Air, and Earth, and Heaven be made;

And it was so: — and, when he shall ordain

In other sort, has but to speak again,

And they shall be no more: of this great theme,

This glorious, hallow'd, everlasting name,

This God, I would discourse." —

The learned elders sat appall'd, amaz'd,

And each with mutual look on other gaz'd;

Nor speech they meditate, nor answer frame,

(Too plain, alas! their silence spoke their shame)

Till one, in whom an outward mien appear'd,
And turn superior to the vulgar herd,
Began: That human learning's furthest reach
Was but to note the doctrine I could teach;
That mine to speak, and theirs was to obey;
For I in knowledge more than power did sway:
And the astonish'd world in me beheld
Moses eclips'd, and Jesse's son excell'd.
Humble a second bow'd, and took the word;
Foresaw my name by future age ador'd:
"O live," said he, "thou wisest of the wise;
As none has equal'd, none shall ever rise
Excelling thee." —

Parent of wicked, bane of honest deeds,
Pernicious Flattery! thy malignant seeds,
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand,
Sadly diffus'd o'er Virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year.

And now the whole perplex'd ignoble crowd,
Mute to my questions, in my praises loud,
Echo'd the word: whence things arose, or how
They thus exist, the aptest nothing know:
What yet is not, but is ordain'd to be,
All veil of doubt apart, the dullest see!

My prophets and my sophists finish'd here
The civil efforts of the verbal war:
Not so my rabbins and logicians yield;
Retiring, still they combat; from the field
Of open arms unwilling they depart,
And skulk behind the subterfuge of art.
To speak one thing, mix'd dialects they join,
Divide the simple, and the plain define;
Fix fancy'd laws, and form imagin'd rules,
Terms of their art, and jargon of their schools,
Ill-grounded maxims, by false gloss enlarg'd,
And captious science against reason charg'd.

Soon their crude notions with each other fought;
The adverse sect deny'd what this had taught;
And he at length the amplest triumph gain'd,
Who contradicted what the last maintain'd.

O wretched impotence of human mind!
We, erring still, excuse for error find,
And darkling grope, not knowing we are blind.

Vain man! since first thy blushing sire essay'd
His folly with connected leaves to shade,
How does the crime of thy resembling race
With like attempt that pristine error trace!
Too plain thy nakedness of soul espy'd,
Why dost thou strive the conscious shame to hide
By masks of eloquence and veils of pride?

With outward smiles their flattery I receiv'd,
Own'd my sick mind by their discourse reliev'd;
But bent, and inward to myself, again
Perplex'd, these matters I revolv'd in vain.
My search still tir'd, my labour still renew'd,
At length I ignorance and knowledge view'd,
Impartial; both in equal balance laid, [weigh'd.
Light flew the knowing scale, the doubtful heavy

Forc'd by reflective reason, I confess,
That human science is uncertain guess.
Alas! we grasp at clouds, and beat the air,
Vexing that spirit we intend to clear.
Can thought beyond the bounds of matter climb?
Or who shall tell me what is space or time?
In vain we lift up our presumptuous eyes
To what our Maker to their ken denies:
The searcher follows fast; the object faster flies.
The little which imperfectly we find,
Seduces only the bewilder'd mind
To fruitless search of something yet behind.

Various discussions tear our heated brain;
Opinions often turn; still doubts remain;
And who indulges thought, increases pain.
How narrow limits were to Wisdom given!
Earth she surveys; she thence would measure
Heaven:

Through mists obscure now wings her tedious way;
Now wanders dazzled with too bright a day;
And from the summit of a pathless coast
Sees infinite, and in that sight is lost.

Remember, that the curs'd desire to know,
Offspring of Adam! was thy source of woe.
Why wilt thou then renew the vain pursuit,
And rashly catch at the forbidden fruit;
With empty labour and eluded strife
Seeking, by knowledge, to attain to life;
For ever from that fatal tree debarr'd,
Which flaming swords and angry cherubs guard?

Book II. — PLEASURE

Texts chiefly alluded to in Book II.

- "I said in my own heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth; therefore enjoy pleasure." — ECCLES. chap. ii. ver. 1.
- "I made me great works, I builded me houses, I planted me vineyards." — Ver. 4.
- "I made me gardens and orchards; and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits." — Ver. 5.
- "I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees." — Ver. 6.
- "Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do: and behold all was vanity and vexation of spirit; and there was no profit under the Sun." — Ver. 11.
- "I gat me men-singers and women-singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as musical instruments, and that of all sorts." — Ver. 8.
- "I sought in mine heart to give myself unto wine (yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom) and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under Heaven all the days of their life." — Ver. 3.
- "Then I said in my heart, As it happeneth unto the fool, so it happeneth even unto me; and why was I then more wise? Then I said in my heart that this also is vanity." — Ver. 15.
- "Therefore I hated life, because the work that I wrought under the Sun is grievous unto me." — Ver. 17.
- "Dead flies cause the ointment to send forth a stinking savour: so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour." — CH. x. ver. 1.
- "The memory of the just is blessed, but the memory of the wicked shall rot." — PROVERBS, ch. x. ver. 7.

The Argument.

Solomon, again seeking happiness, inquires if wealth and greatness can produce it; begins with the magnificence of gardens and buildings, the luxury of music and feasting; and proceeds to the hope and desires of love. In two episodes are shown the follies and troubles of that passion. Solomon, still disappointed, falls under the temptations of libertinism and idolatry; recovers his thought; reasons aright; and concludes, that, as to the pursuit of pleasure and sensual delight, All is vanity and vexation of spirit.

TAY then, O man, the moments to deceive,
That from the womb attend thee to the grave :
For weary'd Nature find some apter scheme :
Health be thy hope, and Pleasure be thy theme.
From the perplexing and unequal ways,
Where study brings thee ; from the endless maze,
Which doubt persuades to run, forewarn'd, recede
To the gay field and flowery path, that lead
To jocund mirth, soft joy, and careless ease :
 forsake what may instruct, for what may please ;
Amuse thyself with art, and proud expense,
And make thy reason subject to thy sense.

I commun'd thus : the power of wealth I try'd,
And all the various luxe of costly pride ;
 Artists and plans reliev'd my solemn hours ;
 Founded palaces, and planted bowers ;
 Birds, fishes, beasts, of each exotic kind,
 To the limits of my court confin'd ;
 To trees transferr'd I gave a second birth,
 And bade a foreign shade grace Judah's earth ;
 Fish-ponds were made, where former forests grew,
 And hills were levell'd to extend the view ;
 Rivers diverted from their native course,
 And bound with chains of artificial force,
 Ran large cascades in pleasing tumult roll'd,
 Or rose through figur'd stone, or breathing gold ;
 From furthest Africa's tormented womb
 The marble brought, erects the spacious dome,
 It forms the pillars long-extended rows,
 In which the planted grove, the pensile garden,
 Grows.

The workmen here obey the master's call,
 To gild the turret, and to paint the wall,
 To mark the pavement there with various stone,
 And on the jasper steps to rear the throne :
 The spreading cedar, that an age had stood,
 Supreme of trees, and mistress of the wood,
 Cut down and carv'd, my shining roof adorns,
 And Lebanon his ruin'd honour mourns.

A thousand artists show their cunning power,
 To raise the wonders of the ivory tower.
 A thousand maidens ply the purple loom,
 To weave the bed, and deck the regal room ;
 Till Tyre confesses her exhausted store,
 But on her coast the murex * is no more ;
 Till from the Parian isle, and Libya's coast,
 The mountains grieve their hopes of marble lost ;
 And India's woods return their just complaint,
 Their brood decay'd, and want of elephant.

My full design with vast expense achiev'd,
 Came, beheld, admir'd, reflected, griev'd ;
 And the folly of my thoughtless haste,
 For the work perfected, the joy was past.

To my new courts and Thought did still repair,
 And round my gilded roofs hung hovering Care.
 In vain on silken beds I sought repose,
 And restless oft from purple couches rose ;
 Vexatious Thought still found my flying mind
 Not bound by limits, nor to place confin'd ;

* The murex is a shell-fish, of the liquor whereof purple colour is made.

Haunted my nights, and terrify'd my days ;
 Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursued my ways,
 Nor shut from artful bower, nor lost in winding maze.

Yet take thy bent, my soul ; another sense
 Indulge ; add music to magnificence :
 Essay if harmony may grief control,
 Or power of sound prevail upon the soul.
 Often our seers and poets have confest,
 That music's force can tame the furious beast :
 Can make the wolf, or foaming boar, restrain
 His rage ; the lion drop his crested mane,
 Attentive to the song ; the lynx forget
 His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet.
 Are we, alas ! less savage yet than these ?
 Else music, sure, may human cares appease.

I spake my purpose ; and the cheerful choir
 Parted their shares of harmony : the lyre
 Soften'd the timbrel's noise ; the trumpet's sound
 Provok'd the Dorian flute (both sweeter found
 When mix'd) ; the fife, the viol's notes refin'd,
 And every strength with every grace was join'd.
 Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay ;
 Of opening Heaven they sung and gladsome day.
 Each evening their repeated skill express'd
 Scenes of repose, and images of rest :
 Yet still in vain ; for music gather'd thought :
 But how unequal the effects it brought !
 The soft ideas of the cheerful note,
 Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot ;
 The solemn violence of the graver sound
 Knew to strike deep, and leave a lasting wound.

And now reflecting, I with grief descry
 The sickly lust of the fantastic eye ;
 How the weak organ is with seeing cloy'd,
 Flying ere night what it at noon enjoy'd.
 And now (unhappy search of thought !) I found
 The fickle ear soon glutt'd with the sound,
 Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
 Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new.

I bade the virgins and the youth advance,
 To temper music with the sprightly dance.
 In vain ! too low the mimic motions seem ;
 What takes our heart must merit our esteem.
 Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part,
 Forming her movements to the rules of art ;
 And, vex'd, I found that the musician's hand
 Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command.

I drank ; I lik'd it not ; 'twas rage, 'twas noise,
 An airy scene of transitory joys.
 In vain I trusted that the flowing bowl
 Would banish sorrow, and enlarge the soul.
 To the late revel, and protracted feast,
 Wild dreams succeeded, and disorder'd rest ;
 And as, at dawn of morn, fair Reason's light
 Broke through the fumes and phantoms of the night,
 What had been said, I ask'd my soul, what done ?
 How flow'd our mirth, and whence the source begun ?
 Perhaps the jest that charm'd the sprightly crowd,
 And made the jovial table laugh so loud,
 To some false notion ow'd its poor pretence,
 To an ambiguous word's perverted sense,
 To a wild sonnet, or a wanton air,
 Offence and torture to the sober ear :
 Perhaps, alas ! the pleasing stream was brought
 From this man's error, from another's fault ;
 From topics, which good-nature would forget,
 And prudence mention with the last regret.

Add yet unnumber'd ills, that lie unseen
 In the pernicious draught ; the word obscene,

Or harsh, which, once elanc'd, must ever fly
Irrevocable ; the too prompt reply,
Seed of severe distrust and fierce debate ;
What we should shun, and what we ought to hate.

Add too the blood impoverish'd, and the course
Of health suppress'd, by wine's continual force.

Unhappy man ! whom sorrow thus and rage
To different ills alternately engage ;
Who drinks, alas ! but to forget ; nor sees
That melancholy sloth, severe disease,
Memory confus'd, and interrupted thought,
Death's harbingers, lie latent in the draught ;
And, in the flowers that wreath the sparkling bowl,
Fell adders hiss, and poisonous serpents roll.

Remains there aught untry'd that may remove
Sickness of mind, and heal the bosom ?— Love.
Love yet remains : indulge his genial fire,
Cherish fair hope, solicit young desire,
And boldly bid thy anxious soul explore
This last great remedy's mysterious power.

Why therefore hesitates my doubtful breast ?
Why ceases it one moment to be blest ?
“ Fly swift, my friends ; my servants, fly ; employ
Your instant pains to bring your master joy.
Let all my wives and concubines be dress'd ;
Let them to-night attend the royal feast ;
All Israel's beauty, all the foreign fair ;
The gifts of princes, or the spoils of war :
Before their monarch they shall singly pass,
And the most worthy shall obtain the grace.”

I said : the feast was serv'd, the bowl was crown'd ;
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round.
The women came : as custom wills, they past :
On one (O that distinguish'd one !) I cast
The favourite glance ! O ! yet my mind retains
That fond beginning of my infant pains.
Mature the virgin was, of Egypt's race ; [face ;
Grace shap'd her limbs, and beauty deck'd her
Easy her motion seem'd, serene her air ;
Full, though unzon'd, her bosom rose ; her hair,
Unty'd, and ignorant of artful aid,
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in the jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd.
Fix'd on her charms, and pleas'd that I could love,
“ Aid me, my friends, contribute to improve
Your monarch's bliss,” I said ; “ fresh roses bring
To strew my bed, till the impoverish'd Spring
Confess her want ; around my amorous head
Be dropping myrrh and liquid amber shed,
Till Arab has no more. From the soft lyre,
Sweet flute, and ten-string'd instrument, require
Sounds of delight : and thou, fair nymph ! draw nigh,

Thou, in whose graceful form and potent eye,
Thy master's joy, long sought, at length is found ;
And, as thy brow, let my desires be crown'd ;
O favourite virgin ! that hast warm'd the breast,
Whose sovereign dictates subjugate the East !”

I said : and sudden from the golden throne,
With a submissive step, I hasted down.
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look ;
Prepar'd to place it on her comely head :
“ O favourite virgin !” yet again I said,
“ Receive the honours destin'd to thy brow ;
And O, above thy fellows, happy thou !
Their duty must thy sovereign word obey :
Rise up, my love, my fair-one, come away.”

What pangs, alas ! what ecstasy of smart,
Tore up my senses, and transfix'd my heart,

When she, with modest scorn, the wreath return'd
Reclin'd her beauteous neck, and inward mourn'd.
Forc'd by my pride, I my concern suppress'd,
Pretended drowsiness, and wish of rest :

And sullen I forsook th' imperfect feast,
Ordering the eunuchs, to whose proper care
Our eastern grandeur gives th' imprison'd fair
To lead her forth to a distinguish'd bower,
And bid her dress the bed, and wait the hour

Restless I follow'd this obdurate maid
(Swift are the steps that Love and Anger tread) ;
Approach'd her person, courted her embrace,
Renew'd my flame, repeated my disgrace ;
By turns put on the suppliant and the lord ;
Threaten'd this moment, and the next implor'd ;
Offer'd again the unaccepted wreath,
And choice of happy love, or instant death.
Averse to all her amorous king desir'd,
Far as she might she decently retir'd ;

And, darting scorn and sorrow from her eyes,
“ What means,” said she, “ king Solomon the wise ?
“ This wretched body trembles at your power :
Thus far could Fortune, but she can no more.
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains.

“ 'Tis said, that thou canst plausibly dispute,
Supreme of seers ! of angel, man, and brute ;
Canst plead, with subtle wit and fair discourse,
Of passion's folly, and of reason's force ;
That, to the tribes attentive, thou canst show
Whence their misfortunes or their blessings flow ;
That thou in science as in power art great,
And truth and honour on thy edicts wait.
Where is that knowledge now, that regal thought,
With just advice and timely counsel fraught ?
Where now, O Judge of Israel ! does it rove ?—
What in one moment dost thou offer ? Love—
Love ! why 'tis joy or sorrow, peace or strife ;
'Tis all the colour of remaining life :

And human misery must begin or end,
As he becomes a tyrant or a friend.
Would David's son, religious, just, and grave,
To the first bride-bed of the world receive
A foreigner, a heathen, and a slave ?
Or, grant thy passion has these names destroy'd,
That Love, like Death, makes all distinction void.
Yet in his empire o'er thy abject breast
His flames and torments only are exprest ;
His rage can in my smiles alone relent,
And all his joys solicit my consent.

“ Soft love, spontaneous tree, its parted root
Must from two hearts with equal vigour shoot ;
Whilst each, delighted and delighting gives
The pleasing ecstasy which each receives :
Cherish'd with hope, and fed with joy it grows ;
Its cheerful buds their opening bloom disclose.
And round the happy soil diffusive odour flows.
If angry Fate that mutual care denies,
The fading plant bewails its due supplies ;
Wild with despair, or sick with grief, it dies.

“ By force beasts act, and are by force restrain'd
The human mind by gentle means is gain'd.
Thy useless strength, mistaken king, employ :
Sated with rage, and ignorant of joy,
Thou shalt not gain what I deny to yield,
Nor reap the harvest, though thou spoil'st the field.
Know, Solomon, thy poor extent of sway ;
Contract thy brow, and Israel shall obey :
But wilful Love thou must with smiles appease.
Approach his awful throne by just degrees,
And, if thou would'st be happy, learn to please.

"Not that those arts can here successful prove,
For I am destin'd to another's love.
Beyond the cruel bounds of thy command,
To my dear equal in my native land,
My plighted vow I gave; I his receiv'd:
Each swore with truth, with pleasure each believ'd.
The mutual contract was to Heaven convey'd;
On equal scales the busy angels weigh'd
Its solemn force, and clapp'd their wings, and spread
The lasting roll, recording what we said.

"Now in my heart behold thy poniard stain'd;
Take the sad life which I have long disdain'd;
End, in a dying virgin's wretched fate,
Thy ill-starr'd passion and my steadfast hate:
For, long as blood informs these circling veins,
Not fleeting breath its latest power retains,
Fear me to Egypt's vengeful Gods declare,
Late is my part, be thine, O king, despair.

"Now strike," she said, and open'd bare her
breast;

Stand it in Judah's chronicles confest,
That David's son, by impious passion mov'd,
Mote a she-slave, and murder'd what he lov'd!"

Asham'd, confus'd, I started from the bed,
And to my soul, yet uncollected, said,
Into thyself, fond Solomon, return;
Reject again, and thou again shalt mourn.
When I through number'd years have Pleasure sought,

And in vain hope the wanton phantom caught;
To mock my sense, and mortify my pride,
Is in another's power, and is deny'd.
Am I a king, great Heaven! does life or death
Hang on the wrath or mercy of my breath;
While kneeling I my servant's smiles implore,
And one mad damsel dares dispute my power?

"To ravish her! that thought was soon depress'd,
Which must debase the monarch to the beast.
To send her back! O whither, and to whom?
To lands where Solomon must never come?
To that insulting rival's happy arms,
From whom, disdaining me, she keeps her charms?

"Fantastic tyrant of the amorous heart,
How hard thy yoke! how cruel is thy dart!
How 'scape thy anger, who refuse thy sway,
And those are punish'd most who most obey.
O Judah's king revere thy greater power:
What canst thou covet, or how triumph more?
Fly then, O Love, with an obdurate ear,
Does this proud nymph reject a monarch's prayer?
Why to some simple shepherd does she run
From the fond arms of David's favourite son?

Fly flies she from the glories of a court,
Where wealth and pleasure may thy reign support,
To some poor cottage on the mountain's brow,
How bleak with winds, and cover'd now with snow,
Where pinching want must curb her warm desires,
Where household cares suppress thy genial fires?

"Too aptly the afflicted Heathens prove
Thy force, while they erect the shrines of Love.
In mystic form the artizans of Greece
On wounded stone, or molten gold, express;
And Cyprus to his godhead pays her vow,
And in his hand the idol holds his bow;
A quiver by his side sustains his store
Of pointed darts; and emblems of his power:
A pair of wings he has, which he extends
Now to be gone; which now again he bends,
To return, as best may serve his wanton ends.

Entirely thus I find the fiend pourtray'd,
Since first, alas! I saw the beauteous maid.
I felt him strike, and now I see him fly:
Curs'd demon! O! for ever broken lie
Those fatal shafts, by which I inward bleed!
O! can my wishes yet o'ertake thy speed!
Tir'd may'st thou pant, and hang thy flagging wing,
Except thou turn'st thy course, resolv'd to bring
The damsel back, and save the love-sick king!"

My soul thus struggling in the fatal net,
Unable to enjoy, or to forget;
I reason'd much, alas! but more I lov'd:
Sent and recall'd, ordain'd and disapprov'd;
Till, hopeless, plung'd in an abyss of grief,
I from necessity receiv'd relief:
Time gently aided to assuage my pain,
And Wisdom took once more the slacken'd rein.

But O, how short my interval of woe!
Our griefs how swift! our remedies how slow!
Another nymph, (for so did Heaven ordain,
To change the manner, but renew the pain,)
Another nymph, amongst the many fair,
That made my softer hours their solemn care,
Before the rest affected still to stand,
And watch'd my eye, preventing my command.
Abra, she so was call'd, did soonest haste
To grace my presence; Abra went the last
Abra was ready ere I call'd her name;
And, though I call'd another, Abra came.

Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And, laughing, gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well.
To me her actions did unheeded die,
Or were remarked but with a common eye;
Till more appriz'd of what the rumour said,
More I observ'd peculiar in the maid.

The Sun declin'd had shot his western ray,
When, tir'd with business of the solemn day,
I purpos'd to unbend the evening hours,
And banquet private in the women's bowers.
I call'd, before I sat, to wash my hands
(For so the precept of the law commands):
Love had ordain'd, that it was Abra's turn
To mix the sweets, and minister the urn.

With awful homage and submissive dread,
The maid approach'd, on my declining head
To pour the oils; she trembled as she pour'd:
With an unguarded look she now devour'd
My nearer face! and now recall'd her eye,
And heav'd, and strove to hide, a sudden sigh.

"And whence," said I, "canst thou have dread or pain?

What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secluded from the world and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear?
For sure," I added, "sure thy little heart
Ne'er felt Love's anger, nor receiv'd his dart."

Abash'd, she blush'd, and with disorder spoke:
Her rising shame adorn'd the words it broke.

"If the great master will descend to hear
The humble series of his handmaid's care;
O! while she tells it, let him not put on
The look, that awes the nations from the throne!
O! let not death severe in glory lie
In the king's frown, and terror of his eye!

"Mine to obey, thy part is to ordain;
And though to mention be to suffer pain,
If the king smile whilst I my woe recite,
If, weeping, I find favour in his sight,
Flow fast, my tears, full rising his delight.

" O ! witness Earth beneath, and Heaven above !
 For can I hide it ? I am sick of love ;
 If madness may the name of passion bear,
 Or love be call'd what is indeed despair. [controls
 " Thou Sovereign Power ! whose secret will
 The inward bent and motion of our souls !
 Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
 Between the cause and cure of my disease ?
 The mighty object of that raging fire,
 In which unpity'd Abra must expire,
 Had he been born some simple shepherd's heir,
 The lowing herd or fleecy sheep his care,
 At morn with him I o'er the hills had run,
 Scornful of winter's frost and summer's sun,
 Still asking where he made his flock to rest at noon.
 For him at night, the dear expected guest,
 I had with hasty joy prepar'd the feast ;
 And from the cottage, o'er the distant plain,
 Sent forth my longing eye to meet the swain,
 Wavering, impatient, toss'd by hope and fear,
 Till he and joy together should appear,
 And the lov'd dog declare his master near.
 On my declining neck and open breast
 I should have lull'd the lovely youth to rest,
 And from beneath his head, at dawning day,
 With softest care have stol'n my arm away,
 To rise and from the fold release the sheep,
 Fond of his flock, indulgent to his sleep.

" Or if kind Heaven, propitious to my flame,
 (For sure from Heaven the faithful ardour came,)
 Had blest my life, and deck'd my natal hour
 With height of title, and extent of power ;
 Without a crime my passion had aspir'd,
 Found the lov'd prince, and told what I desir'd.

" Then I had come, preventing Sheba's queen,
 To see the comeliest of the sons of men,
 To hear the charming poet's amorous song,
 And gather honey falling from his tongue,
 To take the fragrant kisses of his mouth,
 Sweeter than breezes of her native south,
 Likening his grace, his person, and his mien,
 To all that great or beauteous I had seen.
 Serene and bright his eyes, as solar beams
 Reflecting temper'd light from crystal streams ;
 Ruddy as gold his cheek ; his bosom fair
 As silver ; the curl'd ringlets of his hair
 Black as the raven's wing ; his lip more red
 Than eastern coral, or the scarlet thread ;
 Even his teeth, and white like a young flock
 Coeval, newly shorn, from the clear brook
 Recent, and branching on the sunny rock.
 Ivory, with sapphires interspers'd, explains
 How white his hands, how blue the manly veins.
 Columns of polish'd marble, firmly set
 On golden bases, are his legs and feet ;
 His stature all majestic, all divine,
 Straight as the palm-tree, strong as is the pine.
 Saffron and myrrh are on his garments shed,
 And everlasting sweets bloom round his head.
 What utter I ! where am I ! wretched maid !
 Die, Abra, die : too plainly hast thou said
 Thy soul's desire to meet his high embrace,
 And blessing stamp'd upon thy future race ;
 To bid attentive nations bless thy womb,
 With unborn monarchs charg'd, and Solomons to come."

Here o'er her speech her flowing eyes prevail.
 O foolish maid ! and O unhappy tale !
 My suffering heart for ever shall defy
 Wounds and danger from a future eye.

O ! yet my tortur'd senses deep retain
 The wretched memory of my former pain,
 The dire affront, and my Egyptian chain.
 " As time," I said, " may happily efface
 That cruel image of the king's disgrace,
 Imperial Reason shall resume her seat,
 And Solomon, once fall'n, again be great.
 Betray'd by passion, as subdued in war,
 We wisely should exert a double care,
 Nor ever ought a second time to err."

This Abra then —

I saw her ; 'twas humanity ; it gave
 Some respite to the sorrows of my slave.
 Her fond excess proclaim'd her passion true,
 And generous pity to that truth was due.
 Well I entreated her, who well deserv'd ;
 I call'd her often, for she always serv'd.
 Use made her person easy to my sight,
 And ease insensibly produc'd delight.

Whene'er I revell'd in the women's bowers,
 (For first I sought her but at looser hours)
 The apples she had gather'd smelt most sweet,
 The cakes she kneaded was the savoury meat :
 But fruits their odour lost, and meats their taste,
 If gentle Abra had not deck'd the feast.
 Dishonour'd did the sparkling goblet stand,
 Unless receiv'd from gentle Abra's hand ;
 And, when the virgins form'd the evening choir,
 Raising their voices to the master lyre,
 Too flat I thought this voice, and that too shrill ;
 One show'd too much, and one too little skill ;
 Nor could my soul approve the music's tone,
 Till all was hush'd, and Abra sung alone.
 Fairer she seem'd distinguish'd from the rest,
 And better mien disclos'd, as better drest.
 A bright tiara, round her forehead ty'd,
 To juster bounds confin'd its rising pride ;
 The blushing ruby on her snowy breast
 Render'd its panting whiteness more confess'd ;
 Bracelets of pearl gave roundness to her arm,
 And every gem augmented every charm.
 Her senses pleas'd, her beauty still improv'd,
 And she more lovely grew, as more belov'd.

And now I could behold, avow, and blame
 The several follies of my former flame ;
 Willing my heart for recompense to prove
 The certain joys that lie in prosperous love.
 " For what," said I, " from Abra can I fear,
 Too humble to insult, too soft to be severe ?
 The damsel's sole ambition is to please ;
 With freedom I may like, and quit with ease ;
 She soothes, but never can enthrall my mind :
 Why may not Peace and Love for once be join'd ?"

Great Heaven ! how frail thy creature man is made !

How by himself insensibly betray'd !
 In our own strength unhappily secure,
 Too little cautious of the adverse power,
 And by the blast of self-opinion mov'd,
 We wish to charm, and seek to be belov'd.
 On Pleasure's flowing brink we idly stray,
 Masters as yet of our returning way ;
 Seeing no danger, we disarm our mind,
 And give our conduct to the waves and wind :
 Then in the flowery mead, or verdant shade,
 To wanton dalliance negligently laid,
 We weave the chaplet, and we crown the bowl,
 And smiling see the nearer waters roll,
 Till the strong gusts of raging passion rise,
 Till the dire tempest mingles earth and skies ;

And, swift into the boundless ocean borne,
Our foolish confidence too late we mourn;
Round our devoted heads the billows beat, [treat.
And from our troubled view the lessen'd lands re-

O mighty Love! from thy unbounded power
How shall the human bosom rest secure?
How shall our thought avoid the various snare?
Or Wisdom to our caution'd soul declare
The different shapes thou pleasest to employ,
When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy?

The haughty nymph, in open beauty drest,
To-day encounters our unguarded breast:
She looks with majesty, and moves with state;
Valiant her soul, and in misfortune great,
She scorns the world, and dares the rage of Fate.

Here whilst we take stern manhood for our guide,
And guard our conduct with becoming pride;
Arm'd with the courage in her action shown,
We praise her mind, the image of our own.
That can please is certain to persuade,
To-day belov'd, to-morrow is obey'd.

We think we see through Reason's optics right,
Or find how Beauty's rays elude our sight:
To look with her eye, whilst we applaud her mind,
And when we speak her great, we wish her kind.
To-morrow, cruel power! thou arm'st the fair
With flowing sorrow, and dishevell'd hair;
Her complaint, and humble is her tale,
Her sighs explaining where her accents fail.

Her generous softness warms the honest breast;
We raise the sad, and succour the distress'd.
And whilst our wish prepares the kind relief,
Her pity mitigates her rising grief,
We sicken soon from her contagious care,
We groan for her sorrows, groan for her despair;
And against Love too late those bosoms arm,
Which tears can soften, and which sighs can warm.

Against this nearest, cruellest of foes,
What shall Wit meditate, or Force oppose?
Hence, feeble Nature, shall we summon aid,
By our pity and our pride betray'd?
What remedy shall we hope to find, [mind;
When the close fiend has gain'd our treacherous
Siding there does Reason's power deride,
And blind himself, conducts the dazzled guide?

Conqueror now, my lovely Abra, held
In freedom in her chains; my heart was fill'd
With her, with her alone; in her alone
Sought its peace and joy: while she was gone,
Sigh'd and griev'd, impatient of her stay;
Turn'd, she chas'd those sighs, that grief, away:
Her absence made the night, her presence brought
The day.

The ball, the play, the mask, by turns succeed:
Her I make the song, the dance with her I lead.
In her various in each shape and dress,
In luxury may form, or thought express.
To-day, beneath the palm-tree on the plains,
Deborah's arms and habit Abra reigns:
A wreath, denoting conquest, guides her brow,
And low, like Barak, at her feet I bow.

The mimic chorus sings her prosperous hand,
As she had slain the foe, and sav'd the land.
To-morrow she approves a softer air,
And makes the pomp and pageantry of war,
The form of peaceful Abigail assumes,
And from the village with the present comes.

Her youthful band depose their glittering arms,
And recite her bounties, and recite her charms;
And I assume my father's step and mien,
Meet with due regard my future queen.

If haply Abra's will be now inclin'd
To range the woods, or chase the flying hind,
Soon as the Sun awakes, the sprightly court
Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport.
In lessen'd royalty, and humble state,
Thy king, Jerusalem, descends to wait
Till Abra comes: she comes; a milk-white steed
Mixture of Persia's and Arabia's breed,
Sustains the nymph: her garments flying loose,
(As the Sydonian maids or Thracian use,)
And half her knee and half her breast appear,
By art, like negligence, disclos'd and bare.
Her left-hand guides the hunting courser's flight,
A silver bow she carries in her right,
And from the golden quiver at her side
Rustles the ebon arrow's feather'd pride.
Sapphires and diamonds on her front display
An artificial moon's increasing ray.

Diana, huntress, mistress of the groves,
The favourite Abra speaks, and looks, and moves.
Her, as the present goddess, I obey:
Beneath her feet the captive game I lay.
The mingled chorus sings Diana's fame:
Clarions and horns in louder peals proclaim
Her mystic praise; the vocal triumphs bound
Against the hills; the hills reflect the sound.

If, tir'd this evening with the hunted woods,
To the large fish-pools, or the glassy floods,
Her mind to-morrow points; a thousand hands,
To-night employ'd, obey the king's commands.
Upon the watery beach an artful pile
Of planks is join'd, and forms a moving isle:

A golden chariot in the midst is set,
And silver cygnets seem to feel its weight.
Abra, bright queen, ascends her gaudy throne,
In semblance of the Grecian Venus known:
Tritons and sea-green Naiads round her move,
And sing in moving strains the force of love;
Whilst, as th' approaching pageant does appear,
And echoing crowds speak mighty Venus near,
I, her adorer, too devoutly stand
Fast on the utmost margin of the land,
With arms and hopes extended, to receive
The fancy'd goddess rising from the wave.

O subject Reason! O imperious Love!
Whither yet further would my folly rove?
Is it enough, that Abra should be great
In the wall'd palace, or the rural seat?
That masking habits, and a borrow'd name,
Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame?
No, no! Jerusalem combin'd must see
My open fault, and regal infamy.

Solemn a month is destin'd for the feast:
Abra invites; the nation is the guest.
To have the honour of each day sustain'd,
The woods are travers'd, and the lakes are drain'd:
Arabia's wilds, and Egypt's, are explor'd:
The edible creation decks the board:
Hardly the phenix 'scapes —

The men their lyres, the maids their voices raise,
To sing my happiness, and Abra's praise;
And slavish bards our mutual loves rehearse
In lying strains and ignominious verse:
While, from the banquet leading forth the bride,
Whom prudent Love from public eyes should hide,
I show her to the world, confess'd and known
Queen of my heart, and partner of my throne.

And now her friends and flatterers fill the court;
From Dan and from Beersheba they resort:
They barter places, and dispose of grants,
Whole provinces unequal to their wants;

They teach her to recede, or to debate,
 With toys of love to mix affairs of state ;
 By practis'd rules her empire to secure,
 And in my pleasure make my ruin sure.
 They gave, and she transferr'd the curs'd advice,
 That monarchs should their inward soul disguise,
 Dissemble and command, be false and wise ;
 By ignominious arts, for servile ends,
 Should compliment their foes, and shun their friends.

And now I leave the true and just supports
 Of legal princes, and of honest courts,
 Barzillai's and the fierce Benaiah's heirs,
 Whose sires, great partners in my father's cares,
 Saluted their young king, at Hebron crown'd,
 Great by their toil, and glorious by their wound.
 And now (unhappy counsel !) I prefer
 Those whom my follies only made me fear,
 Old Corah's blood, and taunting Shimei's race ;
 Miscreants who ow'd their lives to David's grace,
 Though they had spurn'd his rule, and curs'd him to his face.

Still Abra's power, my scandal still increas'd ;
 Justice submitted to what Abra pleas'd :
 Her will alone could settle or revoke,
 And law was fix'd by what she latest spoke.

Israel neglected, Abra was my care :
 I only acted, thought, and liv'd, for her.
 I durst not reason with my wounded heart ;
 Abra possess'd ; she was its better part.
 O ! had I now review'd the famous cause,
 Which gave my righteous youth so just applause,
 In vain on the dissembled mother's tongue
 Had cunning art and sly persuasion hung,
 And real care in vain, and native love,
 In the true parent's panting breast had strove ;
 While both, deceiv'd, had seen the destin'd child
 Or slain or sav'd, as Abra frown'd or smil'd.

Unknowing to command, proud to obey,
 A lifeless king, a royal shade, I lay.
 Unheard, the injur'd orphans now complain ;
 The widow's cries address the throne in vain.
 Causes unjudg'd disgrace the loaded file,
 And sleeping laws the king's neglect revile.
 No more the elders throng'd around my throne,
 To hear my maxims, and reform their own.
 No more the young nobility were taught
 How Moses govern'd, and how David fought.
 Loose and undisciplin'd the soldier lay,
 Or lost in drink and game the solid day.
 Porches and schools, design'd for public good,
 Uncover'd, and with scaffolds cumber'd stood,
 Or nodded, threatening ruin. —
 Half pillars wanted their expected height,
 And roofs imperfect prejudic'd the sight.
 The artists grieve ; the labouring people droop :
 My father's legacy, my country's hope,
 God's temple, lies unfinish'd. —

The wise and great deplor'd their monarch's fate,
 And future mischiefs of a sinking state.

" Is this," the serious said, " is this the man,
 Whose active soul through every science ran ?
 Who, by just rule and elevated skill,
 Prescrib'd the dubious bounds of good and ill ?
 Whose golden sayings, and immortal wit,
 On large phylacteries expressive writ,
 Were to the forehead of the rabbins ty'd,
 Our youth's instruction, and our age's pride ?
 Could not the wise his wild desires restrain ?
 Then was our hearing, and his preaching, vain !

What from his life and letters were we taught,
 But that his knowledge aggravates his fault ?"

In lighter mood the humorous and the gay
 (As crown'd with roses at their feasts they lay)
 Sent the full goblet, charg'd with Abra's name,
 And charms superior to their master's fame.
 Laughing, some praise the king, who let them see
 How aptly luxe and empire might agree :
 Some gloss'd, how love and wisdom were at strife.
 And brought my proverbs to confront my life.
 " However, friend, here's to the king," one cries.
 " To him who was the king," the friend replies.
 " The king, for Judah's and for Wisdom's curse.
 To Abra yields : could I or thou do worse ?
 Our looser lives let Chance or Folly steer,
 If thus the prudent and determin'd err.
 Let Dinah bind with flowers her flowing hair,
 And touch the lute, and sound the wanton air.
 Let us the bliss without the sting receive,
 Free, as we will, or to enjoy, or leave.
 Pleasures on levity's smooth surface flow :
 Thought brings the weight that sinks the soul.
 Now be this maxim to the king convey'd,
 And added to the thousand he has made."

" Sadly, O Reason ! is thy power express'd,
 Thou gloomy tyrant of the frightened breast !
 And harsh the rules which we from thee receive.
 If for our wisdom we our pleasure give ;
 And more to think be only more to grieve :
 If Judah's king, at thy tribunal try'd,
 Forsakes his joy, to vindicate his pride,
 And, changing sorrows, I am only found
 Loos'd from the chains of Love, in thine more strictly bound !

" But do I call thee tyrant, or complain
 How hard thy laws, how absolute thy reign ?
 While thou, alas ! art but an empty name,
 To no two men, who e'er discours'd, the same.
 The idle product of a troubled thought,
 In borrow'd shapes and airy colours wrought :
 A fancy'd line, and a reflected shade ;
 A chain which man to fetter man has made ;
 By artifice impos'd, by fear obey'd !

" Yet, wretched name, or arbitrary thing,
 Whence-ever I thy cruel essence bring,
 I own thy influence, for I feel thy sting.
 Reluctant I perceive thee in my soul,
 Form'd to command, and destin'd to control.
 Yes ; thy insulting dictates shall be heard ;
 Virtue for once shall be her own reward :
 Yes ; rebel Israel ! this unhappy maid
 Shall be dismiss'd : the crowd shall be obey'd :
 The king his passion and his rule shall leave,
 No longer Abra's, but the people's slave.
 My coward soul shall bear its wayward fate ;
 I will, alas ! be wretched to be great,
 And sigh in royalty, and grieve in state."

I said : resolv'd to plunge into my grief
 At once so far, as to expect relief
 From my despair alone —
 I chose to write the thing I durst not speak
 To her I lov'd, to her I must forsake.
 The harsh epistle labour'd much to prove
 How inconsistent majesty and love.
 I always should, it said, esteem her well,
 But never see her more : it bid her feel
 No future pain for me ; but instant wed
 A lover more proportion'd to her bed,
 And quiet dedicate her remnant life
 To the just duties of an humble wife.

She read, and forth to me she wildly ran,
To me, the ease of all her former pain.
She kneel'd, entreated, struggled, threaten'd, cry'd,
And with alternate passion liv'd and dy'd :
Till, now, deny'd the liberty to mourn,
And by rude fury from my presence torn,
This only object of my real care,
Cut off from hope, abandon'd to despair,
In some few posting fatal hours is hurl'd [world.
From wealth, from power, from love, and from the
" Here tell me, if thou dar'st, my conscious soul,
What different sorrows did within thee roll ?
What pangs, what fires, what racks, didst thou sustain ?

What sad vicissitudes of smarting pain ?
How oft from pomp and state did I remove,
To feed despair, and cherish hopeless love ?
How oft, all day, recall'd I Abra's charms,
Her beauties press'd, and panting in my arms ?
How oft, with sighs, view'd ev'ry female face,
Where mimic fancy might her likeness trace ?
How oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and Love alone ?
How oft all night pursued her in my dreams,
O'er flowery vallies, and through crystal streams,
And, waking, view'd with grief the rising Sun,
And fondly mourn'd the dear delusion gone ?"

When thus the gather'd storms of wretched love
In my swoln bosom, with long war had strove ;
At length they broke their bounds ; at length their force

Bore down whatever met its stronger course,
And all the civil bonds of manhood waste,
And scatter'd ruin as the torrent past.
From the hills, whose hollow caves contain
The congregated snow and swelling rain
All the full stores their ancient bounds disdain,
Precipitate the furious torrent flows :
A vain would speed avoid, or strength oppose ;
Towns, forests, herds, and men, promiscuous
drown'd,

With one great death deform the dreary ground :
The echoed woes from distant rocks resound.
And now, what impious ways my wishes took,
How they the monarch and the man forsook ;
And how I follow'd an abandon'd will,
Through crooked paths, and sad retreats of ill ;
How Judah's daughters now, now foreign slaves,
My turns my prostituted bed receives ;
Through tribes of women how I loosely rang'd
Impatient : lik'd to-night, to-morrow chang'd ;
And, by the instinct of capricious lust,
Enjoy'd, disdain'd, was grateful, or unjust :
These scenes from human eyes conceal'd,
In clouds of decent silence justly veil'd !
These the wanton images convey'd
To black oblivion and eternal shade !
Let their sad epitome alone,
And outward lines, to future age be known,
Enough to propagate the sure belief,
That vice engenders shame, and folly broods o'er grief !

Bury'd in sloth, and lost in ease, I lay ;
At night I revell'd, and I slept the day.
New heaps of fuel damp'd my kindling fires,
And daily change extinguish'd young desires.
By its own force destroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And, always weary'd, I was never pleas'd.
No longer now does my neglected mind
In wonted stores and old ideas find.

Fix'd Judgment there no longer does abide,
To take the true, or set the false aside.
No longer does swift Memory trace the cells,
Where springing Wit, or young Invention, dwell :
Frequent debauch to habitude prevails ;
Patience of toil, and love of virtue, fails.
By sad degrees impair'd, my vigour dies,
Till I command no longer ev'n in vice.

The women on my dotage build their sway ;
They ask, I grant ; they threaten, I obey.
In regal garments now I gravely stride,
Aw'd by the Persian damsel's haughty pride :
Now with the looser Syrian dance and sing,
In robes tuck'd up, opprobrious to the king.

Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,
And shape my foolishness to their desire ;
Seduc'd and aw'd by the Philistine dame,
At Dagon's shrine I kindle impious flame.
With the Chaldean's charms her rites prevail,
And curling frankincense ascends to Baal.
To each new harlot I new altars dress,
And serve her god, whose person I caress.

Where, my deluded sense, was Reason flown ?
Where the high majesty of David's throne ?
Where all the maxims of eternal truth,
With which the living God inform'd my youth,
When with the lewd Egyptian I adore
Vain idols, deities that ne'er before
In Israel's land had fix'd their dire abodes,
Beastly divinities, and droves of gods ;
Osiris, Apis, powers that chew the cud,
And dog Anubis, flatterer for his food ?
When in the woody hills forbidden shade
I carv'd the marble, and invoc'd its aid ;
When in the fens to snakes and flies, with zeal
Unworthy human thought, I prostrate fell ;
To shrubs and plants my vile devotion paid,
And set the bearded leek, to which I pray'd ;
When to all beings sacred rites were given,
Forgot the Arbiter of Earth and Heaven ?

Through these sad shades, this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length began to roll.
The rising motion of an infant ray
Shot glimmering thro' the cloud, and promis'd day.
And now, one moment able to reflect,
I found the king abandon'd to neglect,
Seen without awe, and serv'd without respect.
I found my subjects amicably join
To lessen their defects by citing mine.
The priest with pity pray'd for David's race,
And left his text, to dwell on my disgrace.
The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son
The sad examples which he ought to shun,
Describ'd, and only nam'd not, Solomon.
Each bard, each sire, did to his pupil sing,
" A wise child better than a foolish king."

Into myself my Reason's eye I turn'd,
And as I much reflected, much I mourn'd.
A mighty king I am, an earthly god ;
Nations obey my word, and wait my nod :
I raise or sink, imprison or set free,
And life or death depends on my decree.
Fond the idea, and the thought is vain ;
O'er Judah's king ten thousand tyrants reign ;
Legions of lust, and various powers of ill,
Insult the master's tributary will :
And he, from whom the nations should receive
Justice and freedom, lies himself a slave,
Tortur'd by cruel change of wild desires,
Lash'd by mad rage, and scorch'd by brutal fires.

" O Reason ! once again to thee I call ;
Accept my sorrow, and retrieve my fall.
Wisdom, thou say'st, from Heaven receiv'd her birth,

Her beams transmitted to the subject Earth :
Yet this great empress of the human soul
Does only with imagin'd power control,
If restless Passion, by rebellious sway,
Compels the weak usurper to obey.

" O troubled, weak, and coward, as thou art,
Without thy poor advice, the labouring heart
To worse extremes with swifter steps would run,
Not sav'd by virtue, yet by vice undone !"

Oft have I said, the praise of doing well
Is to the ear as ointment to the smell.
Now, if some flies, perchance, however small,
Into the alabaster urn should fall,
The odours of the sweets enclos'd would die,
And stench corrupt (sad change !) their place supply.

So the least faults, if mix'd with fairest deed,
Of future ill become the fatal seed ;
Into the balm of purest virtue cast,
Annoy all life with one contagious blast.

Lost Solomon ! pursue this thought no more :
Of thy past errors recollect the store ;
And silent weep, that, while the deathless Muse
Shall sing the just, shall o'er their heads diffuse
Perfumes with lavish hand, she shall proclaim
Thy crimes alone, and, to thy evil fame
Impartial, scatter damps and poisons on thy name.
Awaking, therefore, as who long had dream'd,
Much of my women and their gods asham'd ;
From this abyss of exemplary vice
Resolv'd, as time might aid my thought, to rise ;
Again I bid the mournful goddess write
The fond pursuit of fugitive delight ;
Bid her exalt her melancholy wing,
And, rais'd from earth, and sav'd from passion, sing
Of human hope by cross event destroy'd,
Of useless wealth and greatness unenjoy'd,
Of lust and love, with their fantastic train,
Their wishes, smiles, and looks, deceitful all, and vain.

BOOK III.—POWER.

Texts chiefly alluded to in Book III.

" Or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern." —
ECCLES. chap. xii. ver. 6.

" The Sun ariseth, and the Sun goeth down, and hasteth to his place where he arose." — Ch. i. 5.

" The wind goeth towards the south, and turneth about unto the north. It whirleth about continually ; and the wind returneth again, according to his circuit." — Ver. 6.

" All the rivers run into the sea : yet the sea is not full. Unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again." — Ver. 7.

" Then shall the dust return to the earth, as it was :
and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." —
Ch. xii. 7.

" Now when Solomon had made an end of praying,
the fire came down from Heaven, and consumed

the burnt-offering, and the sacrifices ; and the glory of the Lord filled the house." — 2 CHRON.
vii. 1.

" By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down :
yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion," &c. —
PSALM cxxxvii. 1.

" I said of laughter, it is mad ; and of mirth, what doth it?" — ECCLES. ii. 2.

" No man can find out the work that God maketh,
from the beginning to the end." — Ch. iii. 11.

" Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever ;
nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it : and God doeth it, that men should fear before him." — Ver. 14.

" Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter ;
fear God, and keep his commandments ; for this is the whole duty of man." — Ch. xii. 13.

Argument.

Solomon considers man through the several stages and conditions of life, and concludes in general, that we are all miserable. He reflects more particularly upon the trouble and uncertainty of greatness and power ; gives some instances thereof from Adam down to himself ; and still concludes that all is vanity. He reasons again upon life, death, and a future being ; finds human wisdom
too imperfect to resolve his doubts ; has recourse to religion ; is informed by an angel, what shall happen to himself, his family, and his kingdom till the redemption of Israel ; and, upon the whole, resolves to submit his inquiries and anxieties to the will of his Creator.

COME then, my soul ; I call thee by that name,
Thou busy thing, from whence I know I am :
For, knowing what I am, I know thou art ;
Since that must needs exist, which can impart.
But how cam'st thou to be, or whence thy spring ?
For various of thee priests and poets sing.

Bear'st thou submissive, but a lowly birth,
Some separate particles of finer earth,
A plain effect which Nature must beget,
As motion orders, and as atoms meet ;
Companion of the body's good or ill,
From force of instinct, more than choice of will ;
Conscious of fear or valour, joy or pain,
As the wild courses of the blood ordain ;
Who, as degrees of heat and cold prevail,
In youth dost flourish, and with age shalt fail ;
Till, mingled with thy partner's latest breath,
Thou fly'st dissolv'd in air, and lost in death ?

Or, if thy great existence would aspire
To causes more sublime, of heavenly fire
Wert thou a spark struck off, a separate ray,
Ordain'd to mingle with terrestrial clay ;
With it condemn'd for certain years to dwell,
To grieve its frailties, and its pains to feel ;
To teach it good and ill, disgrace or fame,
Pale it with rage, or redden it with shame ;
To guide its actions with informing care,
In peace to judge, to conquer in the war ;
Render it agile, witty, valiant, sage,
As fits the various course of human age ;
Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mouldering walls ;

Lovers awhile upon the sad remains,
Which now the pile or sepulchre contains ;
And thence with liberty unbounded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies.

Whate'er thou art, where-e'er ordain'd to go,
Points which we rather may dispute than know,)
Come on, thou little inmate of this breast,
Which for thy sake from passions I divest,
For these, thou say'st, raise all the stormy strife,
Which hinder thy repose, and trouble life.
Be the fair level of thy actions laid,
As temperance wills, and prudence may persuade :
Be thy affections undisturb'd and clear,
Guided to what may great or good appear,
And try if life be worth the liver's care.

Amass'd in man, there justly is beheld
That through the whole creation has excell'd :
The life and growth of plants, of beasts the sense,
The angel's forecast and intelligence :
Say from these glorious seeds what harvest flows,
Recount our blessings, and compare our woes.
In its true light let clearest reason see
The man dragg'd out to act, and forc'd to be ;
Helpless and naked, on a woman's knees
To be expos'd and rear'd as she may please,
Feel her neglect, and pine from her disease :
His tender eye by too direct a ray
Founded, and flying from unpractis'd day ;
His heart assaulted by invading air,
And beating fervent to the vital war ;
To his young sense how various forms appear,
That strike his wonder, and excite his fear :
By his distortions he reveals his pains ;
He by his tears and by his sighs complains ;
Still time and use assist the infant wretch,
By broken words and rudiments of speech,
He wants in plainer characters to show,
And paint more perfect figures of his woe ;
Condemn'd to sacrifice his childish years
To babbling ignorance, and to empty fears ;
To pass the riper period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded stage ;
To lasting toils expos'd, and endless cares,
To open dangers, and to secret snares ;
To malice, which the vengeful foe intends,
And the more dangerous love of seeming friends.
His deeds examin'd by the people's will,
None to forget the good, and blame the ill ;
He sadly censur'd in their curs'd debate,
Who, in the scorner's or the judge's seat,
Went to condemn the virtue which they hate.
He would he rather leave this frantic scene,
And trees and beasts prefer to courts and men,
In the remotest wood and lonely grot
To meet that worst of evils, Thought ;
Different ideas to his memory brought,
Some intricate as are the pathless woods,
Impetuous some as the descending floods ;
With anxious doubts, with raging passions torn,
No sweet companion near with whom to mourn,
He hears the echoing rock return his sighs,
And from himself the frightened hermit flies.
Thus, through what path soe'er of life we rove,
Large companies our hate, and grief our love.
We're d with the present moment's heavy gloom,
Why seek we brightness from the years to come ?
Disturb'd and broken like a sick man's sleep,
Our troubled thoughts to distant prospects leap,
Unconscious still what flies us to o'ertake,
Nor hope is but the dream of those that wake

But, looking back, we see the dreadful train
Of woes anew, which were we to sustain,
We should refuse to tread the path again ;
Still adding grief, still counting from the first,
Judging the latest evils still the worst,
And sadly finding each progressive hour
Heighten their number and augment their power.
Till, by one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn,
Compell'd our common impotence to mourn.
Thus through the round of age to childhood we return ;

Reflecting find, that naked from the womb
We yesterday came forth ; that in the tomb
Naked again we must to-morrow lie,
Born to lament, to labour, and to die.

Pass we the ills which each man feels or dreads,
The weight or fallen or hanging o'er our heads ;
The bear, the lion, terrors of the plain,
The sheepfold scatter'd, and the shepherd slain .
The frequent errors of the pathless wood,
The giddy precipice, and the dangerous flood ;
The noisome pestilence, that, in open war,
Terrible marches through the mid-day air,
And scatters death ; the arrow that by night
Cuts the dank mist, and fatal wings its flight ;
The billowing snow, and violence of the shower,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour ;
The worm that gnaws the ripening fruit, sad guest,
Canker or locust, hurtful to infest
The blade ; while husks elude the tiller's care,
And eminence of want distinguishes the year.

Pass we the slow disease, and subtle pain,
Which our weak frame is destin'd to sustain ;
The cruel stone with congregated war
Tearing his bloody way ; the cold catarrh,
With frequent impulse, and continued strife,
Weakening the wasted seats of irksome life ;
The gout's fierce rack, the burning fever's rage,
The sad experience of decay ; and age,
Herself the sorest ill ; while Death and ease,
Oft' and in vain invoc'd or to appease
Or end the grief, with hasty wings recede
From the vex'd patient and the sickly bed.

Nought shall it profit, that the charming fair,
Angelic, softest work of Heaven, draws near
To the cold shaking paralytic hand,
Senseless of beauty's touch, or love's command ;
Nor longer apt or able to fulfil
The dictates of its feeble master's will.
Nought shall the psaltry and the harp avail,
The pleasing song, or well-repeated tale,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear.

The verdant rising of the flowery hill,
The vale enamell'd, and the crystal rill,
The ocean rolling, and the shelly shore,
Beautiful objects, shall delight no more,
When the lax'd sinews of the weaken'd eye
In watery damps or dim suffusion lie.
Day follows night ; the clouds return again
After the falling of the latter rain ;
But to the aged-blind shall ne'er return
Grateful vicissitude : he still must mourn
The Sun and Moon, and every starry light,
Eclips'd to him, and lost in everlasting night.

Behold where Age's wretched victim lies,
See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes :

Frequent for breath his panting bosom heaves ;
To broken sleep his remnant sense he gives,
And only by his pains, awaking, finds he lives.

Loos'd by devouring Time, the silver cord
Dissever'd lies ; unhonour'd from the board
The crystal urn, when broken, is thrown by,
And sifter utensils their place supply.
These things and thou must share one equal lot,
Die and be lost, corrupt and be forgot ;
While still another and another race
Shall now supply, and now give up the place ;
From earth all came, to earth must all return,
Frail as the cord, and brittle as the urn.

But be the terror of these ills suppress'd,
And view we man with health and vigour blest,
Home he returns with the declining Sun,
His destin'd task of labour hardly done ;
Goes forth again with the ascending ray,
Again his travel for his bread to pay,
And find the ill sufficient to the day.
Haply at night he does with horror shun
A widow'd daughter or a dying son ;
His neighbour's offspring he to-morrow sees,
And doubly feels his want in their increase ;
The next day, and the next, he must attend
His foe triumphant, or his buried friend.
In every act and turn of life he feels
Public calamities, or household ills ;
The due reward to just desert refus'd,
The trust betray'd, the nuptial bed abus'd ;
The judge corrupt, the long-depending cause,
And doubtful issue of misconstrued laws ;
The crafty turns of a dishonest state,
And violent will of the wrong-doing great ;
The venom'd tongue, injurious to his fame,
Which nor can wisdom shun, nor fair advice reclaim.

Esteem we these, my friends, event and chance,
Produc'd as atoms from the fluttering dance ?
Or higher yet their essence may we draw
From destin'd order and eternal law ?
Again, my Muse, the cruel doubt repeat :
Spring they, I say, from accident or Fate ?
Yet such we find they are as can control
The servile actions of our wavering soul :
Can fright, can alter, or can chain, the will ;
Their ills all built on life, that fundamental ill.

O fatal search ! in which the labouring mind,
Still press'd with weight of woe, still hopes to find
A shadow of delight, a dream of peace,
From years of pain one moment of release ;
Hoping at least she may herself deceive,
Against experience willing to believe,
Desirous to rejoice, condemn'd to grieve.

Happy the mortal man, who now at last
Has through this doleful vale of misery past,
Who to his destin'd stage has carry'd on
The tedious load, and laid his burthen down ;
Whom the cut brass, or wounded marble, shows
Victor o'er Life, and all her train of woes.
He, happier yet, who, privileg'd by Fate
To shorter labour and a lighter weight,
Receiv'd but yesterday the gift of breath,
Order'd to-morrow to return to death.
But O ! beyond description happiest he,
Who ne'er must roll on life's tumultuous sea ;
Who, with bless'd freedom, from the general doom
Exempt, must never force the teeming womb,
Nor see the Sun, nor sink into the tomb !

Who breathes, must suffer ; and who thinks, must mourn ;

And he alone is bless'd, who ne'er was born.

" Yet in thy turn, thou frowning preacher, hear:
Are not these general maxims too severe ?
Say : cannot power secure its owner's bliss ?
And is not wealth the potent sire of peace ?
Are victors bless'd with fame, or kings with ease ?"

I tell thee, life is but one common care,
And man was born to suffer, and to fear.

" But is no rank, no station, no degree,
From this contagious taint of sorrow free ?"

None, mortal ! none. Yet in a bolder strain
Let me this melancholy truth maintain.

But hence, ye worldly and profane, retire ;
For I adapt my voice, and raise my lyre,
To notions not by vulgar ear receiv'd :
Yet still must covet life, and be deceiv'd ;
Your very fear of death shall make you try
To catch the shade of immortality ;
Wishing on Earth to linger, and to save
Part of its prey from the devouring grave ;
To those who may survive you to bequeath
Something entire, in spite of Time and Death ;
A fancy'd kind of being to retrieve,
And in a book, or from a building, live.
False hope ! vain labour ! let some ages fly,
The dome shall moulder, and the volume die :
Wretches, still taught, still will ye think it strange,
That all the parts of this great fabric change,
Quit their old station, and primeval frame,
And lose their shape, their essence, and their name ?

Reduce the song : our hopes, our joys, are vain ;
Our lot is sorrow, and our portion pain.

What pause from woe, what hopes of comfort
The name of wise or great, of judge or king ?
What is a king ?— a man condemn'd to bear
The public burthen of the nation's care ;
Now crown'd some angry faction to appease ;
Now falls a victim to the people's ease ;
From the first blooming of his ill-taught youth,
Nourish'd in flattery, and estrang'd from truth ;
At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud ;
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears,
His very state acknowledging his fears ;
Marching amidst a thousand guards, he shows
His secret terror of a thousand foes :
In war, however prudent, great, or brave,
To blind events and fickle chance a slave ;
Seeking to settle what for ever flies,
Sure of the toil, uncertain of the prize.

But he returns with conquest on his brow,
Brings up the triumph, and absolves the vow :
The captive generals to his car were ty'd ;
The joyful citizens tumultuous tide,
Echoing his glory, gratify his pride.
What is this triumph ? madness, shouts, and noise
One great collection of the people's voice.
The wretches he brings back in chains relate
What may to-morrow be the victor's fate.
The spoils and trophies, borne before him, show
National loss, and epidemic woe,
Various distress, which he and his may know.
Does he not mourn the valiant thousands slain,
The heroes, once the glory of the plain,
Left in the conflict of the fatal day,
Or the wolf's portion, or the vulture's prey ?
Does he not weep the laurel which he wears,
Wet with the soldier's blood, and widow's tear ?

See, where he comes, the darling of the war !
 See millions crowding round the gilded car !
 In the vast joys of this ecstatic hour,
 And full fruition of successful power,
 One moment and one thought might let him scan
 The various turns of life, and fickle state of man.
 Are the dire images of sad distrust,
 And popular change, obscur'd amid the dust,
 That rises from the victor's rapid wheel ?
 Can the loud clarion or shrill fife repel
 The inward cries of care ? can Nature's voice,
 Plaintive, be drown'd or lessen'd in the noise ;
 Though shouts of thunder loud afflict the air,
 And the birds, now releas'd, and shake the ivory
 chair ?

" Yon crowd," he might reflect, " yon joyful crowd,

leas'd with my honours, in my praises loud,
 Should fleeting Victory to the vanquish'd go,
 Should she depress my arms, and raise the foe,)
 Would for that foe with equal ardour wait
 At the high palace, or the crowded gate ;
 With restless rage would pull my statues down,
 And cast the brass anew to his renown.

" O impotent desire of worldly sway !
 But I, who make the triumph of to-day,
 Lay of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,
 Hastily with wounds, and lifeless on the bier !
 Then (vileness of mankind !) then of all these,
 From my dilated eye with labour sees,
 Would one, alas ! repeat me good, or great,
 Wash my pale body, or bewail my fate ?
 Or march'd I chain'd behind the hostile car,
 The victor's pastime, and the sport of war,
 Would one, would one his pitying sorrow lend,
 Or be so poor, to own he was my friend ?"

Avails it then, O Reason, to be wise ?
 To see this cruel scene with quicker eyes ?
 To know with more distinction to complain,
 And have superior sense in feeling pain ?
 Let us revolve that roll with strictest eye,
 Where, safe from Time, distinguish'd actions lie ;
 And judge if greatness be exempt from pain,
 Or pleasure ever may with power remain.

Adam, great type, for whom the world was made,
 The fairest blessing to his arms convey'd,
 A charming wife ; and air, and sea, and land,
 And all that move therein, to his command
 Tender'd obedient : say, my pensive Muse,
 What did these golden promises produce ?
 Scarce tasting life, he was of joy bereav'd :
 The day, I think, in Paradise he liv'd ;
 And then the next his journey to pursue,
 Where wounding thorns and cursed thistles grew.
 Yet he earns his bread, adown his brow,
 Inclined to earth, his labouring sweat must flow ;
 His limbs must ake, with daily toils oppress'd,
 The long-wish'd night brings necessary rest.
 Still viewing, with regret, his darling Eve,
 He for her follies and his own must grieve ;
 Bewailing still afresh their hapless choice ;
 His ear oft frightened with the imag'd voice
 Of Heaven, when first it thunder'd ; oft his view
 Alight, as when the infant lightning flew,
 And the stern cherub stopp'd the fatal road,
 Arm'd with the flames of an avenging God.
 His younger son on the polluted ground,
 First-fruit of Death, lies plaintive of a wound
 Given by a brother's hand : his eldest birth
 Flies, mark'd by Heaven, a fugitive o'er Earth.

Yet why these sorrows heap'd upon the sire,
 Becomes nor man, nor angel, to inquire.

Each age sinn'd on, and guilt advanc'd with time :

The son still added to the father's crime ;
 Till God arose, and, great in anger, said,
 " Lo ! it repenteth me that man was made !
 Withdraw thy light, thou Sun ! be dark, ye skies !
 And from your deep abyss, ye waters, rise !"

The frightened angels heard th' Almighty Lord,
 And o'er the Earth from wrathful vials pour'd
 Tempests and storms, obedient to his word.
 Meantime, his providence to Noah gave
 The guard of all that he design'd to save.
 Exempt from general doom the patriarch stood,
 Contemn'd the waves, and triumph'd o'er the flood.

The winds fall silent, and the waves decrease,
 The dove brings quiet, and the olive peace
 Yet still his heart does inward sorrow feel,
 Which faith alone forbids him to reveal.
 If on the backward world his views are cast,
 'Tis death diffus'd, and universal waste :
 Present, (sad prospect !) can he aught descry
 But (what affects his melancholy eye)
 The beauties of the ancient fabric lost,
 In chains of craggy hill, or lengths of dreary coast ?
 While, to high Heaven his pious breathings turn'd,
 Weeping he hop'd, and sacrificing mourn'd ;
 When of God's image only eight he found Snatch'd from the watery grave, and sav'd from nations drown'd ;

And of three sons, the future hopes of Earth,
 The seed whence empires must receive their birth,
 One he foresees excluded heavenly grace,
 And mark'd with curses, fatal to his race !

Abraham, potent prince, the friend of God,
 Of human ills must bear the destin'd load ;
 By blood and battles must his power maintain,
 And slay the monarchs ere he rules the plain ;
 Must deal just portions of a servile life
 To a proud handmaid and a peevish wife ;
 Must with the mother leave the weeping son,
 In want to wander, and in wilds to groan ;
 Must take his other child, his age's hope,
 To trembling Moriam's melancholy top,
 Order'd to drench his knife in filial blood,
 Destroy his heir, or disobey his God.

Moses beheld that God ; but how beheld ?
 The Deity in radiant beams conceal'd,
 And clouded in a deep abyss of light ;
 While present, too severe for human sight,
 Nor staying longer than one swift-wing'd night.
 The following days, and months, and years, decreed
 To fierce encounter, and to toilsome deed.
 His youth with wants and hardships must engage ;
 Plots and rebellions must disturb his age ;
 Some Corah still arose, some rebel slave,
 Prompter to sink the state, than he to save :
 And Israel did his rage so far provoke,
 That what the Godhead wrote, the prophet broke.
 His voice scarce heard, his dictates scarce believ'd,
 In camps, in arms, in pilgrimage, he liv'd ;
 And dy'd obedient to severest law,
 Forbid to tread the promis'd land he saw.

My father's life was one long line of care,
 A scene of danger, and a state of war.
 Alarm'd, expos'd, his childhood must engage
 The bear's rough gripe, and foaming lion's rage.
 By various turns his threaten'd youth must fear
 Goliath's lifted sword, and Saul's emitted spear.

Forlorn he must and persecuted fly,
Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie,
And often ask, and be refus'd, to die.

For ever, from his manly toil, are known
The weight of power, and anguish of a crown.
What tongue can speak the restless monarch's woes,
When God and Nathan were declar'd his foes?
When every object his offence revil'd,
The husband murder'd, and the wife defil'd,
The parent's sins impress'd upon the dying child?
What heart can think the grief which he sustain'd,
When the king's crime brought vengeance on the land;

And the inexorable prophet's voice [choice?
Gave famine, plague, or war, and bid him fix his

He dy'd; and, oh! may no reflection shed
Its poisonous venom on the royal dead!
Yet the unwilling truth must be express'd,
Which long has labour'd in this pensive breast:
Dying, he added to my weight of care;
He made me to his crimes undoubted heir;
Left his unfinish'd murder to his son,
And Joab's blood entail'd on Judah's crown.

Young as I was, I hasted to fulfil
The cruel dictates of my parent's will.
Of his fair deeds a distant view I took,
But turn'd the tube, upon his faults to look,
Forgot his youth, spent in his country's cause,
His care of right, his reverence to the laws;
But could with joy his years of folly trace,
Broken and old in Bathsheba's embrace;
Could follow him, where'er he stray'd from good,
And cite his sad example, whilst I trod
Paths open to deceit, and track'd with blood.
Soon docile to the secret acts of ill,
With smiles I could betray, with temper kill;
Soon in a brother could a rival view,
Watch all his acts, and all his ways pursue.
In vain for life he to the altar fled:
Ambition and revenge have certain speed.
Ev'n there, my soul, ev'n there he should have fell,
But that my interest did my rage conceal.
Doubling my crime, I promise, and deceive,
Purpose to slay, whilst swearing to forgive.
Treaties, persuasions, sighs, and tears, are vain;
With a mean lie curs'd vengeance I sustain,
Join fraud to force, and policy to power,
Till, of the destin'd fugitive secure,
In solemn state to parricide I rise,
And, as God lives, this day my brother dies.

Be witness to my tears, celestial Muse;
In vain I would forget, in vain excuse,
Fraternal blood by my direction spilt;
In vain on Joab's head transfer the guilt;
The deed was acted by the subject's hand;
The sword was pointed by the king's command.
Mine was the murder; it was mine alone:
Years of contrition must the crime atone;
Nor can my guilty soul expect relief,
But from a long sincerity of grief.

With an imperfect hand, and trembling heart,
Her love of truth superior to her art,
Already the reflecting Muse has trac'd
The mournful figures of my actions past.
The pensive goddess has already taught
How vain is hope, and how vexatious thought;
From growing childhood to declining age,
How tedious every step, how gloomy every stage.
This course of vanity almost complete,
Tir'd in the field of life, I hope retreat

In the still shades of Death: for dread and pain,
And griefs, will find their shafts elanc'd in vain,
And their points broke, retorted from the head,
Safe in the grave, and free among the dead.

Yet tell me, frightened Reason! what is death?
Blood only stopp'd, and interrupted breath;
The utmost limit of a narrow span,
And end of motion, which with life began.
As smoke that rises from the kindling fires
Is seen this moment, and the next expires;
As empty clouds by rising winds are tost,
Their fleeting forms scarce sooner found than lost;
So vanishes our state, so pass our days;
So life but opens now, and now decays;
The cradle and the tomb, alas! so nigh,
To live, is scarce distinguish'd from to die.

Cure of the miser's wish, and coward's fear,
Death only shows us what we knew was near.
With courage, therefore, view the pointed hour,
Dread not Death's anger, but expect his power:
Nor Nature's law with fruitless sorrow mourn,
But die, O mortal man! for thou wast born.

Cautious thro' doubt, by want of courage wile,
To such advice the reasoner still replies.

Yet measuring all the long-continued space,
Every successive day's repeated race,
Since Time first started from his pristine goal,
Till he had reach'd that hour wherein my soul,
Join'd to my body, swell'd the womb; I was
(At least I think so) nothing: must I pass
Again to nothing, when this vital breath,
Ceasing, consigns me o'er to rest and death?
Must the whole man, amazing thought! return
To the cold marble, or contracted urn?
And never shall those particles agree,
That were in life this individual he?
But, sever'd, must they join the general mass,
Through other forms and shapes ordain'd to pass.
Nor thought nor image kept of what he was?
Does the great Word, that gave him sense, order
That life shall never wake that sense again?
And will no power his sinking spirits save
From the dark caves of Death, and chambers of the Grave?

Each evening I behold the setting Sun,
With downward speed, into the Ocean run:
Yet the same light (pass but some fleeting hours)
Exerts his vigour, and renews his powers;
Starts the bright race again: his constant flame
Rises and sets, returning still the same.
I mark the various fury of the winds;
These neither seasons guide, nor order binds;
They now dilate, and now contract their force;
Various their speed, but endless is their course.
From his first fountain and beginning cause,
Down to the sea each brook and torrent flows:
Though sundry drops or leave or swell the stream,
The whole still runs, with equal pace, the same;
Still other waves supply the rising urns,
And the eternal flood no want of water mourns.

Why then must man obey the sad decree,
Which subjects neither sun, nor wind, nor sea?

A flower, that does with opening morn arise,
And, flourishing the day, at evening dies;
A winged eastern blast, just skimming o'er
The ocean's brow, and sinking on the shore;
A fire, whose flames through crackling stubble fl
A meteor shooting from the summer sky;
A bowl adown the bending mountain roll'd;
A bubble breaking, and a fable told;

moon-tide shadow, and a midnight dream ;
 emblems which, with semblance apt, proclaim,
 earthly course : but, O my soul ! so fast at life run off, and death for ever last ?
 his dark opinion, sure, is too confin'd ;
 whence this hope, and terror of the mind ?
 is something still, and somewhere, yet remain,
 ward or punishment, delight or pain ?
 shall our relics second birth receive ?
 p we to wake, and only die to live ?
 en the sad wife has clos'd her husband's eyes,
 pierc'd the echoing vault with doleful cries,
 the pale corpse not yet entirely dead,
 spirit only from the body fled ;
 grosser part of heat and motion void,
 e by fire, or worm, or time, destroy'd ;
 Soul, immortal substance, to remain,
 conscious of joy, and capable of pain ?
 if her acts have been directed well,
 le with her friendly clay she deign'd to dwell,
 l she with safety reach her pristine seat ?
 l her rest endless, and her bliss complete ?
 while the bury'd man we idly mourn,
 angels joy to see his better half return ?
 if she has deform'd this earthly life
 n murderous rapine, and seditious strife, x'd, repuls'd, and by those angels driven
 n the ethereal seat, and blissful Heaven, everlasting darkness must she lie,
 more unhappy, that she cannot die ?
 mid two seas, on one small point of land,
 ry'd, uncertain, and amaz'd, we stand :
 either side our thoughts incessant turn ;
 ward we dread, and looking back we mourn ;
 ing the present in this dubious haste,
 l lost ourselves betwixt the future and the past.
 here cruel doubts contending in my breast,
 reason staggering, and my hopes oppress'd,
 ce more," I said, " once more I will inquire,
 at is this little, agile, pervious fire, s fluttering motion, which we call the Mind ?
 e does she act ? and where is she confin'd ?
 ve we the power to guide her as we please ?
 ence then those evils that obstruct our ease ?
 happiness pursuc ; we fly from pain ;
 the pursuit, and yet the flight, is vain :
 d, while poor Nature labours to be blest,
 day with pleasure, and by night with rest,
 ne stronger power eludes our sickly will,
 shing our rising hope with certain ill ;
 d makes us, with reflective trouble, see at all is destin'd, which we fancy free. [mind,
 ' That Power superiour then, which rules our his decree by human prayer inclin'd ?
 ll be for sacrifice our sorrows ease ?
 d can our tears reverse his firm decrees ?
 en let Religion aid, where Reason fails ;
 row loads of incense in, to turn the scales ;
 d let the silent sanctuary show,
 hat from the babbling schools we may not know,
 ow man may shun or bear his destin'd part of woe.
 " What shall amend, or what absolve, our fate ?
 rious we hover in a mediate state,
 etwixt infinity and nothing, bounds,
 r boundless terms, whose doubtful sense confounds.
 nequal thought ! whilst all we apprehend that our hopes must rise, our sorrows end, our Creator deigns to be our friend."
 I said ; — and instant had the priests prepare he ritual sacrifice and solemn prayer.

Select from vulgar herds, with garlands gay,
 A hundred bulls ascend the sacred way.
 The artful youth proceed to form the choir ;
 They breathe the flute, or strike the vocal wire.
 The maids in comely order next advance ;
 They beat the timbrel, and instruct the dance.
 Follows the chosen tribe from Levi sprung,
 Chanting, by just return, the holy song.
 Along the choir in solemn state they past :
 — The anxious king came last.
 The sacred hymn perform'd, my promis'd vow
 I paid ; and, bowing at the altar low,
 " Father of Heaven !" I said, " and Judge of Earth !
 Whose word call'd out this universe to birth ;
 By whose kind power and influencing care
 The various creatures move, and live, and are ;
 But ceasing once that care, withdrawn that power,
 They move, (alas !) and live, and are no more :
 Omniscient Master, omnipresent King,
 To thee, to thee, my last distress I bring.
 " Thou, that canst still the raging of the seas,
 Chain up the winds, and bid the tempests cease !
 Redeem my shipwreck'd soul from raging gusts
 Of cruel passion and deceitful lusts :
 From storms of rage, and dangerous rocks of pride,
 Let thy strong hand this little vessel guide
 (It was thy hand that made it) through the tide
 Impetuous of this life : let thy command
 Direct my course, and bring me safe to land !
 " If, while this weary'd flesh draws fleeting
 breath,
 Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
 It haply be thy will, that I should know
 Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe !
 From Now, from instant Now, great Sire ! dispel
 The clouds that press my soul ; from Now reveal
 A gracious beam of light ; from Now inspire
 My tongue to sing, my hand to touch the lyre ;
 My open thought to joyous prospects raise,
 And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise.
 Or, if thy will ordains I still shall wait
 Some new hereafter, and a future state,
 Permit me strength, my weight of woe to bear,
 And raise my mind superior to my care.
 Let me, howe'er unable to explain
 The secret labyrinths of thy ways to man,
 With humble zeal confess thy awful power ;
 Still weeping hope, and wondering still adore,
 So in my conquest be thy might declar'd,
 And for thy justice be thy name rever'd."
 My prayer scarce ended, a stupendous gloom
 Darkens the air ; loud thunder shakes the dome.
 To the beginning miracle succeed
 An awful silence and religious dread.
 Sudden breaks forth a more than common day ;
 The sacred wood, which on the altar lay,
 Untouch'd, unlighted, glows —
 Ambrosial odour, such as never flows
 From Arab's gum, or the Sabæan rose,
 Does round the air evolving scents diffuse :
 The holy ground is wet with heavenly dews :
 Celestial music (such Jessides' lyre,
 Such Miriam's timbrel, would in vain require)
 Strikes to my thought through my admiring ear,
 With ecstasy too fine, and pleasure hard to bear.
 And lo ! what sees my ravish'd eye ? what feels
 My wond'ring soul ? An opening cloud reveals
 An heavenly form, embody'd, and array'd
 With robes of light. I heard. The angel said :
 T 3

" Cease, man of woman born, to hope relief
From daily trouble and continued grief ;
Thy hope of joy deliver to the wind,
Suppress thy passions, and prepare thy mind ;
Free and familiar with misfortune grow
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe ;
By weakening toil and hoary age o'ercome,
See thy decrease, and hasten to thy tomb ;
Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care ;
Send the successive ills through ages down,
And let each weeping father tell his son,
That deeper struck, and more distinctly griev'd,
He must augment the sorrows he receiv'd.

" The child to whose success thy hope is bound,
Ere thou art scarce interr'd, or he is crown'd,
To lust of arbitrary sway inclin'd,
(That cursed poison to the prince's mind !)
Shall from thy dictates and his duty rove,
And lose his great defence, his people's love ;
Ill-counsell'd, vanquish'd, fugitive, disgrac'd,
Shall mourn the fame of Jacob's strength effac'd ;
Shall sigh the king diminish'd, and the crown
With lessen'd rays descending to his son ;
Shall see the wreaths, his grandsire knew to reap
By active toil and military sweat,
Pining, incline their sickly leaves, and shed
Their falling honours from his giddy head ;
By arms or prayer unable to assuage
Domestic horror and intestine rage,
Shall from the victor and the vanquish'd fear,
From Israel's arrow, and from Judah's spear ;
Shall cast his weary'd limbs on Jordan's flood,
By brother's arms disturb'd, and stain'd with kindred-blood. [race,

" Hence labouring years shall weep their destin'd
Charg'd with ill omens, sully'd with disgrace.
Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go
Through scenes of war, and epochas of woe.
The empire, lessen'd in a parted stream,
Shall lose its course —
Indulge thy tears: the Heathen shall blaspheme ;
Judah shall fall, oppress'd by grief and shame,
And men shall from her ruins know her fame.

" New Egypts yet and second bonds remain,
A harsher Pharaoh, and a heavier chain.
Again, obedient to a dire command,
Thy captive sons shall leave the promis'd land.
Their name more low, their servitude more vile,
Shall on Euphrates' bank renew the grief of Nile.

" These pointed spires, that wound the ambient
sky,
(Inglorious change !) shall in destruction lie
Low, levell'd with the dust ; their heights unknown,
Or measur'd by their ruin. Yonder throne,
For lasting glory built, design'd the seat
Of kings for ever blest, for ever great,
Remov'd by the invader's barbarous hand,
Shall grace his triumph in a foreign land.
The tyrant shall demand yon sacred load
Of gold, and vessels set apart to God,
Then, by vile hands to common use debas'd,
Shall send them flowing round his drunken feast,
With sacrilegious taunt, and impious jest.

" Twice fourteen ages shall their way complete ;
Empires by various turns shall rise and set ;
While thy abandon'd tribes shall only know
A different master, and a change of woe,
With down-cast eye-lids, and with looks aghast,
Shall dread the future, or bewail the past.

" Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Fast by the stream where Babel's waters run ;
Their harps upon the neighbouring willows hung,
Nor joyous hymn encouraging their tongue,
Nor cheerful dance their feet ; with toil oppress'd,
Their weary'd limbs aspiring but to rest.
In the reflective stream the sighing bride,
Viewing her charms impair'd, abash'd, shall hide
Her pensive head ; and in her languid face
The bridegroom shall foresee his sickly race,
While ponderous fetters vex their close embrace.
With irksome anguish then your priests shall mourn
Their long-neglected feasts' despair'd return,
And sad oblivion of their solemn days.

Thenceforth their voices they shall only raise,
Louder to weep. By day, your frightened seers
Shall call for fountains to express their tears,
And wish their eyes were floods ; by night, from dreams

Of opening gulphs, black storms, and raging flames,
Starting amaz'd, shall to the people show
Emblems of heavenly wrath, and mystic types of woe.

" The captives, as their tyrant shall require
That they should breathe the song, and touch the lyre,

Shall say : ' Can Jacob's servile race rejoice,
Untun'd the music, and disus'd the voice ?
What can we play' (they shall discourse,) ' how sing
In foreign lands, and to a barbarous king ?
We and our fathers, from our childhood bred
To watch the cruel victor's eye, to dread
The arbitrary lash, to bend, to grieve,
(Out-cast of mortal race !) can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or gay ?
Alas ! when we have toil'd the longsome day,
The fullest bliss our hearts aspire to know
Is but some interval from active woe,
In broken rest and startling sleep to mourn,
Till morn, the tyrant, and the scourge, return.
Bred up in grief, can pleasure be our theme ?
Our endless anguish does not Nature claim !
Reason and sorrow are to us the same.
Alas ! with wild amazement we require,
If idle Folly was not Pleasure's fire ?
Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth
To grinning Laughter, and to frantic Mirth.'

" This is the series of perpetual woe,
Which thou, alas ! and thine, are born to know.
Illustrious wretch ! repine not, nor reply :
View not what Heaven ordains with Reason's eye,
Too bright the object is ; the distance is too high.
The man, who would resolve the work of Fate,
May limit number, and make crooked straight :
Stop thy inquiry then, and curb thy sense,
Nor let dust argue with Omnipotence.
'Tis God who must dispose, and man sustain,
Born to endure, forbidden to complain.
Thy sum of life must his decrees fulfil ;
What derogates from his command, is ill ;
And that alone is good which centres in his will.

" Yet, that thy labouring senses may not droop,
Lost to delight, and destitute of hope,
Remark what I, God's messenger, aver
From him, who neither can deceive nor err.
The land, at length redeem'd, shall cease to mourn
Shall from her sad captivity return.
Sion shall raise her long-dejected head,
And in her courts the law again be read.
Again the glorious temple shall arise,
And with new lustre pierce the neighbouring shades.

He promis'd seat of empire shall again
 Over the mountain, and command the plain ;
 And, from thy race distinguish'd, one shall spring,
 Greater in act than victor, more than king
 In dignity and power, sent down from heaven,
 To succour Earth. To him, To him, 'tis given,
 Passion, and care, and anguish, to destroy.
 Through him, soft peace, and plenitude of joy,
 Perpetual o'er the world redeem'd shall flow ;
 No more may man inquire, nor angel know.

"Now, Solomon ! remembering who thou art,
 Let through thy remnant life the decent part
 Go forth : be strong : with patience and with care
 Reform, and suffer : to thyself severe,
 Merciful to others, thy desires suppress'd,
 Diffus'd thy virtues ; first of men ! be best.
 By sum of duty let two words contain ;
 O may they graven in thy heart remain !)
 Be humble, and be just." The angel said :—
 With upward speed his agile wings he spread ;
 Whilst on the holy ground I prostrate lay,
 By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,
 Or to object ; at length (my mournful look Heaven-ward erect) determin'd, thus I spoke :

"Supreme, all-wise, eternal Potentate !
 O Author, sole Disposer of our fate !
 Enthron'd in light and immortality,
 Whom no man fully sees, and none can see !
 Original of beings ! Power divine !
 Since that I live, and that I think, is thine !
 O benign Creator ! let thy plastic hand
 Dispose its own effect ; let thy command
 Restore, Great Father ! thy instructed son ;
 And in my act may thy great will be done !"

THE THIEF AND THE CORDELIER,

A BALLAD :

In the Time of King John and the Abbot of Canterbury.

Who has e'er been at Paris, must needs know the Grève,
 The fatal retreat of th' unfortunate brave ;
 Where Honour and Justice most oddly contribute
 To ease heroes' pains by a halter and gibbet.
 Derry down, down, hey derry down.

There Death breaks the shackles which Force had put on, [begun ;
 And the hangman completes what the judge but left the squire of the pad, and the knight of the post, [no more cross.
 And their pains no more balk'd, and their hopes
 Derry down, &c.

Great claims are there made, and great secrets are known ; [own.
 And the king, and the law, and the thief, has his but my hearers cry out, "What a deuce dost thou say ?"
 Shut off thy reflections, and give us thy tale."
 Derry down, &c.

"Twas there then, in civil respect to harsh laws,
 And for want of false witness to back a bad cause,
 A Norman, though late, was obliged to appear ;
 And who to assist, but a grave Cordelier !
 Derry down, &c.

The squire, whose good grace was to open the scene, [begin :
 Seem'd not in great haste that the show should
 Now fitted the halter, now travers'd the cart,
 And often took leave, but was loth to depart.
 Derry down, &c.

"What frightens you thus, my good son ?" says
 the priest :
 "You murder'd, are sorry, and have been confest."
 "O father ! my sorrow will scarce save my bacon ;
 For 'twas not that I murder'd, but that I was taken."
 Derry down, &c.

"Pough ! pr'ythee ne'er trouble thy head with such fancies :
 Rely on the aid you shall have from Saint Francis :
 If the money you promis'd be brought to the chest,
 You have only to die : let the church do the rest.
 Derry down, &c.

"And what will folks say, if they see you afraid ?
 It reflects upon me, as I knew not my trade :
 Courage, friend ; for to-day is your period of sorrow ;
 And things will go better, believe me, to-morrow."
 Derry down, &c.

"To-morrow !" our hero replied, in a fright :
 "He that's hang'd before noon, ought to think of to-night." — [truss'd up,
 "Tell your beads," quoth the priest, "and be fairly
 For you surely to-night shall in Paradise sup."
 Derry down, &c.

"Alas !" quoth the squire, "howe'er sumptuous the treat,
 Parbleu ! I shall have little stomach to eat ;
 I should therefore esteem it great favour and grace,
 Would you be so kind as to go in my place."
 Derry down, &c.

"That I would," quoth the father, "and thank you to boot ;
 But our actions, you know, with our duty must suit.
 The feast I propos'd to you, I cannot taste ;
 For this night, by our order, is mark'd for a fast."
 Derry down, &c.

Then, turning about to the hangman, he said,
 "Dispatch me, I pr'ythee, this troublesome blade ;
 For thy cord and my cord both equally tie,
 And we live by the gold for which other men die."
 Derry down, &c.

A SONG.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
 You wish fair winds may waft him over.
 Alas ! what winds can happy prove,
 That bear me far from what I love ?
 Alas ! what dangers on the main
 Can equal those that I sustain,
 From slighted vows, and cold disdain ?

Be gentle, and in pity choose
 To wish the wildest tempests loose :

That, thrown again upon the coast
Where first my shipwreck'd heart was lost,
I may once more repeat my pain ;
Once more in dying notes complain
Of slighted vows, and cold disdain.

THE GARLAND.

THE pride of every grove I chose,
The violet sweet and lily fair,
The dappled pink, and blushing rose
To deck my charming Chloe's hair.

At morn the nymph vouchsaf'd to place
Upon her brow the various wreath ;
The flowers less blooming than her face,
The scent less fragrant than her breath.

The flowers she wore along the day :
And every nymph and shepherd said,
That in her hair they look'd more gay
Than glowing in their native bed.

Undrest at evening, when she found
Their odours lost, their colours past ;
She chang'd her look, and on the ground
Her garland and her eye she cast.

That eye dropt sense distinct and clear,
As any Muse's tongue could speak,
When from its lid a pearly tear
Ran trickling down her beauteous cheek.

Dissembling what I knew too well,
" My love, my life," said I, " explain
This change of humour : pr'ythee tell :
That falling tear — what does it mean ?"

She sigh'd ; she smil'd ; and, to the flowers
Pointing, the lovely moralist said :
" See, friend, in some few fleeting hours,
See yonder, what a change is made !

" Ah, me ! the blooming pride of May,
And that of Beauty, are but one :
At morn both flourish bright and gay ;
Both fade at evening, pale, and gone.

" At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung ;
The amorous youth around her bow'd :
At night her fatal knell was rung ;
I saw, and kiss'd her in her shroud.

" Such as she is, who died to-day ;
Such I, alas ! may be to-morrow :
Go, Damon, bid thy Muse display
The justice of thy Chloe's sorrow."

AN ENGLISH PADLOCK.

Miss Danaë, when fair and young,
(As Horace has divinely sung,)
Could not be kept from Jove's embrace
By doors of steel, and walls of brass.

The reason of the thing is clear,
Would Jove the naked truth aver.
Cupid was with him of the party,
And show'd himself sincere and hearty ;
For, give that whipster but his errand,
He takes my lord chief justice' warrant :
Dauntless as Death, away he walks ;
Breaks the doors open, snaps the locks ;
Searches the parlour, chamber, study ;
Nor stops till he has culprit's body.

" Since this has been authentic truth,
By age deliver'd down to youth ;
Tell us, mistaken husband, tell us,
Why so mysterious, why so jealous ?
Does the restraint, the bolt, the bar,
Make us less curious, her less fair ?
The spy, which does this treasure keep,
Does she ne'er say her prayers, nor sleep ?
Does she to no excess incline ?
Does she fly music, mirth, and wine ?
Or have not gold and flattery power
To purchase one unguarded hour ?

" Your care does further yet extend :
That spy is guarded by your friend. —
But has this friend nor eye nor heart ?
May he not feel the cruel dart,
Which, soon or late, all mortals feel ?
May he not, with too tender zeal,
Give the fair prisoner cause to see,
How much he wishes she were free ?
May he not craftily infer
The rules of friendship too severe,
Which chain him to a hated trust ;
Which make him wretched, to be just ?
And may not she, this darling she,

Youthful and healthy, flesh and blood,
Easy with him, ill us'd by thee,
Allow this logic to be good ?"

" Sir, will your questions never end ?
I trust to neither spy nor friend.
In short, I keep her from the sight
Of every human face." — " She'll write." —
" From pen and paper she's debarr'd." —
" Has she a bodkin and a card ?
She'll prick her mind." — " She will, you say :
But how shall she that mind convey ?
I keep her in one room : I lock it :
The key, (look here,) is in this pocket." —
" The key-hole, is that left ?" — " Most certain." —

" She'll thrust her letter through, sir Martin." —

" Dear, angry friend, what must be done ?
" Is there no way ?" — " There is but one.
Send her abroad : and let her see,
That all this mingled mass, which she,
Being forbidden, longs to know,
Is a dull farce, an empty show,
Powder, and pocket-glass, and bean ;
A staple of romance and lies,
False tears and real perjuries :
Where sighs and looks are bought and sold,
And love is made but to be told :
Where the fat bawd and lavish heir
The spoils of ruin'd beauty share ;
And youth, seduc'd from friends and fame,
Must give up age to want and shame.
Let her behold the frantic scene,
The women wretched, false the men :
And when, these certain ills to shun,
She would to thy embraces run ;

Receive her with extended arms,
Seem more delighted with her charms ;
Wait on her to the Park and play ;
Put on good-humour ; make her gay ;
Be to her virtues very kind ;
Be to her faults a little blind ;
Let all her ways be unconfin'd ;
And clap your padlock — on her mind."

A SONG.

If wine and music have the power
To ease the sickness of the soul,
Let Phoebus every string explore,
And Bacchus fill the sprightly bowl.
Let them their friendly aid employ,
To make my Chloe's absence light ;
And seek for pleasure, to destroy
The sorrows of this live-long night.

But she to-morrow will return :
Venus, be thou to-morrow great ;
Thy myrtles strow, thy odours burn,
And meet thy favourite nymph in state.
Kind goddess, to no other powers
Let us to-morrow's blessings own :
Thy darling loves shall guide the hours ;
And all the day be thine alone.

THE FEMALE PHAETON.

Tart's KERRY*, beautiful and young,
And wild as colt untam'd,
Bespoke the fair from whence she sprung,
With little rage inflam'd :

Inflam'd with rage at sad restraint,
Which wise mamma ordain'd ;
And sorely vex'd to play the saint,
Whilst wit and beauty reign'd :

" Shall I thumb holy books, confin'd
With Abigail's forsaken ?
Kitty's for other things design'd,
Or I am much mistaken.

" Most lady Jenny frisk about,
And visit with her cousins ?
At balls must she make all the rout,
And bring home hearts by dozens ?

" What has she better, pray, than I,
What hidden charms to boast,
That all mankind for her should die,
Whilst I am scarce a toast ?

" Dearest mamma ! for once let me,
Unchain'd, my fortune try ;
I'll have my earl as well as she,†
Or know the reason why.

* Lady Catharine Hyde, now Duchess of Queens-ry.

† The Earl of Essex married Lady Jane Hyde.

" I'll soon with Jenny's pride quit score,
Make all her lovers fall :
They'll grieve I was not loos'd before ;
She, I was loos'd at all."

Fondness prevail'd, mamma gave way ;
Kitty, at heart's desire,
Obtain'd the chariot for a day,
And set the world on fire.

THE DESPAIRING SHEPHERD.

ALEXIS shunn'd his fellow-swains,
Their rural sports, and jocund strains :
(Heaven guard us all from Cupid's bow !)
He lost his crook, he left his flocks ;
And, wandering through the lonely rocks,
He nourish'd endless woe.

The nymphs and shepherds round him came :
His grief some pity, others blame ;
The fatal cause all kindly seek :
He mingled his concern with theirs ;
He gave them back their friendly tears ;
He sigh'd, but would not speak.

Clorinda came amongst the rest ;
And she too kind concern exprest,
And ask'd the reason of his woe :
She ask'd, but with an air and mien,
That made it easily foreseen,
She fear'd too much to know.

The shepherd rais'd his mournful head ;
" And will you pardon me," he said,
" While I the cruel truth reveal ?
Which nothing from my breast should tear ;
Which never should offend your ear,
But that you bid me tell.

" 'Tis thus I rove, 'tis thus complain,
Since you appear'd upon the plain ;
You are the cause of all my care ;
Your eyes ten thousand dangers dart ;
Ten thousand torments vex my heart :
I love, and I despair."

" Too much, Alexis, I have heard :
'Tis what I thought ; 'tis what I fear'd :
And yet I pardon you," she cried :
" But you shall promise ne'er again
To breathe your vows, or speak your pain :"
He bow'd, obey'd, and dy'd.

AN ODE.

THE merchant, to secure his treasure,
Conveys it in a borrow'd name :
Euphelia serves to grace my measure ;
But Chloe is my real flame.

My softest verse, my darling lyre,
Upon Euphelia's toilet lay ;
When Chloe noted her desire,
That I should sing, that I should play.

My lyre I tune, my voice I raise,
 But with my numbers mix my sighs;
 And, whilst I sing Euphelia's praise,
 I fix my soul on Chloe's eyes.

Fair Chloe blush'd: Euphelia frown'd;
 I sung, and gaz'd; I play'd, and trembled:
 And Venus to the Loves around
 Remark'd, how ill we all dissembled.

THE LADY'S LOOKING-GLASS.

IN IMITATION OF A GREEK IDYLLIUM.

Celia and I, the other day,
 Walk'd o'er the sand-hills to the sea:
 The setting-Sun adorn'd the coast,
 His beams entire, his fierceness lost:
 And, on the surface of the deep,
 The winds lay only not asleep:
 The nymph did like the scene appear,
 Serenely pleasant, calmly fair:
 Soft fell her words, as flew the air.
 With secret joy I heard her say,
 That she would never miss one day
 A walk so fine, a sight so gay.
 But, oh the change! the winds grow high;
 Impending tempests charge the sky;

The lightning flies, the thunder roars,
 And big waves lash the frighten'd shores.
 Struck with the horror of the sight,
 She turns her head, and wings her flight:
 And, trembling, vows she'll ne'er again
 Approach the shore, or view the main.

"Once more, at least, look back," said I,
 Thyself in that large glass descry:
 When thou art in good-humour drest;
 When gentle reason rules thy breast;
 The Sun upon the calmest sea
 Appears not half so bright as thee:
 'Tis then that with delight I rove
 Upon the boundless depth of Love:
 I bless my chain; I hand my oar;
 Nor think on all I left on shore.

"But when vain doubt and groundless fear
 Do that dear foolish bosom tear;
 When the big lip and watery eye
 Tell me the rising storm is nigh;
 'Tis then, thou art yon' angry main,
 Deform'd by winds, and dash'd by rain;
 And the poor sailor, that must try
 Its fury, labours less than I.

"Shipwreck'd, in vain to land I make,
 While Love and Fate still drive me back:
 Forc'd to doat on thee thy own way,
 I chide thee first, and then obey.
 Wretched when from thee, vex'd when nigh,
 I with thee, or without thee, die."

JOHN GAY.

JOHN GAY, a well-known poet, was born at or near Barnstaple, in Devonshire, in 1688. After an education at the free-school of Barnstaple, he was sent to London, where he was put apprentice to a silk-merchant. A few years of negligent attendance on the duties of such a station procured him a separation by agreement from his master; and he not long afterwards addicted himself to poetical composition, of which the first-fruits were his "Rural Sports," published in 1711, and dedicated to Pope, then first rising in fame. In the following year, Gay, who possessed much sweetness of disposition, but was indolent and improvident, accepted an offer from the Duchess of Devonshire to reside with her as her secretary. He had leisure enough in this employment to produce the same year his poem of "Trivia, or the Art of Walking the Streets of London," which proved one of the most entertaining of its class. It was much admired; and displayed in a striking manner that talent for the description of external objects which peculiarly characterised the author.

In 1714, he made his appearance from the press on a singular occasion. Pope and Ambrose Philips had a dispute about the respective merits of their pastorals; upon which, Gay, in order to serve the desire of his friend, undertook to compose a set of pastorals, in which the manners of the country should be exhibited in their natural coarseness, with a view to proving, by a sort of caricature, the absurdity of Philips's system. The offer was accepted; and Gay, who entitled his work "The Shepherd's Week," went through the usual topics of a set of pastorals in a parody, which is often extremely humorous. But the effect was in one respect different from his intended purpose; for his pictures of rural life were so extremely natural and amusing, and intermixed with circumstances so beautiful and interesting, that his pastorals proved the most popular works of the kind in the language. This performance was dedicated to Lord Bolingbroke; and at a period Gay seems to have obtained a large share of the favour of the Tory party then in power. He was afterwards nominated secretary to the Earl of Sandwich, in his embassy to the court of Hanover; but the death of Queen Anne recalled him from his mission, and he was advised by his friends not to neglect the opportunity afforded him to ingratiate himself with the new family. He accordingly wrote a poetical epistle upon the arrival of the Princess of Wales, which compliment procured him the honour of the attendance of the prince and princess at the exhibition of a new dramatic piece.

Gay had now many friends, as well among persons of rank, as among his brother-poets; but little was yet done to raise him to a state of independence. A subscription to a collection of his poems published in 1720, cleared him a thousand pounds; and some South-sea stock presented to him by secretary Craggs, raised his hopes of fortune at one time to a considerable height; but the loss of the whole of this stock affected him so deeply as to throw him into a dangerous degree of languor, for his recovery from which he made trial of the air of Hampstead. He then wrote a tragedy called "The Captives," which was acted with applause; and in 1726, he composed the work by which he is best known, his "Fables," written professedly for the young Duke of Cumberland, and dedicated to him. In the manner of narration there is considerable ease, together with much lively and natural painting, but they will hardly stand in competition with the French fables of La Fontaine. Gay naturally expected a handsome reward for his trouble; but upon the accession of George II. nothing better was offered him than the post of gentleman-usher to the young Princess Louisa, which he regarded rather as an indignity than a favour, and accordingly declined.

The time, however, arrived when he had little occasion for the arts of a courtier to acquire a degree of public applause greater than he had hitherto experienced. In 1727, his famous "Beggar's Opera" was acted at Lincoln's-inn-fields, after having been refused at Drury-lane. To the plan of burlesquing the Italian operas by songs adapted to the most familiar tunes, he added much political satire derived from his former disappointments; and the result was a composition unique in its kind, of which the success could not with any certainty be foreseen. "It will either (said Congreve) take greatly, or be damned confoundedly." Its fate was for some time in suspense; at length it struck the nerve of public taste, and received unbounded applause. It ran through sixty-three successive representations in the metropolis, and was performed a proportional number of times at all the provincial theatres. Its songs were all learned by heart, and its actors were raised to the summit of theatric fame. This success, indeed, seems to indicate a coarseness in the national taste which could be delighted with the repetition of popular ballad-tunes, as well as a fondness for the delineation of scenes of vice and vulgarity. Gay himself was charged with the mischiefs he had thus, perhaps unintentionally, occasioned; and if the "Beggar's Opera" delighted the stage, it encountered more serious censure in graver places than has been bestowed on almost any other dramatic piece. By making a highwayman the hero, he has incurred the odium of rendering the character of a freebooter an object of popular ambition; and, by furnishing his personages with a plea for their dishonesty drawn from the universal depravity of mankind, he has been accused of sapping the foundations of all social morality. The author wrote a second part of this work, entitled "Polly," but the Lord Chamberlain refused to suffer it to be performed; and though the party in opposition so far encouraged it by their subscriptions that it proved more profitable to him than even the first part, it was a very feeble performance, and has sunk into total neglect.

Gay, in the latter part of his life, received the kind patronage of the Duke and Duchess of Queensberry, who took him into their house, and condescended to manage his pecuniary concerns. At this time he employed such intervals of health and spirits as he enjoyed, in writing his "Acis and Galatea," an opera called "Achilles," and a "Serenade." His death took place in 1732, at the early age of forty-four, in consequence of an inflammation of the bowels. He was sincerely lamented by his friends; and his memory was honoured by a monument in Westminster Abbey, and an epitaph in a strain of uncommon sensibility by Pope.

RURAL SPORTS.

A GEORGIC.

*Inscribed to Mr. Pope, 1713. **

Pandimus. NEMESIAN.

CANTO I.

You, who the sweets of rural life have known,
Despise th' ungrateful hurry of the town;
In Windsor groves your easy hours employ,
And, undisturb'd, yourself and Muse enjoy.
Thames listens to thy strains, and silent flows,
And no rude wind through rustling osiers blows,
While all his wondering nymphs around thee throng,

To hear the Syrens warble in thy song.

But I, who ne'er was blest by Fortune's hand,
Nor brighten'd ploughshares in paternal land,
Long in the noisy town have been immur'd,
Respir'd its smoke, and all its cares endur'd;
Where news and politics divide mankind,
And schemes of state involve th' uneasy mind:
Faction embroils the world; and every tongue
Is mov'd by flattery, or with scandal hung:
Friendship, for sylvan shades, the palace flies,
Where all must yield to interest's dearer ties:
Each rival Machiavel with envy burns,
And honesty forsakes them all by turns;
While calumny upon each party's thrown,
Which both promote, and both alike disown.
Fatigu'd at last, a calm retreat I chose,
And sooth'd my harass'd mind with sweet repose,
Where fields and shades, and the refreshing clime,
Inspire the sylvan song, and prompt my rhyme.
My Muse shall rove through flowery meads and plains,

And deck with rural sports her native strains;
And the same road ambitiously pursue,
Frequented by the Mantuan swain and you.

'Tis not that rural sports alone invite,
But all the grateful country breathes delight;

* This poem received many material corrections from the author, after it was first published.

Here blooming Health exerts her gentle reign,
And strings the sinews of th' industrious swain
Soon as the morning lark salutes the day,
Through dewy fields I take my frequent way,
Where I behold the farmer's early care
In the revolving labours of the year.

When the fresh Spring in all her state is crown'd,
And high luxuriant grass o'erspreads the ground,
The labourer with a bending scythe is seen,
Shaving the surface of the waving green;
Of all her native pride disrobes the land,
And meads lays waste before his sweeping hand:
While with the mounting Sun the meadow glows,
The fading herbage round he loosely throws:
But, if some sign portend a lasting shower,
Th' experienc'd swain foresees the coming hour;
His sun-burnt hands the scattering fork forsake,
And ruddy damsels ply the saving rake;
In rising hills the fragrant harvest grows,
And spreads along the field in equal rows. [rain]

Now when the height of Heaven bright Phoebus
And level rays cleave wide the thirsty plains,
When heifers seek the shade and cooling lake,
And in the middle path-way basks the snake:
O lead me, guard me, from the sultry hours,
Hide me, ye forests, in your closest bowers,
Where the tall oak his spreading arms entwines,
And with the beech a mutual shade combines;
Where flows the murmuring brook, inviting dream,
Where bordering hazle overhangs the streams,
Whose rolling current, winding round and round,
With frequent falls makes all the woods resound;
Upon the mossy couch my limbs I cast,
And e'en at noon the sweets of evening taste.

Here I peruse the Mantuan's Georgic strains,
And learn the labours of Italian swains;
In every page I see new landscapes rise,
And all Hesperia opens to my eyes;
I wander o'er the various rural toil,
And know the nature of each different soil:
This waving field is gilded o'er with corn,
That spreading trees with blushing fruit adorn:
Here I survey the purple vintage grow,
Climb round the poles, and rise in graceful row:
Now I behold the steed curvet and bound,
And paw with restless hoof the smoking ground
The dewlap'd bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in every vein;
His well-arm'd front against his rival aims,
And by the dint of war his mistress claims:

The careful insect 'midst his works I view,
 How from the flowers exhaust the fragrant dew ;
 With golden treasures load his little thighs,
 And steer his distant journey through the skies ;
 Some against hostile drones the hive defend,
 Others with sweets the waxen cells distend,
 Each in the toil his destin'd office bears,
 And in the little bulk a mighty soul appears.
 Or when the ploughman leaves the task of day
 And trudging homeward, whistles on the way ;
 When the big-udder'd cows with patience stand,
 Waiting the strokings of the damsel's hand ;
 So warbling cheers the woods ; the feather'd choir,
 To court kind slumbers, to the sprays retire :
 When no rude gale disturbs the sleeping trees,
 For aspen leaves confess the gentlest breeze ;
 Lagg'd in thought, to Neptune's bounds I stray,
 To take my farewell of the parting day ;
 As in the deep the Sun his glory hides,
 A streak of gold the sea and sky divides :
 The purple clouds their amber linings show,
 And, edg'd with flame, rolls every wave below :
 Here pensive I behold the fading light,
 And o'er the distant billow lose my sight.
 Now Night in silent state begins to rise,
 And twinkling orbs bestrow th' uncloudy skies ;
 Her borrow'd lustre growing Cynthia lends,
 And on the main a glittering path extends ;
 Millions of worlds hang in the spacious air,
 Each round their suns their annual circles steer ;
 Sweet contemplation elevates my sense,
 While I survey the works of Providence.
 Could the Muse in loftier strains rehearse
 The glorious Author of the universe,
 Who reins the winds, gives the vast ocean bounds,
 And circumscribes the floating worlds their rounds ;
 How would should overflow in songs of praise,
 And my Creator's name inspire my lays !
 As in successive course the seasons roll,
 Circling pleasures recreate the soul.
 Then genial Spring a living warmth bestows,
 And o'er the year her verdant mantle throws,
 The swelling inundation hides the grounds,
 And crystal currents glide within their bounds ;
 The sunny brood their wonted haunts forsake,
 But in the sun, and skim along the lake ;
 With frequent leap they range the shallow streams,
 Their silver coats reflect the dazzling beams.
 Now let the fisherman his toils prepare,
 And arm himself with every watery snare ;
 He hooks, his lines, peruse with careful eye,
 Increase his tackle, and his rod re-tye.
 When floating clouds their spongy fleeces drain,
 Troubling the streams with swift-descending rain ;
 And waters tumbling down the mountain's side,
 Bear the loose soil into the swelling tide ;
 When soon as vernal gales begin to rise,
 And drive the liquid burthen through the skies,
 The fisher to the neighbouring current speeds,
 Whose rapid surface purls unknown to weeds ;
 Upon a rising border of the brook
 He sits him down, and ties the treacherous hook ;
 Now expectation cheers his eager thought,
 His bosom glows with treasures yet uncaught ;
 Before his eyes a banquet seems to stand,
 Where every guest applauds his skilful hand.
 Far up the stream the twisted hair he throws,
 Which down the murmuring current gently flows ;
 Then, if at chance or hunger's powerful sway
 Directs the roving trout this fatal way,

He greedily sucks in the twining bait,
 And tugs and nibbles the fallacious meat :
 Now, happy fisherman, now twitch the line !
 How thy rod bends ! behold, the prize is thine !
 Cast on the bank, he dies with gasping pains,
 And trickling blood his silver mail distains.

You must not every worm promiscuous use,
 Judgment will tell the proper bait to choose :
 The worm that draws a long immoderate size,
 The trout abhors, and the rank morsel flies ;
 And, if too small, the naked fraud's in sight,
 And fear forbids, while hunger does invite.
 Those baits will best reward the fisher's pains,
 Whose polish'd tails a shining yellow stains :
 Cleanse them from filth, to give a tempting gloss,
 Cherish the sully'd reptile race with moss ;
 Amid the verdant bed they twine, they toil,
 And from their bodies wipe their native soil.

But when the Sun displays his glorious beams,
 And shallow rivers flow with silver streams,
 Then the deceit the scaly breed survey,
 Bask in the sun, and look into the day :
 You now a more delusive art must try,
 And tempt their hunger with the curious fly.

To frame the little animal, provide
 All the gay hues that wait on female pride ;
 Let Nature guide thee ! sometimes golden wire
 The shining bellies of the fly require ;
 The peacock's plumes thy tackle must not fail,
 Nor the dear purchase of the sable's tail.
 Each gaudy bird some slender tribute brings,
 And lends the growing insect proper wings :
 Silks of all colours must their aid impart,
 And every fur promote the fisher's art.
 So the gay lady, with excessive care,
 Borrows the pride of land, of sea, and air : [plays,
 Furs, pearls, and plumes, the glittering thing dis-
 Dazzles our eyes, and easy hearts betrays.

Mark well the various seasons of the year,
 How the succeeding insect race appear ;
 In this revolving Moon one colour reigns,
 Which in the next the fickle trout disdains.
 Oft have I seen the skilful angler try
 The various colours of the treacherous fly ;
 When he with fruitless pain hath skimm'd the brook,
 And the coy fish rejects the skipping hook,
 He shakes the boughs that on the margin grow,
 Which o'er the stream a waving forest throw ;
 When, if an insect fall, (his certain guide,)
 He gently takes him from the whirling tide ;
 Examines well his form with curious eyes,
 His gaudy vest, his wings, his horns, and size,
 Then round his hook the chosen fur he winds,
 And on the back a speckled feather binds ;
 So just the colours shine through every part,
 That Nature seems again to live in Art.
 Let not thy wary step advance too near,
 While all thy hopes hang on a single hair ;
 The new-form'd insect on the water moves,
 The speckled trout the curious snare approves ;
 Upon the curling surface let it glide,
 With natural motion from thy hand supply'd ;
 Against the stream now gently let it play,
 Now in the rapid eddy roll away,
 The scaly shoals float by, and, seiz'd with fear,
 Behold their fellows tost in thinner air :
 But soon they leap, and catch the swimming bait,
 Plunge on the hook, and share an equal fate.
 When a brisk gale against the current blows,
 And all the watery plain in wrinkles flows,

Then let the fisherman his art repeat,
 Where bubbling eddies favour the deceit,
 If an enormous salmon chance to spy
 The wanton errors of the floating fly,
 He lifts his silver gills above the flood,
 And greedily sucks in th' unfaithful food;
 Then downward plunges with the fraudulent prey,
 And bears with joy the little spoil away:
 Soon in smart pain he feels the dire mistake,
 Lashes the wave, and beats the foamy lake;
 With sudden rage he now aloft appears,
 And in his eye convulsive anguish bears;
 And now again, impatient of the wound,
 He rolls and wreathes his shining body round;
 Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide,
 The trembling fins the boiling wave divide.
 Now hope exalts the fisher's beating heart,
 Now he turns pale, and fears his dubious art;
 He views the tumbling fish with longing eyes,
 While the line stretches with th' unwieldy prize;
 Each motion humours with his steady hands,
 And one slight hair the mighty bulk commands;
 Till, tir'd at last, despoil'd of all his strength,
 The game athwart the stream unfolds his length.
 He now, with pleasure, views the gasping prize
 Gnash his sharp teeth, and roll his blood-shot eyes;
 Then draws him to the shore, with artful care,
 And lifts his nostrils in the sickening air:
 Upon the burthen'd stream he floating lies,
 Stretches his quivering fins, and gasping dies.

Would you preserve a numerous finny race;
 Let your fierce dogs the ravenous otter chase
 (Th' amphibious monster ranges all the shores, Darts through the waves, and every haunt explores):
 Or let the gin his roving steps betray,
 And save from hostile jaws the scaly prey.

I never wander where the bordering reeds
 O'erlook the muddy stream, whose tangling weeds
 Perplex the fisher; I nor choose to bear
 The thievish nightly net, nor barbed spear;
 Nor drain I ponds, the golden carp to take,
 Nor troll for pikes, dispeoplers of the lake;
 Around the steel no tortur'd worm shall twine,
 No blood of living insects stain my line.
 Let me, less cruel, cast the feather'd hook
 With pliant rod athwart the pebbled brook,
 Silent along the mazy margin stray,
 And with the fur-wrought fly delude the prey.

CANTO II.

Now, sporting Muse, draw in the flowing reins,
 Leave the clear streams awhile for sunny plains.
 Should you the various arms and toils rehearse,
 And all the fisherman adorn thy verse;
 Should you the wide encircling net display,
 And in its spacious arch enclose the sea;
 Then haul the plunging load upon the land,
 And with the sole and turbot hide the sand;
 It would extend the growing theme too long,
 And tire the reader with the watery song.

Let the keen hunter from the chase refrain,
 Nor render all the ploughman's labour vain,
 When Ceres pours out plenty from her horn,
 And clothes the fields with golden ears of corn.
 Now, now, ye reapers, to your task repair,
 Haste! save the product of the bounteous year:
 To the wide-gathering hook long furrows yield,
 And rising sheaves extend through all the field.

Yet, if for sylvan sports thy bosom glow,
 Let thy fleet greyhound urge his flying foe.
 With what delight the rapid course I view!
 How does my eye the circling race pursue!
 He snaps deceitful air with empty jaws;
 The subtle hare darts swift beneath his paws;
 She flies, he stretches, now with nimble bound
 Eager he presses on, but overshoots his ground;
 She turns, he winds, and soon regains the way.
 Then tears with gory mouth the screaming prey.
 What various sport does rural life afford!
 What unbought dainties heap the wholesome board!

Nor less the spaniel, skilful to betray,
 Rewards the fowler with the feather'd prey.
 Soon as the labouring horse, with swelling veins,
 Hath safely hous'd the farmer's doubtful gains,
 To sweet repast th' unwary partridge flies,
 With joy amid the scatter'd harvest lies;
 Wandering in plenty, danger he forgets,
 Nor dreads the slavery of entangling nets.
 The subtle dog scours with sagacious nose
 Along the field, and snuffs each breeze that blows;
 Against the wind he takes his prudent way,
 While the strong gale directs him to the prey;
 Now the warm scent assures the covey near,
 He treads with caution, and he points with fear;
 Then (lest some sentry-fowl the fraud decry,
 And bid his fellows from the danger fly)
 Close to the ground in expectation lies,
 Till in the snare the fluttering covey rise.
 Soon as the blushing light begins to spread,
 And glancing Phœbus gilds the mountain's head,
 His early flight th' ill-fated partridge takes,
 And quits the friendly shelter of the brakes;
 Or, when the Sun casts a declining ray,
 And drives his chariot down the western way,
 Let your obsequious ranger search around,
 Where yellow stubble withers on the ground;
 Nor will the roving spy direct in vain,
 But numerous coveys gratify thy pain.
 When the meridian Sun contracts the shade,
 And frisking heifers seek the cooling glade;
 Or when the country floats with sudden rains,
 Or driving mists deface the moisten'd plains:
 In vain his toils th' unskilful fowler tries,
 While in thick woods the feeding partridge lies.

Nor must the sporting verse the gun forbear,
 But what's the fowler's be the Muse's care.
 See how the well-taught pointer leads the way;
 The scent grows warm; he stops: he springs prey;

The fluttering coveys from the stubble rise,
 And on swift wing divide the sounding skies;
 The scattering lead pursues the certain sight,
 And death in thunder overtakes their flight.
 Cool breathes the morning air, and Winter's hand
 Spreads wide her hoary mantle o'er the land;
 Now to the copse thy lesser spaniel take,
 Teach him to range the ditch, and force the brake.
 Not closest coverts can protect the game:
 Hark! the dog opens; take thy certain aim.
 The woodcock flutters; how he wavering flies!
 The wood resounds: he wheels, he drops, he dies!

The towering hawk let future poets sing,
 Who terror bears upon his soaring wing:
 Let them on high the frightened hern survey,
 And lofty numbers point their airy fray.
 Nor shall the mounting lark the Muse detain,
 That greets the morning with his early strain;

Then, 'midst his song, the twinkling glass betrays,
While from each angle flash the glancing rays,
And in the Sun the transient colours blaze,
Side lures the little warbler from the skies :
The light-ennamour'd bird deluded dies.

But still the chase, a pleasing task, remains ;
The bound must open in these rural strains.
When as Aurora drives away the night,
And edges eastern clouds with rosy light,
The beauteous huntsman, with the cheerful horn,
Announces the dogs, and greets the dappled morn ;
The jocund thunder wakes th' enliven'd hounds,
They rouse from sleep, and answer sounds for sounds ;

Side through the furzy field their rout they take,
Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake :
The flying game their smoking nostrils trace,
The bounding hedge obstructs their eager pace ;
The distant mountains echo from afar,
And hanging woods resound the flying war :
The tuneful noise the sprightly courser hears,
As the green turf, and pricks his trembling ears ;
The slacken'd rein now gives him all his speed,
He flies the rapid ground beneath the steed ;
The dales, and forests, far behind remain,
While the warm scent draws on the deep-mouth'd train.

Where shall the trembling hare a shelter find ?
What death advances in each gust of wind !
With stratagems and doubling wiles she tries,
With circling turns, and now at large she flies ;
But spent at last, she pants, and heaves for breath,
And lays her down, and waits devouring death.
But stay, adventurous Muse ! hast thou the force
To wind the twisted horn, to guide the horse ?
To keep thy seat unmov'd, hast thou the skill,
To scale the high gate, and down the headlong hill ?
Or hast thou the stag's laborious chase direct,
To detect the strong fox through all his arts detect ?
Or theme demands a more experienc'd lay :
O mighty hunters ! spare this weak essay.

O happy plains, remote from war's alarms,
And all the ravages of hostile arms !
O happy shepherds, who, secure from fear,
In open downs preserve your fleecy care !
The spacious barns groan with increasing store,
And whirling flails disjoint the cracking floor !
The barbarous soldier, bent on cruel spoil,
Leads desolation o'er your fertile soil ;
The trampling steed lays waste the ripen'd grain,
The crackling fires devour the promis'd gain ;
The flaming beacons cast their blaze afar,
The dreadful signal of invasive war ;
The trumpet's clangour wounds the mother's ear,
And calls the lover from his swooning fair.
What happiness the rural maid attends,
In cheerful labour while each day she spends !
How gratefully receives what Heaven has sent,
And rich in poverty, enjoys content.
Such happiness, and such unblemish'd fame,
(O'er glad the bosom of the courtly dame) :
She never feels the spleen's imagin'd pains,
Nor melancholy stagnates in her veins ;
She never loses life in thoughtless ease,
Nor on the velvet couch invites disease ;
Her home-spun dress in simple neatness lies,
And for no glaring equipage she sighs :
Her reputation, which is all her boast,
A malicious visit ne'er was lost ;

No midnight masquerade her beauty wears,
And health, not paint, the fading bloom repairs.
If love's soft passion in her bosom reign,
An equal passion warms her happy swain ;
No homebred jars her quiet state control,
Nor watchful jealousy torments her soul ;
With secret joy she sees her little race
Hang on her breast, and her small cottage grace ;
The fleecy ball their busy fingers cull,
Or from the spindle draw the lengthening wool :
Thus flow her hours with constant peace of mind,
Till age the latest thread of life unwind.

Ye happy fields, unknown to noise and strife,
The kind rewarders of industrious life ;
Ye shady woods, where once I us'd to rove,
Alike indulgent to the Muse and Love ;
Ye murmuring streams that in meanders roll,
The sweet composers of the pensive soul !
Farewell ! — The city calls me from your bowers :
Farewell, amusing thoughts, and peaceful hours !

TRIVIA ;

OR,

THE ART OF WALKING THE STREETS OF LONDON.

IN THREE BOOKS.

Quo te Mœri pedes ? an, quo via ducit, in urbem ?
VIRG.

Book I.

Of the Implements for Walking the Streets, and Signs of the Weather.

THROUGH winter streets to steer your course aright,
How to walk clean by day, and safe by night ;
How jostling crowds with prudence to decline,
When to assert the wall, and when resign,
I sing : thou, Trivia, goddess, aid my song,
Through spacious streets conduct thy bard along ;
By thee transported, I securely stray
Where winding alleys lead the doubtful way,
The silent court and opening square explore,
And long perplexing lanes untrod before.
To pave thy realm, and smooth the broken ways,
Earth from her womb a flinty tribute pays ;
For thee the sturdy pavior thumps the ground,
Whilst every stroke his labouring lungs resound ;
For thee the scavenger bids kennels glide
Within their bounds, and heaps of dirt subside.
My youthful bosom burns with thirst of fame,
From the great theme to build a glorious name,
To tread in paths to ancient bards unknown,
And bind my temples with a civic crown :
But more my country's love demands my lays ;
My country's be the profit, mine the praise !

When the black youth at chosen stands rejoice,
And "clean your shoes" resounds from every voice ;
When late their miry sides stage-coaches show,
And their stiff horses through the town move slow ;
When all the Mall in leafy ruin lies,
And damsels first renew their oyster-cries :
Then let the prudent walker shoes provide,
Not of the Spanish or Morocco hide ;
The wooden heel may raise the dancer's bound,
And with the scallop'd top his step be crown'd :

Let firm, well hammer'd soles protect thy feet
Thro' freezing snows, and rains, and soaking sleet.
Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,
Each stone will wrench th' unwary step aside;
The sudden turn may stretch the swelling vein,
Thy cracking joint unhinge, or ankle sprain;
And, when too short the modish shoes are worn,
You'll judge the seasons by your shooting corn.

Nor should it prove thy less important care,
To choose a proper coat for winter's wear.
Now in thy trunk thy D'Oily habit fold,
The silken drugget ill can fence the cold;
The frieze's spongy nap is soak'd with rain,
And showers soon drench the camlet's cockled grain;
True Witney * broad-cloth, with its shag unshorn,
Unpierc'd is in the lasting tempest worn:
Be this the horseman's fence, for who would wear
Amid the town the spoils of Russia's bear?
Within the roquelaure's clasp thy hands are pent,
Hands, that, stretch'd forth, invading harms prevent.
Let the loop'd bavaroy the fop embrace,
Or his deep cloke bespatter'd o'er with lace.
That garment best the winter's rage defends,
Whose ample form without one plait depends;
By various names † in various counties known,
Yet held in all the true surtout alone;
Be thine of kersey firm, though small the cost,
Then brave unwet the rain, unchill'd the frost.

If the strong cane support thy walking hand,
Chairmen no longer shall the wall command;
Ev'n sturdy carmen shall thy nod obey,
And rattling coaches stop to make thee way:
This shall direct thy cautious tread aright,
Though not one glaring lamp enliven night.
Let beaux their canes, with amber tipt, produce;
Be theirs for empty show, but thine for use.
In gilded chariots while they loll at ease,
And lazily ensure a life's disease;
While softer chairs the tawdry load convey
To court, to White's ‡, assemblies, or the play;
Rosy-complexion'd Health thy steps attends,
And exercise thy lasting youth defends.
Imprudent men Heaven's choicest gifts profane:
Thus some beneath their arm support the cane;
The dirty point oft checks the careless pace,
And miry spots the clean cravat disgrace.
Oh! may I never such misfortune meet!

May no such vicious walkers crowd the street!
May Providence o'ershade me with her wings,
While the bold Muse experienc'd danger sings!

Not that I wander from my native home,
And (tempting perils) foreign cities roam.
Let Paris be the theme of Gallia's Muse,
Where slavery treads the streets in wooden shoes.
Nor do I rove in Belgia's frozen clime,
And teach the clumsy boor to skate in rhyme;
Where, if the warmer clouds in rain descend,
No miry ways industrious steps offend;
The rushing flood from sloping pavements pours,
And blackens the canals with dirty showers.
Let others Naples' smoother streets rehearse,
And with proud Roman structures grace their verse,
Where frequent murders wake the night with groans,
And blood in purple torrents dyes the stones.
Nor shall the Muse through narrow Venice stray,
Where gondolas their painted oars display.

* A town in Oxfordshire.

† A Joseph, wrap-rascal, &c.

‡ A chocolate house in St. James's street.

O happy streets! to rumbling wheels unknown,
No carts, no coaches, shake the floating town!
Thus was of old Britannia's city bless'd,
Ere pride and luxury her sons possess'd;
Coaches and chariots yet unfashion'd lay,
Nor late-invented chairs perplex'd the way:
Then the proud lady tripp'd along the town,
And tuck'd-up petticoats secur'd her gown;
Her rosy cheek with distant visits glow'd,
And exercise unartful charms bestow'd:
But since in braided gold her foot is bound,
And a long training mantua sweeps the ground,
Her shoe disdains the street; the lazy fair,
With narrow step, affects a limping air.
Now gaudy pride corrupts the lavish age,
And the streets flame with glaring equipage;
The tricking gamester insolently rides,
With Loves and Graces on his chariot sides;
In saucy state the griping broker sits,
And laughs at honesty and trudging wits.
For you, O honest men! these useful lays
The Muse prepares; I seek no other praise.

When sleep is first disturb'd by morning cries,
From sure prognostics learn to know the skies,
Lest you of rheums and coughs at night complain
Surpris'd in dreary fogs, or driving rain.
When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy worst wig, long us'd to storms, be worn;
This knows the powder'd footman, and with care
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair.
Be thou for every season justly drest,
Nor brave the piercing frost with open breast;
And, when the bursting clouds a deluge pour,
Let thy surtout defend the drenching shower.

The changing weather certain signs reveal
Ere Winter sheds her snow, or frosts congeal,
You'll see the coals in brighter flame aspire,
And sulphur tinge with blue the rising fire;
Your tender shins the scorching heat decline,
And at the dearth of coals the poor repine;
Before her kitchen hearth, the nodding dame,
In flannel mantle wrapt, enjoys the flame:
Hovering, upon her feeble knees she bends,
And all around the grateful warmth ascends.

Nor do less certain signs the town advise
Of milder weather and serener skies.
The ladies, gaily dress'd, the Mall adorn
With various dyes, and paint the sunny morn.
The wanton fawns with frisking pleasure range,
And chirping sparrows greet the welcome change.
Not that their minds with greater skill are frug
Endued by instinct, or by reason taught:
The seasons operate on every breast;
'Tis hence the fawns are brisk, and ladies dress'd
When on his box the nodding coachman snores
And dreams of fancy'd fares; when tavern doors
The chairmen idly crowd; then ne'er refuse
To trust thy busy steps in thinner shoes.

But when the swinging signs your ears offend
With creaking noise, then rainy floods impend
Soon shall the kennels swell with rapid streams
And rush in muddy torrents to the Thames.
The bookseller, whose shop's an open square,
Foresees the tempest, and with early care,
Of learning strips the rails; the rowing crew,
To tempt a fare, clothe all their tilts in blue;

* Haud equidem credo, quia sit divinitus illi
Ingenium, aut rerum sato prudentia major.

VING. GAY

On bosier's poles depending stockings ty'd,
 Lag with the slacken'd gale from side to side;
 Church-monuments foretell the changing air,
 When Niobe dissolves into a tear, [sounds
 And sweats with sacred grief; you'll hear the Whistling winds, ere kennels break their bounds;
 Ingrateful odours common shores diffuse,
 And dropping vaults distil unwholesome dew,
 Ere the tiles rattle with the smoking shower,
 And spouts on heedless men their torrents pour.

All superstition from thy breast repel:
 At credulous boys and prattling nurses tell,
 Now, if the festival of Paul be clear,
 Plenty from liberal horn shall strew the year;
 When the dark skies dissolve in snow or rain,
 The labouring hind shall yoke the steer in vain;
 Not, if the threatening winds in tempests roar,
 When War shall bathe her wasteful sword in gore.
 Now, if on Swithin's feast the welkin lours,
 And every penthouse streams with hasty showers,
 Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces drain,
 And wash the pavements with incessant rain.
 Not such vulgar tales debase thy mind;
 For Paul nor Swithin rule the clouds and wind.
 If you the precepts of the Muse despise,
 And slight the faithful warning of the skies,
 Ere long you'll see, when all the town's afloat,
 Trapt in th' embraces of a kersey coat,
 A double-bottom'd frieze; their guarded feet
 Eke the muddy dangers of the street;
 While you, with hat unloop'd, the fury dread
 Of spouts high streaming, and with cautious tread
 Seek every dashing pool, or idly stop,
 To seek the kind protection of a shop.
 At business summons; now with hasty scud
 You jostle for the wall; the spatter'd mud
 Hides all thy hose behind; in vain you scour,
 By wig, alas! uncurl'd, admits the shower.

For fierce Alecto's snaky tresses fell,
 When Orpheus charm'd the rigorous powers of Hell;
 Or thus hung Glaucus' beard, with briny dew
 Dotted and straight, when first his amorous view
 Spris'd the bathing fair; the frightened maid
 Stands a rock, transform'd by Circe's aid.
 Good housewives all the winter's rage despise,
 Offended by the riding-hood's disguise;
 And, underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
 Go through the wet on clinking pattens tread.
 At Persian dames th' umbrella's ribs display,
 To guard their beauties from the sunny ray;
 And sweating slaves support the shady load,
 When eastern monarchs show their state abroad:
 Britain in winter only knows its aid,
 To guard from chilly showers the walking maid.
 But, O! forget not, Muse, the patten's praise,
 That female implement shall grace thy lays;
 From what art divine th' invention came,
 And from its origin deduce its name.

Where Lincoln wide extends her fenny soil,
 A goodly yeoman liv'd, grown white with toil;
 His only daughter bless'd his nuptial bed,
 Who from her infant hand the poultry fed:
 Martha (her careful mother's name) she bore,
 But now her careful mother was no more.
 First on her father's knee the damsel play'd,
 And fondly call'd the smiling maid;
 As years increas'd, her ruddy beauty grew,
 And Patty's fame o'er all the village flew.
 Soon as the grey-ey'd morning streaks the skies,
 And in the doubtful day the woodcock flies,

Her cleanly pail the pretty housewife bears,
 And singing to the distant field repairs;
 And, when the plains with evening dew are spread,
 The milky burthen smokes upon her head,
 Deep through a miry lane she pick'd her way,
 Above her ancle rose the chalky clay.

Vulcan by chance the bloomy maiden spies,
 With innocence and beauty in her eyes:
 He saw, he lov'd; for yet he ne'er had known
 Sweet innocence and beauty meet in one.
 Ah, Mulciber! recall thy nuptial vows,
 Think on the graces of thy Paphian spouse;
 Think how her eyes dart inexhausted charms,
 And canst thou leave her bed for Patty's arms?

The Lemnian power forsakes the realms above,
 His bosom glowing with terrestrial love:
 Far in the lane a lonely hut he found;
 No tenant ventur'd on th' unwholesome ground.
 Here smokes his forge, he bares his sinewy arm,
 And early strokes the sounding anvil warm:
 Around his shop the steely sparkles flew,
 As for the steed he shap'd the bending shoe.

When blue-ey'd Patty near his window came,
 His anvil rests, his forge forgets to flame.
 To hear his soothing tales, she feigns delays;
 What woman can resist the force of praise?

At first she coyly every kiss withstood,
 And all her cheek was flush'd with modest blood;
 With headless nails he now surrounds her shoes,
 To save her steps from rains and piercing dew.
 She lik'd his soothing tales, his presents wore,
 And granted kisses, but would grant no more.
 Yet Winter chill'd her feet, with cold she pines,
 And on her cheek the fading rose declines;
 No more her humid eyes their lustre boast,
 And in hoarse sounds her melting voice is lost.

Thus Vulcan saw, and in his heavenly thought
 A new machine mechanic fancy wrought,
 Above the mire her shelter'd steps to raise,
 And bear her safely through the wintry ways.
 Straight the new engine on his anvil glows,
 And the pale virgin on the patten rose.
 No more her lungs are shook with dropping rheuma,
 And on her cheek reviving beauty blooms.
 The god obtain'd his suit: though flattery fail,
 Presents with female virtue must prevail.
 The patten now supports each frugal dame,
 Which from the blue-ey'd Patty takes the name.

BOOK II.

Of walking the Streets by Day.

Thus far the Muse has trac'd, in useful lays,
 The proper implements for wintry ways;
 Has taught the walker, with judicious eyes,
 To read the various warnings of the skies:
 Now venture, Muse, from home to range the town,
 And for the public safety risk thy own.

For ease and for dispatch, the morning's best;
 No tides of passengers the streets molest.
 You'll see a draggled damsel here and there,
 From Billingsgate her fishy traffic bear;
 On doors the sallow milk-maid chalks her gains;
 Ah! how unlike the milk-maid of the plains!
 Before proud gates attending asses bray,
 Or arrogant with solemn pace the way;
 These grave physicians with their milky cheer
 The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair;
 U

Here rows of drummers stand in martial file,
And with their vellum thunder shake the pile,
To greet the new-made bride. Are sounds like these
The proper prelude to a state of peace?

Now Industry awakes her busy sons;
Full-charg'd with news the breathless hawker runs:
Shops open, coaches roll, carts shake the ground,
And all the streets with passing cries resound.

If cloth'd in black you tread the busy town,
Or if distinguish'd by the reverend gown,
Three trades avoid: oft in the mingling press
The barber's apron soils the sable dress;
Shun the perfumer's touch with cautious eye,
Nor let the baker's step advance too nigh.
Ye walkers too, that youthful colours wear,
Three sully'ing trades avoid with equal care:
The little chimney-sweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng;
When small-coal murmurs in the hoarser throat,
From smutty dangers guard thy threaten'd coat;
The dustman's cart offends thy clothes and eyes,
When through the street a cloud of ashes flies;
But, whether black or lighter dyes are worn,
The chandler's basket, on his shoulder borne,
With tallow spots thy coat; resign the way,
To shun the surly butcher's greasy tray,
Butchers, whose hands are dy'd with blood's foul stain,

And always foremost in the hangman's train.

Let due civilities be strictly paid:
The wall surrender to the hooded maid;
Nor let thy sturdy elbow's hasty rage
Jostle the feeble steps of trembling age:
And when the porter bends beneath his load,
And pants for breath, clear thou the crowded road.
But, above all, the groping blind direct;
And from the pressing throng the lame protect.

You'll sometimes meet a fop, of nicest tread,
Whose mantling peruke veils his empty head;
At every step he dreads the wall to lose,
And risks, to save a coach, his red-heel'd shoes;
Him, like the miller, pass with caution by,
Lest from his shoulder clouds of powder fly.
But, when the bully, with assuming pace,
Cocks his broad hat, edg'd round with tarnish'd lace,

Yield not the way, defy his strutting pride,
And thrust him to the muddy kennel's side;
He never turns again, nor dares oppose,
But mutters coward curses as he goes.

If drawn by business to a street unknown,
Let the sworn porter point thee through the town;
Be sure observe the signs, for signs remain,
Like faithful landmarks, to the walking train.
Seek not from 'prentices to learn the way,
Those fabling boys will turn thy steps astray;
Ask the grave tradesman to direct thee right,
He ne'er deceives — but when he profits by't.

Where fam'd St. Giles's ancient limits spread,
An enrail'd column rears its lofty head,
Here to seven streets seven dials count the day,
And from each other catch the circling ray.
Here oft the peasant, with inquiring face,
Bewilder'd, trudges on from place to place;
He dwells on every sign with stupid gaze,
Enters the narrow alley's doubtful maze,
Tries every winding court and street in vain,
And doubles o'er his weary steps again.
Thus hardy Theseus with intrepid feet
Travers'd the dangerous labyrinth.

But still the wandering passes forc'd his stay,
Till Ariadne's clue unwinds the way.
But do not thou, like that bold chief, confide
Thy venturous footsteps to a female guide:
She'll lead thee with delusive smiles along,
Dive in thy fob, and drop thee in the throng.

When waggish boys the stunted besom ply,
To rid the slabby pavement, pass not by
Ere thou hast held their hands; some heedless fir
Will overspread thy calves with spattering dirt.
Where porters' hogsheads roll from carts aslope,
Or brewers down steep cellars stretch the rope,
Where counted billets are by carmen tost,
Stay thy rash step, and walk without the post.

What though the gathering mire thy feet be smear,

The voice of Industry is always near.

Hark! the boy calls thee to his destin'd stand,
And the shoe shines beneath his oily hand.
Here let the Muse, fatigued amid the throng,
Adorn her precepts with digressive song;
Of shirtless youths the secret rise to trace,
And show the parent of the sable race. [change]

Like mortal man, great Jove (grown fond of
Of old was wont this nether world to range,
To seek amours; the vice the monarch lov'd
Soon through the wide ethereal court improv'd
And ev'n the proudest goddess, now and then,
Would lodge a night among the sons of men:
To vulgar deities descends the fashion,
Each, like her betters, had her earthly passion.
Then Cloacina * (goddess of the tide,
Whose sable streams beneath the city glide,)
Indulg'd the modish flame; the town she rov'd.
A mortal scavenger she saw, she lov'd;
The muddy spots that dry'd upon his face,
Like female patches, heighten'd every grace:
She gaz'd; she sigh'd; (for love can beauties spy
In what seem faults to every common eye.)

Now had the watchman walk'd his second round
When Cloacina hears the rumbling sound
Of her brown lover's cart (for well she knows
That pleasing thunder): swift the goddess rose,
And through the streets pursu'd the distant noise.
Her bosom panting with expected joys,
With the night-wandering harlot's airs she past
Brush'd near his side, and wanton glances cast:
In the black form of cinder-wench she came,
When love, the hour, the place, had banish'd shame.
To the dark alley arm in arm they move:
O may no link-boy interrupt their love!

When the pale Moon had nine times fill'd space,

The pregnant goddess (cautious of disgrace)
Descends to Earth; but sought no midwife's aid,
Nor 'midst her anguish to Lucina pray'd;
No cheerful gossip wish'd the mother joy,
Alone, beneath a bulk, she dropt the boy. [press]

The child, through various risks in years
At first, a beggar's brat, compassion mov'd;
His infant tongue soon learnt the canting art.
Knew all the prayers and whines to touch heart.

* Cloacina was a goddess, whose image Tar-
(a king of the Sabines) found in the common sewer, and, not knowing what goddess it was, he called Cloacina, from the place in which it was found.
and paid to it divine honours. Lactant. l. 30. Mura-
Fel. Oct. p. 232.

Oh, happy unown'd youths! your limbs can bear
The scorching dog-star, and the winter's air;
While the rich infant, nurs'd with care and pain,
Thirsts with each heat, and coughs with every rain!

The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had sought his sufferings to redress.
He prays the gods to take the fondling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art
Practis'd in streets: the gods her suit allow'd,
And made him useful to the walking crowd;
To cleanse the miry feet, and o'er the shoe,
With nimble skill, the glossy black renew.

Each power contributes to relieve the poor:
With the strong bristles of the mighty boar
Venus forms his brush; the god of day
A tripod gives, amid the crowded way
To raise the dirty foot, and ease his toil;
And Neptune fills his vase with fetid oil
Rest from th' enormous whale; the god of fire,
From whose dominions smoky clouds aspire,
Among these generous presents joins his part,
And aids with soot the new japanning art.
Less'd she receives the gifts; she downward glides,
Lights in Fleet-ditch, and shoots beneath the tides.

Now dawns the morn, the sturdy lad awakes,
Escapes from his stall, his tangled hair he shakes;
Then, leaning o'er the rails, he musing stood,
And view'd below the black canal of mud,
Where common shores a lulling murmur keep,
Those torrents rush from Holborn's fatal steep:
Passive through idleness, tears flow'd apace,
Which eas'd his loaded heart, and wash'd his face!
At length he sighing cry'd, "That boy was blest,
Whose infant lips have drain'd a mother's breast;
But happier far are those (if such be known)
Whom both a father and a mother own:
Not I, alas! hard Fortune's utmost scorn,
Who ne'er knew parent, was an orphan born!
Some boys are rich by birth beyond all wants,
Lov'd by uncles, and kind good old aunts; [bear,
When time comes round, a Christmas-box they
And one day makes them rich for all the year.
Had I the precepts of a father learn'd,
I might then the coachman's fare had earn'd,
Or lesser boys can drive; I thirsty stand,
And see the double flaggon charge their hand,
And them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain."

While thus he fervent prays, the heaving tide,
In widen'd circles, beats on either side;
The goddess rose amid the inmost round,
With wither'd turnip-tops her temples crown'd;
Now reach'd her dripping tresses, lank, and black
As the smooth jet, or glossy raven's back;
Around her waist a circling eel was twin'd,
Which bound her robe that hung in rags behind.
Low, beckoning to the boy, she thus begun:

Thy prayers are granted; weep no more, my son:
To thrive. At some frequented corner stand;
Thy brush I give thee, grasp it in thy hand;
Temper the soot within this vase of oil,
And let the little tripod aid thy toil.
In this, methinks, I see the walking crew,
At thy request, support the miry shoe;
The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket glingling halfpence sound."
The goddess plunges swift beneath the flood,
And dashes all around her showers of mud:
The youth straight chose his post; the labour ply'd
Where branching streets from Charing-Cross divide;

His treble voice resounds along the Meuse,
And Whitehall echoes — "Clean your honour's shoes!"

Like the sweet ballad, this amusing lay
Too long detains the walker on his way;
While he attends, new dangers round him throng;
The busy city asks instructive song.

Where, elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the board the perjurd head is bow'd,
Betimes retreat; here, thick as hailstones pour,
Turnips and half-hatch'd eggs (a mingled shower)
Among the rabble rain: some random throw
May with the trickling yolk thy cheek o'erflow.

Though expedition bids, yet never stray
Where no rang'd posts defend the rugged way.
Here laden carts with thundering waggons meet,
Wheels clash with wheels, and bar the narrow street;

The lashing whip resounds, the horses strain,
And blood in anguish bursts the swelling vein.
O barbarous men! your cruel breasts assuage;
Why vent ye on the generous steed your rage?
Does not his service earn your daily bread?
Your wives, your children, by his labours fed!
If, as the Samian taught, the soul revives,
And, shifting seats, in other bodies lives;
Severe shall be the brutal coachman's change,
Doom'd in a hackney horse the town to range;
Carmen, transform'd, the groaning load shall draw,
Whom other tyrants with the lash shall awe.
Who would of Watling-street the dangers share,
When the broad pavement of Cheapside is near?
Or who that rugged street * would traverse o'er,
That stretches, O Fleet-ditch, from thy black shore
To the Tower's moated walls? Here steams ascend
That, in mix'd fumes, the wrinkled nose offend.
Where chandlers' cauldrons boil; where fishy prey
Hide the wet stall, long absent from the sea;
And where the cleaver chops the heifer's spoil,
And where huge hogsheads sweat with trainy oil;
Thy breathing nostril hold; but how shall I
Pass, where in piles Carnavian † cheeses lie;
Cheese, that the table's closing rites denies,
And bids me with th' unwilling chaplain rise?

O bear me to the paths of fair Pall-Mall!
Safe are thy pavements, grateful is thy smell!
At distance rolls along the gilded coach,
Nor sturdy carmen on thy walks encroach;
No lets would bar thy ways were chairs deny'd,
The soft supports of laziness and pride:
Shops breathe perfumes, through sashes ribbons glow,
The mutual arms of ladies and the beau.
Yet still ev'n here, when rains the passage hide,
Oft the loose stone spirts up a muddy tide
Beneath thy careless foot; and from on high,
Where masons mount the ladder, fragments fly,
Mortar and crumbled lime in showers descend,
And o'er thy head destructive tiles impend.

But sometimes let me leave the noisy roads,
And silent wander in the close abodes,
Where wheels ne'er shake the ground; there pensive
stray,

In studious thought, the long uncrowded way.
Here I remark each walker's different face,
And in their look their various business trace.
The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares;

* Thames-street.

† Cheshire, anciently so called.

Bent on some mortgage (to avoid reproach)
He seeks bye-streets, and saves th' expensive coach.
Soft, at low doors, old letchers tap their cane,
For fair recluse, who travels Drury-lane;
Here roams uncomb'd the lavish rake, to shun
His Fleet-street draper's everlasting dun.

Careful observers, studious of the town,
Shun the misfortunes that disgrace the clown;
Untempted, they condemn the juggler's feats,
Pass by the Meuse, nor try the thimble's cheats *;
When drays bound high, they never cross behind,
Where bubbling yeast is blown by gusts of wind:
And when up Ludgate-hill huge carts move slow,
Far from the straining steeds securely go,
Whose dashing hoofs behind them fling the mire,
And mark with muddy blots the gazing 'squire.
The Parthian thus his javelin backward throws,
And as he flies infests pursuing foes.

The thoughtless wits shall frequent forfeits pay,
Who 'gainst the sentry's box discharge their tea.
Do thou some court or secret corner seek,
Nor flush with shame the passing virgin's cheek.

Yet let me not descend to trivial song,
Nor vulgar circumstance my verse prolong.
Why should I teach the maid, when torrents pour,
Her head to shelter from the sudden shower?
Nature will best her ready hand inform,
With her spread petticoat to fence the storm.
Does not each walker know the warning sign,
When wisps of straw depend upon the twine
Cross the close street, that then the paver's art
Renews the ways, deny'd to coach and cart?
Who knows not that the coachman lashing by
Oft with his flourish cuts the heedless eye;
And when he takes his stand, to wait a fare,
His horses' foreheads shun the Winter's air?
Nor will I roam where Summer's sultry rays
Parch the dry ground, and spread with dust the ways;

With whirling gusts the rapid atoms rise,
Smoke o'er the pavement, and involve the skies.

Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind
Shall crust the slabby mire, and kennels bind;
She bids the snow descend in flaky sheets,
And in her hoary mantle clothe the streets.
Let not the virgin tread these slippery roads,
The gathering fleece the hollow patten loads;
But if thy footsteps slide with clotted frost,
Strike off the breaking balls against the post.
On silent wheels the passing coaches roll;
Oft look behind, and ward the threatening pole.
In harden'd orbs the school-boy moulds the snow,
'To mark the coachman with a dext'rous throw.
Why do ye, boys, the kennel's surface spread,
To tempt with faithless path the matron's tread?
How can you laugh to see the damsel spurn,
Sink in your frauds, and her green stocking mourn?
At White's the harness'd chairman idly stands,
And swings around his waist his tingling hands;
The sempstress speeds to Change with red-tipt nose;
The Belgian stove beneath her footstool glows;
In half-whipt muslin needles useless lie,
And shuttle-cocks across the counter fly. [prove,
These sports warm harmless; why then will ye
Deluded maids, the dangerous flame of love?

Where Covent-garden's famous temple stands,
That boasts the work of Jones' immortal hands;

* A cheat commonly practised in the streets with three thimbles and a little ball.

Columns with plain magnificence appear,
And graceful porches lead along the square:
Here oft my course I bend; when, lo! from far
I spy the furies of the foot-ball war:
The 'prentice quits his shop, to join the crew,
Increasing crowds the flying game pursue.
Thus, as you roll the ball o'er snowy ground,
The gathering globe augments with every round.
But whither shall I run? the throng draws nigh,
The ball now skims the street, now soars on high;
The dext'rous glazier strong returns the bound,
And jingling sashes on the penthouse sound.

O, roving Muse! recall that wondrous year,
When Winter reign'd in bleak Britannia's air;
When hoary Thames, with frosted osiers crown'd,
Was three long moons in icy fetters bound.
The waterman, forlorn, along the shore,
Pensive reclines upon his useless oar;
See harness'd steeds desert the stony town,
And wander roads unstable, not their own;
Wheels o'er the harden'd waters smoothly glide,
And rase with whiten'd tracks the slippery tide;
Here the fat cook piles high the blazing fire,
And scarce the spit can turn the steer entire;
Booths sudden hide the Thames, long streets appear,
And numerous games proclaim the crowded fair.
So, when a general bids the martial train
Spread their encampment o'er the spacious plain:
Thick rising tents a canvas city build,
And the loud dice resound through all the field.

'Twas here the matron found a doleful fate:
Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes, at hours
When silent evening closes up the flowers;
Lulling as falling water's hollow noise;
Indulging grief, like Phylomela's voice. [roads:

Doll every day had walk'd these treacherous
Her neck grew warpt beneath autumnal loads
Of various fruit: she now a basket bore;
That head, alas! shall basket bear no more.
Each booth she frequent past, in quest of gain,
And boys with pleasure heard her sbrilling strain.
Ah, Doll! all mortals must resign their breath
And industry itself submit to death!
The cracking crystal yields; she sinks, she dies.
Her head, chopt off, from her lost shoulders flies:
Pippins she cry'd; but death her voice confounds;
And pip-pip-pip along the ice resounds.

So, when the Thracian furies Orpheus tore,
And left his bleeding trunk deform'd with gore,
His sever'd head floats down the silver tide,
His yet warm tongue for his lost consort cry'd;
Euridice with quivering voice he mourn'd,
And Heber's banks Euridice return'd.

But now the western gale the flood unbinds,
And blackening clouds move on with warmer winds.
The wooden town its frail foundation leaves,
And Thames' full urn rolls down his plebeian
waves;

From every penthouse streams the fleeting snow,
And with dissolving frost the pavements flow.

Experienc'd men, inur'd to city ways,
Need not the calendar to count their days.
When through the town with slow and solemn air,
Led by the nostril, walks the muzzled bear;
Behind him moves, majestically dull,
The pride of Hockley-hole, the surly bull.
Learn hence the periods of the week to name,
Mondays and Thursdays are the days of game.

When fishy stalls with double store are laid ;
 The golden-belly'd carp, the broad-finn'd maid,
 Red-speckled trouts, the salmon's silver jowl,
 The jointed lobster, and unscaly sole,
 And luscious 'scallops to allure the tastes
 Of rigid zealots to delicious fasts ;
 Wednesdays and Fridays, you'll observe from hence,
 Days when our sires were doom'd to abstinence.

When dirty waters from balconies drop,
 And dext'rous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop,
 And cleanse the spatter'd sash, and scrub the stairs,
 Know Saturday's conclusive morn appears.

Successive cries the seasons' change declare,
 And mark the monthly progress of the year.
 Hark ! how the streets with treble voices ring,
 To sell the bounteous product of the Spring !
 Sweet-smelling flowers, and elder's early bud,
 With nettle's tender shoots, to cleanse the blood ;
 And, when June's thunder cools the sultry skies,
 Ten Sundays are profan'd by mackrel cries.

Walnuts the fruiterer's hand in Autumn stain,
 Due plums and juicy pears augment his gain :
 Next oranges the longing boys entice,
 To trust their copper fortunes to the dice.

When rosemary, and bays, the poet's crown,
 Are bawl'd, in frequent cries, through all the town,
 Then judge the festival of Christmas near,
 Christmas, the joyous period of the year.
 Now with bright holly all your temples strow,
 With laurel green, and sacred misletoe.

Now, heaven-born Charity ! thy blessings shed ;
 Let meagre Want uprear her sickly head ;
 Let shivering limbs be warm ; let Plenty's bowl
 In humble roofs make glad the needy soul !
 See ! the heaven-born maid her blessing shed ;
 A meagre Want uprears her sickly head ;
 Both'd are the naked, and the needy glad,
 While selfish Avarice alone is sad.

Proud coaches pass, regardless of the moan
 Of infant orphans, and the widow's groan ;
 While Charity still moves the walker's mind,
 His liberal purse relieves the lame and blind.
 Edificiously thy halfpence are bestow'd,
 Where the laborious beggar sweeps the road.
 Whatever you give, give ever at demand,
 For let old age long stretch his palsy'd hand.
 Those who give late are importun'd each day,
 And still are teas'd, because they still delay.
 For ever the miser durst his farthings spare,
 He thinly spreads them through the public square,
 There, all beside the rail, rang'd beggars lie,
 And from each other catch the doleful cry ;
 With Heaven, for two-pence, cheaply wipes his score,
 Lifts up his eyes, and hastes to beggar more.

Where the brass-knocker, wrapt in flannel band,
 Forbids the thunder of the footman's hand ;
 An upholder, rueful harbinger of Death,
 Waits with impatience for the dying breath ;
 He raptures o'er the camp, with hovering flight,
 He snuff up the future carnage of the fight.

Here canst thou pass, unmindful of a prayer,
 That Heaven in mercy may thy brother spare ?
 Come, Fortescue, sincere, experienc'd friend,
 Thy briefs, thy deeds, and ev'n thy fees suspend ;
 Come, let us leave the Temple's silent walls,
 He business to my distant lodging calls ;
 Through the long Strand together let us stray ;
 While thee conversing, I forget the way.
 Behold that narrow street which steep descends,
 Whose building to the slimy shore extends ;

Here Arundel's fam'd structure rear'd its frame,
 The street alone retains the empty name.
 Where Titian's glowing paint the canvas warm'd,
 And Raphael's fair design, with judgment, charm'd ;
 Now hangs the bellman's song, and pasted here
 The colour'd prints of Overton appear.

Where statues breath'd the works of Phidias' hands,
 A wooden pump, or lonely watch-house, stands.
 There Essex' stately pile adorn'd the shore,
 There Cecil's, Bedford's, Villiers', now no more.
 Yet Burlington's fair palace still remains ;
 Beauty within, without proportion, reigns.
 Beneath his eye declining art revives,
 The wall with animated picture lives ;
 There Handel strikes the strings, the melting strain
 Transports the soul, and thrills through every vein ;
 There oft I enter, (but with cleaner shoes,)
 For Burlington's belov'd by every Muse.

O ye associate walkers ! O my friends !
 Upon your state what happiness attends !
 What though no coach to frequent visit rolls,
 Nor for your shilling chairmen sling their poles ;
 Yet still your nerves rheumatic pains defy,
 Nor lazy jaundice dulls your saffron eye ;
 No wasting cough discharges sounds of death,
 Nor wheezing asthma heaves in vain for breath ;
 Nor from your restless couch is heard the groan
 Of burning gout, or sedentary stone.

Let others in the jolting coach confide,
 Or in the leaky boat the Thames divide ;
 Or, box'd within the chair, contemn the street,
 And trust their safety to another's feet :
 Still let me walk ; for oft the sudden gale
 Ruffles the tide, and shifts the dangerous sail ;
 Then shall the passenger too late deplore
 The whelming billow, and the faithless oar ;
 The drunken chairman in the kennel spurns,
 The glasses shatters, and his charge o'erturns.
 Who can recount the coach's various harms,
 The legs disjointed, and the broken arms ?

I've seen a beau, in some ill-fated hour,
 When o'er the stones choak'd kennels swell the shower,

In gilded chariot loll ; he with disdain
 Views spatter'd passengers all drench'd in rain.
 With mud fill'd high, the rumbling cart draws near ;
 Now rule thy prancing steeds, lac'd charioteer :
 The dustman lashes on with spiteful rage,
 His ponderous spokes thy painted wheel engage ;
 Crush'd is thy pride, down falls the shrieking beau,
 The slabby pavement crystal fragments strow ;
 Black floods of mire th' embroider'd coat disgrace,
 And mud enwraps the honours of his face.
 So, when dread Jove the son of Phœbus hurl'd,
 Scar'd with dark thunder, to the nether world,
 The headstrong coursers tore the silver reins,
 And the Sun's beamy ruin gilds the plains.

If the pale walker pant with weakening ills,
 His sickly hand is stor'd with friendly pills : [fame,
 From hence he learns the seventh-born doctor's
 From hence he learns the cheapest taylor's name.

Shall the large mutton smoke upon your boards ?
 Such Newgate's copious market best affords.
 Would'st thou with mighty beef augment thy meal ?
 Seek Leaden-hall ; St. James's sends thee veal ;
 Thames-street gives cheeses ; Covent-garden fruits ;
 Moorfields old books ; and Monmouth-street old suits.

Hence mayst thou well supply the wants of life,
 Support thy family, and clothe thy wife.

Volumes on shelter'd stalks expanded lie,
And various science lures the learned eye ; [groan,
The bending shelves with ponderous scholiasts
And deep divines, to modern shops unknown :
Here, like the bee, that on industrious wing
Collects the various odours of the Spring,
Walkers at leisure, learning's flowers may spoil,
Nor watch the wasting of the midnight oil ;
May morals snatch from Plutarch's tatter'd page,
A mildew'd Bacon, or Stagyra's sage :
Here sauntering 'prentices o'er Otway weep,
O'er Congreve smile, or over D'Urfey sleep ;
Pleas'd semptresses the Lock's fam'd Rape unfold ;
And Squirts * read Garth, till apozems grow cold.

O Lintot ! let my labours obvious lie,
Rang'd on thy stall, for every curious eye !
So shall the poor these precepts gratis know,
And to my verse their future safeties owe.

What walker shall his mean ambition fix
On the false lustre of a coach and six ?
Let the vain virgin, lur'd by glaring show,
Sigh for the liveries of th' embroider'd beau.

See you bright chariot on its braces swing,
With Flanders mares, and on an arched spring.
That wretch, to gain an equipage and place,
Betray'd his sister to a lewd embrace,
This coach, that with the blazon'd 'scutcheon glows,
Vain of his unknown race, the coxcomb shows.
Here the brib'd lawyer, sunk in velvet, sleeps ;
The starving orphan, as he passes, weeps ;
There flames a fool, begirt with tinsel slaves,
Who wastes the wealth of a whole race of knaves ;
That other, with a clustering train behind,
Owes his new honours to a sordid mind !
This next in court-fidelity excels,
The public rifles, and his country sells.
May the proud chariot never be my fate,
If purchas'd at so mean, so dear a rate !
Or rather give me sweet content on foot,
Wrapt in my virtue, and a good surtout !

Book III.

Of walking the Streets by Night.

O TRIVIA, goddess ! leave these low abodes,
And traverse o'er the wide ethereal roads ;
Celestial queen ! put on thy robes of light,
Now Cynthia nam'd, fair regent of the night.
At sight of thee, the villain sheathes his sword,
Nor scales the wall, to steal the wealthy hoard.
O may thy silver lamp from Heaven's high bower
Direct my footsteps in the midnight hour !

When Night first bids the twinkling stars appear,
Or with her cloudy vest enwraps the air,
Then swarms the busy street ; with caution tread,
Where the shop-windows † falling threat thy head ;
Now labourers home return and join their strength
To bear the tottering plank, or ladder's length ;
Still fix thy eyes intent upon the throng ;
And, as the passes open, wind along.

Where the fair columns of St. Clement stand,
Whose straiten'd bounds encroach upon the Strand ;
Where the low penthouse bows the walker's head,
And the rough pavement wounds the yielding tread ;
Where not a post protects the narrow space,
And, strung in twines, combs dangle in thy face ;

* An apothecary's boy, in The Dispensary.

† A species of window now almost forgotten. N.

Summon at once thy courage, rouse thy care,
Stand firm, look back, be resolute, beware.
Forth issuing from steep lanes, the collier's steeds
Drag the black load ; another cart succeeds ;
Team follows team, crowds heap'd on crowds appear,
And wait impatient till the road grow clear.
Now all the pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mix'd hurry barricades the street.
Entangled here, the waggon's lengthen'd team
Cracks the tough harness ; here a ponderous beam
Lies over-turn'd athwart ; for slaughter fed,
Here lowing bullocks raise their horned head.
Now oaths grow loud, with coaches coaches jar,
And the smart blow provokes the sturdy war ;
From the high box they whirl the thong around,
And with the twining lash their shins resound :
Their rage ferments, more dangerous wounds they try,

And the blood gushes down their painful eye.
And now on foot the frowning warriors light,
And with their ponderous fists renew the fight ;
Blow answers blow, their cheeks are smear'd with blood,

Till down they fall, and grappling roll in mud.
So, when two boars, in wild Ytene * bred,
Or on Westphalia's fattening chesnuts fed,
Gnash their sharp tusks, and, rous'd with equal fire,
Dispute the reign of some luxurious mire ;
In the black flood they wallow o'er and o'er,
Till their arm'd jaws distil with foam and gore.

Where the mob gathers, swiftly shoot along,
Nor idly mingle in the noisy throng :
Lur'd by the silver hilt, amid the swarm,
The subtle artist will thy side disarm.
Nor is the flaxen wig with safety worn ;
High on the shoulder, in a basket borne,
Lurks the sly boy, whose hand, to rapine bred,
Plucks off the curling honours of thy head.
Here dives the skulking thief, with practis'd sleight,
And unfelt fingers make thy pocket light.
Where's now the watch, with all its trinkets, frown'
And thy late snuff-box is no more thy own.
But, lo ! his bolder thefts some tradesman spies,
Swift from his prey the scudding lurcher flies ;
Dext'rous he 'scapes the coach with nimble bound,
Whilst every honest tongue " stop thief ! " resounds.
So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care ;
Hounds following hounds grow louder as he flies,
And injur'd tenants join the hunter's cries.
Breathless, he stumbling falls. Ill-fated boy !
Why did not honest work thy youth employ ?
Seiz'd by rough hands, he's dragg'd amid the rout,
And stretch'd beneath the pump's incessant spout !
Or plung'd in miry ponds, he gasping lies,
Mud chokes his mouth, and plaisters o'er his eyes.

Let not the ballad singer's shrilling strain
Amid the swarm thy listening ear detain :
Guard well thy pocket ; for these Syrens stand
To aid the labours of the diving hand ;
Confederate in the cheat, they draw the throng,
And cambric handkerchiefs reward the song.
But soon as coach or cart drives rattling on,
The rabble part, in shoals they backward run.
So Jove's loud bolts the mingled war divide,
And Greece and Troy retreat on either side.

If the rude throng pour on with furious part,
And hap to break thee from a friend's embrace.

* New Forest in Hampshire, anciently so called.

top short ; nor struggle through the crowd in vain,
 But watch with careful eye the passing train.
 Let I, (perhaps too fond,) if chance the tide tumultuous bear my partner from my side, impatient venture back ; despising harm,
 force my passage where the thickest swarm.
 Thus his lost bride the Trojan sought in vain through night, and arms, and flames, and hills of slain.

Thus Nisus wander'd o'er the pathless grove,
 To find the brave companion of his love.
 The pathless grove in vain he wanders o'er :
 Euryalus, alas ! is now no more.

That walker who, regardless of his pace,
 turns oft to pore upon the damsel's face,
 from side to side by thrusting elbows tost,
 shall strike his aching breast against a post ;
 or water, dash'd from fishy stalls, shall stain
 his hapless coat with spirts of scaly rain.
 But, if unwarily he chance to stray
 where twirling turnstiles intercept the way,
 the thwarting passenger shall force them round,
 and beat the wretch half breathless to the ground.

Let constant vigilance thy footsteps guide,
 and wary circumspection guard thy side ; [night,
 when shalt thou walk, unharm'd, the dangerous
 nor need th' officious linkboy's smoky light.
 Thou never wilt attempt to cross the road,
 where ale-house benches rest the porter's load,
 grievous to heedless shins ; no barrow's wheel,
 that bruises oft the truant school-boy's heel,
 behind thee rolling, with insidious pace,
 shall mark thy stocking with a miry trace.
 Let not thy venturous steps approach too nigh,
 where, gaping wide, low steepy cellars lie.
 Should thy shoe wrench aside, down, down you fall,
 and overturn the scolding huckster's stall ;
 the scolding huckster shall not o'er thee moan,
 but pence exact for nuts and pears o'erthrown.

Though you through cleaner alleys wind by day,
 to shun the hurries of the public way,
 let ne'er to those dark paths by night retire ;
 mind only safety, and condemn the mire.
 Then no impervious courts thy haste detain,
 nor sneering alewives bid thee turn again.

Where Lincoln's-inn, wide space, is rail'd around, cross not with venturous step ; there oft is found the lurking thief, who, while the day-light shone, made the walls echo with his begging tone :
 that crutch, which late compassion mov'd, shall wound

thy bleeding head, and fell thee to the ground.
 Though thou art tempted by the link-man's call,
 yet trust him not along the lonely wall ;
 in the mid way he'll quench the flaming brand,
 and there the booty with the pilfering band.
 Still keep the public streets, where oily rays,
 shot from the crystal lamp, o'erspread the ways.

Happy Augusta ! law-defended town !
 here no dark lanterns shade the villain's frown ;
 no Spanish jealousies thy lanes infest,
 nor Roman vengeance stabs th' unwary breast ;
 here Tyranny ne'er lifts her purple hand,
 but Liberty and Justice guard the land ;
 no bravos here profess the bloody trade,
 nor is the church the murderer's refuge made.

Let not the chairman, with assuming stride,
 press near the wall, and rudely thrust thy side :
 the laws have set him bounds ; his servile feet should ne'er encroach where posts defend the street.

Yet who the footman's arrogance can quell,
 Whose flambeau gilds the sashes of Pall-Mall,
 When in long rank a train of torches flame,
 To light the midnight visits of the dame ?
 Others, perhaps, by happier guidance led,
 May where the chairman rests with safety tread ;
 Whene'er I pass, their poles (unseen below)
 Make my knee tremble with a jarring blow.

If wheels bar up the road, where streets are crost,
 With gentle words the coachman's ear accost :
 He ne'er the threat or harsh command obeys,
 But with contempt the spatter'd shoe surveys.
 Now man with utmost fortitude thy soul,
 To cross the way where carts and coaches roll ;
 Yet do not in thy hardy skill confide,
 Nor rashly risk the kennel's spacious stride ;
 Stay till afar the distant wheel you hear,
 Like dying thunder in the breaking air ;
 Thy foot will slide upon the miry stone,
 And passing coaches crush thy tortur'd bone,
 Or wheels enclose the road ; on either hand,
 Pent round with perils, in the midst you stand,
 And call for aid in vain ; the coachman swears,
 And carmen drive, unmindful of thy prayers.
 Where wilt thou turn ? ah ! whither wilt thou fly ?
 On every side the pressing spokes are nigh.
 So sailors, while Charybdis' gulph they shun,
 Amaz'd, on Scylla's craggy dangers run.

Be sure observe where brown Ostrea stands,
 Who boasts her shelly ware from Wallfleet sands ;
 There may'st thou pass with safe unmiry feet,
 Where the rais'd pavement leads athwart the street.
 If where Fleet-ditch with muddy current flows,
 You chance to roam, where oyster-tubs in rows
 Are rang'd beside the posts ; there stay thy haste,
 And with the savoury fish indulge thy taste :
 The damsel's knife the gaping shell commands,
 While the salt liquor streams between her hands.

The man had sure a palate cover'd o'er
 With brass or steel, that on the rocky shore
 First broke the oozy oyster's pearly coat,
 And risk'd the living morsel down his throat.
 What will not Luxury taste ? Earth, sea, and air,
 Are daily ransack'd for the bill of fare !
 Blood stuff'd in skins is British Christian's food !
 And France robs marshes of the croaking brood !
 Spungy morels in strong ragouts are found,
 And in the soup the slimy snail is drown'd.

When from high spouts the dashing torrents fall,
 Ever be watchful to maintain the wall ; [throng
 For, should'st thou quit thy ground, the rushing
 Will with impetuous fury drive along ;
 All press to gain those honours thou hast lost,
 And rudely shove thee far without the post.
 Then to retrieve the shed you strive in vain,
 Draggled all o'er, and soak'd in floods of rain.
 Yet rather bear the shower, and toils of mud,
 Than in the doubtful quarrel risk thy blood.
 O think on Oedipus' detested state,
 And by his woes be warn'd to shun thy fate.

Where three roads join'd, he met his sire unknown ;
 (Unhappy sire, but more unhappy son !)
 Each claim'd the way, their swords the strife decide,
 The hoary monarch fell, he groan'd, and died !
 Hence sprung the fatal plague that thinn'd thy reign,

Thy cursed incest ! and thy children slain !
 Hence wert thou doom'd in endless night to stray
 Thro' Theban streets, and cheerless grope thy way.

Contemplate, mortal, on thy fleeting years ;
 See, with black train the funeral pomp appears !
 Whether some heir attends in sable state,
 And mourns, with outward grief, a parent's fate ;
 Or the fair virgin, nipt in beauty's bloom,
 A crowd of lovers follow to her tomb :
 Why is the hearse with 'scutcheons blazon'd round,
 And with the nodding plume of ostrich crown'd ?
 No : the dead know it not, nor profit gain ;
 It only serves to prove the living vain.
 How short is life ! how frail is human trust !
 Is all this pomp for laying dust to dust ?

Where the nail'd hoop defends the painted stall,
 Brush not thy sweeping skirt too near the wall :
 Thy heedless sleeve will drink the colour'd oil,
 And spot indelible thy pocket soil.

Has not wise Nature strung the legs and feet
 With firmest nerves, design'd to walk the street ?
 Has she not given us hands to grope aright,
 Amidst the frequent dangers of the night ?
 And think'st thou not the double nostril meant,
 To warn from oily woes by previous scent ?

Who can the various city frauds * recite,
 With all the petty rapines of the night ?
 Who now the guinea-dropper's baft regards,
 Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards ?
 Why should I warn thee ne'er to join the fray,
 Where the sham quarrel interrupts the way ?
 Lives there in these our days so soft a clown,
 Brav'd by the bully's oaths, or threatening frown ?
 I need not strict enjoin the pocket's care,
 When from the crowded play thou lead'st the fair ;
 Who has not here or watch or snuff-box lost,
 Or handkerchiefs that India's shuttle boast ?
 O ! may thy virtue guard thee through the roads
 Of Drury's mazy courts, and dark abodes !
 The harlots' guileful paths, who nightly stand
 Where Catharine-street descends into the Strand !
 Say, vagrant Muse, their wiles and subtle arts,
 To lure the strangers' unsuspecting hearts :
 So shall our youth on healthful sinews tread,
 And city cheeks grow warm with rural red.

'Tis she who nightly strolls with sauntering pace,
 No stubborn stays her yielding shape embrace ;
 Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbons glare,
 The new-scour'd nanteau, and the slattern air ;
 High-draggled petticoats her travels show,
 And hollow cheeks with artful blushes glow ;
 With flattering sounds she soothes the credulous ear,
 " My noble captain ! charmer ! love ! my dear !"
 In riding-hood near tavern-doors she plies,
 Or muffled pinner's hide her livid eyes.
 With empty bandbox she delights to range,
 And feigns a distant errand from the 'Change :
 Nay, she will oft the quaker's hood prophane,
 And trudge demure the rounds of Drury-lane.
 She darts from sarcenet ambush wily leers,
 Twitches thy sleeve, or with familiar airs
 Her fan will pat thy cheek ; these snares disdain,
 Nor gaze behind thee, when she turns again.

I knew a yeoman, who, for thirst of gain,
 To the great city drove, from Devon's plain,
 His numerous lowing herd ; his herds he sold,
 And his deep leathern pocket bagg'd with gold.
 Drawn by a fraudulent nymph, he gaz'd, he sigh'd :
 Unmindful of his home, and distant bride,
 She leads the willing victim to his doom,
 Through winding alleys, to her cobweb room.

* Various cheats formerly in practice.

Thence thro' the street he reels from post to post,
 Valiant with wine, nor knows his treasure lost.
 The vagrant wretch th' assembled watchmen spin,
 He waves his hanger, and their poles defies ;
 Deep in the round-house pent, all night he snore,
 And the next morn in vain his fate deplores.

Ah, hapless swain ! unus'd to pains and ills !
 Canst thou forego roast-beef for nauseous pills ?
 How wilt thou lift to Heaven thy eyes and hands,
 When the long scroll the surgeon's fees demands !
 Or else (ye gods, avert that worst disgrace !)
 Thy ruin'd nose falls level with thy face !
 Then shall thy wife thy loathsome kiss disdain,
 And wholesome neighbours from thy mug refrain.

Yet there are watchmen, who with friendly light
 Will teach thy reeling steps to tread aright ;
 For sixpence will support thy helpless arm,
 And home conduct thee, safe from nightly harm.
 But, if they shake their lanterns, from afar
 To call their brethren to confederate war,
 When rakes resist their power ; if hapless you
 Should chance to wander with the scouring crew ;
 Though Fortune yield thee captive, ne'er despair,
 But seek the constable's considerate ear ;
 He will reverse the watchman's harsh decree,
 Mov'd by the rhetoric of a silver fee. [word,
 Thus, would you gain some favourite courtier's
 Fee not the petty clerks, but bribe my lord.

Now is the time that rakes their revels keep ;
 Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep.
 His scatter'd pence the flying nicker * flings,
 And with the copper shower the casement rings.
 Who has not heard the scourer's midnight fame ?
 Who has not trembled at the Mobock's name ?
 Was there a watchman took his hourly rounds,
 Safe from their blows, or new-invented wounds ?
 I pass their desperate deeds, and mischiefs done,
 Where from Snow-hill black steepy torrents run :
 How matrons, hoop'd within the hogshead's womb,
 Were tumbled furious thence ; the rolling tomb
 O'er the stones thunders, bounds from side to side ;
 So Regulus, to save his country, dy'd.

Where a dim gleam the paly lantern throws
 O'er the mid pavement, heapy rubbish grows ;
 Or arched vaults their gaping jaws extend,
 Or the dark caves to common shores descend,
 Oft by the winds extinct the signal lies,
 Or smother'd in the glimmering socket dies,
 Ere Night has half roll'd round her ebon throne ;
 In the wide gulph the shatter'd coach, o'erthrown,
 Sinks with the snorting steeds ; the reins are broke,
 And from the crackling axle flies the spoke.
 So, when fam'd Eddystone's far-shooting ray,
 That led the sailor through the stormy way,
 Was from its rocky roots by billows torn,
 And the high turret in the whirlwind borne ;
 Fleets bulg'd their sides against the craggy land,
 And pitchy ruins blacken'd all the strand.

Who then through night would hire the harness'd
 steed ?

And who would choose the rattling wheel for speed ?
 But hark ! Distress, with screaming voice, draw nigher,

And wakes the slumbering street with cries of fire
 At first a glowing red enwraps the skies,
 And, borne by winds, the scattering sparks arise ;

* Gentlemen who delighted to break windows with halfpence.

From beam to beam the fierce contagion spreads ;
The spiry flames now lift aloft their heads ;
Through the burst sash a blazing deluge pours,
And splitting tiles descend in rattling showers.
Now with thick crowds th' enlighten'd pavement
          swarms,

The fireman sweats beneath his crooked arms ;
A leathern casque his venturous head defends,
Boldly he climbs where thickest smoke ascends ;
Mov'd by the mother's streaming eyes and prayers,
The helpless infant through the flame he bears,
With no less virtue, than through hostile fire
The Dardan hero bore his aged sire.

See, forceful engines spout their levell'd streams,
To quench the blaze that runs along the beams ;
The grappling hook plucks rafters from the walls,
And heaps on heaps the smoky ruin falls ;
Blown by strong winds, the fiery tempest roars,
Tears down new walls, and pours along the floors ;
The Heavens are all a-blaze, the face of Night
Is cover'd with a sanguine dreadful light.

'Twas such a light involv'd thy towers, O Rome !
The dire presage of mighty Caesar's doom,
When the Sun veil'd in rust his mourning head,
And frightful prodigies the skies o'erspread.

Hark ! the drum thunders ! far, ye crowds, retire :
Behold ! the ready match is tipt with fire,
The nitrous store is laid, the smutty train,
With running blaze, awakes the barrel'd grain ;
Flames sudden wrap the walls ; with sullen sound
The shatter'd pile sinks on the smoky ground.

And when the years shall have revolv'd the date,
In that inevitable hour of Naples' fate,
Her sapp'd foundations shall with thunders shake,
And heave and toss upon the sulphurous lake ;
Earth's womb at once the fiery flood shall rend,
And in th' abyss her plunging towers descend.

Consider, reader, what fatigues I've known,
The toils, the perils, of the wintery town ;
What riots seen, what bustling crowds I bore,
How oft I cross'd where carts and coaches roar ;
Yet shall I bless my labours, if mankind
Their future safety from my dangers find.

Thus the bold traveller (inur'd to toil,
Whose steps have printed Asia's desert soil,
The barbarous Arabs' haunt ; or shivering coast
Of Greenland's mountains of eternal frost ;
Whom Providence, in length of years, restores
To the wish'd harbour of his native shores)
Sets forth his journals to the public view,
For caution, by his woes, the wandering crew.

And now complete my generous labours lie,
Furnish'd, and ripe for immortality.
Death shall entomb in dust this mouldering frame,
But never reach th' eternal part, my fame.
When W— and G—, mighty names !* are dead ;
Or but at Chelsea under custards read ;
When critics crazy handboxes repair ;
And tragedies, turn'd rockets, bounce in air ;
High rais'd on Fleet-street posts, consign'd to Fame,
This work shall shine and walkers bless my name.

SWEET WILLIAM'S FAREWELL TO BLACK-EYED SUSAN.

ALL in the Downs the fleet was moor'd,
The streamers waving in the wind,
When Black-ey'd Susan came aboard.
" Oh ! where shall I my true-love find ?
Tell me, ye jovial sailors, tell me true,
If my sweet William sails among the crew."

William, who high upon the yard
Rock'd with the billow to and fro,
Soon as her well-known voice he heard,
He sigh'd, and cast his eyes below :
The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands,
And (quick as lightning) on the deck he stands.

So the sweet lark, high pois'd in air,
Shuts close his pinions to his breast,
(If chance his mate's shrill call he hear)
And drops at once into her nest.
The noblest captain in the British fleet
Might envy William's lip those kisses sweet.

" O Susan, Susan, lovely dear,
My vows shall ever true remain ;
Let me kiss off that falling tear ;
We only part to meet again.
Change, as ye list, ye winds ; my heart shall be
The faithful compass that still points to thee.

" Believe not what the landmen say
Who tempt with doubts thy constant mind.
They'll tell thee, sailors, when away,
In every port a mistress find :
Yes, yes, believe them when they tell thee so,
For thou art present wheresoe'er I go.

" If to fair India's coast we sail,
Thy eyes are seen in diamonds bright ;
Thy breath is Afric's spicy gale,
Thy skin is ivory so white.
Thus every beauteous object that I view,
Wakes in my soul some charm of lovely Sue.

" Though battle call me from thy arms,
Let not my pretty Susan mourn ;
Though cannons roar, yet, safe from harms,
William shall to his dear return.
Love turns aside the balls that round me fly,
Lest precious tears should drop from Susan's eye."

The boatswain gave the dreadful word,
The sails their swelling bosom spread ;
No longer must she stay aboard :
They kiss'd, she sigh'd, he hung his head.
Her lessening boat unwilling rows to land :
" Adieu !" she cries ; and wav'd her lily hand.

A BALLAD,

FROM THE WHAT-D'YE-CALL-IT.

'Twas when the seas were roaring
With hollow blasts of wind ;
A damsel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd.

Wide o'er the foaming billows
She cast a wistful look ;
Her head was crown'd with willows,
That trembled o'er the brook.

" Twelve months are gone and over,
And nine long tedious days ;
Why didst thou, venturous lover,
Why didst thou trust the seas ?
Cease, cease, thou cruel Ocean,
And let my lover rest :
Ah ! what's thy troubled motion
To that within my breast ?

" The merchant, robb'd of pleasure,
Sees tempests in despair ;
But what's the loss of treasure,
To losing of my dear ?
Should you some coast be laid on,
Where gold and diamonds grow,
You'd find a richer maiden,
But none that loves you so.

" How can they say that Nature
Has nothing made in vain ;
Why then beneath the water
Should hideous rocks remain ?
No eyes the rocks discover,
That lurk beneath the deep,
To wreck the wandering lover,
And leave the maid to weep."

All melancholy lying,
Thus wail'd she for her dear ;
Repay'd each blast with sighing,
Each billow with a tear ;
When o'er the white wave stooping,
His floating corpse she spy'd ;
Then, like a lily drooping,
She bow'd her head, and dy'd.

THE GOAT WITHOUT A BEARD.

'Tis certain that the modish passions
Descend among the crowd like fashions.
Excuse me, then, if pride, conceit
(The manners of the fair and great)
I give to monkeys, asses, dogs,
Fleas, owls, goats, butterflies, and hogs,
I say that these are proud : what then !
I never said they equal men.

A Goat (as vain as Goat can be)
Affected singularity :

Whene'er a thymy bank he found,
He roll'd upon the fragrant ground,
And then with fond attention stood,
Fix'd o'er his image in the flood.

" I hate my frowzy beard," he cries,
My youth is lost in this disguise.
Did not the females know my vigour,
Well might they loath this reverend figure."

Resolv'd to smooth his shaggy face,
He sought the barber of the place.
A flippant monkey, spruce and smart,
Hard by, profess'd the dapper art :
His pole with pewter-basons hung,
Black rotten teeth in order strung,

Rang'd cups, that in the window stood,
Lin'd with red rags to look like blood,
Did well his threefold trade explain,
Who shav'd, drew teeth, and breath'd a vein.

The Goat he welcomes with an air,
And seats him in his wooden chair :
Mouth, nose, and cheek, the lather hides :
Light, smooth, and swift, the razor glides.

" I hope your custom, sir," says Pug.
" Sure never face was half so smug !"

The Goat, impatient for applause,
Swift to the neighbouring hill withdraws.
The shaggy people grinn'd and star'd.
" Heigh-day ! what's here ? without a beard !

Say, brother, whence the dire disgrace ?
What envious hand hath robb'd your face ?"
When thus the fop, with smiles of scorn,
" Are beards by civil nations worn ?

Ev'n Muscovites have mow'd their chins.
Shall we, like formal Capuchins,
Stubborn in pride, retain the mode,
And bear about the hairy load ?

Whene'er we through the village stray,
Are we not mock'd along the way,
Insulted with loud shouts of scorn,
By boys our beards disgrac'd and torn ?"

" Were you no more with Goats to dwell,
Brother, I grant you reason well,"
Replies a bearded chief. " Beside,
If boys can mortify thy pride,
How wilt thou stand the ridicule
Of our whole flock ? Affected fool !"

Coxcombs, distinguish'd from the rest,
To all but coxcombs are a jest.

THE UNIVERSAL APPARITION

A RAKE, by every passion rul'd,
With every vice his youth had cool'd ;
Disease his tainted blood assails ;
His spirits droop, his vigour fails :
With secret ills at home he pines,
And, like infirm old age, declines.

As, twing'd with pain, he pensive sits,
And raves, and prays, and swears, by fits.
A ghastly Phantom, lean and wan,
Before him rose, and thus began :

" My name, perhaps, hath reach'd your ear
Attend, and be advis'd by Care.
Nor love, nor honour, wealth, nor power,
Can give the heart a cheerful hour,
When health is lost. Be timely wise :
With health all taste of pleasure flies."

Thus said, the Phantom disappears.
The wary counsel wak'd his fears.
He now from all excess abstains,
With physic purifies his veins ;
And, to procure a sober life,
Resolves to venture on a wife.

But now again the Sprite ascends,
Where'er he walks, his ear attends,
Insinuates that beauty's frail,
That perseverance must prevail,
With jealousies his brain inflames,
And whispers all her lovers' names.
In other hours she represents
His household charge, his annual rents.

Increasing debts, perplexing duns,
And nothing for his younger sons.

Straight all his thought to gain he turns,
And with the thirst of lucre burns.
But, when possess'd of Fortune's store,
The Spectre haunts him more and more ;
Sets want and misery in view,
Bold thieves, and all the murdering crew ;
Alarms him with eternal frights,
Infests his dreams, or wakes his nights.
How shall he chase this hideous guest ?
Power may, perhaps, protect his rest.
To power he rose. Again the Sprite
Besets him morning, noon, and night ;
Talks of Ambition's tottering seat,
How Envy persecutes the great ;
Of rival hate, of treacherous friends,
And what disgrace his fall attends.

The court he quits, to fly from Care,
And seeks the peace of rural air ;
His groves, his fields, amuse'd his hours ;
He pruned his trees, he rais'd his flowers ;
But Care again his steps pursues,
Furns him of blasts, of blighting dews,
Of plundering insects, snails, and rains,
And droughts that starv'd the labour'd plains.
Broad, at home, the Spectre's there ;
In vain we seek to fly from Care.

At length he thus the Ghost address :
Since thou must be my constant guest,
Be kind, and follow me no more ;
For Care, by right, should go before."

THE JUGGLERS.

A JUGGLER long through all the town
Had rais'd his fortune and renown ;
You'd think (so far his art transcends)
He dealt at his fingers' ends.

Vice heard his fame, she read his bill ;
Convinc'd of his inferior skill,
He sought his booth, and from the crowd
Lifted the man of art aloud.

" Is this then he so fam'd for sleight ?
Is this slow bungler cheat your sight ?
Shall he with me dispute the prize ?
Leave it to impartial eyes."

Provok'd, the Juggler cry'd, " 'Tis done ;
No science I submit to none."

Thus said, the cups and balls he play'd ;
He turns this here, that there, conveyed.
He cards, obedient to his words,
Or by a fillip turn'd to birds.

His little boxes change the grain :
Trick after trick deludes the train.
He shakes his bag, he shows all fair ;
His fingers spread, and nothing there ;
Then bids it rain with showers of gold ;
And now his ivory eggs are told ;
But, when from thence the hen he draws,
Amaz'd spectators hum applause.

Vice now stepped forth, and took the place,
With all the forms of his grimace.

" This magic looking-glass," she cries,
" There, hand it round) will charm your eyes."
Each eager eye the sight desir'd,
And every man himself admir'd.

Next, to a senator addressing,
" See this bank-note ; observe the blessing.
Breathe on the bill. Heigh, pass ! 'Tis gone."
Upon his lips a padlock shown.
A second puff the magic broke ;
The padlock vanish'd, and he spoke.
Twelve bottles rang'd upon the board,
All full, with heady liquor stor'd,
By clean conveyance disappear,
And now two bloody swords are there.

A purse she to a thief expos'd ; .
At once his ready fingers clos'd.
He opes his fist, the treasure's fled :
He sees a halter in its stead.

She bids Ambition hold a wand ;
He grasps a hatchet in his hand.
A box of charity she shows.
" Blow here ;" and a church-warden blows.
'Tis vanish'd with conveyance neat,
And on the table smokes a treat.

She shakes the dice, the board she knocks,
And from all pockets fills her box.

She next a meagre rake address.
" This picture see ; her shape, her breast !
What youth, and what inviting eyes !
Hold her, and have her." With surprise,
His hand expos'd a box of pills,
And a loud laugh proclaim'd his illa.

A counter, in a miser's hand,
Grew twenty guineas at command.
She bids his heir the sum retain,
And 'tis a counter now again.

A guinea with her touch you see
Take every shape but Charity ;
And not one thing you saw, or drew,
But chang'd from what was first in view.

The Juggler now, in grief of heart,
With this submission own'd her art.

" Can I such matchless sleight withstand !
How practice hath improv'd your hand !
But now and then I cheat the throng ;
You every day, and all day long."

THE HARE AND MANY FRIENDS.

FRIENDSHIP, like love, is but a name,
Unless to one you stint the flame.
The child, whom many fathers share,
Hath seldom known a father's care.
'Tis thus in friendships ; who depend
On many, rarely find a friend.

A Hare who, in a civil way,
Comply'd with every thing, like Gay,
Was known by all the bestial train
Who haunt the wood, or graze the plain ;
Her care was never to offend ;
And every creature was her friend.

As forth she went at early dawn,
To taste the dew-besprinkled lawn,
Behind she hears the hunter's cries,
And from the deep-mouth'd thunder flies.
She starts, she stops, she pants for breath ;
She hears the near advance of death ;
She doubles, to mislead the hound,
And measures back her mazy round ;
Till, fainting in the public way,
Half-dead with fear she gasping lay.

What transport in her bosom grew,
When first the Horse appear'd in view!
"Let me," says she, "your back ascend,
And owe my safety to a friend.
You know my feet betray my flight:
To friendship every burthen's light."

The Horse reply'd, "Poor honest Puss,
It grieves my heart to see thee thus:
Be comforted, relief is near,
For all your friends are in the rear."

She next the stately Bull implor'd;
And thus reply'd the mighty lord:
"Since every beast alive can tell
That I sincerely wish you well,
I may, without offence, pretend
To take the freedom of a friend.
Love calls me hence; a favourite cow
Expects me near yon barley-mow;
And, when a lady's in the case,
You know, all other things give place.
To leave you thus might seem unkind;
But, see, the Goat is just behind."

The Goat remark'd, her pulse was high,
Her languid head, her heavy eye:
"My back," says he, "may do you harm;
The Sheep's at hand, and wool is warm."

The Sheep was feeble, and complain'd,
His sides a load of wool sustain'd;
Said he was slow, confess'd his fears;
For Hounds eat Sheep as well as Hares.

She now the trotting Calf address'd,
To save from death a friend distress'd.

"Shall I," says he, "of tender age,
In this important care engage?
Older and abler pass'd you by;
How strong are those! how weak am I!
Should I presume to bear you hence,
Those friends of mine may take offence.
Excuse me, then; you know my heart;
But dearest friends, alas! must part.
How shall we all lament! Adieu;
For, see, the Hounds are just in view."

THE SHEPHERD'S WEEK,

IN SIX PASTORALS.

PROLOGUE, TO THE RIGHT HON.

THE LORD VISCOUNT BOLINGBROKE.

Lo, I, who erst beneath a tree
Sung Bumkinet and Bowzybee,
And Blouzelind and Marian bright,
In apron blue or apron white,
Now write my sonnets in a book,
For my good lord of Bolingbroke.
As lads and lasses stood around
To hear my boxen hautboy sound,
Our clerk came posting o'er the green
With doleful tidings of the queen;

"That queen," he said, "to whom we owe
Sweet peace, that maketh riches flow;
That queen, who eas'd our tax of late,
Was dead, alas! — and lay in state."

At this, in tears was Cicely seen,
Buxoma tore her pinnars clean,
In doleful dumps stood every clown,
The parson rent his band and gown.

For me, when as I heard that Death
Had snatch'd queen Anne to Elizabeth,
I broke my reed, and, sighing, swore,
I'd weep for Blouzelind no more.

While thus we stood as in a stound,
And wet with tears, like dew, the ground,
Full soon by bonfire and by bell
We learnt our liege was passing well.
A skilful leach (so God him speed)
They said, had wrought this blessed deed.
This leach Arbuthnot was yclept,
Who many a night not once had slept;
But watch'd our gracious sovereign still;
For who could rest when she was ill?
Oh, may'st thou henceforth sweetly sleep!
Sheer, swains, oh! sheer your softest sheep,
To swell his couch; for, well I ween,
He sav'd the realm, who sav'd the queen.
Quoth I, "Please God, I'll bye with glee
To court, this Arbuthnot to see."

I sold my sheep, and lambkins too,
For silver loops and garment blue;
My boxen hautboy, sweet of sound,
For lace that edg'd mine hat around;
For Lightfoot, and my scrip, I got
A gorgeous sword, and eke a knot.

So forth I far'd to court with speed,
Of souldier's drum withouten dread;
For peace allays the shepherd's fear
Of wearing cap of grenadier.

There saw I ladies all a-row,
Before their queen in seemly show.
No more I'll sing Buxoma brown,
Like Goldfinch in her Sunday gown;
Nor Clumsilis, nor Marian bright,
Nor damsel that Hobnelia hight.
But Lansdowne, fresh as flower of May,
And Berkeley, lady blithe and gay;
And Anglesen, whose speech exceeds
The voice of pipe, or oaten reeds;
And blooming Hyde, with eyes so rare;
And Montague beyond compare:
Such ladies fair would I depaint,
In roundelay or sonnet quaint.

There many a worthy wight I've seen,
In ribbon blue and ribbon green:
As Oxford, who a wand doth bear,
Like Moses, in our Bibles fair;
Who for our traffic forms designs,
And gives to Britain Indian mines.
Now, shepherds, clip your fleecy care;
Ye maids, your spinning-wheels prepare;
Ye weavers, all your shuttles throw,
And bid broad-cloths and serges grow;
For trading free shall thrive again,
Nor leasings lewd affright the swain.

There saw I St. John, sweet of mien
Full steadfast both to church and queen;
With whose fair name I'll deck my strain:
St. John, right courteous to the swain.

For thus he told me on a day,
"Trim are thy sonnets, gentle Gay;

And, certes, mirth it were to see
Thy joyous madrigals twice three,
With preface meet, and notes profound,
Imprinted fair, and well ye-bound."
All suddenly then home I sped,
And did ev'n as my lord had said.

Lo, here thou hast mine eclogues fair,
But let not these detain thine ear.
Let not th' affairs of states and kings
Wait, while our Bouzybeus sings.
Rather than verse of simple swain
Should stay the trade of France or Spain;
Or, for the plaint of parson's maid,
Yon emperor's packets be delay'd;
In sooth, I swear by holy Paul,
I'll burn book, preface, notes, and all.

MONDAY; OR, THE SQUABBLE.

LOBBIN CLOUT, CUDDY, CLODDIPOLE.

LOBBIN CLOUT.

Try younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
To thrustles shrill the bramble-bush forsake,
To chirping lark the welkin sheen invokes,
To damsel yet the swelling udder strokes;
Yonder hill does scant the dawn appear:
Why does Cuddy leave his cot so rear?

CUDDY.

Ah Lobbin Clout! I ween, my plight is guest,
That leaves, a stranger is to rest:
Swains belye not, thou hast prov'd the smart,
And Blouzelinda's mistress of thy heart. 10
Is rising rear betokeneth well thy mind,
Thine arms are folded for thy Blouzelind.
And well, I trow, our piteous plights agree:
See Blouzelinda smites, Buxoma me.

LOBBIN CLOUT.

Ah, Blouzelind! I love thee more by half,
Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf;
Worth the tongue! may blisters sore it gall,
That names Buxoma Blouzelind withal.

CUDDY.

Hold, witless Lobbin Clout, I thee advise,
That blisters sore on thy own tongue arise. 20

Ver. 3. Welkin, the same as welken, an old Saxon word, signifying a cloud; by poetical licence it is frequently taken for the element, or sky, as may be seen by this verse in the Dream of Chaucer—

Ne in all the welkin was no cloud.

Ver. 4. Shine, or shine, an old word for shining, or light.

Ver. 5. Scant, used in the ancient British authors in the same sense.

Ver. 6. Rear, an expression in several counties of England, for early in the morning.

Ver. 7. To ween, derived from the Saxon, to think, or conceive.

Lo, yonder, Cloddipole, the blithsome swain,
The wisest lout of all the neighbouring plain!
From Cloddipole we learnt to read the skies,
To know when hail will fall, or winds arise.
He taught us erst the heifer's tail to view,
When stuck aloft, that showers would straight ensue:
He first that useful secret did explain,
That pricking corns foretold the gathering rain.
When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. 30
Let Cloddipole then hear us twain rehearse,
And praise his sweetheart in alternate verse.
I'll wager this same oaken staff with thee,
That Cloddipole shall give the prize to me.

LOBBIN CLOUT.

See this tobacco-pouch, that's lin'd with hair,
Made of the skin of sleekest fallow-deer.
This pouch, that's ty'd with tape of reddest hue,
I'll wager, that the prize shall be my due.

CUDDY.

Begin thy carols then, thou vaunting slouch!
Be thine the oaken staff, or mine the pouch. 40

LOBBIN CLOUT.

My Blouzelinda is the blithest lass,
Than primrose sweeter, or the clover-grass.
Fair is the king-cup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisie that beside her grows;
Fair is the gilliflower, of gardens sweet,
Fair is the marygold, for pottage meet:
But Blouzelind's than gilliflower more fair,
Than daisie, marygold, or king-cup rare.

CUDDY.

My brown Buxoma is the featest maid,
That e'er at wake delightful gambol play'd. 50
Clean as young lambkins or the goose's down,
And like the goldfinch in her Sunday gown.
The witless lamb may sport upon the plain,
The frisking kid delight the gaping swain,
The wanton calf may skip with many a bound,
And my cur Tray play deffest feats around;
But neither lamb, nor kid, nor calf, nor Tray,
Dance like Buxoma on the first of May.

LOBBIN CLOUT.

Sweet is my toil when Blouzelind is near;
Of her bereft, 'tis winter all the year.
With her no sultry summer's heat I know; 60
In winter, when she's nigh, with love I glow.
Come, Blouzelinda, ease thy swain's desire,
My summer's shadow, and my winter's fire!

CUDDY.

As with Buxoma once I work'd at hay,
Ev'n noon-tide labour seem'd an holiday;
And holidays, if haply she were gone,
Like worky-days I wish'd would soon be done.

Ver. 25. Eerst; a contraction of ere this; it signifies sometime ago, or formerly.

Ver. 56. Deft, an old word, signifying brisk, or nimble.

Eftsoons, O sweetheart kind, my love repay,
And all the year shall then be holiday.

70

LOBBIN CLOUT.

As Blouzelinda, in a gamesome mood,
Behind a haycock loudly laughing stood,
I alily ran, and snatch'd a hasty kiss;
She wip'd her lips, nor took it much amiss.
Believe me, Cuddy, while I'm bold to say,
Her breath was sweeter than the ripen'd hay.

CUDDY.

As my Buxoma, in a morning fair,
With gentle finger strok'd her milky care,
I queintly stole a kiss, at first, 'tis true,
She frown'd, yet after granted one or two.
Lobbin, I swear, believe who will my vows,
Her breath by far excell'd the breathing cows.

80

LOBBIN CLOUT.

Leek to the Welch, to Dutchmen butter's dear,
Of Irish swains potatoe is the cheer;
Oats for their feasts the Scottish shepherds grind,
Sweet turnips are the food of Blouzelind.
While she loves turnips, butter I'll despise,
Nor leeks, nor oatmeal, nor potato, prize.

CUDDY.

In good roast-beef my landlord sticks his knife,
The capon fat delights his dainty wife,
Pudding our parson eats, the squire loves hare,
But white-pot thick is my Buxoma's fare.
While she loves white-pot, capon ne'er shall be,
Nor hare, nor beef, nor pudding, food for me.

90

LOBBIN CLOUT.

As once I play'd at blindman's buff, it hapt
About my eyes the towel thick was wrapt.
I miss'd the swains, and seiz'd on Blouzelind,
True speaks that ancient proverb, "Love is blind."

CUDDY.

As at hot-cockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown;
Buxoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and read soft mischief in her eye.

100

Ver. 69. Eftsoons, from eft, an ancient British word, signifying soon. So that eftsoons is a doubling of the word soon; which is, as it were, to say twice soon, or very soon.

Ver. 79. Queint has various significations in the ancient English authors. I have used it in this place in the same sense as Chaucer hath done in his Miller's Tale. "As clerkes being full subtle and queint," (by which he means arch, or waggish); and not in that obscene sense wherein he useth it in the line immediately following.

Ver. 85.

Populus Alcidae gratissima, vitis Iaccho,
Formosa myrtus Veneri, sua laurea Phoebo,
Phillis amat corylos. Illas dum Phillis amabit
Nec myrtus vincet corylos nec laurea Phœbi. &c.

V. 80.

LOBBIN CLOUT.

On two near elms the slacken'd cord I hung,
Now high, now low, my Blouzelinda swung,
With the rude wind her rump'd garment rose,
And show'd her taper leg, and scarlet hose.

CUDDY.

Across the fallen oak the plank I laid,
And myself pois'd against the tottering maid
High leap'd the plank; adown Buxoma fell;
I spy'd — but faithful sweethearts never tell.

LOBBIN CLOUT.

This riddle, Cuddy, if thou canst explain,
This wily riddle puzzles every swain.
"What flower is that which bears the virgin's name?
"The richest metal joined with the same?"

CUDDY.

Answer, thou carle, and judge this riddle right,
I'll frankly own thee for a cunning wight.
"What flower is that which royal honour craves
Adjoin the virgin, and 'tis strown on graves?"

CLODDIPOLE.

Forbear, contending louts, give o'er your strife
An oaken staff each merits for his pains.
But see the sun-beams bright to labour warn,
And gild the thatch of goodman Hodge's barn.
Your herds for want of water stand a-dry,
They're weary of your songs — and so am I.

TUESDAY; OR, THE DITTY.

MARIAN.

Young Colin Clout, a lad of peerless meet,
Full well could dance, and deftly tune the reed;
In every wood his carols sweet were known,
At every wake his nimble feats were shown.
When in the ring the rustic routs he threw,
The damsels' pleasures with his conquests grew.
Or when aslant the cudgel threats his head,
His danger smites the breast of every maid,
But chief of Marian. Marian lov'd the swain.
The parson's maid, and neatest of the plain;
Marian, that soft could stroke the udder'd cow,
Or lessen with her sieve the barley-mow;
Marbled with sage the hardening cheese she press'd,
And yellow butter Marian's skill confess'd;
But Marian now, devoid of country cares,
Nor yellow butter, nor sage-cheese, prepares,
For yearning love the witless maid employs,
And "Love" say swains, "all busy heed destroy."
Colin makes mock at all her piteous smart;
A lass that Cicely hight had won his heart,

Ver. 103—110 were not in the early edition.

Ver. 113. Marygold.

Ver. 117. Rosemary.

Dic quibus in terris inscripti nomina regum
Nascantur flores

Ver. 120. Et vitula tu dignus & hic.

Cicely, the western lass, that tends the kee,
 The rival of the parson's maid was she.
 A dreary shade now Marian lies along,
 And, mixt with sighs, thus wails in plaining song :
 " Ah, woeful day ! ah, woeful noon and morn !
 When first by thee my younglings white were shorn ;
 When first, I ween, I cast a lover's eye,
 My sheep were silly, but more silly I.
 Beneath the shears they felt no lasting smart,
 They lost but fleeces, while I lost a heart. 30
 " Ah, Colin ! canst thou leave thy sweetheart
 True ?
 What I have done for thee, will Cicely do ?
 Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,
 And knit thee gloves made of her own spun yarn ?
 Will she with huswife's hand provide thy meat ?
 And every Sunday morn thy neckcloth plait,
 Which o'er thy kersey doublet spreading wide,
 At service-time drew Cicely's eyes aside ?
 " Where'er I gad, I cannot hide my care,
 My new disasters in my look appear. 40
 White as the curd my ruddy cheek is grown,
 Thin my features, that I'm hardly known.
 My neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
 " Ashes, leather, oatmeal, bran, and chalk ;
 " Wittingly of Marian they divine,
 And wist not that with thoughtful love I pine.
 " Colin Clout, untoward shepherd swain,
 Talks whistling blithe, while pitiful I plain.
 " Whilom with thee 'twas Marian's dear delight
 To moil all day, and merry-make at night. 50
 In the soil you guide the crooked share,
 And early breakfast is my constant care ;
 And when with even hand you strow the grain,
 Right the thievish rooks from off the plain.
 " Missing days, when I my thresher heard,
 With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd ;
 And in the music of the whirling flail,
 My gaze on thee I left the smoking pail :
 At harvest, when the Sun was mounted high,
 My leathern bottle did thy draught supply ; 60
 Where'er you mow'd, I follow'd with the rake,
 And have full oft been sun-burnt for thy sake :
 When in the welkin gathering showers were seen,
 I g'd the last with Colin on the green ;
 And when at eve returning with thy car,
 Waiting heard the jingling bells from far,
 Light on the fire the sooty pot I plac'd,
 Warm thy broth I burnt my hands for haste.
 When hungry thou stood'st staring, like an oaf,
 I laid the luncheon from the barley-loaf ; 70
 The crumbled bread I thicken'd well thy mess.
 " Love me more, or love thy pottage less !
 " Last Friday's eve, when as the Sun was set,
 Near you stile, three sallow gypsies met.
 On my hand they cast a poring look,
 And me beware, and thrice their heads they shook :
 They said, that many crosses I must prove ;
 Not in my worldly gain, but most in love.
 At morn I miss'd three hens and our old cock ;
 And of the bedge two pinner and a smock ; 80
 And these losses with a Christian mind,
 And no mishaps could feel, while thou wert kind.
 " Alas ! I grew my Colin's scorn,
 And known no pleasure, night, or noon, or morn.
 " Come, ye gypsies ; bring him home again,
 And to a constant lass give back her swain.

" Have I not sat with thee full many a night,
 When dying embers were our only light,
 When every creature did in slumbers lie,
 Besides our cat, my Colin Clout, and I ? 90
 No troublous thoughts the cat or Colin move,
 While I alone am kept awake by love.

" Remember, Colin, when at last year's wake
 I bought the costly present for thy sake ;
 Could'st thou spell o'er the posy on thy knife,
 And with another change thy state of life ?
 If thou forgett'st, I wot, I can repeat,
 My memory can tell the verse so sweet :
 ' As this is grav'd upon this knife of thine,
 So is thy image on this heart of mine. ' 100
 But woe is me ! such presents luckless prove,
 For knives, they tell me, always sever love."

Thus Marian wail'd, her eyes with tears brimful,
 When Goody Dobbins brought her cow to bull.
 With apron blue to dry her tears she sought,
 Then saw the cow well serv'd, and took a goat.

WEDNESDAY; OR, THE DUMPS.*

SPARABELLA.

THE wailings of a maiden I recite,
 A maiden fair, that Sparabella hight.
 Such strains ne'er warble in the linnet's throat,
 Nor the gay goldfinch chants so sweet a note.
 No magpye chatter'd, nor the painted jay,
 No ox was heard to low, nor ass to bray ;
 No rustling breezes play'd the leaves among,
 While thus her madrigal the damsel sung.

A while, O D'Urfey ! lend an ear or twain,
 Nor, tho' in homely guise, my verse disdain ; 10
 Whether thou seek'st new kingdoms in the Sun,
 Whether thy Muse does at Newmarket run,
 Or does with gossips at a feast regale,
 And heighten her conceits with sack and ale,
 Or else at wakes with Joan and Hodge rejoice,
 Where D'Urfey's lyrics swell in every voice ;

* Dumps, or dumbs, made use of to express a fit of the sullens. Some have pretended that it is derived from Dumops, a king of Egypt, that built a pyramid, and died of melancholy: So mopes, after the same manner, is thought to have come from Merops, another Egyptian king, that died of the same distemper. But our English antiquaries have conjectured that dumps, which is a grievous heaviness of spirits, comes from the word dumplin, the heaviest kind of pudding that is eaten in this country, much used in Norfolk, and other counties of England.

Ver. 9.

Tu mihi, seu magni superas jam saxa Timavi,
 Sive oram Illyrici legis aquoris — VIRG.

Ver. 11. An opera written by this author, called The World in the Sun, or the Kingdom of Birds ; he is also famous for his song on the Newmarket horse-race, and several others that are sung by the British swains.

Yet suffer me, thou bard of wondrous meed,
Amid thy bays to weave this rural weed.

Now the Sun drove adown the western road,
And oxen, laid at rest, forgot the goad, 20
The clown, fatigued, trudg'd homeward with his spade,

Across the meadows stretch'd the lengthen'd shade ;
When Sparabella, pensive and forlorn,
Alike with yearning love and labour worn,
Lean'd on her rake, and straight with doleful guise
Did this sad plaint in mournful notes devise :

"Come Night, as dark as pitch, surround my head,
From Sparabella Bumkinet is fled ;
The ribbon that his valorous cudgel won,
Last Sunday happier Clumsilis put on. 30

Sure if he'd eyes, (but Love, they say, has none)
I whilom by that ribbon had been known.

Ah, well-a-day ! I'm shent with baneful smart,
For with the ribbon he bestow'd his heart.

"My plaint, ye lasses, with this burthen aid,
'Tis hard so true a damsel dies a maid.'

"Shall heavy Clumsilis with me compare ?
View this, ye lovers, and like me despair.
Her blubber'd lip by smutty pipes is worn,
And in her breath tobacco whiffs are borne ! 40
The cleanly cheese-press she could never turn,
Her awkward fist did ne'er employ the churn ;
If e'er she brew'd, the drink would straight go sour,
Before it ever felt the thunder's power ;
No huswifery the dowdy creature knew ;
To sum up all, her tongue confess'd the shrew.

"My plaint, ye lasses, with this burthen aid,
'Tis hard so true a damsel dies a maid.'

"I've often seen my visage in yon lake,
Nor are my features of the homeliest make : 50
Though Clumsilis may boast a whiter dye,
Yet the black sloe turns in my rolling eye ;
And fairest blossoms drop with every blast,
But the brown beauty will like hollies last.
Her wan complexion's like the wither'd leek,
While Katharine pears adorn my ruddy cheek.
Yet she, alas ! the witless lout hath won,
And by her gain poor Sparabell's undone !
Let hares and hounds in coupling straps unite,
The clucking hen make friendship with the kite ;
Let the fox simply wear the nuptial noose, 61
And join in wedlock with the waddling goose ;
For love hath brought a stranger thing to pass,
The fairest shepherd weds the foulest lass.

"My plaint, ye lasses, with this burthen aid,
'Tis hard so true a damsel dies a maid.'

And speckled mackrel graze the meadows fair ;
Sooner shall screech-owls bask in sunny day,
And the slow ass on trees, like squirrels, play ; 70
Sooner shall snails on insect pinions rove ;
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love.

"My plaint, ye lasses, with this burthen aid,
'Tis hard so true a damsel dies a maid.'

"Ah ! didst thou know what proffers I withstood,
When late I met the squire in yonder wood !
To me he sped, regardless of his game,
While all my cheek was glowing red with shame ;
My lip he kiss'd, and prais'd my healthful look,
Then from his purse of silk a guinea took, 80
Into my hand he forc'd the tempting gold,
While I with modest struggling broke his hold.
He swore that Dick, in livery strip'd with lace,
Should wed me soon, to keep me from disgrace ;
But I nor footmen priz'd, nor golden fee ;
For what is lace or gold, compar'd to thee ?

"My plaint, ye lasses, with this burthen aid,
'Tis hard so true a damsel dies a maid.'

"Now plain I ken whence Love his rise began :
Sure he was born some bloody butcher's son, 90
Bred up in shambles, where our younglings slain
Erst taught him mischief, and to sport with pain.
The father only silly sheep annoys,
The son the sillier shepherdess destroys.
Does son or father greater mischief do ?
The sire is cruel, so the son is too.

"My plaint, ye lasses, with this burthen aid,
'Tis hard so true a damsel dies a maid.'

"Farewell, ye woods, ye meads, ye streams that flow ;

A sudden death shall rid me of my woe. 100
This penknife keen my windpipe shall divide.
What ! shall I fall as squeaking pigs have dy'd ?
No — To some tree this carcass I'll suspend.
But worrying curs find such untimely end !
I'll speed me to the pond, where the high stool
On the long plank hangs o'er the muddy pool ;
That stool, the dread of every scolding queen ;
Yet, sure a lover should not die so mean !
There plac'd aloft, I'll rave and rail by fits,
Though all the parish say I've lost my wits ; 110
And thence, if courage holds, myself I'll throw,
And quench my passion in the lake below.

"Ye lasses, cease your burthen, cease to moan.
And, by my case forewarn'd, go mind your own."

THURSDAY; OR. THE SPELL.

HORNELIA.

HORNELIA, seated in a dreary vale,
In pensive mood rehears'd her piteous tale ;
Her piteous tale the winds in sighs bemoan,
And pining echo answers groan for groan.
“ I rue the day, a rueful day, I trow,
The woeful day, a day indeed of woe !
When Lubberkin to town his cattle drove,
A maiden fine bedight he hapt to love ;
The maiden fine bedight his love retains,
And for the village he forsakes the plains. 10
Return, my Lubberkin, these ditties hear ;
Spells will I try, and spells shall ease my care.

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’

“ When first the year I heard the cuckoo sing,
And call with welcome note the budding spring,
I straightway set a running with such haste,
Deborah that won the smock scarce ran so fast ;
Till spent for lack of breath, quite weary grown,
Upon a rising bank I sat adown, 20
Then doff'd my shoe, and, by my troth, I swear,
Therein I spy'd this yellow frizzled hair,
As like to Lubberkin's in curl and hue,
As if upon his comely pate it grew.

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’

“ At eve last Midsummer no sleep I sought,
But to the field a bag of bemp-seed brought ;
I scatter'd round the seed on every side,
And three times in a trembling accent cry'd, 30
‘ This bemp-seed with my virgin hand I sow,
Who shall my true-love be, the crop shall mow.’
I straight look'd back, and, if my eyes speak truth,
With his keen scythe behind me came the youth.

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’

“ Last Valentine, the day when birds of kind
Their paramours with mutual chirpings find ;
I early rose, just at the break of day,
Before the Sun had chas'd the stars away ; 40
A-field I went, amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine (for so should huswives do) ;
The first I spy'd ; and the first swain we see,
In spite of Fortune, shall our true-love be.
See, Lubberkin, each bird his partner take ;
And canst thou then thy sweetheart dear forsake ?

Ver. 8. Dight, or bedight, from the Saxon word dehtan, which signifies to set in order.
Ver. 21. Doff and don, contracted from the words do off and do on.

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’

“ Last May-day fair I search'd to find a snail,
That might my secret lover's name reveal. 50
Upon a gooseberry-bush a snail I found,
(For always snails near sweetest fruit abound).
I seiz'd the vermine, whom I quickly sped,
And on the earth the milk-white embers spread.
Slow crawl'd the snail ; and, if I right can spell,
In the soft ashes mark'd a curious L.
Oh, may this wondrous omen lucky prove !
For L is found in Lubberkin and Love.

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’ 60

“ Two hazel nuts I threw into the flame,
And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name ;
This with the loudest bounce me sore amaz'd,
That in a flame of brightest colour blaz'd.
As blaz'd the nut, so may thy passion grow ;
For 'twas thy nut that did so brightly glow.

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’ 68

“ As peasecods once I pluck'd, I chanc'd to see
One that was closely fill'd with three times three.
Which, when I cropp'd, I safely home convey'd,
And o'er the door the spell in secret laid ;
My wheel I turn'd, and sung a ballad new,
While from the spindle I the fleeces drew ;
The latch mov'd up, when, who should first come in,
But, in his proper person — Lubberkin.
I broke my yarn, surpris'd the sight to see ;
Sure sign that he would break his word with me.
Eftsoons I join'd it with my wonted slight :
So may again his love with mine unite ! 80

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’

“ This lady-fly I take from off the grass,
Whose spotted back might scarlet red surpass,
‘ Fly, lady-bird, North, South, or East, or West,
Fly where the man is found that I love best.
He leaves my hand ; see, to the West he's flown,
To call my true-love from the faithless town.

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’ 90

“ I pare this pippin round and round again,
My shepherd's name to flourish on the plain,
I fling th' unbroken paring o'er my head,
Upon the grass a perfect L is read ;
Yet on my heart a fairer L is seen
Than what the paring makes upon the green.

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’

Ver. 93. Transque caput jace ; ne respexeris.
VIRG.

“ This pippin shall another trial make,
See from the core two kernels brown I take ; 100
This on my cheek for Lubberkin is worn ;
And Boobyclod on t’ other side is borne.
But Boobyclod soon drops upon the ground,
A certain token that his love’s unsound ;
While Lubberkin sticks firmly to the last ;
Oh, were his lips to mine but join’d so fast !

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’

“ As Lubberkin once slept beneath a tree,
I twitch’d his dangling garter from his knee. 110
He wist not when the hempen string I drew,
Now mine I quickly doff, of inkle blue.
Together fast I tye the garters twain ;
And while I knit the knot repeat this strain :
‘ Three times a true-love’s knot I tye secure,
Firm be the knot, firm may his love endure !’

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’

“ As I was wont, I trudg’d last market-day
To town, with new-laid eggs preserv’d in hay, 120
I made my market long before ’twas night,
My purse grew heavy, and my basket light.
Straight to the ’pothecary’s shop I went,
And in love-powder all my money spent.
Behap what will, next Sunday, after prayers,
When to the alehouse Lubberkin repairs,
These golden flies into his mug I’ll throw,
And soon the swain with fervent love shall glow.

‘ With my sharp heel I three times mark the
ground,
And turn me thrice around, around, around.’ 130

“ But hold ! — our Lightfoot barks, and cocks his ears,
O’er yonder stile see Lubberkin appears.
He comes ! he comes ! Hobnelia’s not bewray’d,
Nor shall she, crown’d with willow, die a maid.
He vows, he swears, he’ll give me a green gown :
Oh dear ! I fall adown, adown, adown !”

FRIDAY; OR, THE DIRGE.*

BUMKINET, GRUBBINOL.

BUMKINET.

Why, Grubbinol, dost thou so wistful seem ?
There’s sorrow in thy look, if right I deem.
’Tis true yon oaks with yellow tops appear,
And chilly blasts begin to nip the year ;

* Dirge, or dyrge, a mournful dirge — a song of lamentation, over the dead ; no

From the tall elm a shower of leaves is borne,
And their lost beauty riven beeches mourn.
Yet ev’n this season pleasance blithe affords,
Now the squeez’d press foams with our apple boards.
Come, let us hie, and quaff a cheery bowl,
Let cyder new “ wash sorrow from thy soul.” 10

GRUBBINOL.

Ah, Bumkinet ! since thou from hence wert gone,
From these sad plains all merriment is flown ;
Should I reveal my grief, ’twould spoil thy cheer,
And make thine eye o’erflow with many a tear.

BUMKINET.

“ Hang sorrow !” Let’s to yonder but repair,
And with trim sonnets “ cast away our care.”
“ Gillian of Croydon” well thy pipe can play :
Thou sing’st most sweet, “ O’er hills and far away.”
Of “ Patient Grissel” I devise to sing,
And catches quaint shall make the valleys ring. 20
Come, Grubbinol, beneath this shelter, come ;
From hence we view our flocks securely roam.

GRUBBINOL.

Yes, blithsome lad, a tale I mean to sing,
But with my woe shall distant valleys ring.
The tale shall make our kiddings droop their head,
For, woe is me ! — our Blouzelind is dead !

BUMKINET.

Is Blouzelinda dead ? farewell, my glee !
No happiness is now reserv’d for me.
As the wood-pigeon coos without his mate,
So shall my doleful dirge bewail her fate. 30
Of Blouzelinda fair I mean to tell,
The peerless maid that did all maids excel.
Henceforth the morn shall dewy sorrow shed,
And evening tears upon the grass be spread ;
The rolling streams with watery grief shall flow,
And winds shall moan aloud — when loud they blow.
Henceforth, as oft as Autumn shall return,
The drooping trees, whene’er it rains, shall mourn ;
The season quite shall strip the country’s pride,
For ’twas in Autumn Blouzelinda dy’d. 40

Where’er I gad, I Blouzelind shall view,
Woods, dairy, barn, and mows, our passion knew,
When I direct my eyes to yonder wood,
Fresh rising sorrow curdles in my blood.
Thither I’ve often been the damsel’s guide,
When rotten sticks our fuel have supply’d ;
There I remember how her faggots large
Were frequently these happy shoulders’ charge.
Sometimes this crook drew hazel-boughs adown,
And stuff’d her apron wide with nuts so brown ; 50
Or when her feeding hogs had miss’d their way,
Or wallowing ’mid a feast of acorns lay ;

Latin dirige in the popish hymn, dirige gressus meos,
as some pretend ; but from the Teutonic dyrke,
laudare, to praise and extol. Whence it is possible their dyrke, and our dirge, was a laudatory song to commemorate and applaud the dead.

Ver. 15.
Incipe, Mopse, prior, si quos aut Phyllidis ignes
Aut Alconis habes laudes, aut jurgia Codri. VIRG.
Ver. 27. Glee, joy ; from the Dutch glee, to recreate.

Th' untoward creatures to the sty I drove,
 And whistled all the way — or told my love.
 If by the dairy's hatch I chance to hie,
 I shall her goodly countenance espy;
 For there her goodly countenance I've seen,
 Set off with kerchief starch'd and pinnars clean,
 Sometimes, like wax, she rolls the butter round
 Or with the wooden lily prints the pound. 60
 Whilom I've seen her skim the clouted cream,
 And press from spungy curds the milky stream:
 But now, alas! these ears shall hear no more
 The whining swine surround the dairy door;
 No more her care shall fill the hollow tray,
 To fat the guzzling hogs with floods of whey.
 Lament, ye swine, in grunting spend your grief,
 For you, like me, have lost your sole relief.
 When in the barn the sounding flail I ply,
 Where from her sieve the chaff was wont to fly; 70
 The poultry there will seem around to stand,
 Waiting upon her charitable hand.
 No succour meet the poultry now can find,
 For they, like me, have lost their Blouzelind.
 Whenever by yon barley-mow I pass,
 Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass.
 I pitch'd the sheaves, (oh, could I do so now!)
 Which she in rows pil'd on the growing mow.
 There every deale my heart by love was gain'd,
 There the sweet kiss my courtship has explain'd. 80
 Ah, Blouzelind! that mow I ne'er shall see,
 But thy memorial will revive in me.
 Lament, ye fields, and rueful symptoms show;
 Henceforth let not the smelling primrose grow;
 Let weeds, instead of butter-flowers, appear,
 And meads, instead of daisies, hemlock bear;
 For cowslips sweet let dandelions spread;
 For Blouzelinda, blithsome maid, is dead!
 Lament, ye swains, and o'er her grave bemoan,
 And spell ye right this verse upon her stone: 90
 "Here Blouzelinda lies — Alas, alas!
 Weep shepherds — and remember flesh is grass."

GRUBBINOL.

Albeit thy songs are sweeter to mine ear,
 Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear;
 Or winter porridge to the labouring youth,
 Or buns and sugar to the damsel's tooth;
 Yet Blouzelinda's name shall tune my lay,
 Of her I'll sing for ever and for aye.
 When Blouzelind expir'd, the wether's bell
 Before the drooping flock toll'd forth her knell; 100
 The solemn death-watch click'd the hour she dy'd,
 And shrilling crickets in the chimney cry'd!
 The boding raven on her cottage sate,
 And with hoarse croaking warn'd us of her fate;

Ver. 96. An imitation of Theocritus.

The lambkin, which her wonted tendance bred,
 Dropp'd on the plains that fatal instant dead;
 Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,
 Which erst I saw when Goody Dobson dy'd.
 How shall I, void of tears, her death relate,
 When on her darling's bed her mother sate! 110
 These words the dying Blouzelinda spoke,
 And of the dead let none the will revoke:
 "Mother," quoth she, "let not the poultry need,
 And give the goose wherewith to raise her breed:
 Be these my sister's care — and every morn
 Amid the ducklings let her scatter corn;
 The sickly calf that's hous'd be sure to tend,
 Feed him with milk, and from bleak colds defend.
 Yet ere I die — see, mother, yonder shelf,
 There secretly I've hid my worldly pelf. 120
 Twenty good shillings in a rag I laid;
 Be ten the parson's, for my sermon paid.
 The rest is yours — my spinning-wheel and rake
 Let Susan keep for her dear sister's sake;
 My new straw hat, that's trimly lin'd with green,
 Let Peggy wear, for she's a damsel clean.
 My leathern bottle, long in harvests try'd,
 Be Grubbinol's — this silver ring beside:
 Three silver pennies, and a nine-pence bent,
 A token kind to Bumkinet is sent." 130
 Thus spoke the maiden, while the mother cry'd;
 And peaceful, like the harmless lamb, she dy'd.
 To show their love, the neighbours far and near Follow'd with wistful look the damsel's bier.
 Sprig'd rosemary the lads and lasses bore,
 While dismally the parson walk'd before.
 Upon her grave the rosemary they threw,
 The daisy, butter-flower, and endive blue.
 After the good man warn'd us from his text, 139
 That none could tell whose turn would be the next;
 He said, that Heaven would take her soul, no
 doubt,
 And spoke the hour-glass in her praise — quite out.
 To her sweet memory, flowery garlands strung,
 O'er her now empty seat aloft were hung.
 With wicker rods we fenc'd her tomb around,
 To ward from man and beast the hallow'd ground;
 Lest her new grave the parson's cattle raze,
 For both his horse and cow the church-yard graze.
 Now we trudg'd homeward to her mother's farm,
 To drink new cyder mull'd, with ginger warm. 150
 For Gaffer Treadwell told us, by the by,
 "Excessive sorrow is exceeding dry."
 While bulls bear horns upon their curled brow,
 Or lasses with soft stroakings milk the cow;
 While paddling ducks the standing lake desire,
 Or battening hogs roll in the sinking mire;
 While moles the crumbled earth in hillocks raise;
 So long shall swains tell Blouzelinda's praise.
 Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain,
 Till bonny Susan sped across the plain. 160
 They seized the lass in apron clean array'd,
 And to the ale-house forc'd the willing maid;
 In ale and kisses they forget their cares,
 And Susan Blouzelinda's loss repairs.

Ver. 153.

SATURDAY; OR, THE FLIGHTS.

BOWZYBEUS.

Sublime strains, O rustic Muse! prepare;
Forget awhile the barn and dairy's care;
Thy homely voice to loftier numbers raise,
The drunkard's flights require sonorous lays;
With Bowzybeus' songs exalt thy verse,
While rocks and woods the various notes rehearse.

'Twas in the season when the reapers' toil
Of the ripe harvest 'gan to rid the soil;
Wide through the field was seen a goodly rout,
Clean damsels bound the gather'd sheaves about; 10
The lads, with sharpen'd hook and sweating brow,
Cut down the labours of the winter plough.
To the near hedge young Susan steps aside,
She feign'd her coat or garter was unty'd;
Whate'er she did, she stoop'd adown unseen,
And merry reapers what they list will ween.
Soon she rose up, and cry'd with voice so shrill,
That Echo answer'd from the distant hill;
The youths and damsels ran to Susan's aid,
Who thought some adder had the lass dismay'd. 20

When fast asleep they Bowzybeus spy'd,
His hat and oaken staff lay close beside;
That Bowzybeus who could sweetly sing,
Or with the rosin'd bow torment the string;
That Bowzybeus who, with fingers speed,
Could call soft warblings from the breathing reed;
That Bowzybeus who, with jocund tongue,
Ballads and roundelays and catches sung:
They loudly laugh to see the damsel's fright,
And in disport surround the drunken wight. 30

"Ah, Bowzybee, why didst thou stay so long?
The mugs were large, the drink was wondrous strong!

Thou should'st have left the fair before 'twas night;
But thou sat'st toping till the morning light."

Cicely, brisk maid, steps forth before the rout,
And kiss'd with smacking lip the snoring lout:
(For custom says, "Whoe'er this venture proves,
For such a kiss demands a pair of gloves.")

By her example Dorcas bolder grows,
And plays a tickling straw within his nose. 40

He rubs his nostril, and in wonted joke [spoke:
The sneering swains with stammering speech be-

"To you, my lads, I'll sing my carols o'er,
As for the maids — I've something else in store."

No sooner 'gan he raise his tuneful song,
But lads and lasses round about him throng.
Not ballad-singer plac'd above the crowd
Sings with a note so shrilling sweet and loud;
Nor parish-clerk, who calls the psalm so clear,
Like Bowzybeus soothes th' attentive ear. 50

Of Nature's laws his carols first begun,
Why the grave owl can never face the Sun.

For owls, as swains observe, detest the light,
And only sing and seek their prey by night.
How turnips hide their swelling heads below:
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow:
How Will-o-wisp misleads night-faring clowns
O'er hills, and sinking bogs, and pathless downs
Of stars he told, that shoot with shining trail,
And of the glow-worm's light that gilds his tail. 60
He sung where woodcocks in the Summer feed,
And in what climates they renew their breed, (and,
(Some think to northern coasts their flight they
Or to the Moon in midnight hours ascend);
Where swallows in the Winter's season keep,
And how the drowsy bat and dormouse sleep,
How Nature does the puppy's eyelid close
Till the bright Sun has nine times set and rose;
(For huntsmen by their long experience find,
That puppies still nine rolling suns are blind. 70

Now he goes on, and sings of fairs and shows,
For still new fairs before his eyes arose.
How pedlars' stalls with glittering toys are laid,
The various fairings of the country maid.
Long silken laces hang upon the twine,
And rows of pins and amber bracelets shine;
How the tight lass knives, combs, and scissors spies,
And looks on thimbles with desiring eyes.
Of lotteries next with tuneful note he told,
Where silver spoons are won, and rings of gold. 80
The lads and lasses trudge the street along,
And all the fair is crowded in his song.

The mountebank now treads the stage, and sells
His pills, his balsams, and his ague-spells;
Now o'er and o'er the nimble tumbler springs,
And on the rope the venturous maiden swings;
Jack Pudding in his party-colour'd jacket
Tosses the glove, and jokes at every packet.
Of raree-shows he sung, and Punch's feats,
Of pockets pick'd in crowds, and various chests. 90

Then sad he sung the Children in the Wood:
(Ah, barbarous uncle, stain'd with infant blood!)
How blackberries they pluck'd in deserts wild,
And fearless at the glittering falchion smil'd;
Their little corpse the robin-red-breasts found,
And strow'd with pious bill the leaves around.
(Ah, gentle birds! if this verse lasts so long,
Your names shall live for ever in my song.)

For Buxom Joan he sung the doubtful strife,
How the sly sailor made the maid a wife. 100

To louder strains he rais'd his voice, to tell
What woeful wars in Chevy-chace befell,
When Percy drove the deer with hound and horn,
Wars to be wept by children yet unborn!
Ah, Witherington! more years thy life had crown'd,
If thou hadst never heard the horn or hound!
Yet shall the 'squire, who fought on bloody stumps,
By future bards be wail'd in doleful dumps.

All in the land of Essex next he chants, 109
How to sleek mares starch quakers turn gallants:

How the grave brother stood on bank so green —
Happy for him if mares had never been !

Then he was seiz'd with a religious qualm,
And on a sudden sung the hundredth psalm.

He sung of Taffey Welch, and Sawney Scot,
Lilly-bullerò, and the Irish Trot.

Why should I tell of Bateman, or of Shore,
Or Wantley's Dragon, slain by valiant Moor,
The Bower of Rosamond, or Robin Hood,
And how the grass now grows where Troy town
stood ? 120

His carols ceas'd : the listening maids and swains
Seem still to hear some soft imperfect strains.

Sudden he rose ; and, as he reels along,
Swears kisses sweet should well reward his song.

The damsels laughing fly : the giddy clown
Again upon a wheat-sheaf drops adown ;
The power that guards the drunk, his sleep attends,
Till ruddy, like his face, the Sun descends.

THE FARMER'S WIFE AND THE RAVEN.

" Why are those tears ? why droops your head ?
Is then your other husband dead ?
Or does a worse disgrace betide ?
Hath no one since his death apply'd ? "

" Alas ! you know the cause too well ;
The salt is spilt, to me it fell ;
Then, to contribute to my loss,
My knife and fork were laid across ;
On Friday too ! the day I dread !
Would I were safe at home in bed !
Last night ( I vow to Heaven 'tis true )
Bounce from the fire a coffin flew.

Next post some fatal news shall tell :
God send my Cornish friends be well ! "

" Unhappy Widow, cease thy tears,
Nor feel affliction in thy fears ;
Let not thy stomach be suspended ;
Eat now, and weep when dinner's ended ;
And, when the butler clears the table,
For thy desert I'll read my Fable. "

Betwixt her swagging panniers' load
A Farmer's Wife to market rode,
And, jogging on, with thoughtful care,
Summ'd up the profits of her ware ;

When, starting from her silver dream,
Thus far and wide was heard her scream.

" That Raven on yon left-hand oak
( Curse on his ill-betiding croak ! )
Bodes me no good. " No more she said,
When poor blind Ball, with stumbling tread,
Fell prone ; o'erturn'd the pannier lay,
And her mash'd eggs bestrow'd the way.

She, sprawling in the yellow road,
Rail'd, swore, and curs'd : " Thou croaking toad,
A murrain take thy whoreson throat !
I knew misfortune in the note. "

" Dame, " quoth the Raven, " spare your oaths,
Unclench your fist, and wipe your clothes.
But why on me those curses thrown ?
Goody, the fault was all your own ;
For, had you laid this brittle ware
On Dun, the old sure-footed mare,
Though all the Ravens of the hundred
With croaking had your tongue out-thundered,
Sure-footed Dun had kept her legs,
And you, good woman, sav'd your eggs. "

FABLE.

THE TURKEY AND THE ANT.

In other men we faults can spy,
And blame the mote that dims their eye,
Each little speck and blemish find ;
To our own stronger errors blind.

A Turkey, tir'd of common food,
Forsook the barn, and sought the wood ;
Behind her ran an infant train,
Collecting here and there a grain.

" Draw near, my birds ! the mother cries,
This hill delicious fare supplies ;
Behold the busy negro race,
See millions blacken all the place !
Fear not ; like me, with freedom eat ;
An Ant is most delightful meat.
How bless'd, how envy'd, were our life,
Could we but 'scape the poulterer's knife ;
But man, curs'd man, on Turkeys preys,
And Christmas shortens all our days.
Sometimes with oysters we combine,
Sometimes assist the savoury chine ;
From the low peasant to the lord,
The Turkey smokes on every board,
Sure men for gluttony are curs'd,
Of the seven deadly sins the worst. "

An Ant, who climb'd beyond his reach,
Thus answer'd from the neighbouring beech :
" Ere you remark another's sin,
Bid thy own conscience look within ;
Control thy more voracious bill,
Nor for a breakfast nations kill. "

MATTHEW GREEN.

MATTHEW GREEN, a truly original poet, was born, probably at London, in 1696. His parents were respectable Dissenters, who brought him up within the limits of the sect. His learning was confined to a little Latin; but, from the frequency of his classical allusions, it may be concluded that what he read when young, he did not forget. The austerity in which he was educated had the effect of inspiring him with settled disgust; and he fled from the gloom of dissenting worship when he was no longer compelled to attend it. Thus set loose from the opinions of his youth, he speculated very freely on religious topics, and at length adopted the system of outward compliance with established forms and inward laxity of belief. He seems at one time to have been much inclined to the principles of Quakerism; but he found that its practice would not agree with one who lived "by pulling off the hat." We find that he had obtained a place in the Custom house, the duties of which he is said to have discharged with great diligence and fidelity. It is further attested, that he was a man of great probity and sweetness of disposition, and that his conversation abounded with wit, but of the most inoffensive kind. He seems to have been subject to low-spirits, as a relief from which he composed his principal poem, "The Spleen." He passed his life in celibacy, and died in 1737, at the early age of forty-one, in lodgings in Gracechurch-street.

The poems of Green, which were not made public till after his death, consist of "The Spleen;" "The Grotto;" "Verses on Barclay's Apology;" "The Seeker," and some smaller pieces, all comprised in a small volume. In manner and subject they are some of the most original in our language. They rank among the easy and familiar, but are replete with uncommon thoughts, new and striking images, and those associations of remote ideas by some unexpected similitudes, in which wit principally consists. Few poems will bear more repeated perusals; and, with those who can fully enter into them, they do not fail to become favourites.

THE SPLEEN. *

AN EPISTLE TO MR. CUTHBERT JACKSON.

THIS motley piece to you I send,
Who always were a faithful friend;
Who, if disputes should happen hence,
Can best explain the author's sense;
And, anxious for the public weal,
Do, what I sing, so often feel.

The want of method pray excuse,
Allowing for a vapour'd Muse:
Nor to a narrow path confin'd,
Hedge in by rules a roving mind.

The child is genuine, you may trace
Throughout the sire's transmitted face.
Nothing is stol'n: my Muse, though mean,
Draws from the spring she finds within;
Nor vainly buys what Gildon † sells,
Poetic buckets for dry wells.

* "In this poem," Mr. Melmoth says, "there are more original thoughts thrown together than he had ever read in the same compass of lines."

FITZOSBORNE'S Letters, p. 114.

† Gildon's Art of Poetry.

School-helps I want, to climb on high,
Where all the ancient treasures lie,
And there unseen commit a theft
On wealth in Greek exchequers left.
Then where? from whom? what can I steal,
Who only with the moderns deal?
This were attempting to put on
Raiment from naked bodies won ‡:
They safely sing before a thief,
They cannot give who want relief;
Some few excepted, names well known,
And justly laurel'd with renown,
Whose stamp of genius marks their ware,
And theft detects: of theft beware;
From More § so lash'd, example fit,
Shun petty larceny in wit.

First know, my friend, I do not mean
To write a treatise on the spleen;

‡ A painted vest Prince Vortiger had on,
Which from a naked Pict his grandsire won.
HOWARD'S British Prince.

§ James More Smith, esq. See Dunciad, B. ii. l. 50. and the notes, where the circumstances of the transaction here alluded to are very fully explained.

Nor to prescribe when nerves convulse ;
 Nor mend th' alarm watch, your pulse.
 If I am right, your question lay,
 What course I take to drive away
 The day-mare, Spleen, by whose false pleas
 Men prove mere suicides in ease ;
 And how I do myself demean
 In stormy world to live serene.

When by its magic lantern Spleen
 With frightful figures spreads life's scene,
 And threat'ning prospects urg'd my fears,
 A stranger to the luck of heirs ;
 Reason, some quiet to restore,
 Show'd part was substance, shadow more ;
 With Spleen's dead weight though heavy grown,
 In life's rough tide I sunk not down,
 But swam, till Fortune threw a rope,
 Buoyant on bladders fill'd with hope.

I always choose the plainest food
 To mend viscosity of blood.
 Hail ! water-gruel, healing power,
 Of easy access to the poor ;
 Thy help love's confessors implore,
 And doctors secretly adore ;
 To thee, I fly, by thee dilute —
 Through veins my blood doth quicker shoot,
 And by swift current throws off clean
 Prolific particles of Spleen.

I never sick by drinking grow,
 Nor keep myself a cup too low,
 And seldom Chloe's lodgings haunt,
 Thrifty of spirits, which I want.

Hunting I reckon very good,
 To brace the nerves, and stir the blood :
 But after no field-honours itch,
 Achiev'd by leaping hedge and ditch.
 While Spleen lies soft relax'd in bed,
 Or o'er coal fires inclines the head,
 Hygeia's sons with hound and horn,
 And jovial cry awake the Morn.
 These see her from the dusky plight,
 Smear'd by th' embraces of the Night,
 With rosal wash redeem her face,
 And prove herself of Titan's race,
 And, mounting in loose robes the skies,
 Shed light and fragrance as she flies.
 Then horse and hound fierce joy display,
 Exulting at the hark-away,
 And in pursuit o'er tainted ground,
 From lungs robust field-notes resound.
 Then, as St. George the dragon slew,
 Spleen pierc'd, trod down, and dying view ;
 While all their spirits are on wing,
 And woods, and hills, and valleys ring.

To cure the mind's wrong bias, Spleen,
 Some recommend the bowling-green ;
 Some, hilly walks ; all, exercise ;
 Fling but a stone, the giant dies ;
 Laugh and be well. Monkeys have been Extreme good doctors for the Spleen ;
 And kitten, if the humour hit,
 Has harlequin'd away the fit.

Since mirth is good in this behalf,
 At some partic'lars let us laugh.
 Witlings, brisk fools, curst with half sense,
 That stimulates their impotence ;
 Who buzz in rhyme, and, like blind flies,
 Err with their wings for want of eyes.
 Poor authors worshipping a calf,
 Deep tragedies that make us laugh,

A strict dissenter saying grace,
 A lect'rer preaching for a place,
 Folks, things prophetic to dispense.
 Making the past the future tense,
 The popish dubbing of a priest,
 Fine epitaphs on knaves deceas'd,
 Green-apron'd Pythonissa's rage,
 Great Æsculapius on his stage,
 A miser starving to be rich,
 The prior of Newgate's dying speech,
 A jointer'd widow's ritual state,
 Two Jews disputing tête-à-tête,
 New almanacs compos'd by seers,
 Experiments on felons' ears,
 Disdainful prudes, who ceaseless ply
 The superb muscle of the eye,
 A coquet's April-weather face,
 A Queenb'rough mayor behind his mace,
 And fops in military show,
 Are sov'reign for the case in view.

If spleen-fogs rise at close of day,
 I clear my ev'ning with a play,
 Or to some concert take my way.
 The company, the shine of lights,
 The scenes of humour, music's flights,
 Adjust and set the soul to rights.

Life's moving pictures, well-wrought plays,
 To others' grief attention raise :
 Here, while the tragic fictions glow,
 We borrow joy by pitying woe ;
 There gaily comic scenes delight,
 And hold true mirrors to our sight.
 Virtue, in charming dress array'd,
 Calling the passions to her aid,
 When moral scenes just actions join,
 Takes shape, and shows her face divine.

Music has charms, we all may find,
 Ingratiate deeply with the mind.
 When art does sound's high pow'r advance,
 To music's pipe the passions dance ;
 Motions unwill'd its pow'rs have shown,
 Tarantulated by a tune.
 Many have held the soul to be
 Nearly ally'd to harmony.
 Her have I known indulging grief,
 And shunning company's relief.
 Unveil her face, and, looking round,
 Own, by neglecting sorrow's wound,
 The consanguinity of sound.

In rainy days keep double guard,
 Or Spleen will surely be too hard ;
 Which, like those fish by sailors met,
 Fly highest, while their wings are wet.
 In such dull weather, so unfit
 To enterprize a work of wit,
 When clouds one yard of azure sky,
 That's fit for simile, deny,
 I dress my face with studious looks,
 And shorten tedious hours with books.
 But if dull fogs invade the head,
 That mem'ry minds not what is read,
 I sit in window dry as ark,
 And on the drowning world remark :
 Or to some coffee-house I stray
 For news, the manna of a day,
 And from the hipp'd discourses gather,
 That politics go by the weather :
 Then seek good-humour'd tavern chums,
 And play at cards, but for small sums ;

Or with the merry fellows quaff,
And laugh aloud with them that laugh ;
Or drink a joco-serious cup
With souls who've took their freedom up,
And let my mind, beguil'd by talk,
In Epicurus' garden walk,
Who thought it Heav'n to be serene ;
Pain, Hell, and purgatory, Spleen.

Sometimes I dress, with women sit,
And chat away the gloomy fit ; .
Quit the stiff garb of serious sense,
And wear a gay impertinence,
Nor think nor speak with any pains,
But lay on fancy's neck the reins ;
Talk of unusual swell of waist
In maid of honour loosely lac'd,
And beauty bor'wing Spanish red,
And loving pair with sep'rate bed,
And jewels pawn'd for loss of game,
And then redeem'd by loss of fame ;
Of Kitty (aunt left in the lurch
By grave pretence to go to church)
Perceiv'd in back with lover fine,
Like Will and Mary on the coin :
And thus in modish manner we,
In aid of sugar, sweeten tea.

Permit, ye fair, your idol form,
Which e'en the coldest heart can warm,
May with its beauties grace my line,
While I bow down before its shrine,
And your throng'd altars with my lays
Perfume, and get by giving praise.
With speech so sweet, so sweet a 'mien
You excommunicate the Spleen,
Which, fiend-like, flies the magic ring
You form with sound, when pleas'd to sing ;
Whate'er you say, howe'er you move,
We look, we listen, and approve.
Your touch, which gives to feeling bliss,
Our nerves officious throng to kiss ;
By Celia's pat, on their report,
The grave-air'd soul, inclin'd to sport,
Renounces wisdom's sullen pomp,
And loves the floral game, to romp.
But who can view the pointed rays,
That from black eyes scintillant blaze ?
Love on his throne of glory seems
Encompass'd with satellite beams.
But when blue eyes, more softly bright,
Diffuse benignly humid light,
We gaze, and see the smiling loves,
And Cytherea's gentle doves,
And raptur'd fix in such a face
Love's mercy-seat, and throne of grace.
Shine but on age, you melt its snow ;
Again fires long-extinguish'd glow,
And, charm'd by witchery of eyes,
Blood long congealed liquefies !
True miracle, and fairly done
By heads which are ador'd while on.

But oh, what pity 'tis to find
Such beauties both of form and mind,
By modern breeding much debas'd,
In half the female world at least !
Hence I with care such lott'ries shun,
Where, a prize miss'd, I'm quite undone ;
And han't, by vent'ring on a wife,
Yet run the greatest risk in life.

Mothers, and guardian aunts, forbear
Your impious pains to form the fair,

Nor lay out so much cost and art,
But to deflow'r the virgin heart ;
Of every folly-fost'ring bed
By quick'ning heat of custom bred.
Rather than by your culture spoil'd,
Dexist, and give us nature wild,
Delighted with a hoyden soul,
Which truth and innocence control.
Coquets, leave off affected arts,
Gay fowlers at a flock of hearts ;
Woodcocks to shun your snares have skill
You show so plain, you strive to kill.
In love the artless catch the game,
And they scarce miss who never aim.
The world's great Author did create
The sex to fit the nuptial state,
And meant a blessing in a wife
To solace the fatigues of life ;
And old inspired times display,
How wives could love, and yet obey.
Then truth, and patience of control,
And house-wife arts adorn'd the soul ;
And charms, the gift of Nature, shone ;
And jealousy, a thing unknown :
Veils were the only masks they wore ;
Novels (receipts to make a whore)
Nor ombre, nor quadrille they knew,
Nor Pam's puissance felt at loo.
Wise men did not to be thought gay,
Then compliment their pow'r away :
But lest, by frail desires misled,
The girls forbidden paths should tread,
Of ign'rance rais'd the safe high wall ;
We sink haw-haws, that show them all.
Thus we at once solicit sense,
And charge them not to break the fence.

Now, if untir'd, consider friend,
What I avoid to gain my end.

I never am at meeting seen,
Meeting, that region of the Spleen ;
The broken heart, the busy fiend,
The inward call, on Spleen depend.

Law, licens'd breaking of the peace,
To which vacation is disease :
A gypsy diction scarce known well
By th' magi, who law-fortunes tell,
I shun ; nor let it breed within
Anxiety, and that the Spleen ;
Law, grown a forest, where perplex
The mazes, and the brambles vex ;
Where its twelve verd'ers every day
Are changing still the public way :
Yet, if we miss our path and err,
We grievous penalties incur ;
And wand'ers tire, and tear their skin,
And then get out where they went in.

I never game, and rarely bet,
Am loth to lend, or run in debt.
No compter-writs me agitate ;
Who moralising pass the gate,
And there mine eyes on spendthrifts turn,
Who vainly o'er their bondage mourn.
Wisdom, before beneath their care,
Pays her upbraiding visits there,
And forces folly through the grate,
Her panegyric to repeat.
This view, profusely when inclin'd,
Enters a caveat in the mind :

" Hence join'd with common sense,
This is a providence.

Passion, as frequently is seen,
 Subsiding settles into Spleen.
 Hence, as the plague of happy life,
 I run away from party-strife.
 A prince's cause, a church's claim,
 I've known to raise a mighty flame,
 And priest, as stoker, very free
 To throw in peace and charity.
 That tribe, whose practicals decree
 Small beer the deadliest heresy ;
 Who, fond of pedigree, derive
 From the most noted whore alive ;
 Who own wine's old prophetic aid,
 And love the mitre Bacchus made,
 Forbid the faithful to depend
 On half-pint drinkers for a friend,
 And in whose gay red-letter'd face
 We read good-living more than grace :
 Nor they so pure, and so precise,
 Immac'late as their white of eyes,
 Who for the spirit hug the Spleen,
 Phylacter'd throughout all their mien,
 Who their ill-tasted home-brew'd pray'r
 To the state's mellow forms prefer ;
 Who doctrines, as infectious, fear,
 Which are not steep'd in vinegar,
 And samples of heart chested grace
 Expose in show-glass of the face,
 Did never me as yet provoke
 Either to honour band and cloke,
 Or deck my hat with leaves of oak.

I rail not with mock-patriot grace
 At folks, because they are in place ;
 Nor, hir'd to praise with stallion pen,
 Serve the ear-lechery of men ;
 But to avoid religious jars,
 The laws are my expositors,
 Which in my doubting mind create
 Conformity to church and state.
 I go, pursuant to my plan,
 To Mecca with the caravan.
 And think it right in common sense
 Both for diversion and defence.

Reforming schemes are none of mine ;
 To mend the world 's a vast design :
 Like theirs, who tug in little boat,
 To pull to them the ship afloat,
 While to defeat their labour'd end,
 At once both wind and stream contend :
 Success herein is seldom seen,
 And zeal, when baffled, turns to Spleen.

Happy the man, who innocent,
 Grieves not at ills he can't prevent ;
 His skiff does with the current glide,
 Not puffing pull'd against the tide.
 He, peddling by the scuffling crowd,
 Sets unconcern'd life's wager row'd,
 And when he can't prevent foul play,
 Enjoys the folly of the fray.

By these reflections I repeal
 Each hasty promise made in zeal.
 When gospel propagators say,
 We're bound our great light to display,
 And Indian darkness drive away,
 Yet none but drunken watchmen send,
 And scoundrel link-boys for that end ;
 When they cry up this holy war,
 Which every christian should be for,
 Yet such as owe the law their ears,
 We find employed as engineers :

This view my forward zeal so shocks,
 In vain they hold the money-box.
 At such a conduct, which intends
 By vicious means such virtuous ends,
 I laugh off spleen, and keep my pence
 From spoiling Indian innocence.

Yet philosophic love of ease
 I suffer not to prove disease,
 But rise up in the virtuous cause
 Of a free press, and equal laws.
 The press restrain'd ! nefarious thought !
 In vain our sires have nobly fought :
 While free from force the press remains,
 Virtue and Freedom cheer our plains,
 And Learning largesses bestows,
 And keeps uncensur'd open house.
 We to the nation's public mart
 Our works of wit, and schemes of art,
 And philosophic goods this way,
 Like water-carriage, cheap convey.
 This tree, which knowledge so affords,
 Inquisitors with flaming swords
 From lay approach with zeal defend,
 Lest their own paradise should end.
 The Press from her fecundous womb
 Brought forth the arts of Greece and Rome ;
 Her offspring, skill'd in logic war,
 Truth's banner wav'd in open air ;
 The monster Superstition fled,
 And hid in shades its Gorgon head ;
 And lawless pow'r, the long-kept field,
 By reason quell'd, was forc'd to yield.
 This nurse of arts, and freedom's fence
 To chain, is treason against sense ;
 And, Liberty, thy thousand tongues
 None silence, who design no wrongs ;
 For those, who use the gag's restraint,
 First rob, before they stop complaint.

Since disappointment gauls within,
 And subjugates the soul to spleen,
 Most schemes, as money-snare, I hate,
 And bite not at projector's bait.
 Sufficient wrecks appear each day,
 And yet fresh fools are cast away.
 Ere well the bubbled can turn round,
 Their painted vessel runs aground ;
 Or in deep seas it oversets
 By a fierce hurricane of debts ;
 Or helm directors in one trip,
 Freight first embezzled, sink the ship.
 Such was of late a corporation *,
 The brazen serpent of the nation,
 Which, when hard accidents distress'd,
 The poor must look at to be blest,
 And thence expect, with paper seal'd
 By fraud and us'ry, to be heal'd.

I in no soul-consumption wait
 Whole years at levees of the great,

* The Charitable Corporation, instituted for the relief of the industrious poor, by assisting them with small sums upon pledges at legal interest. By the villany of those who had the management of this scheme, the proprietors were defrauded of very considerable sums of money. In 1732 the conduct of the directors of this body became the subject of a parliamentary inquiry, and some of them, who were members of the house of commons, were expelled for their concern in this iniquitous transaction.

And hungry hopes regale the while
On the spare diet of a smile.
There you may see the idol stand
With mirror in his wanton hand ;
Above, below, now here, now there,
He throws about the sunny glare.
Crowds pant, and press to seize the prize,
The gay delusion of their eyes.

When Fancy tries her limning skill
To draw and colour at her will,
And raise and round the figure well,
And show her talent to excel,
I guard my heart, lest it should woo
Unreal beauties Fancy drew,
And disappointed, feel despair
At loss of things, that never were.

When I lean politicians mark
Grazing on ether in the Park ;
Who e'er on wing with open throats
Fly at debates, expresses, votes,
Just in the manner swallows use,
Catching their airy food of news ;
Whose latrant stomachs oft molest
The deep-laid plans their dreams suggest ;
Or see some poet pensive sit,
Fondly mistaking Spleen for Wit :
Who, though short-winded, still will aim
To sound the epic trump of Fame ;
Who still on Phœbus' smiles will doat,
Nor learn conviction from his coat ;
I bless'd my stars, I never knew
Whimsies, which close pursu'd, undo,
And have from old experience been
Both parent and the child of Spleen.
These subjects of Apollo's state,
Who from false fire derive their fate,
With airy purchases undone
Of lands, which none lend money on,
Born dull, had follow'd thriving ways,
Nor lost one hour to gather bays.
Their fancies first delirious grew,
And scenes ideal took for true.
Fine to the sight Parnassus lies,
And with false prospects cheats their eyes ;
The fabled gods the poets sing,
A season of perpetual spring,
Brooks, flow'ry fields, and groves of trees,
Affording sweets and similes,
Gay dreams inspir'd in myrtle bow'rs,
And wreaths of undecaying flow'rs,
Apollo's harp with airs divine,
The sacred music of the Nine,
Views of the temple rais'd to Fame,
And for a vacant niche proud aim,
Ravish their souls, and plainly show
What Fancy's sketching power can do.
They will attempt the mountain steep,
Where on the top, like dreams in sleep,
The Muse's revelations show,
That find men crack'd, or make them so.

You, friend, like me, the trade of rhyme
Avoid, elab'rate waste of time,
Nor are content to be undone,
To pass for Phœbus' crazy son.
Poems, the hop-grounds of the brain,
Afford the most uncertain gain ;
And lott'ries never tempt the wise
With blanks so many to a prize.
I only transient visits pay,
Meeting the Muses in my way,

Scarce known to the fastidious dames,
Nor skill'd to call them by their names.
Nor can their passports in these days,
Your profit warrant, or your praise.
On poems by their dictates writ,
Critics, as sworn appraisers, sit,
And mere upholst'ers in a trice
On gems and paintings set a price.
These tayl'ring artists for our lays
Invent cramp'd rules, and with straight stays
Striving free Nature's shape to hit,
Emaciate sense, before they fit.

A common place, and many friends,
Can serve the plagiarist's ends,
Whose easy vamping talent lies,
First wit to pilfer, then disguise.
Thus some devoid of art and skill
To search the mine on Pindus' hill,
Proud to aspire and workmen grow,
By genius doom'd to stay below,
For their own digging show the town
Wit's treasure brought by others down.
Some wanting, if they find a mine,
An artist's judgment to refine,
On fame precipitately fix'd,
The ore with baser metals mix'd
Melt down, impatient of delay,
And call the vicious mass a play.
All these engage to serve their ends,
A band select of trusty friends,
Who, lesson'd right, extol the thing,
As Psapho* taught his birds to sing ;
Then to the ladies they submit,
Returning officers on wit :
A crowded house their presence draws,
And on the beaux imposes laws,
A judgment in its favour ends,
When all the pannel are its friends :
Their natures merciful and mild
Have from mere pity sav'd the child ;
In bulrush ark the bantling found
Helpless, and ready to be drown'd,
They have preserv'd by kind support,
And brought the baby-muse to court.
But there's a youth † that you can name,
Who needs no leading-strings to fame,
Whose quick maturity of brain
The birth of Pallas may explain :
Dreaming of whose depending fate,
I heard Melpomene debate,
“ This, this is he, that was foretold
Should emulate our Greeks of old.
Inspir'd by me with sacred art,
He sings, and rules the varied heart ;
If Jove's dread anger he rehearse,
We hear the thunder in his verse ;
If he describes love turn'd to rage,
The furies riot in his page.

* Psapho was a Lybian, who desiring to be counted a god, effected it by this means : he took young birds and taught them to sing, Psapho a great god. When they were perfect in their lessons he let them fly ; and other birds learning the same ditty, repeated it in the woods ; on which his countrymen offered sacrifice to him, and considered him as a deity.

† Mr. Glover, the excellent author of Lexicon adicea, Medea, &c.

If he fair liberty and law
By ruffian pow'r expiring draw,
The keener passions then engage
Aright, and sanctify their rage ;
If he attempt disastrous love,
We hear those plaints that wound the grove.
Within the kinder passions glow,
And tears distill'd from pity flow."

From the bright vision I descend,
And my deserted theme attend.

Me never did ambition seize,
Strange fever most inflam'd by ease !
The active lunacy of pride,
That courts jilt Fortune for a bride,
This par'dise-tree, so fair and high,
I view with no aspiring eye :
Like aspen shake the restless leaves,
And Sodom-fruit our pains deceives,
Whence frequent falls give no surprise,
But fits of spleen, call'd growing wise.
Greatness in glitt'ring forms display'd
Affects weak eyes much us'd to shade,
And by its falsely-envy'd scene
Gives self-debasing fits of Spleen.
We should be pleas'd that things are so,
Who do for nothing see the show,
And, middle-siz'd, can pass between
Life's hubbub safe, because unseen,
And midst the glare of greatness trace
A wat'ry sunshine in the face,
And pleasure fled to, to redress
The sad fatigue of idleness.

Contentment, parent of delight,
Is much a stranger to our sight,
Ay, goddess, in what happy place
Mortals behold thy blooming face ;
By gracious auspices impart,
And for thy temple choose my heart.
They, whom thou deignest to inspire,
By science learn, to bound desire ;
By happy alchymy of mind
They turn to pleasure all they find ;
They both disdain in outward mien
The grave and solemn garb of Spleen,
And meretricious arts of dress,
To feign a joy, and hide distress ;
Amov'd when the rude tempest blows,
Without an opiate they repose ;
And, cover'd by your shield, defy
The whizzing shafts, that round them fly :
For meddling with the god's affairs,
Concern themselves with distant cares ;
But place their bliss in mental rest,
And feast upon the good possess'd.
Forc'd by soft violence of pray'r,
The blithsome goddess soothes my care,
I feel the deity inspire,
And thus she models my desire.
Two hundred pounds half-yearly paid,
Annuity securely made,
A farm some twenty miles from town,
Small, tight, salubrious, and my own ;
Two maids, that never saw the town,
A serving-man, not quite a clown ;
A boy to help to tread the mow,
And drive, while t' other holds the plough ;
A chief, of temper form'd to please,
Fit to converse, and keep the keys ;
And better to preserve the peace,
Commission'd by the name of niece,

With understandings of a size
To think their master very wise.
May Heav'n (it 's all I wish for) send
One genial room to treat a friend,
Where decent cupboard, little plate,
Display benevolence, not state.
And may my humble dwelling stand
Upon some chosen spot of land :
A pond before full to the brim,
Where cows may cool, and geese may swim ;
Behind, a green like velvet neat,
Soft to the eye, and to the feet ;
Where od'rous plants in evening fair
Breathe all around ambrosial air ;
From Eurys, foe to kitchen ground,
Fenc'd by a slope with bushes crown'd,
Fit dwelling for the feather'd throng,
Who pay their quit-rents with a song ;
With op'ning views of hill and dale,
Which sense and fancy too regale,
Where the half-cirque, which vision bounds,
Like amphitheatre surrounds ;
And woods impervious to the breeze,
Thick phalanx of embodied trees,
From hills through plains in dusk array
Extended far, repel the day.
Here stillness, height, and solemn shade
Invite, and contemplation aid :
Here nymphs from hollow oaks relate
The dark decrees and will of Fate,
And dreams beneath the spreading beech
Inspire, and docile fancy teach ;
While soft as breezy breath of wind,
Impulses rustle through the mind.
Here Dryads, scorning Phœbus' ray
While Pan melodious pipes away,
In measur'd motions frisk about,
Till old Silenus puts them out.
There see the clover, pea, and bean,
Vie in variety of green ;
Fresh pastures speckled o'er with sheep,
Brown fields their fallow sabbaths keep,
Plump Ceres golden tresses wear,
And poppy top-knots deck her hair,
And silver streams through meadows stray,
And Naiads on the margin play,
And lesser nymphs on side of hills
From play-thing urns pour down the rilla.
Thus shelter'd, free from care and strife,
May I enjoy a calm through life ;
See faction, safe in low degree,
As men at land see storms at sea,
And laugh at miserable elves
Not kind, so much as to themselves,
Curs'd with such souls of base alloy,
As can possess, but not enjoy ;
Debar'd the pleasure to impart
By av'rice, sphincter of the heart,
Who wealth, hard-earn'd by guilty cares,
Bequeath untouch'd to thankless heirs.
May I, with look ungloom'd by guile,
And wearing Virtue's liv'ry-smile,
Prone the distressed to relieve,
And little trespasses forgive,
With income not in Fortune's pow'r
And skill to make a busy hour,
With trips to town life to amuse,
To purchase books, and hear the news,
To see old friends, brush off the clown,
And quicken taste at coming down,

Unhurt by sickness' blasting rage,
And slowly mellowing in age,
When Fate extends its gathering gripe,
Fall off like fruit grown fully ripe,
Quit a worn being without pain,
Perhaps to blossom soon again.

But now more serious see me grow,
And what I think, my Memmius, know.

Th' enthusiast's hope; and raptures wild,
Have never yet my reason foil'd.
His springy soul dilates like air,
When free from weight of ambient care,
And, hush'd in meditation deep,
Slides into dreams, as when asleep;
Then, fond of new discoveries grown,
Proves a Columbus of her own,
Disdains the narrow bounds of place,
And through the wilds of endless space,
Borne up on metaphysic wings,
Chases light forms and shadowy things,
And in the vague excursion caught,
Brings home some rare exotic thought.
The melancholy man such dreams,
As brightest evidence, esteems;
Fain would he see some distant scene
Suggested by his restless Spleen,
And Fancy's telescope applies
With tinctur'd glass to cheat his eyes.
Such thoughts, as love the gloom of night,
I close examine by the light;
For who, though brib'd by gain to lie,
Dare sun-beam-written truths deny,
And execute plain common sense
On faith's mere hearsay evidence?

That superstition mayn't create,
And club its ills with those of Fate,
I many a notion take to task,
Made dreadful by its visor-mask.
Thus scruple, spasm of the mind,
Is cur'd, and certainty I find.
Since optic reason shows me plain,
I dreaded spectres of the brain.
And legendary fears are gone,
Though in tenacious childhood sown.
Thus in opinions I commence
Freeholder in the proper sense,
And neither suit nor service do,
Nor homage to pretenders show,
Who boast themselves by spurious roll
Lords of the manor of the soul;
Preferring sense, from chin that's bare,
To nonsense thron'd in whisker'd hair.

To thee, Creator uncreate,
O Entium Ens! divinely great! —
Hold, Muse, nor melting pinions try,
Nor near the blazing glory fly,
Nor straining break thy feeble bow,
Unfeather'd arrows far to throw:
Through fields unknown nor madly stray,
Where no ideas mark the way.
With tender eyes, and colours faint,
And trembling hands forbear to paint.
Who features veil'd by light can hit?
Where can, what has no outline, sit?
My soul, the vain attempt forego,
Thyself, the fitter subject, know
He wisely shuns the bold extreme,
Who soon lays by th' unequal theme,
Nor runs, with Wisdom's syrens caught,
On quicksands swallow'd shipwreck'd the

But, conscious of his distance, gives
Mute praise, and humble negatives.
In one, no object of our sight,
Immutable, and infinite,
Who can't be cruel or unjust,
Calm and resign'd, I fix my trust;
To him my past and present state
I owe, and must my future fate.
A stranger into life I'm come,
Dying may be our going home,
Transported here by angry Fate,
The convicts of a prior state.
Hence I no anxious thoughts bestow
On matters I can never know;
Through life's foul way, like vagrant pass'd,
He'll grant a settlement at last,
And with sweet ease the wearied crown,
By leave to lay his being down.
If doom'd to dance th' eternal round
Of life no sooner lost but found,
And dissolution soon to come,
Like sponge, wipes out life's present sun,
But can't our state of pow'r bereave
An endless series to receive;
Then, if hard dealt with here by Fate,
We balance in another state,
And consciousness must go along,
And sign th' acquittance for the wrong.
He for his creatures must decree
More happiness than misery,
Or be supposed to create,
Curious to try, what 't is to hate:
And do an act, which rage infers,
'Cause lameness halts, or blindness errs.

Thus, thus I steer my bark, and sail
On even keel with gentle gale;
At helm I make my reason sit,
My crew of passions all submit.
If dark and blust'ring prove some nights,
Philosophy puts forth her lights;
Experience holds the cautious glass,
To shun the breakers, as I pass,
And frequent throws the wary lead,
To see what dangers may be hid;
And once in seven years I'm seen
At Bath or Tunbridge, to career.
Though pleas'd to see the dolphins play,
I mind my compass and my way,
With store sufficient for relief,
And wisely still prepar'd to reef,
Nor wanting the dispersive bowl
Of cloudy weather in the soul,
I make, (may Heav'n propitious send Such wind and weather to the end)
Neither becalm'd, nor over-blown,
Life's voyage to the world unknown.

BARCLAY'S APOLOGY FOR THE QUAKERS. *

These sheets primeval doctrines yield,
 Here revelation is reveal'd ;
 Pul-phlegm from literal feeding bred,
 Systems lethargic to the head
 Key purge, and yield a diet thin,
 But turns to gospel-chyle within.
 Truth sublimate may here be seen
 Extracted from the parts terrene.
 Here is shown, how men obtain
 That of Prometheus poets feign :
 A scripture plainness dress is brought,
 And speech, apparel to the thought.
 Key hiss from instinct at red coats,
 And war, whose work is cutting throats,
 And bid, and press the law of love :
 Breathing the spirit of the dove.
 Scrative doctrines they detest,
 Manufactur'd by the priest ;
 And throw down turnpikes, where we pay
 A stuff, which never mends the way ;
 And tythes, a Jewish tax, reduce,
 And frank the gospel for our use.
 Key sable standing armies break ;
 And the militia useful make :
 And all unhir'd may preach and pray,
 Guided by these rules as well as they ;
 Rules, which, when truths themselves reveal,
 Bid us to follow what we feel.
 The world can't hear the small still voice,
 Which is its bustle and its noise ;
 When the proclamation reads,
 Not one riot passion heeds.
 Wealth, honour, power the graces are,
 Which here below our homage share :
 Key, if one votary they find
 A mistress more divine inclin'd,
 A truth's pursuit, to cause delay,
 Brow golden apples in his way,
 Place me, O Heav'n, in some retreat ;
 Here let the serious death-watch beat,
 Here let me self in silence shun,
 To feel thy will, which should be done.
 Then comes the Spirit to our hut,
 Then fast the senses' doors are shut ;
 Or so divine and pure a guest
 In empty rooms are furnish'd best.
 O Contemplation ! air serene !
 From damps of sense, and fogs of spleen !
 Pure mount of thought ! thrice holy ground,
 Where grace, when waited for, is found.

This celebrated book was written by its author,
 In Latin and English, and was afterwards
 Translated into High Dutch, Low Dutch, French,
 Spanish, and probably into other languages.
 It has always been esteemed a very ingenious development of the principles of Quakerism, even by those who deny the doctrines which it endeavours to establish. The author was born at Edinburgh in 1648, and received part of his education at the Scots College in Paris, where his uncle was principal. His father became one of the earliest converts to the sect, and from his example, the son seems to have been induced to tread in his steps. He died the 3d of October, 1690, in the 42d year of his age.

Here 'tis the soul feels sudden youth,
 And meets exulting, virgin Truth ;
 Here, like a breeze of gentlest kind,
 Impulses rustle through the mind ;
 Here shines that light with glowing face,
 The fuse divine, that kindles grace ;
 Which, if we trim our lamps, will last,
 'Till darkness be by dying past.
 And then goes out at end of night,
 Extinguish'd by superior light.

Ah me ! the heats and colds of life,
 Pleasure's and pain's eternal strife,
 Breed stormy passions, which confin'd,
 Shake, like th' Æolian cave, the mind.
 And raise despair ; my lamp can last,
 Plac'd where they drive the furious blast.

False eloquence ! big empty sound !
 Like showers that rush upon the ground !
 Little beneath the surface goes,
 All streams along, and muddy flows.
 This sinks, and swells the buried grain,
 And fructifies like southern rain.

His art, well hid in mild discourse,
 Exerts persuasion's winning force,
 And nervates so the good design,
 That king Agrippa's case is mine.

Well-natur'd, happy shade forgive !
 Like you I think, but cannot live.
 Thy scheme requires the world's contempt,
 That from dependence life exempt ;
 And constitution fram'd so strong,
 This world's worst climate cannot wrong.
 Not such my lot, not Fortune's brat,
 I live by pulling off the hat ;
 Compell'd by station every hour
 To bow to images of power ;
 And in life's busy scenes immers'd,
 See better things, and do the worst.

Eloquent Want, whose reasons sway,
 And make ten thousand truths give way,
 While I your scheme with pleasure trace,
 Draws near, and stares me in the face.
 " Consider well your state," she cries,
 " Like others kneel, that you may rise ;
 Hold doctrines, by no scruples vex'd,
 To which preferment is annex'd ;
 Nor madly prove, where all depends,
 Idolatry upon your friends.
 See, how you like my rueful face,
 Such you must wear, if out of place.
 Crack'd is your brain to turn recluse
 Without one farthing out at use.
 They, who have lands, and safe bank-stock,
 With faith so founded on a rock,
 May give a rich invention ease,
 And construe scripture how they please.

" The honour'd prophet that of old,
 Us'd Heav'n's high counsels to unfold,
 Did, more than courier angels, greet
 The crows, that brought him bread and meat."

THE SEEKER.

When I first came to London, I rambled about,
 From sermon to sermon, took a slice and went out.
 Then on me, in divinity bachelor, try'd
 Many priests to obtrude a Levitical bride ;

And urging their various opinions, intended
To make me wed systems, which they recommended.

Said a lech'rous old fri'r skulking near Lincoln's-inn,
(Whose trade's to absolve, but whose pastime's to sin ;

Who, spider-like, seizes weak protestant flies,
Which hung in his sophistry cobweb he spies ;)
" Ah ! pity your soul ; for without our church pale,
If you happen to die, to be damn'd you can't fail ;
The Bible, you boast, is a wild revelation :
Hear a church that can't err, if you hope for salvation."

Said a formal non-con, (whose rich stock of grace
Lies forward expos'd in shop-window of face,)
" Ah ! pity your soul : come, be of our sect :
For then you are safe, and may plead you're elect.
As it stands in the Acts, we can prove ourselves saints,
Being Christ's little flock every where spoke against."

Said a jolly church parson, (devoted to ease,
While penal-law dragons guard his golden fleece,)
" If you pity your soul, I pray listen to neither ;
The first is in error, the last a deceiver :
That our's is the true church, the sense of our tribe is,
And surely in medio tutissimus ibis."

Said a yea and nay friend, with a stiff hat and band,
(Who while he talk'd gravely would hold forth his hand,)
" Dominion and wealth are the aim of all three,
Though about ways and means they may all disagree ;
Then prithee be wise, go the quakers by-way,
'Tis plain, without turnpikes, so nothing to pay."

THE GROTTTO*,

WRITTEN BY MR. GREEN, UNDER THE NAME OF
PETER DRAKE, A FISHERMAN OF BRENTFORD.

Printed in the Year 1732, but not published.

Scilicet hic possis curvo dignoscere rectum,
Atque inter silvas Academi querere verum.

Hon.

Our wits Apollo's influence beg,
The Grotto makes them all with egg :
Finding this chalkstone in my nest,
I strain, and lay among the rest.

And so awhile, forsaken flood,
To ramble in the Delian wood,
And pray the god my well-meant song
May not my subject's merit wrong.

* A building in Richmond Gardens, erected by Queen Caroline, and committed to the custody of Stephen Duck. At the time this poem was written many other verses appeared on the same

Say, father Thames, whose gentle pace
Gives leave to view what beauties grace
Your flow'ry banks, if you have seen
The much-sung Grotto of the queen.
Contemplative, forget awhile
Oxonian towers, and Windsor's pile,
And Wolsey's pride † (his greatest guilt)
And what great William since has built ;
And flowing fast by Richmond scenes,
(Honour'd retreat of two great queens ‡)
From Sion-house §, whose proud survey
Brow-beats your flood, look cross the way,
And view, from highest swell of tide,
The milder scenes of Surrey side.

Though yet no palace grace the shore,
To lodge that pair you should adore ;
Nor abbeyes, great in ruin, rise,
Royal equivalents for vice ;
Behold a grot, in Delphic grove,
The Graces' and the Muses' love.
(O, might our laureat study here,
How would he hail his new-born year!)
A temple from vain glories free,
Whose goddess is Philosophy,
Whose sides such licens'd idols crown
As Superstition would pull down ;
The only pilgrimage I know,
That men of sense would choose to go :
Which sweet abode, her wisest choice,
Urania cheers with heavenly voice,
While all the Virtues gather round,
To see her consecrate the ground.
If thou, the god with winged feet,
In council talk of this retreat,
And jealous gods resentment show
At altars rais'd to men below ;
Tell those proud lords of Heaven, 'tis fit
Their house our heroes should admit ;
While each exists, as poets sing,
A lazy lewd immortal thing,
They must (or grow in disrepute)
With Earth's first commoners recruit.

Needless it is in terms unskill'd
To praise whatever Boyle § shall build ;
Needless it is the busts to name
Of men, monopolists of fame ;
Four chiefs adorn the modest stone ¶,
For Virtue as for learning known ;
The thinking sculpture helps to raise
Deep thoughts, the genii of the place :

† Hampton Court, begun by Cardinal Wolsey and improved by King William III.

‡ Queen Anne, consort to King Richard II.
Queen Elizabeth, both died at Richmond.

§ Sion House is now a seat belonging to Duke of Northumberland.

¶ Richard Boyle, Earl of Burlington, a man remarkable for his fine taste in architecture.
" Never were protection and great wealth so generously and judiciously diffused than by a great person, who had every quality of a great man and artist, except envy." He died December 1733.

¶ The author should have said five ; there are the busts of Newton, Locke, Wollaston, and Boyle.

To the mind's ear, and inward sight,
 Their silence speaks, and shade gives light :
 While insects from the threshold preach,
 And minds dispos'd to musing teach :
 Proud of strong limbs and painted hues,
 They perish by the slightest bruise ;
 Or maladies, begun within,
 Destroy more slow life's frail machine ;
 From maggot-youth through change of state,
 They feel like us the turns of fate ;
 Some born to creep have liv'd to fly,
 And change earth-cells for dwellings high ;
 And some that did their six wings keep,
 Before they dy'd been forc'd to creep ;
 They politics like ours profess,
 The greater prey upon the less :
 Some strain on foot huge loads to bring ;
 Some toil incessant on the wing,
 And in their different ways explore
 Vise sense of want by future store ;
 Nor from their vigorous schemes desist
 Till death, and then are never miss'd.
 Some frolic, toil, marry, increase,
 Are sick and well, have war and peace,
 And, broke with age, in half a day
 Yield to successors, and away.

Let not prophane this sacred place,
 Hypocrisy with Janus' face ;
 Pomp, mixt state of pride and care ;
 Court Kindness, Falsehood's polish'd ware ;
 Scandal disguis'd in Friendship's veil,
 That tells, unask'd, th' injurious tale ;
 That art politic, which allows
 The jesuit-remedy for vows ;
 The priest, perfuming crowned head,
 Till in a swoon Truth lies for dead
 The tawdry critic, who perceives
 No grace, which plain proportion gives,
 And more than lineaments divine
 Admires the gilding of the shrine ;
 That self-haunting spectre Spleen,
 Thickest fog the clearest seen ;
 Prophecy, which dreams a lie,
 That fools believe and knaves apply ;
 That frolic Mirth, prophanely loud,
 And happy only in a crowd ;
 That Melancholy's pensive gloom,
 That in Contemplation's room.

O Delia ! when I touch this string,
 To thee my Muse directs her wing.
 Spotted fair ! with downcast look
 And not so much the murmur'ing brook ;
 Or first in thought, with footsteps slow
 Through cypress alleys cherish woe :
 As the soul in pensive fit,
 And moping like sick linnet sit.
 With dewy eye, and moulting wing,
 Perch'd, averse to fly or sing ;
 As the favourite curls begin
 Disus'd to toilet discipline)
 To quit their post, lose their smart air,
 And grow again like common hair ;
 And tears, which frequent kerchiefs dry,
 Raise a red circle round the eye ;
 And by this bar about the Moon,
 Conjecture more ill weather soon.
 Are not so much the doleful knell :
 And news the boding night-birds tell ;
 For watch the wainscot's hollow blow ;
 And heed portentous when they crow ;

Nor sleepless mind the death-watch beat ;
 In taper find no winding-sheet :
 Nor in burnt coal a coffin see,
 Though thrown at others, meant for thee :
 Or when the coruscation gleams,
 Find out not first the bloody streams ;
 Nor in imprest remembrance keep
 Grim tap'stry figures wrought in sleep ;
 Nor rise to see in antique hall
 The moonlight monsters on the wall,
 And shadowy spectres darkly pass
 Trailing their sables o'er the grass,
 Let vice and guilt act how they please
 In souls, their conquer'd provinces ;
 By Heaven's just charter it appears,
 Virtue's exempt from quartering fears,
 Shall then arm'd fancies fiercely drest,
 Live at discretion in your breast ?
 Be wise, and panic fright disdain,
 As notions, meteors of the brain ;
 And sights perform'd, illusive scene !
 By magic lanthorn of the spleen.
 Come here, from baleful cares releas'd,
 With Virtue's ticket, to a feast,
 Where decent Mirth and Wisdom join'd
 In stewardship, regale the mind.
 Call back the Cupids to your eyes,
 I see the godlings with surprise.
 Not knowing home in such a plight,
 Fly to and fro, afraid to light. —

Far from my theme, from method far,
 Convey'd in Venus' flying car,
 I go compell'd by feather'd steeds,
 That scorn the rein, when Delia leads.

No daub of elegiac strain
 These holy wars shall ever stain ;
 As spiders Irish wainscot flee,
 Falsehood with them shall disagree ;
 This floor let not the vulgar tread,
 Who worship only what they dread :
 Nor bigots who but one way see
 Through blinkers of authority.
 Nor they who its four saints defame
 By making virtue but a name ;
 Nor abstract wit, (painful regale
 To hunt the pig with slippery tail !)
 Artists, who richly chase their thought,
 Gaudy without, but hollow wrought ;
 And beat too thin, and tool'd too much
 To bear the proof and standard touch :
 Nor fops to guard this sylvan ark,
 With necklace bells in treble bark :
 Nor cynics growl and fiercely paw,
 The mastiffs of the moral law.
 Come, nymph, with rural honours drest,
 Virtue's exterior form confest,
 With charms untarnish'd, innocence
 Display, and Eden shall commence ;
 When thus you come in sober fit,
 And wisdom is preferr'd to wit ;
 And looks diviner graces tell,
 Which don't with giggling muscles dwell ;
 And beauty like the ray-clipt Sun,
 With bolder eye we look upon ;
 Learning shall with obsequious mien
 Tell all the wonders she has seen ;
 Reason her logic armour quit,
 And proof to mild persuasion sit ;
 Religion with free thought dispense,
 And cease crusading against sense ;

Philosophy and she embrace,
 And their first league again take place :
 And Morals pure, in duty bound,
 Nymph-like the sisters chief surround ;
 Nature shall smile, and round this cell
 The turf to your light pressure swell,
 And knowing Beauty by her shoe,
 Well air its carpet from the dew.
 The Oak, while you his umbrage deck,
 Lets fall his acorns in your neck ;
 Zephyr his civil kisses gives,
 And plays with curls instead of leaves :
 Birds, seeing you, believe it spring,
 And during their vacation sing ;
 And flow'rs lean forward from their seats,
 To traffic in exchange of sweets ;
 And angels bearing wreaths descend,
 Preferr'd as vergers to attend
 This fane, whose deity entreats
 The fair to grace its upper seats.

O kindly view our letter'd strife,
 And guard us through polemic life ;
 From poison vehicled in praise,
 For Satire's shots but slightly graze ;
 We claim your zeal, and find within,
 Philosophy and you are kin.

What virtue is we judge by you ;
 For actions right are beauteous too ;
 By tracing the sole female mind,
 We best what is true nature find :
 Your vapours bred from fumes declare,
 How steams create tempestuous air,
 Till gushing tears and hasty rain
 Make Heav'n and you serene again.
 Our travels through the starry skies
 Were first suggested by your eyes ;
 We, by the interposing fan,
 Learn how eclipses first began :
 The vast ellipse from Scarbro's home,
 Describes how blazing comets roam :
 The glowing colours of the cheek
 Their origin from Phœbus speak ;
 Our watch how Luna strays above
 Feels like the care of jealous love ;
 And all things we in science know
 From your known love for riddles flow.

Father ! forgive, thus far I stray,
 Drawn by attraction from my way.
 Mark next with awe the foundress well
 Who on these banks delights to dwell ;
 You on the terrace see her plain,
 Move like Diana with her train.
 If you then fairly speak your mind,
 In wedlock since with Isis join'd,
 You'll own, you never yet did see,
 At least in such a high degree,
 Greatness delighted to undress ;
 Science a sceptr'd hand caress ;
 A queen the friends of freedom prize ;
 A woman wise men canonize.

THE SPARROW AND DIAMOND.

A SONG.

I LATELY saw, what now I sing,
 Fair Lucia's hand display'd ;
 This finger grac'd a diamond ring,
 On that a sparrow play'd.

The feather'd play-thing she caress'd,
 She stroak'd its head and wings ;
 And while it nestled on her breast,
 She lisp'd the dearest things.

With chisel'd bill a spark ill-set
 He loosen'd from the rest,
 And swallow'd down to grind his meat,
 The easier to digest.

She seiz'd his bill with wild affright,
 Her diamond to descry :
 'Twas gone ! she sicken'd at the sight,
 Moaning her bird would die.

The tongue-ty'd knocker none might see,
 The curtains none undraw,
 The footmen went without their shoes,
 The street was laid with straw.

The doctor us'd his oily art
 Of strong emetic kind,
 Th' apothecary play'd his part,
 And engineer'd behind.

When physic ceas'd to spend its store,
 To bring away the stone,
 Dicky, like people given o'er,
 Picks up, when let alone.

His eyes dispell'd their sickly dews,
 He peck'd behind his wing ;
 Lucia recovering at the news,
 Relapses for the ring.

Meanwhile within her beauteous breast
 Two different passions strove ;
 When av'rice ended the contest,
 And triumph'd over love.

Poor little, pretty, fluttering thing,
 Thy pains the sex display,
 Who, only to repair a ring,
 Could take thy life away.

Drive av'rice from your breasts, ye fair,
 Monster of foulest mien :
 Ye would not let it harbour there,
 Could but its form be seen.

It made a virgin put on guile,
 Truth's image break her word,
 A Lucia's face forbear to smile,
 A Venus kill her bird.

THOMAS TICKELL.

THOMAS TICKELL, a poet of considerable elegance, born at Bridekirk, near Carlisle, in 1686, was the son of a clergyman in the county of Cumberland. He was entered of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1701, and having taken the degree of B. A. in 1708, was elected fellow of his college, not obtaining from the crown a dispensation from the statute requiring him to be in orders. He then came to the metropolis, where he made himself known to several persons distinguished in letters. When the negotiations were carrying on which brought on the peace of Utrecht, he published a poem entitled "The Prospect of Peace," which passed through six editions. Addison, with whom he had ingratiated himself by an elegant poem on his version of Rosamond, speaks highly of "The Prospect of Peace," in a paper of the Spectator, in which he expresses himself as particularly pleased to find that the author had not amused himself with fables and of the Pagan theology. This commendation Tickell amply repaid by his lines on Addison's death, which are superior to all others on that subject, with the exception of Pope's Prologue. Tickell, being attached to the succession of the house of Hanover, presented George I. with a poem entitled "The Royal Progress;" and more effectually served the cause by two pieces, one called "An Imitation of the Prophecy of Nereus;" the other, "An Epistle from a Lady in England, to a Gentleman at Avignon." Both these are selected for the purpose of the present volume. He was about this time taken to Ireland, by Addison, who went over as secretary to Lord Sunderland. When Pope published the first volume of his translation of the Iliad, Tickell gave a translation of the first book of that poem, which was patronized by Addison, and occasioned a breach between those eminent men. Tickell's composition, however, will bear no poetical comparison with that of Pope, and accordingly he did not proceed with the task. On the death of Addison, he was entrusted with the charge of publishing his works, a distinction which he repaid by prefixing a life of that celebrated man, with an elegy on his death, of which Dr. Johnson says, "That a more sublime or elegant funeral poem is not to be found in the whole compass of English literature." Another piece, which might be justly placed at the head of sober lyrics, is his "Ode to the Earl of Sunderland," on his installation as a knight of the Garter; which keeping within the limits of truth, consigns a favourite name to its real honours.

Tickell is represented as a man of pleasing manners, fond of society, very agreeable in conversation, and upright and honourable in his conduct. He was married, and left a family. His death took place at Bath, in 1740, the 54th year of his age.

COLIN AND LUCY.

A BALLAD.

Of Leinster, fam'd for maidens fair,
Bright Lucy was the grace;
Nor e'er did Liffy's limpid stream
Reflect so sweet a face:
Till luckless love, and pining care,
Impair'd her rosy hue,
Her coral lips, and damask cheeks,
And eyes of glossy blue.

Oh! have you seen a lily pale,
When beating rains descend?
So droop'd the slow-consuming maid,
Her life now near its end.
By Lucy warn'd, of flattering swains
Take heed, ye easy fair:
Of vengeance due to broken vows,
Ye perjur'd swains, beware.

Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;
And shrieking at her window thrice,
The raven flap'd his wing.
Too well the love-lorn maiden knew
The solemn boding sound:
And thus, in dying words, bespoke
The virgins weeping round:

"I hear a voice, you cannot hear,
Which says, I must not stay;
I see a hand, you cannot see,
Which beckons me away.
By a false heart, and broken vows,
In early youth I die:
Was I to blame, because his bride
Was thrice as rich as I?"

"Ah, Colin! give not her thy vows,
Vows due to me alone:
Nor thou, fond maid, receive his kiss,
Nor think him all thy own.

To-morrow, in the church to wed,
 Impatient, both prepare !
 But know, fond maid ; and know, false man,
 That Lucy will be there !

“ Then bear my corse, my comrades, bear,
 This bridegroom blithe to meet,
 He in his wedding-trim so gay,
 I in my winding-sheet.”
 She spoke, she dy'd, her corse was borne,
 The bridegroom blithe to meet,
 He in his wedding trim so gay,
 She in her winding-sheet.

Then what were perjur'd Colin's thoughts ?
 How were these nuptials kept ?
 The bridesmen flock'd round Lucy dead,
 And all the village wept.
 Confusion, shame, remorse, despair,
 At once his bosom swell :
 The damps of death bedew'd his brow,
 He shook, he groan'd, he fell.

From the vain bride, ah, bride no more !
 The varying crimson fled,
 When, stretch'd before her rival's corse,
 She saw her husband dead.
 Then to his Lucy's new-made grave,
 Convey'd by trembling swains,
 One mould with her, beneath one sod,
 For ever he remains.

Oft at this grave, the constant hind
 And plighted maid are seen ;
 With garlands gay, and true-love knots,
 They deck the sacred green :
 But, swain forsworn, whoe'er thou art,
 This hallow'd spot forbear ;
 Remember Colin's dreadful fate,
 And fear to meet him there.

TO THE

EARL OF WARWICK,

ON THE DEATH OF MR. ADDISON.

If, dumb too long, the drooping Muse hath stay'd,
 And left her debt to Addison unpaid,
 Blame not her silence, Warwick, but bemoan,
 And judge, oh judge, my bosom by your own.
 What mourner ever felt poetic fires !
 Slow comes the verse that real woe inspires :
 Grief unaffected suits but ill with art,
 Or flowing numbers with a bleeding heart.

Can I forget the dismal night that gave
 My soul's best part for ever to the grave !
 How silent did his old companions tread,
 By midnight lamps, the mansions of the dead,
 Through breathing statues, then unheeded things,
 Through rows of warriors, and through walks of kings !

What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire ;
 The pealing organ, and the pausing choir ;
 The duties by the lawn-rob'd prelate pay'd ;
 And the last words that dust to dust convey'd !
 While speechless o'er thy closing grave we bend,
 Accept these tears, thou dear departed f-

Oh, gone for ever ; take this long adieu ;
 And sleep in peace, next thy lov'd Montague
 To strew fresh laurels, let the task be mine,
 A frequent pilgrim, at thy sacred shrine ;
 Mine with true sighs thy absence to bemoan,
 And grave with faithful epitaphs thy stone.
 If e'er from me thy lov'd memorial part,
 May shame afflict this alienated heart ;
 Of thee forgetful if I form a song,
 My lyre be broken, and untun'd my tongue,
 My grief be doubled from thy image free,
 And mirth a torment, unchastis'd by thee.

Oft let me range the gloomy aisles alone,
 Sad luxury ! to vulgar minds unknown,
 Along the walls where speaking marbles show
 What worthies form the hallow'd mould below ;
 Proud names, who once the reins of empire held ;
 In arms who triumph'd ; or in arts excell'd ;
 Chiefs, grac'd with scars, and prodigal of blood ;
 Stern patriots, who for sacred freedom stood ;
 Just men, by whom impartial laws were given ;
 And saints who taught, and led, the way to heaven ;
 Ne'er to these chambers, where the mighty rest,
 Since their foundation, came a nobler guest ;
 Nor e'er was to the bowers of bliss convey'd
 A fairer spirit or more welcome shade.

In what new region, to the just assign'd,
 What new employments please th' unbody'd mind ?
 A winged Virtue, through th' etherial sky,
 From world to world unweary'd does he fly ?
 Or curious trace the long laborious maze
 Of Heaven's decrees, where wondering angels gaze ?
 Does he delight to hear bold seraphs tell
 How Michael battl'd, and the dragon fell ;
 Or, mix'd with milder cherubim, to glow
 In hymns of love, not ill essay'd below ?
 Or dost thou warn poor mortals left behind,
 A task well suited to thy gentle mind ?
 Oh ! if sometimes thy spotless form descend :
 To me thy aid, thou guardian genius, lend !
 When rage misguides me, or when fear alarms,
 When pain distresses, or when pleasure charms,
 In silent whisperings purer thoughts impart,
 And turn from ill, a frail and feeble heart ;
 Lead through the paths thy virtue trod before,
 Till bliss shall join, nor death can part us more.

That awful form, which, so the Heavens decree,
 Must still be lov'd and still deplor'd by me ;
 In nightly visions seldom fails to rise,
 Or, rous'd by Fancy, meets my waking eyes.
 If business calls, or crowded courts invite,
 Th' unblemish'd statesman seems to strike my sight
 If in the stage I seek to sooth my care,
 I meet his soul which breathes in Cato there ;
 If pensive to the rural shades I rove,
 His shape o'ertakes me in the lonely grove ;
 'Twas there of just and good he reason'd strong,
 Clear'd some great truth, or rais'd some serious song
 There patient show'd us the wise course to steer,
 A candid censor, and a friend severe ;
 There taught us how to live ; and (oh ! too high
 The price for knowledge) taught us how to die.

Thou Hill, whose brow the antique structure
 grace,
 Rear'd by bold chiefs of Warwick's noble race,
 Why, once so lov'd, whene'er thy bower appears,
 O'er my dim eye-balls glance the sudden tears !
 How sweet were once thy prospects fresh and fair
 Thy sloping walks, and unpolluted air !

How sweet the glooms beneath thy aged trees,
Thy noon-tide shadow, and thy evening breeze !
His image thy forsaken bowers restore ;
Thy walks and airy prospects charm no more ;
No more the summer in thy glooms allay'd,
Thy evening breezes, and thy noon-day shade.

From other hills, however Fortune frown'd ;
Some refuge in the Muse's art I found :
Reluctant now I touch the trembling string,
Bereft of him, who taught me how to sing ;
And these sad accents, murmur'd o'er his urn,
Betray that absence they attempt to mourn.
O! must I then (now fresh my bosom bleeds,
And Craggs in death to Addison succeeds)
The verse, begun to one lost friend, prolong,
And weep a second in th' unfinish'd song !

These works divine, which, on his death-bed laid,
To thee, O Craggs, th' expiring sage convey'd,
Great, but ill-omen'd, monument of fame,
Nor he surviv'd to give, nor thou to claim.
Swift after him thy social spirit flies,
And close to his, how soon ! thy coffin lies.
Best pair ! whose union future bards shall tell
In future tongues : each other's boast ! farewell,
Farewell ! whom join'd in fame, in friendship try'd,
No chance could sever, nor the grave divide.

AN IMITATION

OF THE PROPHECY OF NERUS.

FROM HORACE. BOOK II. ODE XV.

Dicam insigne, recens, adhuc
Indictum ore alio : non secus in jugis
Ex somnis stupet Euias
Hebrum prospiciens, et nive candidam
Thracen, ac pede barbaro
Lustratam Rhodopen. HOR.

As Mar his round one morning took,
(Whom some call earl, and some call duke,)
And his new brethren of the blade,
Shivering with fear and frost, survey'd,
On Perth's bleak hills he chanc'd to spy
An aged wizard six feet high,
With bristled hair and visage blighted,
Wall-ey'd, bare-haunch'd, and second-sighted.

The grisly sage in thought profound
Beheld the chief with back so round,
Then roll'd his eye-balls to and fro
O'er his paternal hills of snow,
And into these tremendous speeches
Broke forth the prophet without breeches.

" Into what hills betray'd, by thee,
This ancient kingdom do I see !
Her realms unpeopled and forlorn !
Woe's me ! that ever thou wert born !
Proud English loons (our clans o'ercome)
On Scottish pads shall amble home ;
I see them drest in bonnets blue
(The spoils of thy rebellious crew) ;
I see the target cast away,
And chequer'd plaid become their prey,
The chequer'd plaid to make a gown
For many a lass in London town.

" In vain thy hungry mountaineers
Come forth in all thy warlike geers,
The shield, the pistol, durk, and dagger,
In which they daily wont to swagger,

And oft have sally'd out to pillage
The hen-roosts of some peaceful village,
Or, while their neighbours were asleep,
Have carry'd off a lowland sheep.

" What boots thy high-born host of beggars,
Mac-leans, Mac-kenzies, and Mac-gregors,
With popish cut-throats, perjur'd ruffians,
And Foster's troop of raggamuffins ?

" In vain thy lads around thee bandy,
Inflam'd with bag-pipe and with brandy.
Doth not bold Sutherland the trusty,
With heart so true, and voice so rusty,
(A loyal soul) thy troops affright,
While hoarsely he demands the fight ?
Dost thou not generous Ilay dread,
The bravest hand, the wisest head ?
Undaunted dost thou hear th' alarms
Of hoary Athol sheath'd in arms ?

" Douglas, who draws his lineage down
From thanes and peers of high renown,
Fiery, and young, and uncontroll'd,
With knights, and squires, and barons bold,
(His noble household-band) advances,
And on the milk-white courser prances.
Thee Forfar to the combat dares,
Grown swarthy in Iberian wars ;
And Monroe, kindled into rage,
Sourly defies thee to engage ;
He'll rout thy foot, though ne'er so many,
And horse to boot — if thou hadst any.

" But see Argyll, with watchful eyes,
Lodg'd in his deep intrenchments lies,
Couch'd like a lion in thy way,
He waits to spring upon his prey ;
While, like a herd of timorous deer,
Thy army shakes and pants with fear,
Led by their doughty general's skill,
From frith to frith, from hill to hill.

" Is thus thy haughty promise paid
That to the Chevalier was made,
When thou didst oaths and duty barter,
For dukedom, generalship, and garter ?
Three moons thy Jemmy shall command,
With Highland sceptre in his hand,
Too good for his pretended birth,
... Then down shall fall the king of Perth.

" 'Tis so decreed : for George shall reign,
And traitors be forsworn in vain.
Heaven shall for ever on him smile,
And bless him still with an Argyll.
While thou, pursued by vengeful foes,
Condemn'd to barren rocks and snows,
And hinder'd passing Inverlocky,
Shall burn the clan, and curse poor Jocky."

AN EPISTLE

FROM A LADY IN ENGLAND TO A GENTLEMAN AT AVIGNON.

To thee, dear rover, and thy vanquish'd friends,
The health, she wants, thy gentle Chloe sends.
Though much you suffer, think I suffer more,
Worse than an exile on my native shore.
Companions in your master's flight you roam,
Unenvy'd by your haughty foes at home ;
For ever near the royal outlaw's side
You share his fortunes, and his hopes divide,

On glorious schemes, and thoughts of empire dwell,
And with imaginary titles swell.

Say, for thou know'st I own his sacred line,
The passive doctrine, and the right divine,
Say, what new succours does the chief prepare?
The strength of armies? or the force of prayer?
Does he from Heaven or Earth his hopes derive?
From saints departed, or from priests alive? [stand,
Nor saints nor priests can Brunswick's troops with-
And beads drop useless through the zealot's hand;
Heaven to our vows may future kingdoms owe,
But skill and courage win the crowns below.

Ere to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had seduc'd my mind,
In female joys I took a dull delight,
Slept all the morn, and punted half the night:
But now, with fears and public cares possess'd,
The church, the church, for ever breaks my rest.
The postboy on my pillow I explore,
And sift the news of every foreign shore,
Studious to find new friends, and new allies;
What armies march from Sweden in disguise;
How Spain prepares her banners to unfold,
And Rome deals out her blessings, and her gold:
Then o'er the map my finger, taught to stray,
Cross many a region marks the winding way;
From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a mere geographer by love:
But still Avignon, and the pleasing coast
That holds thee banish'd, claims my care the most:
Oft on the well-known spot I fix my eyes,
And span the distance that between us lies.

Let not our James, though foil'd in arms, despair,
Whilst on his side he reckons half the fair:
In Britain's lovely isle a shining throng
War in his cause, a thousand beauties strong.
Th' unthinking victors vainly boast their powers;
Be theirs the musket, while the tongue is ours.
We reason with such fluency and fire,
The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire,
Against her prelates plead the church's cause,
And from our judges vindicate the laws.
Then mourn not, hapless prince, thy kingdoms lost;
A crown, though late, thy sacred brows may boast;
Heaven seems through us thy empire to decree;
Those who win hearts, have given their hearts to thee.

Hast thou not heard that when, profusely gay,
Our well-drest rivals grac'd their sovereign's day,
We stubborn damsels met the public view
In loathsome wormwood, and repenting rue?
What Whig but trembled, when our spotless band
In virgin roses whiten'd half the land!
Who can forget what fears the foe possess'd,
When oaken-boughs mark'd every loyal breast!
Less scar'd than Medway's stream the Norman stood,
When cross the plain he spy'd a marching wood,
Till, near at hand, a gleam of swords betray'd
The youth of Kent beneath its wandering shade?

Those who the succours of the fair despise,
May find that we have nails as well as eyes.
Thy female bards, O prince by fortune cross'd,
At least more courage than thy men can boast:
Our sex has dar'd the mug-house chiefs to meet,
And purchas'd fame in many a well-fought street.
From Drury-Lane, the region of renown,
The land of love, the Paphos of the town,
Fair patriots sallying oft have put to flight
With all their poles the guardians of the night,
And bore, with screams of triumph, to their side
The leader's staff in all its painted pride.

Nor fears the hawker in her warbling note
To vend the discontented statesman's thought,
Though red with stripes, and recent from the throne,
Sore smitten for the love of sacred song,
The tuneful sisters still pursue their trade,
Like Philomela darkling in the shade.
Poor Trott attends, forgetful of a fare,
And hums in concert o'er his easy chair.

Meanwhile, regardless of the royal cause,
His sword for James no brother sovereign draws.
The pope himself, surrounded with alarms,
To France his bulls, to Corfu sends his arms,
And though he hears his darling son's complaint,
Can hardly spare one tutelary saint,
But lists them all to guard his own abodes,
And into ready money coins his gods.
The dauntless Swede, pursued by vengeful foes,
Scarce keeps his own hereditary snows;
Nor must the friendly roof of kind Lorrain
With feasts regale our garter'd youth again.
Safe, Bar-le-Duc, within thy silent grove
The pheasant now may perch, the hare may rove:
The knight, who aims unerring from afar,
Th' adventurous knight, now quits the sylvan war:
Thy brinded boars may slumber undismay'd,
Or grunt secure beneath the chesnut shade.
Inconstant Orleans (still we mourn the day
That trusted Orleans with imperial sway)
Far o'er the Alps our helpless monarch sends,
Far from the call of his desponding friends.
Such are the terms, to gain Britannia's grace!
And such the terrors of the Brunswick race!

Was it for this the Sun's whole lustre fail'd,
And sudden midnight o'er the Moon prevail'd!
For this did Heaven display to mortal eyes
Aërial knights and combats in the skies!
Was it for this Northumbrian streams look'd red!
And Thames driv'n backward show'd his secret bed!
False auguries! th' insulting victor's scorn!
Ev'n our own prodigies against us turn!
O portents construed on our side in vain!
Let never Tory trust eclipse again!
Run clear, ye fountains! be at peace, ye skies!
And, Thames, henceforth to thy green borders rise!

To Rome then must the royal wanderer go,
And fall a suppliant at the papal toe?
His life in sloth inglorious must he wear,
One half in luxury, and one in prayer?
His mind perhaps at length debauch'd with ease,
The proffer'd purple and the hat may please.
Shall he, whose ancient patriarchal race
To mighty Nimrod in one line we trace,
In solemn conclave sit, devoid of thought,
And poll for points of faith his trusty vote?
Be summon'd to his stall in time of need,
And with his casting suffrage fix a creed!
Shall he in robes on stated days appear,
And English heretics curse once a year!
Garnet and Faux shall he with prayers invoke.
And beg that Smithfield piles once more may smoke!
Forbid it, Heaven! my soul, to fury wrought,
Turns almost Hanoverian at the thought.

From James and Rome I feel my heart decline,
And fear, O Brunswick, 'twill be wholly thine;
Yet still his share thy rival will contest,
And still the double claim divides my breast.
The fate of James with pitying eyes I view,
And wish my homage were not Brunswick's due.
To James my passion and my weakness guide,
But reason sways me to the victor's side.

though griev'd I speak it, let the truth appear !
 You know my language, and my heart, sincere.
 In vain did falsehood his fair fame disgrace :
 What force had falsehood when he show'd his face !
 In vain to war our boastful clans were led Leaps driv'n on heaps, in the dire shock they fled :
 France shuns his wrath, nor raises to our shame
 A second Dunkirk in another name :
 In Britain's funds their wealth all Europe throws,
 And up the Thames the world's abundance flows :
 In spite of feign'd fears and artificial cries,
 The pious town sees fifty churches rise :
 The hero triumphs as his worth is known,
 And sits more firmly on his shaken throne.

To my sad thought no beam of hope appears
 Through the long prospect of succeeding years.
 The son, aspiring to his father's fame,
 Shows all his sire : another and the same.
 He, blest in lovely Carolina's arms,
 To future ages propagates her charms :
 With pain and joy at strife, I often trace
 The mingled parents in each daughter's face ;
 Self-sickening at the sight, too well I spy
 The father's spirit through the mother's eye :
 In vain new thoughts of rage I entertain,
 And strive to hate their innocence in vain.
 O princess ! happy by thy foes confest !
 Blest in thy husband ! in thy children blest !
 They from thee, from them new beauties born,
 While Europe lasts, shall Europe's thrones adorn.
 Transplanted to each court, in times to come,
 Thy smile celestial and unfading bloom,
 Great Austria's sons with softer lines shall grace,
 And smooth the frowns of Bourbon's haughty race.
 The fair descendants of thy sacred bed,
 Like-branching o'er the western world shall spread,
 Like the fam'd Banian tree, whose pliant shoot
 Earthward bending of itself takes root,
 Still, like their mother plant, ten thousand stand
 Verdant arches on the fertile land ;
 Beneath her shade the tawny Indians rove,
 Hunt, at large, through the wide echoing grove.
 O thou, to whom these mournful lines I send,
 My promis'd husband, and my dearest friend ;
 Who Heaven appoints this favour'd race to reign,
 And blood has drench'd the Scottish fields in vain ;
 Must I be wretched, and thy flight partake ?
 Wilt not thou, for thy lov'd Chloe's sake,
 I'd out at length, submit to fate's decree ?
 Not to Brunswick, O return to me !
 strate before the victor's mercy bend :
 But spares whole thousands, may to thee extend.
 Could blinded friends thy doubtful conduct blame,
 Yet Brunswick's virtue shall secure thy fame :
 And these invite thee to approach his throne,
 Let own the monarch Heaven vouchsafes to own :
 The world, convinc'd, thy reasons will approve ;
 And thus to them ; but swear to me 'twas love.

AN ODE

INSCRIBED TO THE

EARL OF SUNDERLAND,

AT WINDSOR.

THOU Dome, where Edward first enroll'd
 His red-cross knights and barons bold,
 Whose vacant seats, by Virtue bought,
 Ambitious emperors have sought :

Where Britain's foremost names are found,
 In peace belov'd, in war renown'd,
 Who made the hostile nations moan,
 Or brought a blessing on their own :

Once more a son of Spencer waits,
 A name familiar to thy gates ;
 Sprung from the chief whose prowess gain'd
 The Garter while thy founder reign'd,
 He offer'd here his dinted shield,
 The dread of Gauls in Cressi's field,
 Which, in thy high-arch'd temple rais'd,
 For four long centuries hath blaz'd.

These seats our sires, a hardy kind,
 To the fierce sons of war confin'd,
 The flower of chivalry, who drew
 With sinew'd arm the stubborn yew :
 Or with heav'd pole-ax clear'd the field ;
 Or who, in justs and tourneys skill'd,
 Before their ladies' eyes renown'd,
 Threw horse and horseman to the ground.

In after-times, as courts refin'd,
 Our patriots in the list were join'd.
 Not only Warwick stain'd with blood,
 Or Marlborough near the Danube's flood,
 Have in their crimson crosses glow'd ;
 But, on just lawgivers bestow'd,
 These emblems Cecil did invest,
 And gleam'd on wise Godolphin's breast.

So Greece, ere arts began to rise,
 Fix'd huge Orion in the skies,
 And stern Alcides, fam'd in wars,
 Bespangled with a thousand stars ;
 Till letter'd Athens round the Pole
 Made gentler constellations roll ;
 In the blue heavens the lyre she strung,
 And near the Maid the Balance * hung.

Then, Spencer, mount amid the band,
 Where knights and kings promiscuous stand.
 What though the hero's flame repress'd
 Burns calmly in thy generous breast !
 Yet who more dauntless to oppose
 In doubtful days our home-bred foes !
 Who rais'd his country's wealth so high,
 Or view'd with less desiring eye !

* The sage, who, large of soul, surveys
 The globe, and all its empires weighs,
 Watchful the various climes to guide,
 Which seas, and tongues, and faiths, divide,
 A nobler name in Windsor's shrine
 Shall leave, if right the Muse divine,
 Than sprung of old, abhorr'd and vain,
 From ravag'd realms and myriads slain.

Why praise we, prodigal of fame,
 The rage that sets the world on flame ?
 My guiltless Muse his brow shall bind
 Whose godlike bounty spares mankind.
 For those, whom bloody garlands crown,
 The brass may breathe, the marble frown,
 To him through every rescued land,
 Ten thousand living trophies stand.

* Names of constellations.

JAMES HAMMOND.

JAMES HAMMOND, a popular elegiac poet, was the second son of Anthony Hammond, Esq. of Somersham Place, in Huntingdonshire. He was born in 1710, and was educated in Westminster school, where at an early age he obtained the friendship of several persons of distinction, among whom were Lords Cobham, Chesterfield, and Lyttleton. He was appointed equerry to Frederic, Prince of Wales, and upon his interest was brought into parliament in 1741, for Truro in Cornwall. This was nearly the last stage of his life, for he died in June 1742, at the seat of Lord Cobham, at Stowe. An unfortunate passion for a young lady, Miss Dashwood, who was cold to his addresses, is thought to have disordered his mind, and perhaps contributed to his premature death.

Hammond was a man of an amiable character, and was much regretted by his friends. His "Love Elegies" were published soon after his death by Lord Chesterfield, and have been several times reprinted. It will seem extraordinary that the noble editor has only once mentioned the name of Tibullus, and has asserted that Hammond, sincere in his love, as in his friendship, spoke only the genuine sentiments of his heart, when there are so many obvious imitations of the Roman poet, even so far as the adoption of his names of Neera, Cynthia, and Delia. It must, however, be acknowledged, that he copies with the hand of a master, and that his imitations are generally managed with a grace that almost conceals their character. Still as they are, in fact, poems of this class, however skilfully transposed, we shall content ourselves with transcribing one which introduces the name of his principal patron with peculiarly happy effect.

ELEGY.

He imagines himself married to Delia, and that, content with each other, they are retired into the country.

LET others boast their heaps of shining gold,
And view their fields, with waving plenty crown'd,
Whom neighbouring foes in constant terror hold,
And trumpets break their slumbers, never sound.

While calmly poor I trifle life away,
Enjoy sweet leisure by my cheerful fire,
No wanton hope my quiet shall betray,
But, cheaply blest, I'll scorn each vain desire.

With timely care I'll sow my little field,
And plant my orchard with its master's hand,
Nor blush to spread the hay, the hook to wield,
Or range my sheaves along the sunny land.

If late at dusk, while carelessly I roam,
I meet a strolling kid, or bleating lamb,
Under my arm I'll bring the wanderer home,
And not a little chide its thoughtless dam.

What joy to hear the tempest howl in vain,
And clasp a fearful mistress to my breast !
Or lull'd to slumber by the beating rain,
Secure and happy, sink at last to rest !

Or, if the Sun in flaming Leo ride,
By shady rivers indolently stray,
And with my Delia, walking side by side,
Hear how they murmur, as they glide away !

What joy to wind along the cool retreat,
To stop, and gaze on Delia as I go !
To mingle sweet discourse with kisses sweet,
And teach my lovely scholar all I know !

Thus pleas'd at heart, and not with fancy's dream,
In silent happiness I rest unknown ;
Content with what I am, not what I seem,
I live for Delia and myself alone.

Ah, foolish man, who thus of her possest,
Could float and wander with ambition's wind,
And if his outward trappings spoke him blest,
Not heed the sickness of his conscious mind !

With her I scorn the idle breath of praise,
Nor trust to happiness that 's not our own ;
The smile of fortune might suspicion raise,
— here I know that I am lov'd alone.

Stanhope, in wisdom as in wit divine,
 May rise, and plead Britannia's glorious cause,
 With steady rein his eager wit confine,
 While manly sense the deep attention draws.

Let Stanhope speak his listening country's wrongs,
 My humble voice shall please one partial maid ;
 For her alone I pen my tender song,
 Securely sitting in his friendly shade.

Stanhope shall come, and grace his rural friend,
 Delia shall wonder at her noble guest,
 With blushing awe the riper fruit commend,
 And for her husband's patron cull the best.

Hers be the care of all my little train,
 While I with tender indolence am blest,
 The favourite subject of her gentle reign,
 By love alone distinguish'd from the rest.

For her I'll yoke my oxen to the plough,
 In gloomy forests tend my lonely flock ;
 For her a goat-herd climb the mountain's brow,
 And sleep extended on the naked rock.

Ah, what avails to press the stately bed,
 And far from her 'midst tasteless grandeur weep,
 By marble fountains lay the pensive head,
 And, while they murmur, strive in vain to sleep ?

Delia alone can please, and never tire,
 Exceed the paint of thought in true delight ;
 With her, enjoyment wakens new desire,
 And equal rapture glows through every night :

Beauty and worth in her alike contend,
 To charm the fancy, and to fix the mind ;
 In her, my wife, my mistress, and my friend,
 I taste the joys of sense and reason join'd.

On her I'll gaze, when others loves are o'er,
 And dying press her with my clay-cold hand —
 Thou weep'st already, as I were no more,
 Nor can that gentle breast the thought withstand.

Oh, when I die, my latest moments spare,
 Nor let thy grief with sharper torments kill,
 Wound not thy cheeks, nor hurt that flowing hair,
 Though I am dead, my soul shall love thee still :

Oh, quit the room, oh, quit the deathful bed,
 Or thou wilt die, so tender is thy heart ;
 Oh, leave me, Delia, ere thou see me dead,
 These weeping friends will do thy mournful part :

Let them, extended on the decent bier,
 Convey the corse in melancholy state,
 Through all the village spread the tender tear,
 While pitying maids our wondrous loves relate.

WILLIAM SOMERVILE.

WILLIAM SOMERVILE, an agreeable poet, was born in 1692, at his father's seat at Edston, in Warwickshire. He was educated at Winchester school, whence he was elected to New College, Oxford. His political attachments were to the Whig party, as appeared from his praises of Marlborough, Stanhope, and Addison. To the latter of these he addressed a poem, in which there is the happy couplet alluded to in the Spectator:

“ When panting Virtue her last efforts made,
“ You brought your Clio to the Virgin's aid.”

“ Clio” was known to be the mark by which Addison distinguished his papers in that miscellany.

Somervile inherited a considerable paternal estate, on which he principally lived, acting as a magistrate, and pursuing with ardour the amusements of a sportsman, varied with the studies of a man of letters. His mode of living, which was hospitable, and addicted to conviviality, threw him into pecuniary embarrassments, which preyed on his mind, and plunged him into habits which shortened his life. He died in 1742; and his friend Shenstone, with much feeling, announces the event to one of his correspondents. Somervile passed his life in celibacy, and made over the reversion of his estate to Lord Somervile, a branch of the same family, charged with a jointure to his mother, then in her 90th year.

As a poet, he is chiefly known by “ The Chase,” a piece in blank verse, which maintains a high rank in the didactic and descriptive classes. Being composed by one who was perfectly conversant with the sports which are its subject, and entered into them with enthusiasm, his pictures greatly surpass the draughts of the same kind which are attempted by poets by profession. Another piece connected with this is entitled “ Field Sports,” but only describes that of hawking. In his “ Hobbinol, or Rural Games,” he attempts the burlesque with tolerable success. Of his other pieces, serious and comic, there are few which add to his fame.

THE CHASE.

BOOK I.

Argument.

The subject proposed. Address to his royal highness the prince. The origin of hunting. The rude and unpolished manner of the first hunters. Beasts at first hunted for food and sacrifice. The grant made by God to man of the beasts, &c. The regular manner of hunting first brought into this island by the Normans. The best hounds and best horses bred here. The advantage of this exercise to us, as islanders. Address to gentlemen of estates. Situation of the kennel and its several courts. The diversion and employment of hounds in the kennel. The different sorts of hounds for each different chase. Description of a perfect hound. Of sizing and sorting of hounds; the middle-sized hound recommended. Of the large deep-mouthed hound for hunting the stag and otter. Of the lime-hound; their use on the borders of England and Scotland. A physical account of scents. Of good and bad scenting days. A short admonition to my brethren of the couples.

THE Chase I sing, hounds, and their various breed
And no less various use. O thou, great prince
Whom Cambria's towering hills proclaim their lord,
Deign thou to hear my bold, instructive song.
While grateful citizens with pompous show,
Rear the triumphal arch, rich with th' exploits
Of thy illustrious house; while virgins pave
Thy way with flowers, and, as the royal youth
Passing they view, admire and sigh in vain;
While crowded theatres, too fondly proud
Of their exotic minstrels, and shrill pipes,
The price of manhood, hail thee with a song,
And airs soft-warbling; my hoarse-sounding horn
Invites thee to the Chase, the sport of kings;
Image of war, without its guilt. The Muse
Aloft on wing shall soar, conduct with care
Thy foaming courser o'er the steepy rock,
Or on the river bank receive thee safe,
Light-bounding o'er the wave, from shore to shore
Be thou our great protector, gracious youth!
And if, in future times, some envious prince,
Careless of right, and guileful, should invade
Thy Britain's commerce, or should strive in vain
To wrest the balance from thy equal hand;
Thy hunter-train, in cheerful green array'd,
(A band undaunted, and inur'd to toils)

hall compass thee around, die at thy feet,
 Hew thy passage through th' embattled foe,
 And clear thy way to fame: inspir'd by thee
 The nobler chase of glory shall pursue
 Through fire, and smoke, and blood, and fields of death.

Nature, in her productions slow, aspires
 By just degrees to reach perfection's height:
 To mimic Art works leisurely, till Time
 Improve the piece, or wise Experience give
 The proper finishing. When Nimrod bold,
 That mighty hunter, first made war on beasts,
 Had stain'd the woodland-green with purple dye,
 And unpolish'd was the huntsman's art;
 No stated rule, his wanton will his guide.
 With clubs and stones, rude implements of war,
 He arm'd his savage bands, a multitude
 Train'd; of twining osiers form'd, they pitch
 Their artless toils, then range the desert hills,
 And scour the plains below; the trembling herd
 Start at th' unusual sound, and clamorous shout
 Unheard before; surpris'd, alas! to find
 Now their foe, whom erst they deem'd their lord,
 So mild and gentle, and by whom as yet
 Secure they graz'd. Death stretches o'er the plain
 A wide-wasting, and grim slaughter red with blood:
 Urg'd on by hunger keen, they wound, they kill,
 Their rage licentious knows no bound; at last,
 Number'd with their spoils, joyful they bear
 Upon their shoulders broad the bleeding prey.

On their altars smoke a sacrifice
 To that all-gracious Power, whose bounteous hand
 Supports his wide creation; what remains
 A living coals they broil, inelegant
 Of taste, nor skill'd as yet in nicer arts
 To pamper'd luxury. Devotion pure,
 And strong necessity, thus first began
 The chase of beasts: though bloody was the deed,
 Yet without guilt. For the green herb alone
 Is equal to sustain man's labouring race,
 And every moving thing that liv'd on Earth
 Was granted him for food.* So just is Heaven,
 To give us in proportion to our wants.

Or chance or industry in after-time
 Made few improvements made, but short as yet
 From due perfection. In this isle remote
 Our painted ancestors were slow to learn,
 To arms devote, of the politer arts
 Or skill'd nor studious; till from Neustria's coasts
 Victorious William, to more decent rules
 Subdu'd our Saxon fathers, taught to speak
 The proper dialect, with horn and voice
 To cheer the busy hound, whose well-known cry
 His listening peers approve with joint acclaim.
 From him successive huntsmen learn'd to join
 A bloody social leagues, the multitude
 Separ'd; to size, to sort their various tribes;
 To rear, feed, hunt, and discipline the pack.

Hail, happy Britain! highly favour'd isle,
 And Heaven's peculiar care! To thee 'tis given
 To train the sprightly steed, more fleet than those Begot by winds, or the celestial breed
 That bore the great Pelides through the press
 Of heroes arm'd, and broke their crowded ranks;
 Which, proudly neighing, with the Sun begins
 His cheerful course; and ere his beams decline,
 Has measur'd half thy surface unfatigued.
 In thee alone, fair land of liberty!

* Gen. chap. ix. ver. 3.

Is bred the perfect hound, in scent and speed
 As yet unrivall'd, while in other climes
 Their virtue fails, a weak degenerate race.
 In vain malignant steams and winter fogs
 Load the dull air, and hover round our coasts,
 The huntsman ever gay, robust, and bold,
 Defies the noxious vapour, and confides
 In this delightful exercise, to raise
 His drooping herd, and cheer his heart with joy.

Ye vigorous youths, by smiling Fortune blest
 With large demesnes, hereditary wealth,
 Heap'd copious by your wise forefathers' care,
 Hear and attend! while I the means reveal
 To enjoy those pleasures, for the weak too strong,
 Too costly for the poor: To rein the steed
 Swift stretching o'er the plain, to cheer the pack
 Opening in consorts of harmonious joy,
 But breathing death. What though the gripe severe
 Of brazen-fisted Time, and slow disease
 Creeping through every vein, and nerve unstrung.
 Afflict my shatter'd frame, undaunted still,
 Fix'd as a mountain ash, that braves the bolts
 Of angry Jove; though blasted, yet unfallen;
 Still can my soul in Fancy's mirror view
 Deeds glorious once, recall the joyous scene
 In all its splendours deck'd, o'er the full bowl
 Recount my triumphs past, urge others on
 With hand and voice, and point the winding way:
 Pleas'd with that social sweet garrulity,
 The poor disbanded veteran's sole delight.

First let the kennel be the huntsman's care,
 Upon some little eminence erect,
 And fronting to the ruddy dawn; its courts
 On either hand wide opening to receive
 The Sun's all-cheering beams, when mild he shines,
 And gilds the mountain tops. For much the pack
 (Rous'd from their dark alcoves) delight to stretch
 And bask in his invigorating ray:
 Warn'd by the streaming light and merry lark,
 Forth rush the jolly clan; with tuneful throats
 They carol loud, and in grand chorus join'd
 Salute the new-born day. For not alone
 The vegetable world, but men and brutes
 Own his reviving influence, and joy
 At his approach. Fountain of light! if chance
 Some envious cloud veil thy refulgent brow,
 In vain the Muses' aid; untouch'd, unstrung,
 Lies my mute harp, and thy desponding bard
 Sits darkly musing o'er th' unfinish'd lay.

Let no Corinthian pillars prop the dome,
 A vain expense, on charitable deeds
 Better dispos'd, to clothe the tatter'd wretch,
 Who shrinks beneath the blast, to feed the poor,
 Pinch'd with afflictive want. For use, not state,
 Gracefully plain, let each apartment rise.
 O'er all let cleanliness preside, no scraps
 Bestrew the pavement, and no half-pick'd bones
 To kindle fierce debate, or to disgust
 That nicer sense, on which the sportsman's hope,
 And all his future triumphs, must depend.
 Soon as the growling pack with eager joy
 Have lapp'd their smoking viands, morn or eve,
 From the full cistern lead the ductile streams,
 To wash thy court well pav'd, nor spare thy pains,
 For much to health will cleanliness avail.
 Seek'st thou for hounds to climb the rocky steep,
 And brush th' entangled covert, whose nice scent
 O'er greasy fallows and frequented roads
 Can pick the dubious way? Banish far off
 Each noisome stench, let no offensive smell

Invade thy wide enclosure, but admit
The nitrous air and purifying breeze.

Water and shade no less demand thy care :
In a large square th' adjacent field enclose,
There plant in equal ranks the spreading elm,
Or fragrant lime ; most happy thy design,
If at the bottom of thy spacious court,
A large canal, fed by the crystal brook,
From its transparent bosom shall reflect
Downward thy structure and inverted grove.
Here when the Sun's too potent gleams annoy
The crowded kennel, and the drooping pack,
Restless, and faint, loll their unmoisten'd tongues,
And drop their feeble tails, to cooler shades
Lead forth the panting tribe ; soon shalt thou find
The cordial breeze their fainting hearts revive :
Tumultuous soon they plunge into the stream,
There lave their reeking sides, with greedy joy
Gulp down the flying wave, this way and that
From shore to shore they swim, while clamour loud
And wild uproar torments the troubled flood :
Then on the sunny bank they roll and stretch
Their dripping limbs, or else in wanton rings
Coursing around, pursuing and pursued,
The merry multitude disporting play.

But here with watchful and observant eye,
Attend their frolics, which too often end
In bloody broils and death. High o'er thy head
Wave thy resounding whip, and with a voice
Fierce-menacing o'errule the stern debate,
And quench their kindling rage ; for oft in sport
Begun, combat ensues, growling they snarl,
Then on their haunches rear'd, rampant they seize
Each other's throats, with teeth and claws in gore
Besmear'd, they wound, they tear, till on the ground,
Panting, half dead the conquer'd champion lies :
Then sudden all the base ignoble crowd
Loud-clamouring seize the helpless worried wretch,
And, thirsting for his blood, drag different ways
His mangled carcass on th' ensanguin'd plain.
O breasts of pity void ! t' oppress the weak,
To point your vengeance at the friendless head,
And with one mutual cry insult the fall'n !
Emblem too just of man's degenerate race.

Others apart, by native instinct led,
Knowing instructor ! 'mong the ranker grass
Cull each salubrious plant, with bitter juice
Concoctive stor'd, and potent to allay
Each vicious ferment. Thus the hand divine
Of Providence, beneficent and kind
To all his creatures, for the brutes prescribes
A ready remedy, and is himself
Their great physician. Now grown stiff with age,
And many a painful chase, the wise old hound,
Regardless of the frolic pack, attends
His master's side, or slumbers at his ease
Beneath the bending shade ; there many a ring
Runs o'er in dreams ; now on the doubtful foil
Puzzles perplex'd, or doubles intricate
Cautious unfolds, then, wing'd with all his speed,
Bounds o'er the lawn to seize his panting prey,
And in imperfect whimpers speaks his joy.

A different hound for every different chase
Select with judgment ; nor the timorous hare
O'ermatch'd destroy, but leave that vile offence
To the mean, murderous, coursing crew ; intent
On blood and spoil. O blast their hopes, just Heaven !

And all their painful drudgeries repay
With disappointment and severe remorse

But husband thou thy pleasures, and give scope
To all her subtle play : by Nature led
A thousand shifts she tries ; t' unravel these
Th' industrious beagle twists his waving tail,
Through all her labyrinths pursues, and rings
Her doleful knell. See there with countenance blithe,

And with a courtly grin, the fawning hound
Salutes thee cowering, his wide opening nose
Upward he curls, and his large sloe-black eyes
Melt in soft blandishments and humble joy ;
His glossy skin, or yellow-pied, or blue,
In lights or shades by Nature's pencil drawn,
Reflects the various tints ; his ears and legs
Fleck'd here and there, in gay enamell'd pride,
Rival the speckled pard ; his rush-grown tail
O'er his broad back bends in an ample arch ;
On shoulders clean, upright and firm he stands ;
His round cat foot, strait hams, and wide-spread thighs,

And his low-dropping chest, confess his speed,
His strength, his wind, or on the steepy hill,
Or far-extended plain ; in every part
So well proportion'd, that the nicer skill
Of Phidias himself can't blame thy choice.
Of such compose thy pack. But here a mean
Observe, nor the large hound prefer, of size
Gigantic ; he in the thick-woven covert
Painfully tugs, or in the thorny brake
Torn and embarrass'd bleeds : But if too small,
The pigmy brood in every furrow swims ;
Moi'd in the clogging clay, panting they lag
Behind inglorious ; or else shivering creep
Benumb'd and faint beneath the sheltering thorn.
For hounds of middle size, active and strong,
Will better answer all thy various ends,
And crown thy pleasing labours with success.

As some brave captain, curious and exact,
By his fix'd standard forms in equal ranks
His gay battalion, as one man they move
Step after step, their size the same, their arms,
Far-gleaming, dart the same united blaze :
Reviewing generals his merit own ;
How regular ! how just ! And all his cares
Are well repaid, if mighty George approve.
So model thou thy pack, if honour touch
Thy generous soul, and the world's just applause.
But above all take heed, nor mix thy bounds
Of different kinds ; discordant sounds shall grate
Thy ears offended, and a lagging line
Of babbling curs disgrace thy broken pack.
But if the amphibious otter be thy chase,
Or stately stag, that o'er the woodland reigns ;
Or if the harmonious thunder of the field
Delight thy ravish'd ears ; the deep-slew'd hound
Breed up with care, strong, heavy, slow, but sure
Whose ears down-hanging from his thick round head
Shall sweep the morning dew, whose clanging voice
Awake the mountain Echo in her cell,
And shake the forests : The bold Talbot kind
Of these the prime ; as white as Alpine snows ;
And great their use of old. Upon the banks
Of Tweed, slow winding through the vale, the scene
Of war and rapine once, ere Britons knew
The sweets of peace, or Anna's dread commands
To lasting leagues the haughty rivals aw'd,
There dwelt a pilfering race ; well train'd and skilful
In all the mysteries of theft, the spoil
Their only substance, feuds and war their sport
Not more expert in every fraudulent art

The arch felon * was of old, who by the tail
 Drew back his lowing prize : in vain his wiles,
 In vain the shelter of the covering rock,
 In vain the sooty cloud, and ruddy flames
 That issued from his mouth ; for soon he paid
 His forfeit life : a debt how justly due
 To wrong'd Alcides, and avenging Heaven !
 Fell'd in the shades of night they ford the stream,
 Then prowling far and near, whate'er they seize Becomes their prey : nor flocks nor herds are safe,
 Nor stalls protect the steer, nor strong-barr'd doors
 Secure the favourite horse. Soon as the morn
 Reveals his wrongs, with ghastly visage wan
 The plunder'd owner stands, and from his lips
 A thousand thronging curses burst their way :
 He calls his stout allies, and in a line
 His faithful hound he leads, then with a voice
 That utters loud his rage, attentive cheers :
 Soon the sagacious brute, his curling tail
 Flourish'd in air, low bending plies around
 His busy nose, the steaming vapour snuffs
 Inquisitive, nor leaves one turf untried,
 Till, conscious of the recent stains, his heart
 Beats quick ; his snuffling nose, his active tail,
 Test his joy ; then with deep opening mouth,
 That makes the welkin tremble, he proclaims
 His audacious felon ; foot by foot he marks
 His winding way, while all the listening crowd
 Applaud his reasonings. O'er the watery ford,
 By sandy heaths, and stony barren hills,
 O'er beaten paths, with men and beasts distain'd,
 Herring he pursues ; till at the cot
 Arriv'd, and seizing by his guilty throat
 The catiff vile, redeems the captive prey :
 He exquisitely delicate his sense !
 Should some more curious sportsman here inquire
 Whence this sagacity, this wondrous power
 Of tracing, step by step, or man or brute ?
 That guide invisible points out their way
 O'er the dank marsh, bleak hill, and sandy plain ?
 The courteous Muse shall the dark cause reveal.
 The blood that from the heart incessant rolls
 In many a crimson tide, then here and there
 In smaller rills disparted, as it flows
 Repell'd, the serous particles evade
 Through th' open pores, and with the ambient air
 A mingling mix. As fuming vapours rise,
 And hang upon the gently purling brook,
 Here by th' incumbent atmosphere compress'd :
 The panting Chase grows warmer as he flies,
 And through the net-work of the skin perspires ;
 Leaves a long-streaming trail behind, which by
 The cooler air condens'd, remains, unless
 By some rude storm dispers'd, or rarified
 By the meridian Sun's intenser heat.
 On every shrub the warm effluvia cling,
 Hang on the grass, impregnate earth and skies.
 With nostrils opening wide, o'er hill, o'er dale
 The vigorous bounds pursue, with every breath
 Shake the grateful steam, quick pleasures sting
 Their tingling nerves, while they their thanks repay,
 And in triumphant melody confess
 The titillating joy. Thus on the air
 Depend the hunter's hopes. When ruddy streaks
 In eve forebode a blustering stormy day,
 Or lowering clouds blacken the mountain's brow,
 When nipping frosts, and the keen biting blasts
 Of the dry parching east, menace the trees

With tender blossoms teeming, kindly spare
 Thy sleeping pack, in their warm beds of straw
 Low-sinking at their ease ; listless they shrink
 Into some dark recess, nor hear thy voice
 Though oft invoc'd ; or haply if thy call
 Rouse up the slumbering tribe, with heavy eyes
 Glaz'd, lifeless, dull, downward they drop their tails
 Inverted ; high on their bent backs erect
 Their pointed bristles stare, or 'mong the tufts
 Of ranker weeds, each stomach-healing plant
 Curious they crop, sick, spiritless, forlorn.
 These inauspicious days, on other cares
 Employ thy precious hours ; th' improving friend
 With open arms embrace, and from his lips
 Glean science, season'd with good-natur'd wit.
 But if the inclement skies and angry Jove
 Forbid the pleasing intercourse, thy books
 Invite thy ready hand, each sacred page
 Rich with the wise remarks of heroes old.
 Converse familiar with th' illustrious dead ;
 With great examples of old Greece or Rome,
 Enlarge thy free-born heart, and bless kind Heaven,
 That Britain yet enjoys dear Liberty,
 That balm of life, that sweetest blessing, cheap
 Though purchas'd with our blood. Well-bred, polite,

Credit thy calling. See ! how mean, how low,
 The bookless sauntering youth, proud of the skut
 That dignifies his cap, his flourish'd belt,
 And rusty couples gingling by his side.
 Be thou of other mould ; and know that such Transporting pleasures were by Heaven ordain'd
 Wisdom's relief, and Virtue's great reward.

Book II.

Argument.

Of the power of instinct in brutes. Two remarkable instances in the hunting of the roe-buck, and in the hare going to seat in the morning. Of the variety of seats or forms of the hare, according to the change of the season, weather, or wind. Description of the hare-hunting in all its parts, interspersed with rules to be observed by those who follow that chase. Transition to the Asiatic way of hunting, particularly the magnificent manner of the Great Mogul, and other Tartarian princes, taken from Monsieur Bernier, and the history of Gengiscan the Great. Concludes with a short reproof of tyrants and oppressors of mankind.

 Nor will it less delight th' attentive sage
 To observe that Instinct, which unerring guides
 The brutal race, which mimics reason's lore, [swift
 And oft transcends : Heaven-taught, the roe-buck
 Loiters at ease before the driving pack
 And mocks their vain pursuit ; nor far he flies,
 But checks his ardour, till the steaming scent
 That freshens on the blade provokes their rage.
 Urg'd to their speed, his weak deluded foes
 Soon flag fatigued ; strain'd to excess each nerve,
 Each slacken'd sinew fails ; they pant, they foam ;
 Then o'er the lawn he bounds, o'er the high hills
 Stretches secure, and leaves the scatter'd crowd
 To puzzle in the distant vale below.

'Tis Instinct that directs the jealous hare
 To chuse her soft abode. With step revers'd

* Cacus, Virg. Æn. lib. viii.

She forms the doubling maze ; then, ere the morn
Peeps through the clouds, leaps to her close recess.

As wandering shepherds on th' Arabian plains
No settled residence observe, but shift
Their moving camp, now, on some cooler hill
With cedars crown'd, court the refreshing breeze ;
And then, below, where trickling streams distil
From some penurious source, their thirst allay,
And feed their fainting flocks : so the wise hares
Oft quit their seats, lest some more curious eye
Should mark their haunts, and by dark treacherous wiles

Plot their destruction ; or perchance in hopes
Of plenteous forage, near the ranker mead,
Or matted blade, wary and close they sit.
When spring shines forth, season of love and joy,
In the moist marsh, 'mong beds of rushes hid,
They cool their boiling blood. When summer suns
Bake the cleft earth, to thick wide-waving fields
Of corn full-grown, they lead their helpless young :
But when autumnal torrents and fierce rains
Deluge the vale, in the dry crumbling bank
Their forms they delve, and cautiously avoid
The dripping covert : yet when winter's cold
Their limbs benumbs, thither with speed return'd
In the long grass they skulk, or shrinking creep
Among the wither'd leaves, thus changing still,
As fancy prompts them, or as food invites.
But every season carefully observ'd,

Th' inconstant winds, the fickle element,
The wise experienc'd huntsman soon may find
His subtle, various game, nor waste in vain
His tedious hours, till his impatient hounds,
With disappointment vex'd, each springing lark
Babbling pursue, far scatter'd o'er the fields.

Now golden Autumn from her open lap
Her fragrant bounties showers ; the fields are shorn ;
Inwardly smiling, the proud farmer views
The rising pyramids that grace his yard,
And counts his large increase ; his barns are stor'd,
And groaning staddles bend beneath their load.
All now is free as air, and the gay pack
In the rough bristly stubbles range unblam'd ;
No widow's tears o'erflow, no secret curse
Swells in the farmer's breast, which his pale lips
Trembling conceal, by his fierce landlord aw'd :
But courteous now he levels every fence,
Joins in the common cry, and halloos loud,
Charm'd with the rattling thunder of the field.
Oh bear me, some kind power invisible !
To that extended lawn, where the gay court
View the swift racers, stretching to the goal ;
Games more renown'd, and a far nobler train,
Than proud Elean fields could boast of old.
Oh ! were a Theban lyre not wanting here,
And Pindar's voice, to do their merit right !
Or to those spacious plains, where the strain'd eye,
In the wide prospect lost, beholds at last
Saron's proud spire, that o'er the hills ascends,
And pierces through the clouds. Or to thy downs,
Fair Cotswold, where the well-breath'd beagle climbs
With matchless speed thy green aspiring brow,
And leaves the lagging multitude behind.

Hail, gentle Dawn ! mild blushing goddess, hail !
Rejoic'd I see thy purple mantle spread
O'er half the skies, gems pave thy radiant way,
And orient pearls from every shrub depend.
Farewell, Cleora ; here deep sunk in down
Slumber secure, with happy dreams amus'd,
Till grateful steams shall tempt thee to re-

Thy early meal, or thy officious maids,
The toilet plac'd, shall urge thee to perform
Th' important work. Me other joys invite,
The horn sonorous calls, the pack awak'd
Their mattins chaunt, nor brook my long delay.
My courser hears their voice ; see there, with ear
And tail erect, neighing he paws the ground ;
Fierce rapture kindles in his reddening eyes,
And boils in every vein. As captive boys
Cow'd by the ruling rod and haughty frowns
Of pedagogues severe, from their hard tasks
If once dismiss'd, no limits can contain
The tumult rais'd within their little breasts,
But give a loose to all their frolic play :
So from their kennel rush the joyous pack ;
A thousand wanton gaieties express
Their inward ecstasy, their pleasing sport
Once more indulg'd, and liberty restor'd.
The rising Sun, that o'er th' horizon peeps,
As many colours from their glossy skins
Beaming reflects, as paint the various bow
When April showers descend. Delightful scene !
Where all around is gay, men, horses, dogs,
And in each smiling countenance appears
Fresh blooming health, and universal joy.

Huntsman, lead on ! behind the clustering pack
Submiss attend, hear with respect thy whip
Loud-clanging, and thy harsher voice obey :
Spare not the straggling cur that wildly roves ;
But let thy brisk assistant on his back
Imprint thy just resentments ; let each lash
Bite to the quick, till howling he return,
And whining creep amid the trembling crowd.

Here on this verdant spot, where Nature kind
With double blessings crowns the farmer's hopes ;
Where flowers autumnal spring, and the rank mead
Affords the wandering hares a rich repast ;
Throw off thy ready pack. See, where they spread,
And range around, and dash the glittering dew.
If some staunch hound, with his authentic voice,
Avow the recent trail, the justling tribe
Attend his call, then with one mutual cry
The welcome news confirm, and echoing hills
Repeat the pleasing tale. See how they thread
The brakes, and up yon furrow drive along !
But quick they back recoil, and wisely check
Their eager haste ; then o'er the fallow'd ground
How leisurely they work, and many a pause
Th' harmonious concert breaks ; till more assur'd
With joy redoubled the low valleys ring.
What artful labyrinths perplex their way !
Ah ! there she lies ; how close : she pants, she doubts
If now she lives ; she trembles as she sits,
With horror seiz'd. The wither'd grass that clings
Around her head, of the same russet hue,
Almost deceiv'd my sight, had not her eyes
With life full-beaming her vain wiles betray'd.
At distance draw thy pack, let all be hush'd,
No clamour loud, no frantic joy be heard,
Lest the wild hound run gadding o'er the plain
Untractable, nor hear thy chiding voice.
Now gently put her off ; see how direct
To her known mew she flies ! Here, huntsman, bring (But without hurry) all thy jolly hounds,
And calmly lay them in. How low they stoop,
And seem to plough the ground ! then all at once
With greedy nostrils snuff the fuming steam
That glads their fluttering hearts. As winds let loose
From the dark caverns of the blustering god, burst away, and sweep the dewy lawn.

Hope gives them wings while she's spurr'd on by fear.

The welkin rings, men, dogs, hills, rocks, and woods
In the full concert join. Now, my brave youths,
Scripp'd for the chase, give all your souls to joy !
See how their coursers, than the mountain roe
More fleet, the verdant carpet skim, thick clouds
Snorting they breathe, their shining hoofs scarce print

The grass unbruise'd ; with emulation fir'd
They strain to lead the field, top the barr'd gate,
O'er the deep ditch exulting bound, and brush
The thorny-twining hedge : the riders bend
O'er their arch'd necks ; with steady hands, by turns
Indulge their speed, or moderate their rage.

Where are their sorrows, disappointments, wrongs,
Exaltations, sickness, cares ? All, all are gone,
And with the panting winds lag far behind.

Huntsman ! her gait observe ; if in wide rings
She wheel her mazy way, in the same round
Existing still, she 'll foil the beaten track.
As if she fly, and with the favouring wind
Forge her bold course ; less intricate thy task :

Push on thy pack. Like some poor exil'd wretch,
The frightened Chase leaves her late dear abodes,
O'er plains remote she stretches far away,
And never to return ! For greedy Death
Overpowering exults, secure to seize his prey.

Hark ! from yon covert, where those towering oaks
Above the humble copse aspiring rise,
That glorious triumphs burst in every gale
Upon our ravish'd ears ! The hunters shout,
The clanging horns swell their sweet-winding notes,
The pack wide opening load the trembling air
With various melody ; from tree to tree

The propagated cry redoubling bounds,
And winged zephyrs waft the floating joy
Through all the regions near : afflictive birch
No more the school-boy dreads, his prison broke,
Imperturbable he flies, nor heeds his master's call ;
The weary traveller forgets his road,

And climbs the adjacent hill ; the ploughman leaves
His unfinished furrow ; nor his bleating flocks
Are now the shepherd's joy ! men, boys, and girls
Fertile the unpeopled village ; and wild crowds
Tread o'er the plain, by the sweet frenzy seiz'd.

Look, how she pants ! and o'er yon opening glade
Is glancing by ! while, at the further end,
The puzzling pack unravel wile by wile,
Are within mase. The covert's utmost bound
By the skirts ; behind them cautious creeps ;
And in that very track, so lately stain'd

By all the steaming crowd, seems to pursue
The foe she flies. Let cavillers deny
That brutes have reason ; sure 'tis something more,
Which Heaven directs, and stratagems inspires
Beyond the short extent of human thought.

At hold — I see her from the covert break ;
And on yon little eminence she sits ;
Silent she listens with one ear erect,
Wondering, and doubtful what new course to take,
And how to escape the fierce blood-thirsty crew,
But still urge on, and still in volleys loud
Mock her woes, and mock her sore distress.

Now in louder peals the loaded winds
Ring on the gathering storm, her fears prevail,
And o'er the plain, and o'er the mountain's ridge,
Way she flies ; nor ships with wind and tide,
Nor all their canvass wings, scud half so fast.
Use more, ye jovial train, your courage try,

And each clean courser's speed. We scour along,
In pleasing hurry and confusion tost ;
Oblivion to be wish'd. The patient pack
Hang on the scent unwearied, up they climb,
And ardent we pursue ; our labouring steeds
We press, we gore ; till once the summit gain'd,
Painfully panting ; there we breathe awhile ;
Then, like a foaming torrent, pouring down
Precipitant, we smoke along the vale.

Happy the man who with unrivall'd speed
Can pass his fellows, and with pleasure view
The struggling pack ; how in the rapid course
Alternate they preside, and jostling push
To guide the dubious scent ; how giddy youth
Oft babbling errs, by wiser age reprov'd ;

How, niggard of his strength, the wise old bound
Hangs in the rear, till some important point
Rouse all his diligence, or till the chase
Sinking he finds : then to the head he springs
With thirst of glory fir'd, and wins the prize.

Huntsman, take heed ; they stop in full career.
Yon crowding flocks, that at a distance gaze,
Have haply foil'd the turf. See ! that old bound,
How busily he works, but dares not trust
His doubtful sense ; draw yet a wider ring.

Hark ! now again the chorus fills. As bells
Sally'd awhile, at once their peal renew,
And high in air the tuneful thunder rolls.

See, how they toss, with animated rage
Recovering all they lost ! — That eager haste
Some doubling wile foreshows. — Ah ! yet once more They're check'd, — hold back with speed — on either
hand

They flourish round — ev'n yet persist — 'Tis right,
Away they spring ; the rustling stubbles bend
Beneath the driving storm. Now the poor Chase
Begins to flag, to her last shifts reduc'd.

From brake to brake she flies, and visits all
Her well-known haunts, where once she rang'd secure,

With love and plenty blest. See ! there she goes,
She reels along, and by her gait betrays
Her inward weakness. See, how black she looks !
The sweat, that clogs the obstructed pores, scarce
leaves

A languid scent. And now in open view
See, see, she flies ! each eager hound exerts
His utmost speed, and stretches every nerve.
How quick she turns ! their gaping jaws cludes,
And yet a moment lives ; till, round enclos'd
By all the greedy pack, with infant screams
She yields her breath, and there reluctant dies.

So when the furious Bacchanals assail'd
Threïcian Orpheus, poor ill-fated bard !
Loud was the cry ; hills, woods, and Hebrus' banks,
Return'd their clamorous rage ; distress'd he flies,
Shifting from place to place, but flies in vain ;
For eager they pursue, till panting, faint,
By noisy multitudes o'erpower'd, he sinks
To the relentless crowd a bleeding prey.

The huntsman now, a deep incision made,
Shakes out with hands impure, and dashes down
Her reeking entrails and yet quivering heart.
These claim the pack, the bloody perquisite
For all their toils. Stretch'd on the ground she lies
A mangled corse ; in her dim glaring eyes
Cold Death exults, and stiffens every limb.
Aw'd by the threatening whip, the furious hounds
Around her bay ; or at their master's foot,
Each happy favourite courts his kind applause,

With humble adulation cowering low.
 All now is joy. With cheeks full-blown they wind
 Her solemn dirge, while the loud-opening pack
 The concert swell, and hills and dales return
 The sadly-pleasing sounds. Thus the poor hare,
 A puny, dastard animal, but vers'd
 In subtle wiles, diverts the youthful train.
 But if thy proud, aspiring soul disdains
 So mean a prey, delighted with the pomp,
 Magnificence, and grandeur of the chase;
 Hear what the Muse from faithful records sings.

Why on the banks of Gemna, Indian stream,
 Line within line, rise the pavilions proud,
 Their silken streamers waving in the wind?
 Why neighs the warrior horse? From tent to tent,
 Why press in crowds the buzzing multitude?
 Why shines the polish'd helm, and pointed lance,
 This way and that far beaming o'er the plain?
 Nor Visapour nor Golconda rebel;
 Nor the great Sophy, with his numerous host,
 Lays waste the provinces; nor glory fires
 To rob and to destroy, beneath the name
 And specious guise of war. A nobler cause
 Calls Aurengzebe to arms. No cities sack'd,
 No mother's tears, no helpless orphan's cries,
 No violated leagues, with sharp remorse
 Shall sting the conscious victor: but mankind
 Shall hail him good and just. For 'tis on beasts
 He draws his vengeful sword! on beasts of prey
 Full-fed with human gore. See, see, he comes!
 Imperial Dehli, opening wide her gates,
 Pours out her thronging legions, bright in arms,
 And all the pomp of war. Before them sound
 Clarions and trumpets, breathing martial airs,
 And bold defiance. High upon his throne,
 Borne on the back of his proud elephant,
 Sits the great chief of Tamur's glorious race:
 Sublime he sits, amid the radiant blaze
 Of gems and gold. Omrahs about him crowd,
 And rein th' Arabian steed, and watch his nod:
 And potent rajahs, who themselves preside
 O'er realms of wide extent; but here submit
 Their homage pay, alternate kings and slaves.
 Next these, with prying eunuchs girt around,
 The fair sultanas of his court: a troop
 Of chosen beauties, but with care conceal'd
 From each intrusive eye; one look is death.
 Ah, cruel eastern law! (had kings a power
 But equal to their wild tyrannic will)
 To rob us of the Sun's all-cheering ray,
 Were less severe. The vulgar close the march,
 Slaves and artificers; and Dehli mourns
 Her empty and depopulated streets.
 Now at the camp arriv'd, with stern review,
 Through groves of spears, from file to file he darts
 His sharp experienc'd eye; their order marks,
 Each in his station rang'd, exact and firm,
 Till in the boundless line his sight is lost.
 Not greater multitudes in arms appear'd
 On these extended plains, when Ammon's son
 With mighty Porus in dread battle join'd,
 The vassal world the prize. Nor was that host
 More numerous of old, which the great king
 Pour'd out on Greece from all th' unpeopled East,
 That bridg'd the Hellespont from shore to shore,
 And drank the rivers dry. Meanwhile in troops
 The busy hunter-train mark out the ground,
 A wide circumference, full many a league

In compass round; woods, rivers, hills, and plain,
 Large provinces; enough to gratify
 Ambition's highest aim, could reason bound
 Man's erring will. Now sit in close divan
 The mighty chiefs of this prodigious host.
 He from the throne high-eminent presides,
 Gives out his mandates proud, laws of the chase,
 From ancient records drawn. With reverence low,
 And prostrate at his feet, the chiefs receive
 His irreversible decrees, from which
 To vary is to die. Then his brave bands
 Each to his station leads; encamping round,
 Till the wide circle is completely form'd.
 Where decent order reigns, what these command,
 Those execute with speed, and punctual care,
 In all the strictest discipline of war:
 As if some watchful foe, with bold insult,
 Hung lowering o'er their camp. The high resolve
 That flies on wings through all th' encircling line,
 Each motion steers, and animates the whole.
 So by the Sun's attractive power controll'd,
 The planets in their spheres roll round his orb:
 On all he shines, and rules the great machine.

Ere yet the morn dispels the fleeting mists,
 The signal given by the loud trumpet's voice,
 Now high in air th' imperial standard waves,
 Emblazon'd rich with gold, and glittering gems,
 And like a sheet of fire, through the dun gloom
 Streaming meteorous. The soldiers' shouts,
 And all the brazen instruments of war,
 With mutual clamour, and united din,
 Fill the large concave. While from camp to camp
 They catch the varied sounds, floating in air,
 Round all the wide circumference, tigers fell
 Shrink at the noise, deep in his gloomy den
 The lion starts, and morsels yet unchew'd
 Drop from his trembling jaws. Now all at once
 Onward they march embattled, to the sound
 Of martial harmony; fifes, cornets, drums,
 That rouse the sleepy soul to arms, and bold
 Heroic deeds. In parties here and there
 Detach'd o'er hill and dale, the hunters range
 Inquisitive; strong dogs, that match in fight
 The boldest brute, around their masters wait,
 A faithful guard. No haunt unsearch'd, they drive
 From every covert, and from every den,
 The lurking savages. Incessant shouts
 Re-echo through the woods, and kindling fires
 Gleam from the mountain tops; the forest seems
 One mingling blaze: like flocks of sheep they fly
 Before the flaming brand: fierce lions, pards,
 Boars, tigers, bears and wolves; a dreadful crew
 Of grim blood-thirsty foes; growling along,
 They stalk indignant; but fierce vengeance still Hangs pealing on their rear, and pointed spears
 Present immediate death. Soon as the Night
 Wrapt in her sable veil forbids the chase,
 They pitch their tents, in even ranks, around
 The circling camp. The guards are plac'd, and
 At proper distances ascending rise,
 And paint th' horizon with their ruddy light.
 So round some island's shore of large extent,
 Amid the gloomy horrors of the night,
 The billows breaking on the pointed rocks,
 Seem all one flame, and the bright circuit wide
 Appears a bulwark of surrounding fire.
 What dreadful howlings, and what hideous roar.
 Disturb those peaceful shades! where erst the birds
 That glads the night had cheer'd the listening grove
 With sweet complainings. Through the silent gloom

As they the guards assail ; as oft repell'd they fly reluctant, with hot boiling rage rushing to the quick, and mad with wild despair.
 Thus day by day they still the chase renew,
 till night encamp ; till now in straighter bounds
 the circle lessens, and the beasts perceive the wall that hems them in on every side.
 And now their fury bursts, and knows no mean ;
 from man they turn, and point their ill-judg'd rage against their fellow-brutes. With teeth and claws the civil war begins ; grappling they tear.
 Lions on tigers prey, and bears on wolves :
 horrible discord ! till the crowd behind rushing pursue, and part the bloody fray.
 Once their wrath subsides ; tame as the lamb
 the lion hangs his head, the furious pard, bow'd and subdu'd, flies from the face of man,
 nor bears one glance of his commanding eye.
 The subject is a tyrant in distress !
 At last, within the narrow plain confin'd,
 the listed field, mark'd out for bloody deeds,
 the amphitheatre more glorious far than ancient Rome could boast, they crowd in heaps, may'd, and quite appall'd. In meet array, arm'd in refulgent arms, a noble band advance ; great lords of high imperial blood, firmly resolv'd to assert their royal race,
 to prove by glorious deeds their valour's growth mature, ere yet the callow down has spread its curling shade. On bold Arabian steeds with decent pride they sit, that fearless hear the lion's dreadful roar ; and down the rock swift shooting plunge, or o'er the mountain's ridge reaching along, the greedy tiger leave trailing behind. On foot their faithful slaves with javelins arm'd attend ; each watchful eye
 fix'd on his youthful care, for him alone fears, and, to redeem his life, unmov'd would lose his own. The mighty Aurengzebe, from his high-elevated throne, beholds
 the blooming race ; revolving in his mind
 as once he was, in his gay spring of life, in vigour strung his nerves. Parental joy lights in his eye, and flushes in his cheek.
 As the loud trumpet sounds a charge. The shouts eager hoarse, through all the circling line, and the wild howlings of the beasts within,
 extend wide the welkin ; flights of arrows, wing'd with death, and javelins launch'd from every arm, pierce the brutal bands, with many a wound pierc'd through and through. Despair at last prevails, the fainting Nature shrinks, and rouses all her drooping courage. Swell'd with furious rage, their eyes dart fire ; and on the youthful band they rush implacable. They their broad shields thick interpose ; on each devoted head their flaming falchions, as the bolts of Jove, descend unerring. Prostrate on the ground the grinning monsters lie, and their foul gore files the verdant plain. Nor idle stand the trusty slaves ; with pointed spears they pierce through their tough hides ; or at their gaping mouths easier passage find. The king of brutes broken roarings breathes his last ; the bear tumbles in death ; nor can his spotted skin, though sleek it shine, with varied beauties gay,
 save the proud pard from unrelenting fate.
 The battle bleeds, grim Slaughter strides along,
 cutting her greedy jaws, grins o'er her prey :
 the horse, dog, fierce beasts of every kind,

A strange promiscuous carnage, drench'd in blood,
 And heaps on heaps amass'd. What yet remain
 Alive, with vain assault contend to break
 Th' impenetrable line. Others, whom fear
 Inspires with self-preserving wiles, beneath
 The bodies of the slain for shelter creep.
 Aghast they fly, or hide their heads dispers'd. (work
 And now perchance (had Heaven but pleas'd) the
 Of death had been complete ; and Aurengzebe
 By one dread frown extinguish'd half their race.
 When lo ! the bright sultanas of his court
 Appear, and to his ravish'd eyes display
 Those charms but rarely to the day reveal'd.

Lowly they bend, and humbly sue, to save
 The vanquish'd host. What mortal can deny
 When suppliant Beauty begs ? At his command,
 Opening to right and left, the well-train'd troops
 Leave a large void for their retreating foes.
 Away they fly, on wings of fear upborn,
 To seek on distant hills their late abodes.

Ye proud oppressors, whose vain hearts exult
 In wantonness of power 'gainst the brute race,
 Fierce robbers like yourselves, a guiltless war
 Wage uncontroll'd : here quench your thirst of blood :

But learn from Aurengzebe to spare mankind.

BOOK III.

Argument.

Of king Edgar, and his imposing a tribute of wolves' heads upon the kings of Wales : from hence a transition to fox-hunting, which is described in all its parts. Censure of an over-numerous pack. Of the several engines to destroy foxes, and other wild beasts. The steel-trap described, and the manner of using it. Description of the pitfall for the lion ; and another for the elephant. The ancient way of hunting the tiger with a mirror. The Arabian manner of hunting the wild boar. Description of the royal stag-chase at Windsor Forest. Concludes with an address to his Majesty, and an eulogy upon mercy.

In Albion's isle, when glorious Edgar reign'd,
 He, wisely provident, from her white cliffs
 Lanch'd half her forests, and with numerous fleets
 Cover'd his wide domain : there proudly rode
 Lord of the deep, the great prerogative
 Of British monarchs. Each invader bold,
 Dane and Norwegian, at a distance gaz'd,
 And, disappointed, gnash'd his teeth in vain.
 He scour'd the seas, and to remotest shores
 With swelling sails the trembling corsair fled.
 Rich commerce flourish'd ; and with busy oars
 Dash'd the resounding surge. Nor less at land
 His royal cares ; wise, potent, gracious prince !
 His subjects from their cruel foes he sav'd,
 And from rapacious savages their flocks :
 Cambria's proud kings (though with reluctance) paid
 Their tributary wolves ; head after head,
 In full account, till the woods yield no more,
 And all the ravenous race extinct is lost.
 In fertile pastures, more securely graz'd
 The social troops ; and soon their large increase
 With curling fleeces whiten'd all the plains.
 But yet, alas ! the wily fox remain'd,

A subtle, pilfering foe, prowling around
In midnight shades, and wakeful to destroy.
In the full fold, the poor defenceless lamb,
Seiz'd by his guileful arts, with sweet warm blood
Supplies a rich repast. The mournful ewe,
Her dearest treasure lost, through the dun night
Wanders perplex'd, and darkling bleats in vain:
While in th' adjacent bush, poor Philomel
(Herself a parent once, till wanton churls
Despoil'd her nest) joins in her loud laments,
With sweeter notes, and more melodious woe.

For these nocturnal thieves, huntsman, prepare
Thy sharpest vengeance. Oh! how glorious 'tis
To right th' oppress'd, and bring the felon vile
To just disgrace! Ere yet the morning peep,
Or stars retire from the first blush of day,
With thy far-echoing voice alarm thy pack,
And rouse thy bold compeers. Then to the copse,
Thick with entangling grass, or prickly furze,
With silence lead thy many-colour'd hounds,
In all their beauty's pride. See! how they range
Dispers'd, how busily this way, and that,
They cross, examining with curious nose
Each likely haunt. Hark! on the drag I hear
Their doubtful notes, preluding to a cry
More nobly full, and swell'd with every mouth.
As straggling armies, at the trumpet's voice,
Press to their standard; hither all repair,
And hurry through the woods; with hasty step
Rustling, and full of hope; now driven on heaps
They push, they strive; while from his kennel sneaks

The conscious villain. See! he skulks along,
Sleek at the shepherd's cost, and plump with meals
Purloin'd. So thrive the wicked here below.
Though high his brush he bear, though tipt with white

It gaily shine; yet ere the Sun declin'd
Recall the shades of night, the pamper'd rogue
Shall rue his fate revers'd, and at his heels
Behold the just avenger, swift to seize
His forfeit head, and thirsting for his blood. [hearts

Heavens! what melodious strains! how beat our Big with tumultuous joy! the loaded gales
Breathe harmony; and as the tempest drives
From wood to wood, through every dark recess
The forest thunders, and the mountains shake.
The chorus swells; less various, and less sweet,
The trilling notes, when in those very groves,
The feather'd choristers salute the Spring,
And every bush in concert joins; or when
The master's hand, in modulated air,
Bids the loud organ breathe, and all the powers
Of music in one instrument combine,
An universal minstrelsy. And now
In vain each earth he tries, the doors are barr'd
Impregnable, nor is the covert safe;
He pants for purer air. Hark! what loud shouts
Re-echo through the groves! he breaks away.
Shrill horns proclaim his flight. Each straggling hound

Strains o'er the lawn to reach the distant pack.
'Tis triumph all and joy. Now, my brave youths,
Now give a loose to the clean generous steed;
Flourish the whip, nor spare the galling spur;
But, in the madness of delight, forget
Your fears. Far o'er the rocky hills we range,
And dangerous our course; but in the brave
True courage never fails. In vain the stream
In foaming eddies whirls; in vain the ditch

Wide-gaping threatens death. The craggy steep,
Where the poor dizzy shepherd crawls with care,
And clings to every twig, gives us no pain;
But down we sweep, as stoops the falcon bold
To pounce his prey. Then up th' opponent bill
By the swift motion slung, we mount aloft:
So ships in winter-seas now sliding sink
Adown the steepy wave, then toss'd on high
Ride on the billows, and defy the storm. [Chase

What lengths we pass! where will the wandering
Lead us bewilder'd! smooth as swallows skim
The new-shorn mead, and far more swift, we fly.
See my brave pack; how to the head they press,
Jostling in close array, then more diffuse
Obliquely wheel, while from their opening mouths
The vollied thunder breaks. So when the cranes
Their annual voyage steer, with wanton wing
Their figure oft they change, and their loud cry
From cloud to cloud rebounds. How far behind
The hunter-crew, wide-straggling o'er the plain.
The panting courser now with trembling nerves
Begins to reel; urg'd by the goring spur,
Makes many a faint effort: he snorts, he scats,
The big round drops run trickling down his sides,
With sweat and blood distain'd. Look back and view
The strange confusion of the vale below,
Where sour vexation reigns; see yon poor jade
In vain th' impatient rider frets and swears;
With galling spurs harrows his mangled sides:
He can no more: his stiff unpliant limbs
Rooted in earth, unmov'd and fix'd he stands,
For every cruel curse returns a groan,
And sobs, and faints, and dies. Who without grief
Can view that pamper'd steed, his master's joy,
His minion, and his daily care, well cloth'd,
Well fed with every nicer cate; no cost,
No labour spar'd; who, when the flying Chase
Broke from the copse, without a rival led
The numerous train: now a sad spectacle
Of pride brought low, and humbl'd insolence,
Drove like a pannier'd ass, and scourg'd along.
While these, with loosen'd reins and dangling reins
Hang on their reeling palfreys, that scarce bear
Their weights: another in the treacherous bog
Lies floundering, half ingulph'd. What bitter

thoughts

Torment th' abandon'd crew! Old age laments
His vigour spent: the tall, plump, brawny youth
Curses his cumbersome bulk; and envies now
The short pygmean race he whilom kenn'd
With proud insulting leer. A chosen few
Alone the sport enjoy, nor droop beneath
Their pleasing toils. Here, huntsman, from Observe yon birds of prey; if I can judge.
'Tis there the villain lurks: they hover round
And claim him as their own. Was I not right?
See! there he creeps along; his brush he drags
And sweeps the mire impure; from his wide jaws
His tongue unmoisten'd hangs; symptoms too
Of sudden death. Ha! yet he flies, nor yields
To black despair. But one loose more, and all
His wiles are vain. Hark! through yon village
The rattling clamour rings. The barns, the co
And leafless elms return the joyous sounds.
Through every homestall, and through every
His midnight walks, panting, forlorn, he flies.
Through every hole he sneaks, through every
Plunging he wades besmear'd, and fondly brags
In a superior stench to lose his own:
But, faithful to the track, th' unerring hound

With peals of echoing vengeance close pursue.
 And now distress'd, no sheltering covert near,
 Into the hen-roost creeps, whose walls with gore
 Distain'd attest his guilt. There, villain, there Expect thy fate deserv'd. And soon from thence
 The pack inquisitive, with clamour loud,
 Drag out their trembling prize; and on his blood
 With greedy transport feast. In bolder notes
 Each sounding horn proclaims the felon dead:
 And all th' assembled village shouts for joy.
 The farmer, who beholds his mortal foe
 Kneel'd at his feet, applauds the glorious deed,
 And grateful calls us to a short repast:
 In the full glass the liquid amber smiles,
 His native product; and his good old mate
 With choicest viands heaps the liberal board,
 To crown our triumphs, and reward our toils.
 Here must th' instructive Muse (but with respect)
 Ensure that numerous pack, that crowd of state,
 With which the vain profusion of the great
 Covers the lawn, and shakes the trembling copse.
 Pompous encumbrance! A magnificence
 Useless, vexatious! For the wily fox,
 Safe in th' increasing number of his foes,
 Sees well the great advantage; slinks behind,
 And slyly creeps through the same beaten track,
 And hunts them step by step: then views, escap'd,
 With inward ecstasy, the panting throng
 In their own footsteps puzzled, foil'd, and lost.
 When proud eastern kings summon to arms
 Their gaudy legions, from far distant climes
 They flock in crowds, unpeopling half a world:
 But when the day of battle calls them forth
 To charge the well-train'd foe, a band compact
 Of chosen veterans; they press blindly on,
 And heaps confus'd by their own weapons fall,
 Smoking carnage scatter'd o'er the plain.
 Nor hounds alone this noxious brood destroy:
 The plunder'd warrener full many a wile
 contrives to entrap his greedy foe,
 And with nocturnal spoils. At close of day,
 In silence drags his trail; then from the ground
 Heaves him the close-graz'd turf, there with nice hand
 He turns the latent death, with curious springs
 Prepar'd to fly at once, whene'er the tread
 Of man or beast unwarily shall press
 The yielding surface. By th' indented steel
 With gripe tenacious held, the felon grins,
 And struggles, but in vain: yet oft 'tis known,
 When every art has fail'd, the captive fox
 As shar'd the wounded joint, and with a limb
 Compounded for his life. But, if perchance
 The deep pitfall plung'd, there's no escape;
 Not unrepriev'd he dies, and bleach'd in air,
 The jest of clowns, his reeking carcass hangs.
 Of these are various kinds; not even the king
 Of brutes evades this deep devouring grave:
 At, by the wily African betray'd,
 Careless of fate, within its gaping jaws
 Expires indignant. When the orient beam
 With blushes paints the dawn; and all the race
 Carnivorous, with blood full gorg'd, retire
 To their darksome cells, there satiate snore;
 For dripping offals, and the mangled limbs
 Of men and beasts; the painful forester
 Climbs the high hills, whose proud aspiring tops
 With the tall cedar crown'd, and taper fir,
 Veil the clouds. There 'mong the craggy rocks,
 And thickets intricate, trembling he views
 His footsteps in the sand; the dismal road

And avenue to Death. Hither he calls
 His watchful bands; and low into the ground
 A pit they sink, full many a fathom deep.
 Then in the midst a column high is rear'd,
 The butt of some fair tree; upon whose top
 A lamb is plac'd, just ravish'd from his dam.
 And next a wall they build, with stones and earth
 Encircling round, and hiding from all view
 The dreadful precipice. Now when the shades
 Of night hang lowering o'er the mountain's brow;
 And hunger keen, and pungent thirst of blood,
 Rouse up the slothful beast, he shakes his sides,
 Slow-rising from his lair, and stretches wide
 His ravenous paws, with recent gore distain'd.
 The forests tremble, as he roars aloud,
 Impatient to destroy. O'erjoyed he hears
 The bleating innocent, that claims in vain
 The shepherd's care, and seeks with piteous moan
 The foodful teat; himself, alas! design'd
 Another's meal. For now the greedy brute
 Winds him from far; and leaping o'er the mound
 To seize his trembling prey, headlong is plung'd
 Into the deep abyss. Prostrate he lies
 Astunn'd and impotent. Ah! what avail
 Thine eye-balls flashing fire, thy length of tail,
 That lashes thy broad sides, thy jaws besmear'd
 With blood and offals crude, thy shaggy mane
 The terror of the woods, thy stately port,
 And bulk enormous, since by stratagem
 Thy strength is foil'd? Unequal is the strife,
 When sovereign reason combats brutal rage.

On distant Ethiopia's sun-burnt coasts,
 The black inhabitants a pitfall frame,
 But of a different kind, and different use.
 With slender poles the wide capacious mouth,
 And hurdles slight, they close; o'er these is spread
 A floor of verdant turf, with all its flowers
 Smiling delusive, and from strictest search
 Concealing the deep grave that yawns below.
 Then boughs of trees they cut, with tempting fruit
 Of various kinds surcharg'd; the downy peach,
 The clustering vine, and of bright golden rind
 The fragrant orange. Soon as evening grey
 Advances slow, besprinkling all around
 With kind refreshing dews the thirsty glebe,
 The stately elephant from the close shade
 With step majestic strides, eager to taste
 The cooler breeze, that from the sea-beat shore
 Delightful breathes, or in the limpid stream
 To lave his panting sides; joyous he scents
 The rich repast, unweeting of the death
 That lurks within. And soon he sporting breaks
 The brittle boughs, and greedily devours
 The fruit delicious. Ah! too dearly bought;
 The price is life. For now the treacherous turf
 Trembling gives way; and the unwieldy beast,
 Self-sinking, drops into the dark profound.
 So when dilated vapours, struggling, heave
 Th' incumbent earth; if chance the cavern'd ground
 Shrinking subside, and the thin surface yield,
 Down sinks at once the ponderous dome, ingulph'd
 With all its towers. Subtle, delusive man!
 How various are thy wiles! artful to kill
 Thy savage foes, a dull unthinking race!
 Fierce from his lair, springs forth the speckled pard
 Thirsting for blood, and eager to destroy;
 The huntsman flies, but to his flight alone
 Confides not: at convenient distance fix'd,
 A polish'd mirror stops in full career
 The furious brute: he there his image views;

Spots against spots with rage improving glow ;
 Another pard his bristly whiskers curls,
 Grins as he grins; fierce-menacing, and wide
 Distends his opening paws ; himself against Himself opposed, and with dread vengeance arm'd.
 The huntsman, now secure, with fatal aim
 Directs the pointed spear, by which transfix'd
 He dies, and with him dies the rival shade.
 Thus man innumerable engines forms, t' assail
 The savage kind ; but most the docile horse,
 Swift and confederate with man, annoys
 His brethren of the plains ; without whose aid
 The hunter's arts are vain, unskill'd to wage
 With the more active brutes an equal war.
 But borne by him, without the well-train'd pack,
 Man dares his foe, on wings of wind secure.

Him the fierce Arab mounts, and, with his troop
 Of bold compeers, ranges the deserts wild ;
 Where, by the magnet's aid, the traveller
 Steers his untrodden course ; yet oft on land
 Is wreck'd, in the high-rolling waves of sand
 Immerst and lost. While these intrepid bands,
 Safe in their horses' speed, outfly the storm, [prey,
 And scouring round, make men and beasts their
 The grisly boar is singled from his herd,
 As large as that in Erimanthian woods,
 A match for Hercules. Round him they fly
 In circles wide ; and each in passing sends
 His feather'd death into his brawny sides.
 But perilous th' attempt. For if the steed
 Haply too near approach ; or the loose earth
 His footing fail, the watchful angry beast
 Th' advantage spies ; and at one sidelong glance
 Rips up his groin. Wounded, he rears aloft,
 And, plunging, from his back the rider hurls
 Precipitant ; then bleeding spurns the ground,
 And drags his reeking entrails o'er the plain.
 Meanwhile the surly monster trots along,
 But with unequal speed ; for still they wound,
 Swift-wheeling in the spacious ring. A wood
 Of darts upon his back he bears ; adown
 His tortur'd sides, the crimson torrents roll
 From many a gaping font. And now at last
 Staggering he falls, in blood and foam expires.

But whither roves my devious Muse, intent
 On antique tales ? while yet the royal stag
 Unsung remains. Tread with respectful awe [bard,
 Windsor's green glades ; where Denham, tuneful
 Charm'd once the listening Dryads, with his song
 Sublimely sweet. O ! grant me, sacred shade,
 To glean submiss what thy full sickle leaves.

The morning Sun, that gilds with trembling rays
 Windsor's high towers, beholds the courtly train
 Mount for the chase, nor views in all his course
 A scene so gay ; heroic, noble youths,
 In arts and arms renown'd, and lovely nymphs
 The fairest of this isle, where Beauty dwells
 Delighted, and deserts her Paphian grove
 For our more favour'd shades : in proud parade
 These shine magnificent, and press around
 The royal happy pair. Great in themselves,
 They smile superior ; of external show
 Regardless, while their inbred virtues give
 A lustre to their power, and grace their court
 With real splendours, far above the pomp
 Of Eastern kings, in all their tinsel pride.
 Like troops of Amazons, the female band
 Prance round their cars, not in refulgent arms
 As those of old ; unskill'd to wield the sword,
 Or bend the bow, these kill with surer aim.

The royal offspring, fairest-of the fair,
 Lead on the splendid train. Anna, more bright
 Than summer suns, or as the lightning keen,
 With irresistible effulgence arm'd,
 Fires every heart. He must be more than man,
 Who unconcern'd can bear the piercing ray.
 Amelia, milder than the blushing dawn,
 With sweet engaging air, but equal power,
 Insensibly subdues, and in soft chains
 Her willing captives leads. Illustrious maids,
 Ever triumphant ! whose victorious charms,
 Without the needless aid of high descent,
 Had aw'd mankind, and taught the world's great lords

To bow and sue for grace. But who is he
 Fresh as a rose-bud newly blown, and fair
 As opening lilies ; on whom every eye
 With joy and admiration dwells ? See, see,
 He reins his docile barb with manly grace.
 Is it Adonis for the chase array'd ?
 Or Britain's second hope ? Hail, blooming youth !
 May all your virtues with your years improve,
 Till in consummate worth, you shine the pride
 Of these our days, and to succeeding times
 A bright example. As his guard of mutes
 On the great sultan wait, with eyes deject,
 And fix'd on earth, no voice, no sound is heard
 Within the wide serail, but all is hush'd,
 And awful silence reigns ; thus stand the pack
 Mute and unmov'd, and cowering low to earth,
 While pass the glittering court, and royal pair :
 So disciplin'd those hounds, and so reserv'd,
 Whose honour 'tis to glad the hearts of kings.
 But soon the winding horn, and huntsman's voice,
 Let loose the general chorus ; far around
 Joy spreads its wings, and the gay morning smiles.

Unharbour'd now the royal stag forsakes
 His wonted lair ; he shakes his dappled sides,
 And tosses high his beamy head, the copse
 Beneath his antlers bends. What doubling shifts
 He tries ! not more the wily hare ; in these
 Would still persist, did not the full-mouth'd pack
 With dreadful concert thunder in his rear.
 The woods reply, the hunter's cheering shout
 Float through the glades, and the wide forest ring
 How merrily they chant ! their nostrils deep
 Inhale the grateful steam. Such is the cry,
 And such th' harmonious din, the soldier deems
 The battle kindling, and the statesman grave
 Forgets his weighty cares ; each age, each sex,
 In the wild transport joins ; luxuriant joy,
 And pleasure in excess, sparkling exult
 On every brow, and revel unrestrain'd.
 How happy art thou, man, when thou 'rt no more
 Thyself ! when all the pangs that grind thy soul,
 In rapture and in sweet oblivion lost,
 Yield a short interval and ease from pain !

See the swift courser strains, his shining hoofs
 Securely beat the solid ground. Who now
 The dangerous pitfall fears, with tangling heath
 High-overgrown ? or who the quivering bog
 Soft-yielding to the step ? All now is plain,
 Plain as the strand sea-lav'd, that stretches far
 Beneath the rocky shore. Glades crossing glades
 The forest opens to our wondering view :
 Such was the king's command. Let tyrants far
 Lay waste the world ; his the more glorious part
 To check their pride ; and when the brazen voice
 Of war is hush'd (as erst victorious Rome)
 T' employ his station'd legions in the works

Of peace ; to smooth the rugged wilderness,
 To drain the stagnate fen, to raise the slope
 Depending road, and to make gay the face
 Of Nature, with th' embellishments of Art.
 How melts my beating heart ! as I behold
 Each lovely nymph, our island's boast and pride,
 Push on the generous steed, that strokes along
 O'er rough, o'er smooth, nor heeds the steepy hill,
 Nor falters in th' extended vale below :
 Their garments loosely waving in the wind,
 And all the flush of beauty in their cheeks !
 While at their sides their pensive lovers wait,
 Direct their dubious course ; now chill'd with fear
 Deliculous, and now with love inflam'd.
 O ! grant, indulgent Heaven, no rising storm
 May darken with black wings this glorious scene !
 Should some malignant power thus damp our joys,
 Pain were the gloomy cave, such as of old
 Stray'd to lawless love the Tyrian queen.
 Or Britain's virtuous nymphs are chaste as fair,
 Spotless, unblam'd, with equal triumph reign
 In the dun gloom, as in the blaze of day.
 Now the blown stag, through woods, bogs, roads,
 And streams
 Is measur'd half the forest ; but alas !
 He flies in vain, he flies not from his fears.
 Though far he cast the lingering pack behind,
 His haggard fancy still with horror views
 The fell destroyer ; still the fatal cry
 Assaults his ears, and wounds his trembling heart.
 The poor fury-haunted wretch (his hands
 Guiltless blood distain'd) still seems to hear
 The dying shrieks ; and the pale threatening ghost
 Moves as he moves, and as he flies, pursues.
 He here his slot ; up yon green hill he climbs,
 Stunts on its brow awhile, sadly looks back
 On his pursuers, covering all the plain ;
 At wrung with anguish, bears not long the sight,
 Tumbles down the steep, and sweats along the vale.
 Here mingles with the herd, where once he reign'd
 Wild monarch of the groves, whose clashing beam
 His rivals aw'd, and whose exalted power
 Was still rewarded with successful love.
 As the base herd have learn'd the ways of men,
 Hence they fly, or with rebellious aim
 Turn him from thence : needless their impious deed,
 The huntsman knows him by a thousand marks,
 Back, and imboss ; nor are his hounds deceiv'd ;
 No well distinguish these, and never leave
 Their once devoted foe ; familiar grows
 His scent, and strong their appetite to kill.
 Again he flies, and with redoubled speed
 Races o'er the lawn ; still the tenacious crew
 Hang on the track, aloud demand their prey,
 And push him many a league. If haply then
 He far escap'd, and the gay courtly train
 Behind are cast, the huntsman's clanging whip
 Calls full their bold career ; passive they stand,
 Amov'd, an humble, an obsequious crowd,
 As if by stern Medusa gaz'd to stones.
 At their general's voice whole armies halt
 In full pursuit, and check their thirst of blood.
 Now at the king's command, like hasty streams
 Runn'd up awhile, they foam, and pour along
 With fresh recruited might. The stag, who hop'd
 His foes were lost, now once more hears astunn'd
 The dreadful din ; he shivers every limb,
 He starts, he bounds, each bush presents a foe.
 Press'd by the fresh relay, no pause allow'd,
 Fearless, and faint, he falters in his pace,

And lifts his weary limbs with pain, that scarce
 Sustain their load : he pants, he sobs appall'd !
 Drops down his heavy head to earth, beneath
 His cumbrous beams oppress'd. But if perchance
 Some prying eye surprize him ; soon he rears
 Erect his towering front, bounds o'er the lawn
 With ill-dissembled vigour, to amuse
 The knowing forester ; who inly smiles
 At his weak shifts and unavailing frauds.
 So midnight tapers waste their last remains,
 Shine forth awhile, and as they blaze expire.
 From wood to wood redoubling thunders roll,
 And bellow through the vales ; the moving storm
 Thickens amain, and loud triumphant shouts,
 And horns shrill-warbling in each glade, prelude
 To his approaching fate. And now in view
 With hobbling gait, and high, exerts amaz'd
 What strength is left : to the last dregs of life
 Reduc'd, his spirits fail, on every side
 Hemm'd in, besieg'd ; not the least opening left
 To gleaming hope, th' unhappy's last reserve.
 Where shall he turn ? or whither fly ? Despair
 Gives courage to the weak. Resolv'd to die,
 He fears no more, but rushes on his foes,
 And deals his deaths around ; beneath his feet
 These grovelling lie, those by his antlers gor'd
 Defile th' ensanguin'd plain. Ah ! see distress'd
 He stands at bay against yon knotty trunk,
 That covers well his rear, his front presents
 An host of foes. O ! shun, ye noble train,
 The rude encounter, and believe your lives
 Your country's due alone. As now aloof
 They wing around, he finds his soul uprais'd,
 To dare some great exploit ; he charges home
 Upon the broken pack, that on each side
 Fly diverse ; then as o'er the turf he strains,
 He vents the cooling stream, and up the breeze
 Urges his course with equal violence :
 Then takes the soil, and plunges in the flood
 Precipitant ; down the mid-stream he wafts
 Along, till (like a ship distress'd, that runs
 Into some winding creek) close to the verge
 Of a small island, for his weary feet
 Sure anchorage he finds, there skulks inmers'd.
 His nose alone above the wave draws in
 The vital air ; all else beneath the flood
 Conceal'd, and lost, deceives each prying eye
 Of man or brute. In vain the crowding pack
 Draw on the margin of the stream, or cut
 The liquid wave with oary feet, that move
 In equal time. The gliding waters leave
 No trace behind, and his contracted pores
 But sparingly perspire : the huntsman strains
 His labouring lungs, and puffs his cheeks in vain :
 At length a blood-hound bold, studious to kill,
 And exquisite of sense, winds him from far ;
 Headlong he leaps into the flood, his mouth
 Loud opening spends amain, and his wide throat
 Swells every note with joy ; then fearless dives
 Beneath the wave, hangs on his haunch, and wounds
 Th' unhappy brute, that flounders in the stream
 Sorely distress'd, and struggling strives to mount
 The steepy shore. Haply once more escap'd,
 Again he stands at bay, amid the groves
 Of willows, bending low their downy heads.
 Outrageous transport fires the greedy pack ;
 These swim the deep, and those crawl up with pain
 The slippery bank, while others on firm land
 Engage ; the stag repels each bold assault,
 Maintains his post, and wounds for wounds returns.

As when some wily corsair boards a ship
Full-freighted, or from Afric's golden coasts,
Or India's wealthy strand, his bloody crew
Upon her deck he slings; these in the deep
Drop short, and swim to reach her steepy sides,
And clinging climb aloft; while those on board
Urge on the work of Fate; the master bold,
Press'd to his last retreat, bravely resolves
To sink his wealth beneath the whelming wave,
His wealth, his foes, nor unreveng'd to die.
So fares it with the stag: so he resolves
To plunge at once into the flood below,
Himself, his foes, in one deep gulph immers'd.
Ere yet he executes this dire intent,
In wild disorder once more views the light;
Beneath a weight of woe he groans distress'd,
The tears run trickling down his hairy cheeks;
He weeps, nor weeps in vain. The king beholds
His wretched plight, and tenderness innate
Moves his great soul. Soon at his high command
Rebuk'd, the disappointed, hungry pack,
Retire submiss, and grumbling quit their prey.

Great Prince! from thee what may thy subjects hope;
So kind, and so beneficent to brutes!
O Mercy, heavenly born! sweet attribute!
Thou great, thou best prerogative of power!
Justice may guard the throne, but, join'd with thee,
On rocks of adamant it stands secure,
And braves the storm beneath; soon as thy smiles
Gild the rough deep, the foaming waves subside,
And all the noisy tumult sinks in peace.

Book IV.

Argument.

Of the necessity of destroying some beasts, and preserving others for the use of man. Of breeding of hounds; the season for this business. The choice of the dog, of great moment. Of the litter of whelps. Of the number to be reared. Of setting them out to their several walks. Care to be taken to prevent their hunting too soon. Of entering the whelps. Of breaking them from running at sheep. Of the diseases of hounds. Of their age. Of madness; two sorts of it described, the dumb and outrageous madness: its dreadful effects. Burning of the wound recommended as preventing all ill consequences. The infectious hounds to be separated, and fed apart. The vanity of trusting to the many infallible cures for this malady. The dismal effects of the biting of a mad dog, upon man, described. Description of the otter hunting. The conclusion.

WHATE'ER of earth is form'd, to earth returns
Dissolv'd: the various objects we behold,
Plants, animals, this whole material mass,
Are ever changing, ever new. The soul
Of man alone, that particle divine,
Escapes the wreck of worlds, when all things fail.
Hence great the distance 'twixt the beasts that perish,
And God's bright image, man's immortal race.
The brute creation are his property,
Subservient to his will, and for him made.
As hurtful these he kills, as useful those
Preserves; their sole and arbitrary king.

Should he not kill, as erst the Samian sage
Taught unadvis'd, and Indian brachmans now
As vainly preach; the teeming ravenous brutes
Might fill the scanty space of this terrene,
Encumbering all the globe: should not his care
Improve his growing stock, their kinds might fail,
Man might once more on roots and acorns feed,
And through the deserts range, shivering, forlorn,
Quite destitute of every solace dear,
And every smiling gaiety of life.

The prudent huntsman therefore will supply
With annual large recruits his broken pack,
And propagate their kind: as from the root
Fresh scions still spring forth and daily yield
New blooming honours to the parent-tree.
Far shall his pack be fam'd, far sought his breed,
And princes at their tables feast those hounds
His hand presents, an acceptable boon.

Ere yet the Sun through the bright Ram has urg'd
His steepy course, or mother Earth unbound
Her frozen bosom to the Western gale;
When feather'd troops, their social leagues dissolv'd,
Select their mates, and on the leafless elm
The noisy rook builds high her wicker nest,
Mark well the wanton females of thy pack,
That curl their taper tails, and frisking court
Their pyebald mates enamour'd; their red eyes
Flash fires impure; nor rest, nor food they take,
Goaded by furious love. In separate cells
Confine them now, lest bloody civil wars
Annoy thy peaceful state. If left at large,
The growling rivals in dread battle join,
And rude encounter; on Scamander's streams
Heroes of old with far less fury fought
For the bright Spartan dame, their valour's prize.
Mangled and torn thy favourite hounds shall lie,
Stretch'd on the ground; thy kennel shall appear
A field of blood: like some unhappy town
In civil broils confus'd, while Discord shakes
Her bloody scourge aloft, fierce parties rage,
Staining their impious hands in mutual death.
And still the best beloved, and bravest fall:
Such are the dire effects of lawless love.

Huntsman! these ills by timely prudent care
Prevent: for every longing dame select
Some happy paramour; to him alone
In leagues connubial join. Consider well
His lineage; what his fathers did of old,
Chiefs of the pack, and first to climb the rock.
Or plunge into the deep, or tread the brake
With thorn sharp-pointed, plash'd, and briars woven;

Observe with care his shape, sort, colour, size.
Nor will sagacious huntsmen less regard
His inward habits: the vain babbler shun,
Ever loquacious, ever in the wrong.
His foolish offspring shall offend thy ears
With false alarms, and loud impertinence.
Nor less the shifting cur avoid, that breaks
Illusive from the pack; to the next hedge
Devious he strays, there every muse he tries:
If haply then he cross the steaming scent,
Away he flies vain-glorious; and exults
As of the pack supreme, and in his speed
And strength unrivall'd. Lo! cast far behind,
His vex'd associates pant, and labouring strain
To climb the steep ascent. Soon as they reach
Th' insulting boaster, his false courage fails,
Behind he lags, doom'd to the fatal noose,
His master's hate, and scorn of all the field

That can from such be hop'd, but a base brood
Of coward curs, a frantic, vagrant race?
When now the third revolving Moon appears,
With sharpen'd horns, above th' horizon's brink,
Without Lucina's aid, expect thy hopes
Are amply crown'd; short pangs produce to light
The smoking litter; crawling helpless, blind,
Await their guide, they seek the pouting teat
Of plenteous streams. Soon as the tender dam
Has form'd them with her tongue, with pleasure view
The marks of their renown'd progenitors,
Are pledge of triumphs yet to come. All these Select with joy; but to the merciless flood
Expose the dwindling refuse, nor o'erload
Th' indulgent mother. If thy heart relent,
Unwilling to destroy, a nurse provide,
And to the foster-parent give the care
Of thy superfluous brood; she'll cherish kind
The alien offspring; pleas'd thou shalt behold
Her tenderness, and hospitable love.
If frolic now and playful they desert
Their gloomy cell, and on the verdant turf,
With nerves improv'd, pursue the mimic chase,
Pursing around; unto the choicest friends
Commit thy valued prize: the rustic dames
All at thy kennel wait, and in their laps
Receive thy growing hopes, with many a kiss
Press, and dignify their little charge
With some great title, and resounding name
Of high import. But cautious here observe
To check their youthful ardour, nor permit
An unexperienc'd youngster, immature,
To range the woods, or haunt the brakes
Where dodging conies sport; his nerves unstrung,
And strength unequal; the laborious chase
Will stint his growth, and his rash forward youth
Contract such vicious habits, as thy care
And late correction never shall reclaim.
When to full strength arriv'd, mature and bold,
Conduct them to the field; not all at once,
But as thy cooler prudence shall direct,
Start a few, and form them by degrees
To stricter discipline. With these consort
The stanch and steady sages of thy pack,
Whom long experience vers'd in all the wiles,
And subtle doublings of the various Chase.
Teach the lesson of the youthful train
When instinct prompts, and when example guides.
Check the too forward youngster at the head
From boldly on in wanton sportive mood,
Correct his haste, and let him feel abash'd
By the ruling whip. But if he stoop behind
In any modest guise, to his own nose
Adding sure; give him full scope to work
In winding way, and with thy voice applaud
His patience, and his care: soon shalt thou view
The hopeful pupil leader of his tribe,
And all the listening pack attend his call.
But lead them forth where wanton lambkins play,
And bleating dams with jealous eyes observe
Under tender care. If at the crowding flock
Thou hay presumptuous, or with eager haste
Drive them scatter'd o'er the verdant plain,
The foul fact attach'd, to the strong ram
Thou fast the rash offender. See! at first
His horn'd companion, fearful and amaz'd,
Will drag him trembling o'er the rugged ground;
Then, with his load fatigu'd, shall turn a-head,
And with his curl'd hard front incessant peal

The panting wretch; till, breathless and astunn'd,
Stretch'd on the turf he lie. Then spare not thou
The twining whip, but ply his bleeding sides
Lash after lash, and with thy threatening voice,
Harsh-echoing from the hills, inculcate loud
His vile offence. Sooner shall trembling doves
Escap'd the hawk's sharp talons, in mid air,
Assail their dangerous foe, than he once more
Disturb the peaceful flocks. In tender age
Thus youth is train'd; as curious artists bend
The taper pliant twig, or potters form
Their soft and ductile clay to various shapes.

Nor is 't enough to breed; but to preserve,
Must be the huntsman's care. The stanch old hounds,

Guides of thy pack, though but in number few,
Are yet of great account; shall oft untie
The Gordian knot, when reason at a stand
Puzzling is lost, and all thy art is vain.
O'er clogging fallows, o'er dry plaster'd roads,
O'er floated meads, o'er plains with flocks distain'd
Rank-scenting, these must lead the dubious
As party-chiefs in senates who preside,
With pleaded reason and with well-turn'd speech,
Conduct the staring multitude; so these
Direct the pack, who with joint cry approve,
And loudly boast discoveries not their own.

Unnumber'd accidents, and various ills,
Attend thy pack, hang hovering o'er their heads,
And point the way that leads to Death's dark cave.
Short is their span; few at the date arrive
Of ancient Argus in old Homer's song
So highly honour'd: kind, sagacious brute!
Not ev'n Minerva's wisdom could conceal
Thy much-lov'd master from thy nicer sense.
Dying his lord he own'd, view'd him all o'er
With eager eyes, then clos'd those eyes, well pleas'd.

Of lesser ills the Muse declines to sing,
Nor stoops so low; of these each groom can tell
The proper remedy. But O! what care,
What prudence, can prevent madness, the worst
Of maladies? Terrific pest! that blasts
The huntsman's hopes, and desolation spreads
Through all th' unpeopled kennel unrestrain'd,
More fatal than th' envenom'd viper's bite;
Or that Apulian spider's poisonous sting,
Heal'd by the pleasing antidote of sounds.

When Sirius reigns, and the Sun's parching beams
Bake the dry gaping surface, visit thou
Each ev'n and morn, with quick observant eye,
Thy panting pack. If, in dark sullen mood,
The glouting hound refuse his wonted meal,
Retiring to some close, obscure retreat,
Gloomy, disconsolate; with speed remove
The poor infectious wretch, and in strong chains
Bind him suspected. Thus that dire disease
Which art can't cure, wise caution may prevent.

But, this neglected, soon expect a change,
A dismal change, confusion, frenzy, death.
Or in some dark recess the senseless brute
Sits sadly pining; deep melancholy,
And black despair, upon his clouded brow
Hang lowering; from his half opening jaws
The clammy venom, and infectious froth,
Distilling fall; and from his lungs inflam'd,
Malignant vapours taint the ambient air,
Breathing perdition: his dim eyes are glaz'd,
He droops his pensive head, his trembling limbs
No more support his weight; abject he lies,

Dumb, spiritless, benumb'd ; till Death at last
Gracious attends, and kindly brings relief.

Or, if outrageous grown, behold, alas !
A yet more dreadful scene ; his glaring eyes
Redden with fury, like some angry boar
Churning he foams ; and on his back erect
His pointed bristles rise ; his tail incurv'd
He drops, and with harsh broken howlings rends
The poison-tainted air ; with rough hoarse voice
Incessant bays, and snuffs the infectious breeze ;
This way and that he stares aghast, and starts
At his own shade : jealous, as if he deem'd
The world his foes. If haply towards the stream
He cast his roving eye, cold horror chills
His soul ; averse he flies, trembling, appall'd.
Now frantic to the kennel's utmost verge
Raving he runs, and deals destruction round.
The pack fly diverse ; for whate'er he meets
Vengeful he bites, and every bite is death.

If now perchance through the weak fence escap'd
Far up the wind he roves, with open mouth
Inhales the cooling breeze ; nor man, nor beast,
He spares implacable. The hunter-horse,
Once kind associate of his sylvan toils,
(Who haply now without the kennel's mound
Crops the rank mead, and listening hears with joy
The cheering cry, that morn and eve salutes
His raptur'd sense,) a wretched victim falls.
Unhappy quadruped ! no more, alas !
Shall thy fond master with his voice applaud
Thy gentleness, thy speed ; or with his hand
Stroke thy soft dappled sides, as he each day
Visits thy stall, well pleas'd ; no more shalt thou
With sprightly neighings, to the winding horn,
And the loud opening pack in concert join'd,
Glad his proud heart. For oh ! the secret wound
Rankling inflames, he bites the ground, and dies !
Hence to the village with pernicious haste
Baleful he bends his course : the village flies
Alarm'd ; the tender mother in her arms
Hugs close the trembling babe ; the doors are barr'd,
And flying curs, by native instinct taught,
Shun the contagious bane ; the rustic bands
Hurry to arms, the rude militia seize
Whate'er at hand they find ; clubs, forks, or guns,
From every quarter charge the furious foe,
In wild disorder, and uncouth array :
Till, now with wounds on wounds oppress'd and gor'd,

At one short poisonous gasp he breathes his last.

Hence to the kennel, Muse, return, and view
With heavy heart that hospital of woe ;
Where Horror stalks at large ! insatiate Death
Sits growling o'er his prey : each hour presents
A different scene of ruin and distress.
How busy art thou, Fate ! and how severe
Thy pointed wrath ! the dying and the dead
Promiscuous lie ; o'er these the living fight
In one eternal broil ; not conscious why
Nor yet with whom. So drunkards, in their cups, Spare not their friends, while senseless squabble reigns.

Huntsman ! it much behoves thee to avoid
The perilous debate ! Ah ! rouse up all
Thy vigilance, and tread the treacherous ground
With careful step. Thy fires unquench'd preserve,
As erst the vestal flames ; the pointed steel
In the hot embers hide ; and if surpriz'd
Thou feelst the deadly bite, quick urge it home
Into the recent sore, and cauterize

The wound ; spare not thy flesh, nor dread th' event :
Vulcan shall save when Æsculapius fails.

Here should the knowing Muse recount the means
To stop this growing plague. And, here, alas !
Each hand presents a sovereign cure, and boasts
Infallibility, but boasts in vain.

On this depend, each to his separate seat
Confine, in fetters bound ; give each his man
Apart, his range in open air ; and then
If deadly symptoms to thy grief appear,
Devote the wretch, and let him greatly fall,
A generous victim for the public weal.

Sing, philosophic Muse, the dire effects
Of this contagious bite on hapless man.
The rustic swains, by long tradition taught
Of leeches old, as soon as they perceive
The bite impress'd, to the sea-coasts repair.
Plung'd in the briny flood, th' unhappy youth
Now journeys home secure ; but soon shall wish
The seas as yet had cover'd him beneath
The foaming surge, full many a fathom deep.
A fate more dismal, and superior ills
Hang o'er his head devoted. When the Moon,
Closing her monthly round, returns again
To glad the night ; or when full-orb'd she shines
High in the vault of Heaven ; the lurking pest Begins the dire assault. The poisonous foam
Through the deep wound instill'd with hostile rage,
And all its fiery particles saline,
Invades th' arterial fluid : whose red waves
Tempestuous heave, and their cohesion broke,
Fermenting boil ; intestine war ensues,
And order to confusion turns embroil'd.
Now the distended vessels scarce contain
The wild uproar, but press each weaker part
Unable to resist : the tender brain
And stomach suffer most ; convulsions shake
His trembling nerves, and wandering pungent pain
Pinch sore the sleepless wretch ; his fluttering pulse
Oft intermits ; pensive, and sad, he mourns
His cruel fate, and to his weeping friends
Laments in vain ; to hasty anger prone,
Resents each slight offence, walks with quick step
And wildly stares ; at last with boundless rage
The tyrant frenzy reigns : for as the dog
(Whose fatal bite convey'd th' infectious bane)
Raving he foams, and howls, and barks, and bites
Like agitations in his boiling blood
Present like species to his troubled mind ;
His nature and his actions all canine.
So (as old Homer sung) th' associates wild
Of wandering Ithacus, by Circe's charms [grow
To swine transform'd, ran grunting through
Dreadful example to a wicked world !
See there distress'd he lies ! parch'd up with thirst
But dares not drink. Till now at last his soul
Trembling escapes, her noisome dungeon leaves
And to some purer region wings away.

One labour yet remains, celestial Maid !
Another element demands thy song.
No more o'er craggy steep, through coverts thick
With pointed thorn, and briers intricate,
Urge on with horn and voice the painful pack.
But skim with wanton wing the irriguous vale,
Where winding streams amid the flowery meads
Perpetual glide along ; and undermine
The cavern'd banks, by the tenacious roots
Of hoary willows arch'd ; gloomy retreat
Of the bright scaly kind ; where they at will
On the green watery reed their pasture graze,

Suck the moist soil, or slumber at their ease,
 Rock'd by the restless brook, that draws aslope
 Its humid train, and laves their dark abodes.
 Where rages not Oppression? Where, alas!
 Is Innocence secure? Rapine and Spoil
 Haunt ev'n the lowest deeps; seas have their sharks,
 Rivers and ponds enclose the ravenous pike;
 He in his turn becomes a prey; on him
 Th' amphibious otter feasts. Just is his fate
 Deserv'd: but tyrants know no bounds; nor spears
 That bristle on his back, defend the perch
 From his wide greedy jaws; nor burnish'd mail
 The yellow carp; nor all his arts can save
 Th' insinuating eel, that hides his head
 Beneath the slimy mud; nor yet escapes
 The crimson-spotted trout, the river's pride,
 And beauty of the stream. Without remorse,
 This midnight pillager, ranging around,
 Devour'st swallows all. The owner mourns
 His unpeopled rivulet, and gladly hears
 The huntsman's early call, and sees with joy
 The jovial crew, that march upon its banks
 In gay parade, with bearded lances arm'd.

The subtle spoiler, of the beaver kind,
 Far off perhaps, where ancient alders shade
 The deep still pool, within some hollow trunk
 Contrives his wicker couch: whence he surveys
 His long purlieu, lord of the stream, and all
 The finny shoals his own. But you, brave youths,
 Dispute the felon's claim; try every root,
 And every reedy bank; encourage all
 The busy spreading pack, that fearless plunge
 Into the flood, and cross the rapid stream.
 Amid rocks and caves, and each resounding shore,
 Proclaim your bold defiance; loudly raise
 Each cheering voice, till distant hills repeat
 The triumphs of the vale. On the soft sand
 See there his seal impress'd! and on that bank
 Behold the glittering spoils, half-eaten fish,
 Scales, fins, and bones, the leavings of his feast.
 Ah! on that yielding sag-bed, see, once more
 His seal I view. O'er yon dank rushy marsh
 The sly goose-footed prowler bends his course,
 And seeks the distant shallows. Huntsman, bring
 Thy eager pack, and trail him to his couch.
 Hark! the loud peal begins, the clamorous joy,
 The gallant chiding, loads the trembling air.

Ye Naiads fair, who o'er these floods preside,
 Raise up your dripping heads above the wave,
 And hear our melody. Th' harmonious notes
 Float with the stream; and every winding creek
 And hollow rock, that o'er the dimpling flood
 Bobs pendant, still improve from shore to shore
 Our sweet reiterated joys. What shouts! [sounds
 What clamour loud! What gay heart-cheering
 Urge through the breathing brass their mazy way!
 Nor quires of Tritons glad with sprightlier strains
 The dancing billows, when proud Neptune rides
 In triumph o'er the deep. How greedily
 They snuff the fishy steam, that to each blade
 Rank-scenting clings! See! how the morning dews
 They sweep, that from their feet besprinkling drop
 Dispers'd, and leave a track oblique behind.
 Now on firm land they range; then in the flood
 They plunge tumultuous; or through reedy pools
 Rustling they work their way: no hole escapes
 Their curious search. With quick sensation now
 The fuming vapour stings; flutter their hearts,
 And joy redoubled bursts from every mouth
 In louder symphonies. Yon hollow trunk,

That with its hoary head incurv'd salutes
 The passing wave, must be the tyrant's fort,
 And dread abode. How these impatient climb,
 While others at the root incessant bay!
 They put him down. See, there he drives along!
 Th' ascending bubbles mark his gloomy way.
 Quick fix the nets, and cut off his retreat
 Into the sheltering deeps. Ah! there he vents!
 The pack plunge headlong, and pretended spears
 Menace destruction: while the troubled surge
 Indignant foams, and all the scaly kind,
 Affrighted, hide their heads. Wild tumult reigns,
 And loud uproar. Ah, there once more he vents!
 See, that bold hound has seiz'd him! down they sink
 Together lost: but soon shall he repent
 His rash assault. See, there escap'd, he flies
 Half-drown'd, and clambers up the slippery bank
 With ouze and blood distain'd. Of all the brutes,
 Whether by Nature form'd, or by long use,
 This artful diver best can bear the want
 Of vital air. Unequal is the fight,
 Beneath the whelming element. Yet there
 He lives not long; but respiration needs
 At proper intervals. Again he vents;
 Again the crowd attack. That spear has pierc'd
 His neck; the crimson waves confess the wound.
 Fixt is the bearded lance, unwelcome guest,
 Where'er he flies; with him it sinks beneath,
 With him it mounts; sure guide to every foe.
 Inly he groans; nor can his tender wound
 Bear the cold stream. Lo! to yon sedgy bank
 He creeps disconsolate: his numerous foes
 Surround him, hounds, and men. Pierc'd through and through,

On pointed spears they lift him high in air;
 Wriggling he hangs, and grins, and bites in vain:
 Bid the loud horns, in gaily-warbling strains,
 Proclaim the felon's fate; he dies, he dies.

Rejoice, ye scaly tribes, and leaping dance
 Above the wave, in sign of liberty
 Restor'd; the cruel tyrant is no more.
 Rejoice secure and bless'd; did not as yet
 Remain some of your own rapacious kind;
 And man, fierce man, with all his various wiles.

O happy! if ye knew your happy state,
 Ye rangers of the fields; whom Nature boon
 Cheers with her smiles, and every element
 Conspires to bless. What, if no heroes frown
 From marble pedestals; nor Raphael's works,
 Nor Titian's lively tints, adorn our walls?
 Yet these the meanest of us may behold;
 And at another's cost may feast at will
 Our wondering eyes; what can the owner more?
 But vain, alas! is wealth, not grac'd with power.
 The flowery landscape, and the gilded dome,
 And vistas opening to the wearied eye,
 Through all his wide domain; the planted grove,
 The shrubby wilderness, with its gay choir
 Of warbling birds, can't lull to soft repose
 Th' ambitious wretch, whose discontented soul
 Is harrow'd day and night; he mourns, he pines,
 Until his prince's favour makes him great.
 See, there he comes, th' exalted idol comes!
 The circle's form'd, and all his fawning slaves
 Devoutly bow to earth; from every mouth
 The nauseous flattery flows, which he returns
 With promises, that die as soon as born.
 Vile intercourse! where virtue has no place.
 Frown but the monarch; all his glories fade;
 He mingles with the throng, outcast, undone,

The pageant of a day ; without one friend
To soothe his tortur'd mind : all, all are fled.
For, though they bask'd in his meridian ray,
The insects vanish, as his beams decline.

Not such our friends ; for here no dark design,
No wicked interest, bribes the venal heart ;
But inclination to our bosom leads,
And weds them there for life ; our social cups
Smile, as we smile ; open, and unreserv'd,
We speak our inmost souls ; good-humour, mirth,
Soft complaisance, and wit from malice free,
Smooth every brow, and glow on every cheek.

O happiness sincere ! what wretch would groan
Beneath the galling load of power, or walk
Upon the slippery pavements of the great,
Who thus could reign, unenvy'd and secure !

Ye guardian powers who make mankind your care,
Give me to know wise Nature's hidden depths,
Trace each mysterious cause, with judgment read
Th' expanded volume, and submit adore
That great creative Will, who at a word

Spoke forth the wondrous scene. But if my soul
To this gross clay confin'd flutters on Earth
With less ambitious wing ; unskill'd to range
From orb to orb, where Newton leads the way ;
And view with piercing eyes the grand machine,
Worlds above worlds ; subservient to his voice,
Who, veil'd in clouded majesty, alone
Gives light to all ; bids the great system move,
And changeful seasons in their turns advance,
Unmov'd, unchang'd, himself : yet this at least
Grant me propitious, an inglorious life,
Calm and serene, nor lost in false pursuits
Of wealth or honours ; but enough to raise
My drooping friends, preventing modest Want
That dares not ask. And if, to crown my joys,
Ye grant me health, that, ruddy in my cheeks,
Blooms in my life's decline ; fields, woods, and streams,

Each towering hill, each humble vale below,
Shall hear my cheering voice, my hounds shall wate
The lazy Morn, and glad th' horizon round.

ALEXANDER POPE.

ALEXANDER POPE, an English poet of great eminence, was born in London in 1688. His father, who appears to have acquired wealth by trade, was a Roman Catholic, and being disaffected to the politics of King William, he retired to Binfield, in Windsor Forest, where he purchased a small house with some acres of land, and lived frugally upon the fortune he had saved. Alexander, who was from infancy of a delicate habit of body, after learning to read and write at home, was placed about his eighth year under the care of a Romish priest, who taught him the rudiments of Latin and Greek. His natural fondness for books was indulged about this period by Ogilby's translation of Homer, and Dryden's of Ovid's Metamorphoses, which gave him much delight, that they may be said to have made him a poet. He pursued his studies under different masters, to whom he was consigned. At length he became the director of his own pursuits, the variety of which proved that he was by no means deficient in industry, though his reading was rather excursive than methodical. From his early years poetry was adopted by him as a profession, for his poetical writing was always accompanied with attempts at imitation or translation; and it may be affirmed that he rose at once almost to perfection in this walk. His manners and conversation were equally beyond his years; and it does not appear that he ever cultivated friendship with any one of his own age or condition.
